The place is reputed healthy, having never been visited by any of the epidemics, which occasionally fled their way up our heatable streams.

After reflecting upon all things, which go to make up the conveniences and safety of a good school, we feel sure that, very selfishness, if nothing else will, when things are properly understood, give Mansfield Female College a large patronage.

A word on the prospects. We feel sure, since forming acquaintance with the Board of Trustees, especially the number constituting a building committee, that the proposed edifice will be raised as soon as practicable. The failure of navigation has retarded operation; much of the necessary material having to be shipped, would make the expense intolerable at this stage; they had better occupy the old Seminary much longer, than incur it. But the committee are at work. They retain the job, as a whole in their own hands: to one they let out the making of a lot of bricks, to another carpentry, and so with each of all the items, making each responsible to the committee. This, in proper hands, would be hazardous; but where it now is, we have no uneasiness.

Such materials as can be obtained here, are in a course of preparation, the bricks nearly ready, and by the time when such materials as have to be shipped can be procured, the building will probably be at the stage to work them in at once.

The house will be commodious and of fine architecture—$17,000 or thereabout, in good subscription, or other funds, are in the hands of the Board. If more be requisite, we feel assured that our people will furnish it. This country is fully able to do it, and when they are assured that the work will be done, well done, and promptly done, they will give all necessary for this object; so we are persuaded of them, and feel that we shall not be compelled ever to think otherwise. The demand is too imperious, they cannot disregard it, and see such a cause suffer.

The interest felt, was evinced at the laying of the corner-stone, which took place on the day preceding the Examination. This office was performed by the order of Free Masons. It was prefaced by the never-varying usage of the order, a turnout, a procession, etc., a short prayer, a brief ritual, and the depositing of a number of papers relating to the Institution, with other articles. Though the morning was very threatening, somewhat showery, there was a large assemblage on the spot, who hailed the event with great enthusiasm. We had, on the occasion, an address from Mr. Shearer of Mansfield. It was prepared for, and fitted to its place. It was chaste and fluent. Gen. Philips of Desoto highly entertained the audience on the proposition: That the female mind is competent to embrace in the course of education, all the higher branches of science and literature, embraced in a classical education, as readily as the other sex. Of the truth of this predicate we were pretty well satisfied by the sequel of the week's exercises. But our orator more especially sustained, with lucid argument, the practicability, aye necessity, of educating the youth of the South at home, in institutions reared and disciplined by our own Southern genius, and from books prepared or selected by the same, and thereby rescue our children from the vicious doctrines sent forth under the guise of philosophy.

We discover in the last Advocate a notice of, with other interests, our worthy Dr. Thweatt, with his corps of teachers, by "C. F." This relieves us from anything more on that score, further than to endorse the statement in fact, given by "C. T.," and render to him our acknowledgements, hoping that another twelve month will afford us the pleasure of his presence again on like occasions of equal interest.

R. RANDLE.

Mansfield, La., Aug. 29, 1855.

Rev. Dr. Cox, lately of Brooklyn, has been compelled to relinquish his charge of the new church on Wooster Square, New Haven, (where he has been preaching for a few weeks past,) in consequence of a bronchial affection, the same that caused him to quit Brooklyn.

THE PRAYER OF FAITH ANSWERED IN SOMETHING BETTER.

...tial often redeems his promises in ways little anticipated by us. Sometimes he seems even to deny what we have asked in faith, and then to secure it to us by the very means which seemed to contain the denial. The principle affecting this case, is best made intelligible by examples. A father has prayed long, earnestly and believingly, for the conversion of his son. The son, in many prayer-goers up seriously disposed, respecting religion and its institutions, but giving no signs of a regenerate character. The father naturally anxious about the influence which the son's more intimate relations in life are to have on his spiritual prospects, is concerned to find him disposed to form a marriage connection with one who has been educated in principles opposite to his own, and who is averse to religion. He does all that is proper to do to prevent it. He makes it a subject of earnest prayer. He begs and pleads before the throne of grace, that his son may be saved from this danger. But here he seems to fail. Now he is exercised with misgivings and fears that all his supplications for his son have been in vain.

Time passes on, and for a season the prospect appears more and more dark. At length a ray of light appears in that quarter where it was least expected. The Spirit of God moved upon the heart of the wife. After a struggle she is brought into the life and liberty of the Gospel. And now again the power of the prayer of faith is tested. The first aspirations of the converted wife are for the conversion of her husband. Her desire assumes the force of an all-absorbing passion. She feels as if she could not live were her request denied. In her burdened heart the Spirit of God makes intercessions with groanings which cannot be uttered. At length, her desire is granted; and the child of many prayers is rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. Now is that father's prayer answered, and that in connection with the very event which he so much deprecated. The feeling which led him so anxiously to deprecate that event, was doubtless approved in the sight of God; though it had been determined, on the part of God, to make it the very means of securing answer to the prayer. In like manner, God is wont to lead his people in paths that they know not. It would make our faith and encouragement in supplication, the more easy, did we more fully realize how abundant God's resources of power and mercy are, and that he can fulfil his promises, in ways which to us may seem most improbable; and that when he does fulfill them, the gift transcends the measure of the promise, as in the case referred to. Indeed, he is able to do for us exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think.—Puritan Rec.

FROM NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH.—Notwithstanding the awful reports that have been heretofore received from these places, we find that we must be prepared for accounts still more terrible. Every mail brings us a larger list of deaths, notwithstanding the small population that must be left in those places.

It is worse there now than it ever was here. Out of a population of 6000 in Norfolk, there are 45 deaths per day. At this rate the city would be totally depopulated in less than three months. As it is, there are not seven out of ten who are well.

In Portsmouth, matters are worse, although the population of this place is much less than Norfolk. On Sunday, the 2d inst., there were 32 burials, and they were unable to bury eight more for want of coffins, making in all 40 deaths on that day.

The want of nurses is much felt, and the Mayor is said to have determined on forcing the negroes who have been left there by their masters to perform these duties.

The Norfolk correspondent of the Baltimore American, of the 14th, says "Old Ric." the following well-deserved compliment:

Ricardo, of New Orleans, and his gallant party of doctors and nurses, are doing noble service. They are an unique organization, and I cannot help telling you of a peculiarity of Ricardo, who, as you know, is a whole-souled Southerner. He calls his nurses the "French artillery," and has them in as good discipline as you ever saw a military company. They sit together at the hospital, at the old City Hotel, and the instant he calls for one, he or she rises and answers, and immediately bundles up and travels to the place designated. I never saw such system. Pity that we had it not before.

STONINGTON RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—A telegraphic dispatch informed us a few days ago that on the night of the 31 a serious accident happened on the Boston and Stonington Railroad. It occurred about three miles from Kingston, at a bridge, and was caused by a rail having been removed, apparently by design. Besides the engine, etc., the train comprised two second class and six first class passenger cars, and carried between four and five hundred passengers bound for New York. The entire train, with the exception of two first class cars, was thrown off the track; the baggage and second class cars were totally demolished, and ten persons were severely injured. One man had his legs so badly crushed that immediate amputation became necessary. Most of the baggage was saved. Subsequent to the accident a meeting of passengers was held on board the steamer Plymouth Rock, when appropriate resolutions were adopted, and a subscription amounting to $193 was collected in aid of injured passengers.

RECEIPTS OF COTTON.—We give below the receipts of cotton per wagons at this port, says the Shreveport South-Western, from the 1st September last to the 28th August:

	Bales.
Receipts per wagons at the warehouses	63,147
" at Mrs. Alexander's	1,500
Total receipts	64,647
Shipped during same time	57,500
Stock on hand	7,245-64,647

The total receipts during the same time last season amounted to 72,269 bales. The deficiency this season is occasioned by the planters keeping their cotton at home, there being no opportunity to ship it at reasonable prices.

Norfolk and Portsmouth.

The latest dates we have from these places are of the 2d September. At that time the fever was on the increase to an alarming extent.

During Saturday (1st inst.), there were eighteen deaths in Norfolk, and from sunset Saturday evening to sunrise Sunday morning there were fifteen more, making a total of thirty-three deaths in twenty-four hours. The number of new cases reported on Saturday night was one hundred.

In Portsmouth there were thirty-five deaths on Friday and Saturday.

D. I. Ricardo had arrived with the New Orleans deputation. Among the new cases reported at Norfolk are Drs. Richard L. Page and Jas. Henderson, and two of the Philadelphia physicians who had recently arrived.

We extract the following from the Charleston Courier of the 5th inst.:

A gentleman of this city informs us that he received a letter yesterday from a relative in Norfolk which stated that over fifty bodies were remaining unburied from want of coffins and grave-diggers. Nurses, also, are greatly wanted, as many are left wholly without assistance, and some even crawl out on the pavement in hope of attracting attention to their distressing condition.

We are truly gratified to learn, however, that the South Carolina Railroad Company have generously determined to give free tickets over their road, going and coming, to all physicians and nurses sent to Norfolk and Portsmouth, and we sincerely trust that the other railroad companies will immediately do likewise.

One of the young physicians of Charleston, who went to Norfolk for the purpose of attending the sick there, communicates the following to the Charleston Mercury—his letter is dated on the 30th ult.:

It was told to-night, by the chief physician that there were upwards of one thousand and thirty-six cases in the town of Norfolk alone. I have just come from one of the hospital wards, to which there were three young girls, all in the agonies of death, and no one, except the nurse, in watch them. God grant that I may never again witness such a scene. The town is crowded with physicians from all parts of the country. Many from the North are here, but nearly all have been taken with the disease. We have just received nurses from New Orleans, which are very much wanted. The people have been very kind and hospitable to us, and we have everything we could expect from them at our disposal.

The Charleston Howard Association met in that city on the 4th inst., and appointed committees from every ward in the city, for the purpose of soliciting aid for the sufferers in Norfolk and Portsmouth.

ANOTHER SERIOUS RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—A telegraphic dispatch in the New York Express, dated Pittsburgh, August 31st, says: This morning, about two o'clock, the express train on the Ohio and Pennsylvania Railroad, going West, ran over a cow, and three of the cars were thrown off the track about twenty miles from this city. One car was completely wrecked, and ten persons were more or less wounded—four of them seriously. J. W. Glenn of Alleghany county had a leg broken; Theodore Adams, of Harrisburg, was severely, but not dangerously hurt; Daniel Fisher, of Flat Rock, Ohio, had an arm broken; and Joseph Reinhart, of Nevada, Ohio, was badly injured. The train was going very fast at the time of the accident.

THE ACCIDENT AT BURLINGTON.—We learn from a telegraphic dispatch in the Charleston Standard of the 6th inst., that the verdict of the coroner's jury at Burlington is, that the accident was caused by the train running backwards, and the carelessness of Dr. Ilsleuken. They exonerate the conductor, blame the engineer, and suggest that the Company adopt a rule to avoid similar accidents in future.

The following items will be found interesting. We extract them from the New York Express of the 4th ultimo:

The bereaved consort of Mrs. Gillespie, of Mississippi, whose husband died on Friday, is spoken of by all. It is a somewhat singular coincidence, that the left leg of herself and husband were both amputated, and both at the same place—just above the knee. Chloroform was administered to her while her leg was being amputated. She bore the operation with almost superhuman fortitude. She even apologized to the surgeons for what she termed her "weakness" in groaning faintly. At the first touch of the knife, a jet of blood shot up in the face of the operating surgeon; for this she also apologized, and regretted the trouble which she was causing. When the limb was severed, she said, "I hope they will be able to bear this sad news at home;" and then requested (if the surgeons did not desire to keep it for any purpose) that her amputated limb might be buried together with the limb of her husband.

One of the sufferers says, that as he lay beneath the rails, parched with heat, a "hot liquid" came pouring down within reach of his mouth, and he sipped it up eagerly. His physician has not yet learned it was trickling to him from the "hot liquid" which he drank was the blood of one of his fellow passengers, who was lying above him dead, crushed almost to a jelly.

Some boys, while hunting in the sand, at the scene of the disaster, dug up a portion of the breast, with some ribs attached, belonging to one of the killed. Dr. Chaler, who was present, took the bones in charge. They belonged, it is said, to the body of Mr. Howard, of Natchez.

The following paragraphs are from the Barbadoes West Indian of July 27th:

We regret to learn the death of Mr. Blankburn, of the firm of Messrs Atkins & Co., of this city, a young man recently from England, who died to-day, after an illness of only three days, of yellow fever. There are, we are sorry to hear, several cases of fever in the city. The weather is exceedingly sultry, and after the heavy rains there is a moist, damp atmosphere, very trying to the constitutions of Europeans.

Demerara is reported to be unusually healthy. The new sugar crop had just commenced, and a large number of vessels were lying in the Demerara river, waiting for cargoes.

A sealed bottle drifted on shore at Bailey's Bay on the 20th inst. On being opened, it was found to contain a written paper, which has been forwarded to us for publication. The following is an accurate copy of the contents of the paper taken from the bottle:

BOTTLE PAPER.

U. S. STEAMER JOHN HANCOCK, }

Latitude N. 34:38 Longitude W. 35:30.

Whoever finds this will please forward it to Lieut. M. F. Maury, Superintendent of the National Observatory, Washington, D. C., United States of America, with a statement of the latitude and longitude where found.

[Signed] WM. KING BRIDGE, Acting Lieut. U. S. N.

LATER FROM EL PASO.—The Santa Fe mail, in charge of Capt. James Gross, arrived at San Antonio on the 26th ult., in thirteen days from El Paso. The San Antonio Ledger says:

The trip would have been made in twelve days had it not been for the heavy rains experienced during the trip. Hon R. Dona was re-elected Senator, and Hon J. Crosby Representative for El Paso county. They will probably be down next mail.

No ladies have been on the route, no doubt owing to the prompt action of Lieut. Randall.

Major Emory was at El Paso, endeavoring to raise money for his drafts.

Judge Taylor, Commissioner, and Dr. F. Giddings, came down as passengers.

The following table will show the number of killed and wounded by railroad accidents in this country during the years 1853 and 1854, and the first eight months of 1855:

	Killed.	Wounded.
1853	234	499
1854	186	816
First eight months in 1855	62	315
Total	482	1,630

The Home Circle.

Volume VI. has reached us. Our apology for not noticing it sooner is, that it does not lie on our table, and when the contents of the table are written up, its omission grows out of its absence. It is taken home and read, and then loaned about, and we seldom get sight of it till it has done duty in two or three home circles. It stands at the head of the list in our circle. "Has the Home Circle come yet—the next number is about due now?" We are used to such inquiries, and like them. They show good taste where every one is concerned to cultivate it. Young is an admirable, lively sketcher, and his communications have been advanced in this volume to their merited position. If Erwin's poetry is always equal to "Death and Cupid," he is born to it, and may claim nature's patent. Dr. Taylor's pieces unconsciously mirror the clear, equable, pleasant writer, of healthy moral tone, sound in body, mind and soul. The editor works in his small pieces and fugitive contributors, and his own elegant varieties, secundum artem.

About the picture. It looks approvingly toward the contents. We promise any friend of Dr. A. L. P. Green's a pleasant sensation on sight. Depth of meaning and length of seeing lurks in the calm blue eyes, while humor hangs in fold's about the corners of the mouth and the jaws.

The editor, Dr. Huston, and the agents, have issued what was called for—what was wanted—what the Southern Church has not had before. Now, will our people support it? In doing so they will do their families a benefit. Send two dollars, the subscription for a year, or order it through your preacher. It will give us pleasure to forward names, with the money.

Rev. S. H. Cone, D. D.—Two weeks ago our telegraph reported the death of "Stephen Combs, President of the American Bible Society." A mistake for Dr. Cone, President of the American Bible Union, New York, and an eminent divine of the Baptist Church. He was an earnest Advocate of the scheme for a new version of the Bible. He was a native of Princeton, N. J., and a graduate of the college at that place. In early life he was a play-actor, but renounced it in disgust, and afterwards gave himself to Christ and the ministry. He was about seventy years of age at the time of his decease.

Buildings.—An Asylum for Hebrew widows and orphans is going up in the Fourth District, corner of Jackson and Chippewa. Workmen are engaged upon the Presbyterian Church, Lafayette Square, removing burnt rubbish and laying foundations. The new church will be of brick, and will seat two thousand persons. The distance from the ground to the top of the steeple will be 215 feet. In the rear there is to be a lecture room. The whole cost will be about 75,000 dollars.

The Good Samaritans.—A number of our most worthy citizens, desiring to make themselves useful to those who may be suffering from sickness, have organised an association under the above title. They have elected energetic and capable men as their officers, and have named as their medical advisers and agents for the reception of donations some of our best physicians and residents.

John Ross, the Indian.—A correspondent of the True Delta, August 15, near Tallequah, says the Nation is prospering. Of this chief, just re-elected:

"In the same neighborhood is the residence of the Principal Chief, Gen. John Ross, whose name for patriotism, sterling integrity and statesmanship, has been identified with the history of his people for the last thirty-seven years. In 1818 we find, by reference to the records, he was at time President of the National Committee; in 1816 he was elected Second Chief; in 1827, Principal Chief. Mr. Ross, though a constant attendant at Church, had made no profession of religion until a few Sabbaths since, when he united himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South."

Methodist Celebration.—The Hanover Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Boston, on the 27th ult., celebrated the sixtieth Anniversary of the erection of the first Methodist Church in Boston, in what is now called Hanover Avenue.

Representative from the British Wesleyan Church.—The English Conference of the Wesleyan Church, recently in session at Leeds, have appointed the Rev. Dr. Hannah a delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to be held on the 1st of May next, at Indianapolis. The Rev. Dr. Hannah is well known by many in the United States as the companion of the late Rev. Richard Reece, who was the delegate from the British Conference some years ago. The Rev. Frederick Johnson is to accompany Dr. Hannah.

The Rev. Dr. Arthur, one of the secretaries of the Missionary Society, has been authorized to visit Canada this fall, to plead the claims of Irish Methodism.

What an S Can Do.

To Philologists, Postmasters and Preachers.

The United States Courts have repeatedly decided that a postmaster who neglects to perform his duty of giving seasonable notice, as required by the Post Office Department, of the neglect of a person to take from the office newspapers addressed to him, renders the postmaster liable to the publisher for the subscription price.

The free list—for Agents and Exchanges, of every paper of considerable circulation, is a heavy expense. But there is an equivalent returned, in services. Not so in cases where, on account of the death, removal or refusal of the subscriber to take out his papers, they accumulate in the office to which they are sent. This is a dead loss, and may go on for years and ruinously. Against this the press is protected by law, defining the duties of postmasters.

Notwithstanding, see how we suffer: A preacher, who is a vigilant and energetic agent, writes from Clarke County, Alabama, Aug. 30:

"You will stop the Advocate coming to the address of A. Ruggers. He has been dead two or three years, and the papers have consequently not been taken from the office. The account is barred by the statute of limitation and hence lost to you."

Here is another case, nothing better, but rather worse. The reader shall be judge of its morality. The preacher, more watchful of our interests than the postmaster has been, says:

"You will please stop the paper coming to the address of M. S. E. By some mistake, the initial S. has been added to the name, and hence the paper has not been taken from the office by M. E.; so you will lose the account, he will not pay it."

We have been minding our P's and Q's, but see what comes of not minding the S's. Perversely crooked letter! M. E had been getting his paper without the S., and paying too. By some mistake in settling accounts, or transferring names from old to new books, the S. slips in. It saved us nothing, but rather increased our labor, by writing a capital S. on the address 52 times a year; neither did it divert the paper to another. This may be very nice—but—Oh, M. E!

We desire our friends to look into these cases and stop our losses. It is not improbable that two hundred copies of the Advocate are sent to worse than dead heads, under the name of "paying subscribers." We can only send the paper. We cannot tell how matters are at each of several hundred post offices.

Many of the postmasters are very prompt and courteous in their duties, and have our thanks. Some are neither. Will the preachers as they go about have an eye to this thing and protect the press of the Church. We hope to meet them at their Conferences, with a live list, all paid up, and purged.

Ex-Governor Collier.

Ex-Governor Collier died at Bailey's Springs, near Florence, Alabama, on the 28th ult., of an attack of cholera morbus. His remains were taken to Florence, and after funeral services, performed by the venerable Dr. Manly, were committed to the dust in the presence of the corporate authorities of the place, and an immense assemblage of the citizens of the town and surrounding country. Alabama has never bestowed honors on a purer or juster man. The Florence Gazette contains the following:

Henry Watson Collier was born in Abbeville District—in that home of genius—South Carolina, on the 17th day of January, 1801, consequently was in the 55th year of his age at his death. Having acquired a classical education, he studied law, was licensed to practice, and settled in Hunt ville, and in short time afterwards moved to Tuscaloosa, in which place he resided to his death. By ceaseless application to his chosen profession, he made considerable proficiency and was soon promoted to the responsible and arduous station of Circuit Judge, which station he held till 1836, when our present organization of the Supreme Court was formed. Gov. Collier was chosen one of the Associate Justices, which dignified position he held from June, 1836, till June, 1837. At this period, a vacancy having occurred in the seat of the Chief Justice, and Gov. Collier being the oldest Judge, was made Chief Justice of the State of Alabama, the most honorable and elevated station known to our laws, a position which he held for twelve years, and one which he filled with honor to himself and usefulness to his country.

In 1849, he was called by the voice of the people to be Chief Magistrate of our Commonwealth, and at the expiration of his first gubernatorial term, such was the approval of the public of his administration, that he was again elected. His second term expired on the 20th December, 1853, when he retired from the vexation and turmoil of the public to the more peaceful and happy walks of private life, in whose sequestral charms he spent the remaining portion of his time. Such is a brief and imperfect sketch of a man who retired from public service with a constitution so shattered, that a rest from his labors could not restore him to his health.

The many high stations in which Gov. C. has been placed, and the long period of time the people trusted in his honesty, integrity and ability, sufficiently establishes his reputation, both as a civil magistrate and a jurist; but he was equally celebrated in his administration of christian charity and love, and to the kind husband and affectionate parent were added those noble and philanthropic feelings which so much exemplified the purity and beauties of his moral character. Requiescat in pace.

Gov. C. was long a consistent member of the Methodist Church. While Supreme Judge he taught a negro Sabbath school, in Tuscaloosa. During the time he was Governor of Alabama, occurred a trifling but characteristic incident. The boat reached Mobile Saturday night or early Sunday morning. A military company, after the fashion of Louisiana Gubernatorial Sabbath parades, tendered him a "reception," which he declined, on the ground that it was the Sabbath, and quietly attended church.

In Richmond, Va., a few days since, a large bomb-shell was dug up from a depth of six feet.

Death of Ministers.

They come sparingly: they pass away like a flood. But it is God's work and they are his workmen. He who is infinite in mercy and power, can be at no loss for means. The Governor of the world is the Head of the Church. The earthly kingdom is administered the heavenly. Notwithstanding, the most hopeful view of Providence calls, as a means of realizing its fruits, for searching and humiliation and prayer. Living ministers must work the more.

Rev. A. Dibrell, pastor of the Granby st. Methodist Church in Norfolk, died of yellow fever on the 1st inst. A correspondent of the Richmond Dispatch says:

"In the faithful discharge of his duty, he scorned to desert his post in the hour of danger and death, but nobly, like a true Christian, stood by his flock, administering the comforts of religion, visiting the sick and dying, until at last, 'with harness on back,' like a gallant soldier of the Cross, he too has fallen, and gone to enjoy that unspeakable reward which he so richly deserves!"

Thomas, a son, has since died. Mr. Dibrell was one of the purest, noblest men. Few ministers of this age were more powerful in their ministry, or successful in winning souls.

Rev. D. P. Wells (Willis) his colleague, is also among the dead, reported for the following week. Mr. W. was younger, but winning as fair a fame where crowns are to be won.

The Florida Conference has just lost one of its ablest ministers—Rev. Wm. Chaice. He died on the 18th of August, away from home, but happy, while engaged in the Agency of the American Bible Society.

Closing of Wesleyan Conference.

After a session of three weeks in Leeds, the Annual Conference adjourned on the 14th August. It was the largest ecclesiastical Convocation in England—five hundred and fifty ministers, besides many laymen met. The storm of agitation that has been raging for the last five or six years has subsided; and although the numerical loss has been great during the period, at least 80,000, yet the body is giving unmistakable signs of vitality. The Rev. Isaac Keeling, a minister of 44 years standing, was, by a large majority, placed in the Presidential chair; and the Rev. Dr. Hannah was elected Secretary. Great harmony and piety have characterized the deliberations of the Conference; the devotional services have been eminently hallowed, and hallowing; the preaching of the Word has been with power, several awakenings and conversions have taken place, and the members of the body are full of hope for the future.

Rev. Isaac Keeling was appointed president of the next Irish Conference. Rev. Enoch Wood, of the Canada Conference, Rev. Dr. Cook, of the French Conference, Rev. Wm. B. Boyce, of the Australasian Conference.

Dr. Beecham, who had been sent to America for the purpose of organizing the Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland districts into an independent conference, returned just in time to be present on the last day of the session. At the call of the president, he addressed the conference, giving a most interesting narrative of his travels and proceedings in the eastern provinces of British America, and of the state of Methodism in that rising portion of the British empire. He had been completely successful in the accomplishment of his mission.

The conference is to be held next year in Bristol, commencing on the last Wednesday in July.

Religious Intelligence.

The following results from revivals in Methodist churches, are communicated to the Richmond Christian Advocate by its correspondents. At Randolph Macon College, 69 have joined on probation; at Bellaney's, in Gloucester circuit, 100 additions, Leonidas Rosser officiating; at Rocky Oak, 9 additions, Rev. Mr. Proctor, of Manchester, officiating; at Old Williams', in Brunswick circuit, 55 additions; Rock Church, Mecklenburg circuit, 25 on probation.

A letter from Anderson, Texas, Aug. 20, says: The Methodists have been holding a protracted meeting in town for two weeks past. They report about forty conversions, and thirty-two accessions to the church. There is a deep interest pervading the entire community, and much good will doubtless be done before the meeting closes.

Rev. T. E. Ferguson, Presiding Elder of the Victoria District, writes to the Texas Christian Advocate that six hundred members have been received into the Church on that District since Conference, and he says they expect to report one thousand by Conference.

In Natchez, Miss., we hear of good meetings, in the Methodist Church, Rev. A. T. M. Fly, pastor. Drouth, politics, long or short crops, epidemics—none of these can hinder the Spirit of God. He works, and no man or circumstance but unbelief can hinder. May Revivals be the feature of the current year!

Aid for the Germans.—During the week we received this note, enclosing $10, which has taken the direction indicated by the donor:

Thibodaux, La., Sept. 7, 1855.

Bro. McTyeire—Enclosed please find ten dollars for German Missions in New Orleans. My wife has just been reading Bro Holer's last report, and she is so well pleased with it she requests me to send you this amount for her. F.

A Pious Soldier.

How a praying man feels going into a battle! A brave, pious man. Perhaps every one has thought on it. The following touching letter was written on the eve of battle by Col. Shadforth, of the 57th regiment British army, who fell in the attack on the Redan on the 18th of June:

"My own beloved wife and dearly beloved children, at 1 o'clock to-morrow morning I lead the attack to storm the Redan. It is, as I feel, an awfully perilous moment for me, but I place myself in the hands of our gracious God, without whose will a sparrow cannot fall to the ground. I place my whole trust in Him. Should I fall in the performance of my duty, I fully rely in the precious blood of our Savior, shed for sinners, that I may be saved through Him. Pardon and forgive me, my beloved ones, for anything I have said or done to cause you one moment's unhappiness. Unto God I commend my body and soul, which are his: and should it be his will that I fall in the performance of my duty, in the defence of my Queen and country, I most humbly say, 'Thy will be done.' God bless and protect you; and my last prayer will be, that he, of his infinite goodness, may preserve you. God ever bless you, my beloved Eliza, and my dearest children, and, if we meet not again in this world, may we all meet in the mansion of our Heavenly Father, through Jesus Christ. God bless and protect you; and ever believe me your affectionate husband and loving father,

THOMAS SHADFORTH."

HOME CORRESPONDENCE.

Walnut Hill, La., Aug. 25th, 1855.

The Advocate is gaining in favor and influence in our country, and if there was money in the country as there once was, I could place it in a great many families that do not have it now. Brother Pipes, our preacher, is doing a work on his circuit, and, no doubt, represents the interests of the Advocate, but I have access to families that he has not in practice of my profession, and I feel it but my duty to co-operate in promoting the interests of a common cause, though I am not a traveling preacher.

Perhaps there has never been, within the memory of the oldest inhabitant of North Louisiana, so gloomy a prospect for a cotton crop as at this time. I suppose there are few, if any, who can expect to gather from ridge lands more than two hundred pounds per acre; and there being but little of any other quality of lands than such, west of Moorehouse parish, till you reach Rice river, in North Louisiana. Little cotton will go to market from this portion of the State,

Shiloh, Miss., Sept. 3d, 1855.

Say to our friends that old Philadelphia Circuit is on rising ground, and the work is reviving. Some 138 accessions to the Church this year, up to the present time. We commenced a meeting at Providence new school house, on Saturday, the 25th August, and continued nine days, resulting in some nine or ten conversions. The Church was considerably enlivened, and we are looking forward to a pretty general revival. We have several two-days' meetings appointed, and our camp meeting will commence on the Friday before the first Sabbath in October next, at which time and place we expect a most glorious victory over the enemy. Lord, give us the victory, though our Lord Jesus Christ. The above camp ground is three and a half miles North-east of Philadelphia, Mississippi. Ministerial brethren and the public are invited.

It numbers sixteen appointments at this time, fourteen of which have classes and are in a prosperous condition. There have been some revivals on this circuit this year; sinners awakened, and mourners converted, and believers made to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. I have received thirty in full connection and thirty-five on trial. Many have been baptised, both adults and infants. About two hundred and fifty children catechised. Our third quarter is past. Brother N. Dowling attended the Quarterly Meeting in the place of the P. E. Our camp meeting on this circuit, this year, will commence on the 17th day of October, embracing the third Sabbath, and will be held in Holmes county, Fla., on Chootawhatchee river, at Howlit's Bluff. Preachers are all invited to attend.

Names of Literary Men.—The real name of Erasmus was Gerard. He first changed it into the Latin, Desiderius, of much the same signification, which he afterwards refined into the Greek, Erasmus, by which he is commonly known. The original name of Luther's coadjutor and friend was Herlz Schwartz, (black earth,) which he elegantly turned into the Greek name of Melanthon, by which he will go down to the remotest ages. The great church historian of modern times was born of Jewish parents, of the name of Mendel, and assumed the name of Neander (neon andron—new man) at his baptism, at the age of seventeen.

Religious Revival.—The Baptists of this parish, says the Claiborne (La.) Advocate, 26th ult., have been holding a protracted meeting about twelve miles northeast of this place, at Antioch Church, which closed a few days ago, after the most gratifying success. The meeting was largely attended, and everything passed off in the most happy and satisfactory manner. The labors of the ministers present were untiring, and were crowned with a victory over sin which must be truly gratifying to them and the church generally. We are informed that thirty-eight members have been added to the Baptist Church as the fruits of the meeting, and that thirty of the number have received the ordinance of Baptism.

The Mobile Tribune of the 6th inst. says: "It will be seen from the following report of the Board of Health that there has been only one case of yellow fever since the report of the Board on Tuesday. The weather at present is very favorable for health, and we think it probable that the disease will go out as rapidly as it came in. We have at present no reason to apprehend an unhealthy autumn.

BOOK EDITOR'S DEPARTMENT.

NEW BOOKS.

Short Sermons and True Tales. By Bishop Capers. With an Introductory Notice of the Author, by Thomas O. Summers. 18mo, pp. 105; price 25 cents.

The Editor says in his Introduction: "The following 'Short Sermons and True Tales' were written for the Sunday-school Visitor, and appeared in the first and second volumes of that journal, it being at that time under our editorial management. The lamented and venerable author was a great lover of children, and took a deep interest in their spiritual welfare. This induced him to write these beautiful sermons and tables, the latter of which—except that entitled 'Little Clara'—refer to his own children, to whom he was devotedly attached."

He then gives a rapid sketch of the late venerable author, which it is hoped will add to the interest of this little volume. The contents are as follows: "Introduction; Parental Kindness; Elisha and the Young Scoffers; Joseph's Coat of Many Colors; Hagar and Ishmael; The Birth of Cain; Cain and Abel; Little Clara; Anna Singletary; Susan, the Sunday-School Child; Little Frank; William and Edward; The Boy that would not be laughed out of his Prayers; What Children can know about Religion; Children's Song and Prayer; When Jesus to the Temple came."

Bible Readings for every day in the year. Specially designed for Children.

These are six beautiful volumes—taking the youthful reader, by easy steps, through the Bible. They have been carefully revised by the Editor, for Sunday-school and family libraries; and we are mistaken if they will not win their way to an immense popularity. They are embellished with a dozen elegant engravings—they contain nearly 200 pages per volume, and the entire set, bound in gilt muslin, are sold for the low price of $1 80.

Memoir of Old Humphrey: With gleanings from his Portfolio. 18mo. In press.

The biography of the late George Mogridge, better known by his nom de plume, 'Old Humphrey,' is, as might be expected, a very interesting book. Our edition is a reprint of the new London edition.

The Bible Christian: A View of Doctrinal Experimental and Practical Religion. By the Rev. Josephus Anderson. 18mo, pp. 350; price 50 cents.

This excellent little manual is written in popular style. It is peculiarly valuable as embodying the views of the best authors of the various Christian communions, on the vital truths of religion, showing with what unanimity they express themselves in regard to these essential principles. It studiously avoids polemical discussion. It is brought out in good style, and put at a low rate, as it is designed for general use—the author, by the way, generously presenting the work to our Publishing House.

For fifty cents, enclosed to the Agents, a copy will be sent, postage prepaid.

A Plain Account of Christian Perfection. By the Rev. J. Wesley.

The Agents have brought out a beautiful edition of this standard volume—price 25c. In a Prefatory Note the Editor says: "This treatise, as published in Mr. Wesley's works, is entitled, 'A Plain Account of Christian Perfection, as believed and taught by the Rev Mr. John Wesley, from the year 1725 to the year 1777.' It appears that Mr. Wesley revised and enlarged it at different times, and in each successive edition prefixed the date of the most recent revision. The last recension appears to have been made in 1777—hence, that date has heretofore been retained on the title-page; but we have omitted it, because its appearance might lead some to conjecture that Mr. Wesley may have afterwards changed his views on the subject of Perfection, which is not the case. Indeed, there appears to have been no material change in his views for fifty years preceding that period. Sometimes his language was unguarded; this he acknowledges, and corrects in the present treatise; but he uniformly maintained that it is both our privilege and duty—a present privilege, a present duty—to "——sink into perfection's height,

The depth of humble love."

"Of this he gives ample proof in this excellent essay, which we should think no one can read with candor and attention without giving a cordial endorsement.

"May its republication be the means of causing thousands to say, "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, because as he is, so are we in this world."

THE TRACT AGENCY IN MISS. CON.

The agent writes us as follows:

Yazoo City, 1st Sep., 1855.

Mr Editor: Will you be so good as to inform my correspondents and others expecting me to attend to the business of the Tract Society in this Conference, that I have been sick in bed for the last two weeks. I had commenced a tour in the upper districts and took sick at the first camp meeting. My plans are now all thrown into disruption. Got home yesterday in a very shattered condition; found a bundle of letters, which I can't answer now, as I am able to sit up but a few minutes.

The friends of the Tract enterprise may be assured that so soon as I am able I will be with them again.

The Lord be praised. All things work together for good, to some profit.

Yours, truly, H. ABNEY.

Donation.—By the will of the late L. C. Dunoan $1,000 was left to the Protestant Boy's Asylum, Fourth District. It was much needed.

ONE OR TWO?

FOR THE PEOPLE OF SOUTH ALABAMA.

Mr. Editor.—The educational interests of our people in the South Alabama Conference has been an engrossing subject. Perhaps there has been more interest felt since the last Alabama Conference published their design to create a college than at any previous period. Much of success and utility will depend on the character of the institution wanted to be created. If we can unite our people in one grand effort, a college equal to any in the United States may be established in Central South Alabama. We ought to endow this institution at $25,000 to the Chair or Professorship, with a contingent $1000 when the tuition fees are sufficient to admit it. A salary of $2000 (the interest of $25,000) and one thousand from tuition fees—making $3000—to each Chair. This sum will support and make comfortable the most competent and useful faculty. In addition to this, a fund should be raised to purchase a competent library and apparatus. Also a fund (the interest of which) for the education of candidates for the ministry and the sons of worthy itinerant ministers. With one institution, ably endowed, under the care and guidance of the competent christian sages who would rally to its halls and seek employment in it, hundreds of young gentlemen, who now go North—to the Universities of Virginia, Yale, Princeton, Chappel Hill, etc.—would feel that they had a competent and creditable in Alabama, and that their objects could be accomplished at home. Soon neighboring States would look to this college, and gentlemen of 1855 would have the high pleasure of knowing that they had endowed a seat of virtuous learning for the Southern States.

But now, Mr. Editor, if we multiply colleges, we shall fail to endow any, and be compelled to pay small salaries to inferior and less competent teachers. Georgia is the Methodist State of the South. After years of talk, strong resolutions, and many efforts, she has one feeble college, and to the great mortification of the best friends of christian education, Dr. Means, the President, has been driven to tender his resignation. And why? Because the salary was not sufficient to support him, and the duties of the office required his whole time. The trustees, I have understood, have adopted Mr. Hilliard, and offered the Presidency to him. Will he accept? It is yet doubtful. What inducement has he to do so? Is he willing at the shrine of christian philanthropy to live poor and hungry? Or can he live on less than Dr. Means? The history of Lagrange is before the State. When was she without an agent in the field begging funds to keep her alive? Take all the denominational colleges in the South, and if one of them is liberally endowed, I am not acquainted with the fact. I don't know of any denomination of Christians who have almed at more than one college in a State, nor do I believe that the Methodists have attempted to create more than one college in a Conference. I don't think that any of the institutions almed to be created by any of the denominations have been endowed, and yet, here in Alabama, with the entreaties of Lagrange ringing in our ears for a quarter of a century for aid to protect her expiring existence, we, the Conference of Alabama, are going to create two more colleges—i. e., two more feeble, starving beggars, necessarily devoid of credit and curtailed in usefulness.

I hope and trust that wise counsels will predominate in our next annual Conference, and that, learning something from experience, we shall aim at but one college in South Alabama.

Yours, etc., HOPE.

Foreign Religious Intelligence.

Switzerland.—The many sorrows of the Holy Father have just been multiplied by the unfilial and Gallican conduct of the Swiss canton of the Grisons. The civil authorities have presumed to demand of the clergy the records of the mixed marriages they have celebrated. The clergy refuse compliance, and the secular authorities take measures to vindicate their authority. The apostolic nuncio appeals to the Federal Government, the Federal Government transmits the complaint to the cantonal authorities, and the cantonal authorities declare they owe the Pope's nuncio no explanation on the subject, but that the only bishop entitled to represent the clergy of the Grisons to the temporal government is the bishop of the diocese, with whom they are ready to settle the matter. The Federal Government has transmitted this reply to the nuncio, declaring that it quite agrees with the cantonal government as to the rights of the case.

Ecclesiastical Scandals in France.—The Paris correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says:

The clergy of France is divided into two very distinct belles—one represented by what are styled the Ultramontanes, the other by the so-called Gallicans. The war between these two parties is an exceedingly bitter one. I need hardly say that all or nearly all the talent and instruction of the French priesthood is enlisted on the side of the Gallicans or liberals; but, on the other, there is a great deal of energy and influence. The larger portion of the lower clergy, from being Gallican, becomes gradually socialist and revolutionary; and the retrograde part of the same body, perceiving this, becomes naturally more retrograde and more absolutist than ever.

The revolutionists count upon a certain portion of the lower priesthood, and not without reason; for these are not alone devoted and capable of any sacrifice for the cause they adopt, but the more to be dreaded by their antagonists; that they are for the most part young men, of austere conduct, and convinced, even to fanaticism, that their view of the Christian creed is the right one. These are the men who, in June, 1848, gave the communion to the insurgents who were about to mount upon the barricades; and of these there are no inconsiderable number in France. Now, among these, it is hardly necessary to remark that the present regime has no friends. Its supporters (and among the most zealous ones) are to be found in precisely the opposite ranks. The upper clergy, and those parts of it which have the strongest tendencies toward Ultramontanism, are the active friends of the existing government in France.

The "John Williams."—This missionary ship, after an absence of nearly four years among the islands of the Pacific ocean, arrived safely at London on the 11th of June. Two missionaries with their wives, and twenty-four children of missionaries, from different islands, sent to be educated in England, were on board.

The Fever at Norfolk and Portsmouth.

The Norfolk Argus, the last paper left in the town, suspended publication on the 6th.

The contributions from Philadelphia up to the 6th had reached $14,000, and many physicians and nurses had arrived from Mobile and New Orleans. The Argus says, in regard to the proposed removal of the population:

It will be seen by several communications which we publish to-day, that there is an intense desire on the part of benevolent friends abroad to remove us bodily from this dire home of pestilence. Would that it could be done with convenience? But we fear that there are too many sick among us, and too many difficulties in the way, for the scheme to be practicable.

The Washington Evening News of the 6th states that information had been received that the relief committee would renew the application to the President for the use of Old Point Comfort, as a refuge for the people now in Norfolk and Portsmouth; Mr. Falls, the President of Bay Steamboat Line, having offered to furnish, at twelve hours' notice, the transportation that may be necessary for the removal of the entire population now at the Point, some fifteen hundred souls.

The President presented the committee on their departure with a second contribution from himself and Cabinet of $325 for the sufferers.

From the latest correspondence of the Richmond, Charleston and Petersburg papers, we clip the following paragraphs:

Mr. Franklin H. Clack, of New Orleans, has been appointed Chief of Police of Norfolk, with pretty strong authority. This is done to promote order and secure the prompt burial of the dead. The Mayor delegates to him the same power that he himself has over the police department.

It is unfortunate that the Board of Health selected the City Hotel as a hospital. It is the one of the most infected districts in town. Thirty have died there within twenty four hours, and none that we know of have been at all benefitted by the change to their new quarters.

Nothing whatever can be said against the treatment of the sick or of their attentive nursing; all that can be done in this respect is kindly and faithfully performed by the physicians and nurses in attendance—but all appears to be of little avail.

The gathering at the Post-office (the great point of attraction) has dwindled down to a mere handful.

The whole of the Ericsson family, five in number, residing on Talbot street, have died with the fever.

Christ Church Lecture Room has been selected as a house of refuge for children, made orphans by the prevailing epidemic. We stepped in there this morning, and found about a dozen of the little bereaved innocents, comfortably provided for, and well attended to.

J. D. Marks, of New Orleans, lately appointed Superintendent of the City Hotel Hospital, was arrested last night and lodged in jail, charged with robbing the late interesting, but unfortunate Miss Lewis, daughter of Thomas Lewis, deceased, of about $1000 worth of jewelry, while the poor young lady lay dying with fever!

We notice with some interest the arrival last evening of 100 coffins from Richmond; 15 from Petersburg, and 40 from Hampton. About 100 more from Baltimore are expected to-day.

One day last week there were fifty eight deaths, the next forty-nine—and that is sent out of 7000. If the mortality was as great in Charleston in proportion to population, it would be about 400 a day. What do you think of that? We are now putting two bodies in one box—coffins not to be had. An old man told me he had buried his last child in a soap box, as he could not get a coffin. One body was lying in a house eight days before it was buried. A store was smelling very badly and they broke it open, and found a dead body. You cannot walk the streets without smelling the decomposing bodies. Persons have shut themselves up, and are taken sick and die without any one knowing it, until they smell so bad as to cause the house to be broken open. We have been burning tar in the hospital yard. The negroes are not exempt from it here at all. We have over 80 cases—there are between 80 and 90 cases in the house now. We lose from 10 to 15 a day. Such sights I never saw before—now there is a body lying in the yard all night in the rain, and they are about bringing two more to put there with the others. We have no intern to take out in the yard, so we will be obliged to leave the bodies there till morning. I have just tied down a man, and they are tying down another. The scenes here are perfectly awful.

The hearses not being sufficient to carry out the coffins for interment, recourse is had to carts and wagons, and in several instances we have seen the dismal shells of mortality protruding far out from the front of a cart, with the driver sitting besides it with perfect nonchalance, cracking his whip and puffing away at an abominable, cheroot! "How use doth breed a habit in a man."

The negroes hold divine service in their different churches every day, and incessant praying and singing may be heard from morning till night.

The whole week seems one continued Sunday—and one's brain is crazed by the upsetting of the regular routine of former every day life. We seem to be in a different world, with nothing to do but to walk about with one's hands in one's pockets and see burials! burials!

A remarkable circumstance connected with the epidemic is, that not a bird is to be seen within the limits of the city, and has not since the fever became general. Whether this is owing to the poisonous density of the atmosphere that keeps them away, or from want other cause, we are not able to say, not being philosophers or ornithologists enough to solve the phenomenon.

The poor pigeons have ceased their "soaring flight," and perch themselves on their houses with drooping head and wing, the very picture of despair, and, as Alexander Selkirk would say, "shockingly tame."

The cows, in despite of the city ordinance, wander about the city seemingly in search of lost mates, making the welkin echo with their melancholy lowing; while gangs of half-famished dogs take possession of the streets after nightfall, and rouder "night hideous" by their incessant yelping and howling! Truly, the very acme of distress and desolation has fallen upon poor Norfolk!

The number of new cases has slightly diminished, but the deaths have increased awfully! In the City Hotel Hospital, from yesterday morning to this morning, there have been thirty deaths!

The Fever in Mississippi.—We copy the following from the Jackson Mississippian, of Friday, the 7th instant:

Health of Jackson.—Up to the present writing, but one case of yellow fever has occurred in our city—that of Mrs. Hall—which terminated fatally on Wednesday. There is little or no sickness in town of any description.

Sickness at Canton.—A note from Canton to the Postmaster at this place, states that there are some twenty or more cases of fever in that town—supposed by many to be yellow fever—but which generally yields readily to the treatment. The disease is considered by many as a violent type of bilious fever. One or two deaths, we understand, have occurred.

The Whig, of the 8th, contains the following about the health of Vicksburg:

Only two deaths from yellow fever have occurred in our city since Monday last. One was Charles Wright, late of the firm of Wright & Whaley, and the other an old man named Simmons, who came from Bogue DeSha a short time since. From the best information we can gather from physicians and others, we are inclined to think the number of new cases have been on the increase during the past two days.

Fever at Vicksburg.—The Sentinel of Saturday last says:

It becomes our duty to announce the increase of the fever since our last. Some of the better class of our citizens are being attacked with it, which we regard as the most alarming feature of the disease. Five deaths have occurred since our last issue. Mr. Wright, Mr. Booth, Mr. Simmons, and two others; two of these we understand were not stricken by yellow fever. We have heard of two or three new cases.

Deaths.

DIED—Near Eutaw, Alabama, Aug. 19th, ALFRED CLEMENTS, in the 48th year of his age.

He professed religion in the maturity of manhood, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844. The Dr. was a man of more than ordinary ability and skill in his profession.

As a husband, he was kind, as a father mild, as a master, he was exact, yet giving proper attention to all, as a neighbor he was surpassed in kindness and readiness to help. As a member of the church, he was positive to the duties and requirements of Christian religion. In regard to his christian experience, however, he was frequently heard to complain that his enjoyment and communion with the Saviour were not as deep and permanent as he desired; but his purposes were fixed, trusting in the Lord. During his last sickness, his spiritual condition was a matter of much concern to himself. Oftentimes did he engage in fervent prayer for comfort and light, which, before death, he happily realized.

It was the privilege of the writer to be with him in his sickness, and to engage in prayer for him, and to enjoy with him to the full refreshing from the presence of the Lord. He has gone, we believe, to "mansions in the skies.

T. Moody.

August, 1855.

DIED—In Demopolis, Ala., August 15th, Mrs. JAMES T. GILBERT, son of Mrs. E. Fisher, now the consort of Rev. J. D. Fisher, Alabama Conference.

She was born in Perry Co., 1831, professed religion at the age of 13, and died when she was 21. It was on the Spring Hill Circuit, under the ministry of his father, and at the same time with an only brother, that he gave his heart to God. The editor will remember the time and place. His religious life the present year as tested by his conversion in the world, and his own testimony at Class-meeting, was a development of piety. Indeed, he was a model to young men in purity, modesty and humility. Even delirium he uttered no word to cause a blush. Dear to all, he received in his last hours the ministration of many kind hands, male and female, and was waited upon by day and night by the religious, and by those who were not. Prayers were offered in his behalf, but such has been his life, that resignation to our loss mingled with the desire that he should continue with us. He fell asleep death as sweetly as a blooming tree in the vernal storm. Death was a soft wind which stole away his spirit from the walks of life, enfolded it in visions of immortality, and softly but swiftly conveyed it to God. We felt at the hour of sunset that while we were entering a night of darkness and sorrow, he was passing to a reversed issue—where there is no more night and no more death!

A solemn and good impression he left upon the young men of this village, and some of them we trust have resolved to follow in the path to the skies, which his life and death left luminously open and rigidly bright. May the stone they erect to his memory not be a mark of final separation, but the foundation of future fellowship and praise. Hear his requiem from one of his companions:

"He sleeps in peace, where the soft winds blow,
And their golden beds in the distant west,
Breaths sweet incense o'er the grave,
Where death has given eternal rest.
Needs no more the battle of life,
The sword of Sin at last is riven,
And the shafts, which fell from the fiery foe,
Are thick on the field where the Christian has striven.
Then be the zephyrs that fan thy cold breast,
And gentle the murmuring stream at thy side;
Let be the footsteps that gather around thee
To weep o'er the grave where angels preside."

F. M. G.

Please C. Advocate to please copy.

DIED—At his residence in Brownsville, Aug. 14th, 1855, WAYNE C. PATTON, in the 29th year.

Bro. P. was of a quiet and peaceable disposition, and it is probable no youth ever endeared him for moral habits. In the year 1851 all his father's family that were adults became the subject of convorting grace except himself. At which time he received very serious impressions, which he cultivated by secret prayer and punctual attendance upon public worship. In 1852, at a protracted meeting, his wife solicited him to come to the altar for prayer, which he readily accepted, and God must powerfully converted his soul. From that time he lived a consistent Christian. That religion which he had lived was his solace and comfort, and enabled him to say to his friends, that he was "ready and willing to die, and that this world was not poor at best, but that there was a mansion in heaven." He has left two little boys, a heartbroken wife, with a large circle of relations and friends to mourn their loss, but to rejoice in his gain.

J. W. LANEY.

DIED—15th Aug., 1855, in Benton County, Miss., MARTHA DEWS, wife of George W. Dews, formerly of Lincolnton, N. C.

She embraced religion and joined the church when but a child. Several times during the last ten years of her life she was sorely afflicted, and her friends thought she was soon to be called away, and this was made known to her, she also expressed herself as in her best hours, ready and willing for the will of our blessed God. On the day before she died, while Mother Montgomery (one of her kind neighbors) was praying with her, she became very happy; called all her relatives that were present around her bed, and gave them her dying advice; sent messages to those that were absent, to meet her in Heaven. Committed the raising of her two dear little children to her parents and husband, and requested that they should raise them up in the nurture and admonition of God. In this happy state of mind she continued until the next day, when her happy spirit went to God who gave it. The writer had the pleasure of meeting Sister D. in the same class for several years, and she was always ready to give a satisfactory reason for the hope she had in Christ; she walked by faith in God; lived as beholding him here, who is invisible; died full of faith and the Holy Ghost.

J. E. GUICE.

Eastaboga, Alabama.

DIED—In Lauderdale county, Miss., July the 12th, 1855, Mrs. LUCINDA BELL, consort of Abraham Bell.

I visited her three days before her death, and found her perfectly resigned to the Divine will, notwithstanding she had strong earthly ties, yet to depart and be with Christ was far better. She was happy in the glorious anticipation of a crown of glory at God's right hand. Bidding her aged and widowed mother and brothers and sisters, husband and children all farewell—exhorting all to meet her in heaven—thus fell asleep this beloved sister in Christ.

She joined the Presbyterian Church in 1845, in which communion she remained until the congregation of which she was a member was dissolved. In 1851 she, with her husband, joined the M. E. Church, in which communion she remained a consistent member until she was removed to the better Mount Zion above.

Sister Bell was one of those rather disposed to doubt, and did not have so clear an evidence of her acceptance as some do, until during her last illness, when the Lord was pleased to reveal himself to her the fairest among ten thousand and altogether lovely, and she was able to read her title clear to mansions in the skies.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord"

E. M'MEANS.

DIED—In Clarke county, Ala., on the 27th inst., of typhoid fever, Mrs. EMILY A. FILES, wife of Dr. G. W. Files, and daughter of the late Joel E. Cannon, of Wilcox county, in the 27th year of her age.

She early imbibed the spirit of piety though reared an orphan. About the age of 16 she attached herself to the M. E. Church, and lived a faithful Christian from that time. She ever manifested a holy zeal for the promotion of vital piety. Her untiring efforts to relieve the sick by watching around their couches and ministering to their wants for days and nights together, have embalmed her name in their memory. Though she is dead she yet speaks. When we say she died triumphantly, hearing testimony to the power of religion to sustain in death, we only reiterate what the memory of many christian virtues will ever testify.

Thus the church is bereft of one of its brightest ornaments, the community of a faithful friend, and the family circle of its very life.

Aug 30, 1855. W. K. NORTON.

DIED—At the residence of her son-in-law, Capt. George P. Weaver, in Conecuh county, Ala., 12th of July, 1855, Mrs. MARY MCMILLAN, aged seventy-five years.

She was born in North Carolina, and in the spring of 1828 she, with her family, consisting of her husband and twelve children, emigrated to West Florida, and settled on the Escambia river, where religious facilities at that time were not favorable; but still she maintained her religious course, having been a member of the Presbyterian Church for about thirty years. Some few years after coming to Florida, she attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which communion she remained a steady and faithful member.

Our loss is her gain, for she had long looked forward with calm resignation to the time when she should bid a last farewell to the trials and troubles of this life.

THE CITY HOTEL.

This old, well-known and popular establishment, will be re-opened for the accommodation of the public on the 1st of October next, under the proprietary supervision of that well-known and experienced caterer, R. S. Morse, Esq., formerly of the St. Charles and now of the Arcade Hotel.

Since the house has been closed, numerous and expensive improvements have been made. It has been thoroughly renovated from top to bottom—repainted, repaired, and refixed throughout. Nothing that experience, good taste and ample means could do, has been neglected. All alterations likely to contribute to the convenience, comfort and luxury of his guests, have been closely studied by Mr. Morse, without regard to expense. The hotel has been completely refurnished throughout. The furniture, which is entirely new, is of the most fashionable and elegant description. Especially is this the case in the ladies' apartments, which have been fitted up in the most superb and costly manner. So much for the house and its improvements.

THE OPELOUSAS RAILROAD.—The regular passenger and freight trains of the Opelousas Railroad commenced running regularly to the Terrebonne Crossing, says the Thibodaux Minerva of Saturday, on Monday last, the 21 inst. This new link, three miles in length, completes the worst portion on the whole line of the road from Algiers to Opelousas, and has clearly established that there is nothing impossible with the Yankee nation, when once it determines to go ahead! The new connection is all important to the railroad, as it will secure to it the entire crop of the Parish of Terrebonne removed from the sea-board. There now remains but six miles of track yet to be laid to complete the road to Tigerville, which, we learn, is being pushed forward with the greatest alacrity, and, weather permitting, will be completed by the 15th of October, if not sooner. Speed forward the good work, and all honor to the President and Directors for their energy, activity and efficiency.

A terrible accident occurred in the office of the New York Daily Times on the 4th inst. Two young men named Stevenson and Timpson were descending in a box used for the purpose of lowering the "forme" from the upper story, when it caught on the floor of the fourth story. Before it could be freed several feet of the chain by which it was held unwound, and the jerk of the falling box broke the chain, precipitating the boys into the basement. The injuries they received were fatal.

The Pointe Coupee Echo, of the 8th, has the following about the health of that parish:

The health of the perish during the past three months has been remarkable, fewer cases of the common fever having occurred during that time than we recollect ever hearing. But within the past week or two the yellow fever has made its appearance in our midst, but, we are happy to say, not to any considerable extent. Two of our most estimable citizens have fallen victims to its ravages, since then, however, we have heard of no new case being contracted.

PARTICULARS OF THE ATTACK ON SWEABORG

We have already received by telegraph some particulars of the Atlantic's accounts. The Journal de St. Petersburg gives the following official account of the affair at Sweaborg, which differs materially from the French and English accounts, but, all things considered, the former must be regarded as nearest correct:

The enemy's fleet, which was anchored at Nargen, and is composed in all of seventy-five vessels, raised anchor at mid-day on the 6th of August, and the same day at 4:45 P. M., left a squadron of three ships and four steamers anchored before Sandham.

By two telegraphic dispatches, dated the 9th inst. at 9 and 11 o'clock, General de Berg announces that the enemy, after having formed a line of bombarding ships from Ronskhar to Grokhar, and having constructed during the night a battery on the Longern Rock, commenced at 7 o'clock in the morning to discharge bombs against the fortress of Sweahorg. The two vessels anchored before Sandham also opened their fire against the Island and against battery No 2. We expect further details.

A supplement extraordinary of the Invalide Russe of the 11th August, publishes a dispatch from Sweaborg, dated July 28. It states that about mid-day on the 28th the cannonade of the enemy against Swaab rg had become very violent, and redoubled in activity, discharging from 15 to 20 shots per minute. Our artillery answers them with success, particularly from the Nicholas battery. At 2:40 the fire of the enemy became more violent, the number of shots being about 36 per minute. Two of the enemy's frigates have been brought to bear between Malko and Drumso, and keep up a very rapid cannonade against the latter island. The fleet has already fired five thousand bombs. At 5:00, the cannonade of the enemy was concentrated against the fortress, but slightly diminished since three o'clock in the afternoon. Our batteries on the Isle of Sandham fired with so much success upon the vessels which had attacked the Isle that they withdrew out of the reach of our fire. At fifteen minutes past eight the violent bombardment had not ceased.

At nightfall the besiegers commenced to fire, besides bombs, congreve rockets into Sweahorg. According to the nearest calculation, they could not have discharged less than 10,000 bombs between 7 o'clock in the morning and 8 o'clock in the evening, and at midnight they were firing congreve rockets at the rate of thirty a minute. At 2:40 A. M. the rapid discharge of rockets against the fortress, the islands, and the forts, had not discontinued, but the number of bombs was less considerable. The spirit of the troops is perfect. At 7 o'clock in the evening of the 29th July, (10th August,) the fire of the enemy had become much weaker, but at half past four o'clock the bombardment was kept up with redoubled intensity. At ten o'clock the enemy brought his bomb vessels and gun-boats round towards the left, concentrating his fire against the Wester Swartho work, but, thanks to God, he did not succeed in effecting any injury. All our works and batteries remain intact.

July 29, (Aug 10) 2:30 P. M.—The fire of the enemy was renewed with double intensity after 9 A. M. Up to noon their fire was directed chiefly against the works on West Swartoe, and the Nicholas battery on the island of Rautaw, but without success; their cannonade was then again turned against the fortress. According to an approximate calculation about 3000 shots were fired yesterday against Sandham Island; the firing consisted chiefly in broadsides or rolling fire.

To day about 4 800 shell were thrown into West Swartoe, and the Nicholas battery, which, to judge from their explosion, were all of the weight of seven pounds.

7:6 P. M.—The cannonade of the enemy is weaker. 10:17 P. M.—The bombardment to-day has positively done no damage, either to the fortifications or to the batteries or guns. In these two days the conflagration destroyed some buildings on the Island of Sturn-Ester-Swartoe.

July 30th, (August 11th) 9:50 A. M.—Yesterday about 10 P. M., the enemy recommenced firing rockets, and opened fire from the mortars of their battery on Langern rock, which fired from 100 to 120 shots per hour. The rockets ceased at half-past eleven. During last night about 350 rockets were fired. This morning at 5:30 the fire against the fortress ceased. During the night some rocket boats approached close to the Nicholas battery on Rantan Island, but were fired on with grape, and withdrew.

10 P. M evening.—The bombardment was not renewed during the day. The enemy's fleet remains at anchor in its old position, and counts the same number of vessels.

July 31st, (August 12th) 4 A. M. morning.—At one this morning the enemy fired 72 rockets into the fortress, which did no damage. Some of their gunboats are getting up steam.

1:5 A. M.—The bombardment has not been renewed; the enemy appears to be disarming the battery they had established on the Langern Rock. The ships that bombarded Sandham of the 28th July (August 9th) continue their repairs.

Ten o'clock, evening.—The enemy remain at their old anchorage, and do not renew the attack.

FROM A LETTER.

A few incidents from private letters are worth notice. The gun-boats drew close in to the batteries, and kept steaming around in five different circles, delivering their fire as they proceeded. The mortar vessels were outside; the gun-boats were moved stern and stern, and continually altered their position to destroy the range of the enemy. The fleet was at anchor outside, beyond the range of the batteries. The men employed had, as is usual, their ears padded with cotton, and few cases of deafness are reported, but all employed experienced severe pain in the chest, and in two days some of the men had not recovered their voices. The mortar-boats threw 1600 tons of shells!

Operations in the Crimea.

A supplement of the Invalide Russe publishes the journal received from Prince Gortschakoff, of the operations in the Crimea, from the 26th July to the 31 of August.

The report states that during that space of time, the cannonade and bombardment of the fortress, which fell off at times, took, at intervals, an extraordinary degree of quickness against certain parts of our line of defence; for example, on the 27th July, in two hours and a half, the enemy, having concentrated his fire on No 4 battery, discharged about 1300 projectiles. The fire of the carbineers was incessent on both sides.

Within Sebastopol, besides the repair of our damages, we continued the works which have been commenced, and which consist of increasing the thickness of the coverlugs, in reinforcing the coverings of the powder magazines, and the construction of new batteries. Our artillery fired with great success, shackling and often even entirely stopping the works of the besiegers, and silencing their ordnance. Four days of rain, which has succeeded a long drouth, has refreshed the atmosphere.

The following are the details of the siege.

July 14 (26).—Toward mid-day we effected an explosion in one of the mine passages of the enemy. The besiegers placed in the second trench thirteen gabions, in a half circle, opposite the right face of the Schwartz redoubt; they labored also to raise a height in front of bastion No. 4, and they constructed with large gabions, filled with stones, an lodgment towards the Mamelon, in front of the left face of the Kornileff bastion, and about 300 paces from the Malakhoff tower.

July 15 (27).—At one o'clock in the afternoon, the French batteries opened a sharp fire against bastion No. 4. On our own side we answered with the same activity. The cannonade was prolonged until half-past 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and in that space of time it is calculated that not less than 1300 projectiles and treu, fired against the bastion. Considering the violence of the fire, our loss was very moderate. Against other points of the line of defence, the enemy endeavored to continue the construction of the lodgment commenced of old by him in front of Schwartz redoubt, but the fire of our artilly compelled him to abandon this work. In front of the Kornileff battery the enemy prolonged his approaches five sagenes and considerably increased the height and the thickness of the covering of his other trenches.

July 16 (28).—During the day a well sostained fire from the enemy's batteries was at first directed against bastion No. 3, and towards six in the evening the besiegers opened a violent cannonade upon bastion No. 6. At the point our batteries answered with so much success that at the end of an hour they reduced the enemy to silence. On this day the enemy finished the height in front of bastion No. 4, and organized upon its covering a number of loopholes and embrasures by means of bags of earth. These works were, however, much interfered with by the fire of our artillery. From the Malakhoff Tower we remarked that they continued to supply with artillery the redoubts near the bays at Kamtesch and Streleta.

July 17 (29th).—At 5 o'clock in the afternoon the besiegers set fire to two mine furnaces against the angle of bastion No 4, but without success. Towards 7 o'clock in the evening an English steamer coming from Eupatoria, passed within range of the guns of the batteries on the Sevastopol shores, the well directed fire of which compelled her to put out.

July 18 (30th).—About midday our artillery opened a fire directed against the semi-circular trench of the enemy in front of the Schwartz redoubt, and in two hours this trench was entirely demolished. In the course of the day the besiegers tried several times to resume the works, but the shot from our batteries made all their attempts vain and useless.

July 19 (31).—The besiegers works, in front of the Schwartz redoubt, and of bastion No 5, were twice stopped by the fire from our batteries, and, in general, the fire on our side did not allow the enemy to finish his new approaches.

July 20 (August 1st).—At eleven o'clock at night we interrupted their work, by an explosion at the extremity of the gallery of our countermine, and, in consequence, the enemy could not push forward his new approaches. One of his lodgments on the declivity opposite to the Kurnileff bastion, was destroyed by the Cossacks of our secret port.

Nothing of importance has transpired in other parts of the Crimea.

The Battle of Traktir Bridge.

Accounts are yet imperfect. The following are the dispatches received:

Prince Gortschakoff telegraphs: "Evening, August 10th.—Part of our troops crossed the Tchernaya and attacked the heights of Tchiuchene. Having encountered very considerable forces, we, after an obstinate fight, thought proper to retire to the right bank, where we awaited the advance of the enemy for four hours. As they did not move forward, we returned to our former position. The loss is heavy on both sides."

Gen. Simpson telegraphs: "August 17.—Prince Gortschakoff commanded in person. Gen. Read is killed. Our Allies have 600 prisoners. The Russian loss is greater than at first thought. Our batteries have kept up a steady fire."

Gen. Pelissier telegraphs: "August 17, 11 P. M.—In his attack yesterday the enemy threw forward five divisions, supported by 6:00 cavalry and 20 batteries of field artillery, with the determination of possessing himself of the heights of Tchiuchine. After having crossed the river at several places they had accumulated supplies of sappers' tools, ork planks, beams and scaling ladders, all of which they left in their retreat. As on all occasions our artillery fought most valiantly and successfully. An English battery on the rising ground occupied by the Piedmontese, was powerful aid. The Russians left on the field 2500 dead, and 38 Russian officers and 1620 Russian wounded are now in our ambulances. Three Russian generals are killed, and two have now more than 600 prisoners. Our loss amounts to 181 killed and 810 wounded."

Pelissier again telegraphs: August 18, Prince Gortschakoff has asked for an armistice to bury the dead. Lieut. Gen. Read is killed.

August 19, 1 P. M.—It was necessary to continue the armistice demanded yesterday by the Russians from 6 A. M. to 2 P. M. to-day, for them to carry away their dead. The nearest return we could make gives these results: Russians buried by the French 2,129; by the Russians 1200. Total 3329.

(Signed) PELISSIER.

The Moniteur adds these words: "The artillery has again opened fire against Sebastopol. An error in a dispatch led to the belief that another bombardment had commenced; but that was not the case. The fire referred to was from our guns, which have powerfully contributed to facilitate our works of approach against the Malakoff."

Gen. Simpson's latest dispatch by mail is dated August 11th, and states briefly, in a dozen lines, that the army was unceasingly employed in strengthening the advanced works, which are now so close to the enemy that scarce any further advance can be made; that Major McGowan of the 93d is taken prisoner; and that the health of the army is, on the whole, good, although cholera still continues to take several victims a day.

Gortschakoff's latest dispatch is equally brief; "August 21st. The fire of the Allies has sensibly diminished, and it ceases as but little damage." His previous dispatch of the 17th mentioned the renewal of a steady fire by the besiegers.

Many British officers are leaving the camp on sick leave. The general orders of August 31 to 8th give leave to no "lower than seventy. Complaints are made that officers are not sent from england to take the places of the absent. The French go into the other extreme and grant no leave.

The present effective force of the British in the Crimea, exclusive of sick and of reinforcements on the way, is 28,000 men. The hospitals are now in quite a satisfactory condition.

The Duke of Newcastle is still in camp.

A private letter from the French camp (quoted by the London Times, Paris correspondence) referring to the disproportionate loss of the Russians, as compared with the Allies, at the Tchernunya, says, the Russians had to pass through a deep ravine to approach the Allied lines, and while approaching they were absolutely mowed down by grape and musketry, while the Russians, from their position, could do little more than fire in the air. It was consequently in the advance and retreat they suffered most. The same letter says the Russians, both in the field and fortress, are destitute of provisions; and adds, "If we do not take Sebastopol by our cannon we shall soon do so by famine.

A Russian deserter says that when volunteers were called for to attack the Tchernaya lines, about 300 in each regiment volunteered, making the volunteer attacking force 10,000, but, of course supported by the whole army.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP ORIZABA.

The steamship Orizaba, Capt. Forbes, Arrived Tuesday morning from Vera Cruz, bringing dates from that place to the 8th inst., and from the City of Mexico to the 24.

The bark Wildfire arrived at Vera Cruz from New York on the 2d. The Mexican war steamer Iturbide arrived from Havana on the 5th.

We have received by this arrival the first seven numbers of a new paper, "El Progreso" published in Vera Cruz, and looking to the new order of things, probably, for success. We have also received a file of the Eco del Comercio under a new name, El Fronterizano."

The Progreso has an article upon the proclamation of Captain Henry—who proposed some time ago to assist with an American volunteer force in the overthrow of Santa Anna—which it winds up by exclaiming: "God save me from my friends, that I may save myself from my enemies!"

Gen. Ignacio Llave, chief of the liberating forces of the department of Vera Cruz after the flight of Santa Anna, left Orizaba and took possession of the city of Vera Cruz at the same time refusing to acknowledge the authority of Carrera, as he had not been elected in accordance with the plan of Ayutla, and for various other reasons. Llave then published a manifesto to the people, setting forth the case and declaring that he had taken the government of the State into his hands because he conceived such a course indispensable to its tranquility, and the only one likely to insure the tranquility of the department. The national Guard was immediately reorganized, and the citizens enrolled themselves to considerable numbers.

A telegraphic dispatch has been received at Vera Cruz, from the City of Mexico, stating that Carrera was disposed to deliver the Presidency of the nation into the hands of Alvarez, and had signified that fact to official manner.

A company of one hundred and forty-four soldiers who had been imprisoned at Perote by the former Government for attempting to join the revolutionary forces had been liberated in accordance with a manifestation of the popular will.

For refusing to obey an order to leave the department of Vera Cruz, Gen Tamariz had been arrested and placed on board the war schooner Tamaulipas.

The garrison at Zacatecas pronounced in favor of the plan of San Luis Potosi, retaining the late officials in power, whereupon the people attacked and put the garrison to flight after a severe fight. The plan of Ayutla was then adopted, and Gen. Zamora was placed at the head of affairs.

Among other decrees lately issued in the department of San Luis Potosi for the better administration of justice, is one imposing the penalty of death or two years' imprisonment for the crime of robbery and for sundry lesser offences.

A son of Degollado, who had been imprisoned by Santa Anna in consequence of the fact that he was so near a relative of one of the chiefs of the rebellion, had been set at liberty and returned to the capital.

El Heraldo speaks of a letter from Gen. Alvarez, in which he announces the intention of immediately proceeding to the capital.

Rumor prevailed that hostilities had broken out between the forces of Haro and Vidaurri, in the department of San Luis Potosi, but they needed confirmation.

The papers of the capital are filled with proclamations and other documents from the newly constituted officials in every part of the country, but few of them appear to be of much importance. For the time being each person wielding the least authority appears to impose such laws and regulations as he see fit.

LOUISIANA ITEMS.—The Baton Rouge Gazette of the 8th says:

HEALTH OF BATON ROUGE.—We are glad to be able to state that we have had for a day or two past hardly any new cases of fever in town. It is evident that the disease has nearly run its race unless new material should be brought here. Those already sick are doing as well as could be expected.

The Franklin (St. Mary) Banner of the 6th, says:

The yellow fever appears to be stealthily purming its onward march, not only in our parish, but in other portions of our State. On Monday afternoon we were informed that there were eleven cases of clearly recognized yellow fever in and about Patterson ville; and yesterday morning we were told by a gentleman just arrived from there that the number had increased to sixteen. The disease is not considered to be of a bad type; however, as a large majority of the cases readily yield to medical treatment, when attended to at an early stage.

The same paper says:

On Friday last it blew quite a gale here, accompanied by a most searching rain, prostrating the cane in many places and no doubt doing considerable damage within the reach. The light ship Atchafalaya, Captain Jacobs, stationed at the Atchafalaya bar, was driven ashore at Turkey Hammock, and is much injured. The light ship Pleasanton, Capt Smith, stationed on Ship Island shoal, parted her moorings about 10 o'clock in the morning, and drifted ashore on shell Keys about 9 o'clock that night, also much injured. Fears were entertained on Sunday for the fate of the Last Island packet, the Star, which was due here on Saturday evening, as it was known she would have many passengers on board; but this staunch little steamer reached Morgan's safely, and arriving here on Monday night, dispelled all apprehensions.

YELLOW FEVER.—There has been no deaths from fever within the city since our last. The Orleans physicians state that the cases under treatment are doing well, and with the exercise of prudence, there are but few who will not recover.

From the accounts which we receive, the fever is undoubtedly prevailing to a more alarming extent in the adjoining county of Hinds than with us. [Vicksburg Sentinel, 6th.

CONTINUED HEALTH.—It affords us pleasure to say, remarks the Plaquemine Sentinel of the 8th, that our town continues in excellent health, and we have now great hopes that the same good fortune will attend us throughout the season. Persons from the country really are running into town to escape the epidemic. This is the fact.

The Plaquemine Sentinel of the 8th has the following sad intelligence:

MORGANZA.—A letter from Morganza speaks of the fever being terrible there. Would it not be well for those of our citizens in New Orleans who are sending nurses to a distance to take care of helpless sufferers to turn their attention nearer home—to Morganza for instance?

MURDER OF A SHIP CAPTAIN AT SEA.—On the 4th inst., the clipper ship Ariel, from New York, for Ohioe entered the port of Charleston, her captain, Wm. H. Eayres, having been murdered in his cabin on the night of the 16th of August, in latitude 23 deg. 45 min. longitude 39 west. He was found in his berth with his throat cut, his head bruised and several cuts and stabs in his face and stomach. After the murder the first mate, Nicholas Lakeman, took command of the ship and was about to proceed to the Rio Janeiro, but the passengers and crew insisted upon returning to the United States. On arriving at Charleston two apprentice boys named Henry Girard and Geo Anderson were arrested, each of whom accused the other of the deed. A jury of inquest was held and a verdict rendered, implicating the boys and the mate, Lakeman. The Charleston papers publish the testimony, which is quite voluminous, but vague and inconclusive.

YELLOW FEVER.—There has been no deaths from fever within the city since our last. The Orleans physicians state that the cases under treatment are doing well, and with the exercise of prudence, there are but few who will not recover.

A Washington dispatch of the 6th instant says:

A committee from Norfolk and Portsmouth waited on the President to-day to ask for the use of Fort Monroe by the citizens of the inhabited cities. REBUILDING OF THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE.—We are pleased to learn that the New Orleans Mechanics' Society have completed their arrangements for the erection of an Institute on the site of the old one on Bayou de street. A plan by the architects, Messrs Gallier, Turpin & Co., has been adopted; and some bids of the style of the building may be derived from the fact that while the former building cost $47 000, the new one is to cost $75 000. When the former building was contracted for, the society had but $7000 in its treasury. Now there is $30 000 in the treasury—enough for a very handsome start—and it is anticipated that the receipts henceforth will enable the new building to be completed about the fall of 1856. The public in general will be pleased to hear of this restoration to the city of one of its proudest and most useful ornaments.

In this connection we may state that it is calculated that the Church of the Jesuits' College, on Baronne street, will be finished in the ensuing January. It will be a splendid edifice, built, as it is, in the Moresque style, similar to the Alhambra, in Spain. The two towers in front will be surmounted by steeples reaching to a height of 145 feet, while the rear will support a dome reaching to a height of 135 feet.

The above two buildings, when complete, will be noble architectural adornments to the part of the city in which they stand.

HEALTH OF THE PRISONS.—There has been no yellow fever in the Work-house this year, and we have to record the first death by the disease in the Parish Prison—that of Thomas Moore, who was sent there a few days ago for drunken brawling and carrying concealed weapons. Considering the number of unacclimated persons who occupy both institutions, the healthiness speaks volumes in favor of regular exercise and temperate habits as preventive of yellow fever.

JACKSON MONUMENT.—We perceive the work in Jackson square is going ahead, in preparation for the erection of the Jackson Monument in the center of that pleasant park. The circ

RULES FOR MILKING.—If you would have a gentle cow, be gentle yourself. If a cow kicks much, place a switch under the left arm, the pail in the left hand, and if, while milking, she kicks, let it be followed invariably by a single blow. Never strike but once, even if she kicks so hard as to break your leg; and never omit it, even if she hit nothing. A small mess of food at the time will serve to do away with any disagreeable impression in connection with milking.

To be a good milker you must pare your nails short, sit on a stool, milk fast, never scold a cow, never get out of patience, tie her tail to her leg in fly-time, never wet the teats with the milk, and never pound a cow for running or kicking. Milk applied to the teats to soften them, dries, and forms a glossy varnish, which tends to cause cracking or chapping of these parts. Cold water is much better, becoming dry by the time the milking is finished, and leaving the teats clean and soft.

BENEFITS OF DROUTHS.—A recent able paper, by the Maryland State Professor of Chemical, Agriculture, etc., shows that drouths are a necessity in the economy of nature, as it respects fertility, productiveness of soils, etc. We give an extract:

"The manner in which drouths exercise their beneficial influence is as follows: During dry weather a continual evaporation of water takes place from the surface of the earth, which is not supplied by any from the clouds. The evaporation from the surface creates a vacuum (so far as the water is concerned) which is at once filled by the water rising up from the subsoil of the land; the water from the subsoil is replaced from the next strata below, and in this manner the circulation of water in the earth is the reverse to that which takes place in wet weather. This progress to the surface of the water in the earth manifests itself strikingly in the drying up of springs, and of rivers and streams which are supported by springs. It is not, however, only the water which is brought to the surface of the earth, but also all that which the water holds in solution. These substances are salts of lime, and magnesia of potash and soda, and indeed whatever the subsoil or deep strata of the earth may contain. The water on reaching the surface of the soil is evaporated and leaves behind the mineral salts, which I will here enumerate, viz: Lime, as air-slaked lime; magnesia, as air-slaked magnesia phosphate of lime, or bone earth; sulphate of lime, or plaster of Paris; carbonate of potash and soda, with silicate of potash and soda, and also chloride of sodium or common salt. All indispensable to the growth and production of plants which are used for food. Pure rain water as it falls would dissolve but a very small proportion of some of these substances, but when it becomes strongly imbued with carbonic acid from the decomposition of vegetable matter in the soil, and thus acquires the property of readily dissolving minerals on which it before could have very little influence."

FILIAL AFFECTION REWARDED.

Nowhere in the world, one would think, is romance so intimately intergrown with the realities of every-day life, as in La Belle France. The following charming little story is one of the many that is being enacted every day and hour in the gay metropolis:

In a modest apartment in the Faubourg St. Germaine, a young man of about thirty and an old white-haired man, whose wandering eye reveals that his mind is not quite steady, have dwelt for several years. This young man, whom we shall designate simply by the problematical letter X., for fear of being indiscreet, is an engraver on copper, and shares his dwelling with his father, who fell into his dotage ten years ago, from the loss of all he owned. The poor old man's insanity consists of a sort of restlessness, for which he cannot account, even to himself, and nothing but the presence of his son can calm him in the least degree, on which account the young man tends the afflicted parent with the tenderness and solicitude of a mother for her child. The neighbors are sometimes moved almost to tears by the lovely picture they occasionally see through the open windows, of the good son supporting the white head of his poor old father on his shoulder, where it rests with the confidence and happiness of a child.

However, this affection of the artist for his father did not prevent his youthful heart from asserting its rights, but it imposed the most rigid silence upon the expression of this inward sentiment, for he feared lest his bride should find the care of the old man a burden, and fail to bestow that tenderness upon him to which he was accustomed. Therefore, in order to deceive if possible this necessity of loving which he felt so painfully, M. X—— would watch for hours at a time a charming young maid which appeared at one of the neighboring windows, abandoning himself fearlessly to the pleasure of nourishing this passion, since it was utterly impossible he should ever win its object, as the lady was the daughter of his own landlord, and would have a dowry of some two hundred thousand francs, while he had but his burin. She was then but the ideal creation which every artist calls up in his dreams, and in all the young man's productions shone forth her lovely features.

Matters had been in this state for some time, when finding himself in arrears for two quarters' rent, the young artist sought his landlord to beg a further delay, until the pay for some work then due should enable him to meet the debt.

"In the first place, young man," replied the proprietor kindly, "I have never asked you for the money, and I request you will not distress yourself about it; in the next place, why do you not marry? You might readily find a wife with a handsome dowry, and money never comes amiss."

"Monsieur," replied the young man, "I have long determined to remain single, fearing that a wife would regard as a trouble and embarrassment that poor old man to whom I feel more like the father than the son; but to speak truly, I have discovered a maiden for whom I would answer as for myself, so much of sweetness and angelic goodness is there in her whole appearance; but I never hope to win her, for she is rich and I have nothing."

"What, nothing! Have you not your talent? Besides, gentleman—millionaire though he might be—would hesitate to give his child to the care of one who would watch over her with the devotion with which you attend your afflicted father? Fear nothing, then, but speak for her, be she whom she may."

"But, sir, if I were to tell you that your daughter is the one I love?"

"By heaven, sir, you would tell me glorious news! Do you believe I have forgotten, despite my fifty years, the passion which a lover regards as fair one?"

A few days only have passed since M. X—— witnessed the realization of what he had regarded as an impossible dream, and the poor deserted feels with surprised satisfaction the kisses of a young woman, beautiful as an angel, mingled on his wrinkled forehead with those of his beloved son.

DEATH AMONG THE CATTLE.—A mortal disease has recently made its appearance among the cattle at Long Pond, on the mountain, about the centre of the county corners of Columbia, Sullivan and Luzerne, Pa. About two weeks since, in one day, they found twenty-seven dead cattle in the woods on the mountain. The disease by which so many have met their death is said to have originated from some impurities from the stagnant pools, without access to any pure water.

FROM, RAMBLES IN ICELAND.

BY PLINEY MILES.

Iceland was first discovered by Naddod, a Norwegian pirate, in the year 890, almost one thousand years ago. He was thrown on the coast in the winter, and from the appearance of the country he called it Snæland—'Snowland.' Four years after, Gerdar Swarfarson, a Swede, circumnavigating it found it an island, and named it 'Gardener's Holm,' or Gerdar's Island. His account of the country was so favorable, that Floiki, another sea-rover, went there to settle; but neglecting to cut hay in the summer, his cattle perished in the winter. From the accumulation of ice on the west coast, (ice then was driven over from Greenland,) he called the country 'Iceland,' a name it has ever since borne. In 874, the first permanent settlement was made in Iceland, by Ingolf, a Norwegian chieftain.

Greenland was discovered in 980, one hundred and twenty years after the discovery of Iceland. In 982, Eric, surnamed the Red, sailed to Greenland, and in 986 established a settlement there, which flourished more than four hundred years. To induce settlers to go and reside in a new country the most fabulous accounts were given of the climate and productions. The face of the country was represented as clothed in green, and it was even stated that 'every plant drooped with butter.'

The name of "Greenland" thus given to it was as great a misnomer as "Iceland" applied to the neighboring isles. In reality the two countries should change names, for Iceland is a country of green fields and fair flowers, while Greenland is covered with almost perpetual ice and snow. Eric the Red had a companion in his Greenland settlement whose name was Harinlf. Biarni, the son of of Herinlf, sailed from Iceland to join his father in Greenland, was driven south, and landed on the American coast—probably Labrador. Thus the first discovery of America by Europeans was in the year 986, by Biarni Heriulfson, a native of Norway, though he sailed from Iceland. He returned north and landed in Greenland, and gave an account of his discovery.

Subsequent voyages to the American coast were made by Lief and his two brothers, sons of Eric the Red, who after the style of names in Iceland was called Iriksson. I am speaking on good authority in saying that a gifted Swede, now an American citizen, and most prominent before the world, is a direct descendent of Erio and his son. I allude to Capt. Ericsson, the laventor of the celorio ship—a pioneer in American discovery, and a worthy descendant of America.

Another interesting fact may be noted. Among the early settlers in America—for a settlement was formed, that continued several years—some of the men had their wives with them. One of these, the wife of Thorfin, while in America gave birth to a son, who was named Snorre.

This Snorre Thorfison was the first native American of whom we have any account, and may be set down as the first Yankee on record. From this Thorfison was descended Thorwaldsen, and also Fin Magnusem, the historian and antiquary, so that we can almost claim the great sculptor of the North and the great historian as Americans.

These facts I gathered from Icelandic geneological tables; and all who have investigated the history of the Northern nations, know with what accuracy these tables are compiled. To return a little in my narrative: Leif Erikson having purchased the ship of Biarni Heriulfson, sailed from Greenland in the year 1000. The first land he made he called "Helluland," or land of flat stones. This was doubtless the coast of Newfoundland. The next coast he saw was covered with forests, and consequently he named it "Markland, or Woodland." This was probably Nova Scotia. The next land he discovered, still farther South, produced vines and grapes, and this he named "Vinland," a name the Icelanders ever afterwards used in speaking of the American continent. We have the best of proof, the climate and productions, in the length of the days, as well as in their maps and drawings, that their settlements were on some part of our New England coast, probably Massachusetts or Rhode Island. In a subsequent voyage, these adventurous navigators sailed father South, and it is supposed, from the account they gave, that they proceeded as far as Virginia and the Carolinas. Timber, furs, and grapes, were the most valuable articles the country produced; and for these several voyages were made to Vinland, from Greenland, houses were built, and settlers resided in the country for at least three years, from 1011 to 1014.

Music by Steam.

A Yankee genius has succeeded in harnessing steam to a musical instrument in such a way as to secure perfect execution. The name of the inventor is Joshua C. Stoddard, of Worcester, Mass. The following description will give some idea of the possibilities of the invention.

The instrument is of simple construction, and when once thoroughly put together, will seldom if ever get out of repair. It consists of horizontal steam chest or cylinder, some six feet in length, and from four to six feet in diameter, which is fed with steam from the boiler in the establishment where it is located. Upon the top of this cylinder is a series of valve chambers placed at equal distance from each other, into which the steam is admitted without obstruction. Each valve chamber contains a double metallic valve, with no packing, yet it fits so closely upon its seat as to allow no steam to escape. To each of these valves is connected a very small piston-rod or stem which passes through the chamber and is operated upon by machinery without. Were it not for this steam the valve would be simply a double balance valve and would remain stationary wherever placed, the pressure of steam being equal on all sides; but a part of one end of the valve being carried outside of the chamber gives it the self-closing power, which is then the nicest part of the whole invention, and perhaps the best patentable feature. With a slight pressure against those rods the valve is opened, and when the valve is removed it closes as quick as steam can act, which is not much behind electricity.

Directly over each of these valves is placed a common alarm whistle, constructed similar to those used upon locomotives, except that it admits of being lowered, to flatten or sharpen the tone. These whistles are made of different sizes, so as to produce the desired tone corresponding with each note, etc. This completes the machine with the exception of a cylinder similar to those used in a common hand organ or music box, containing cogs, which, when properly arranged, will, when tuned by hand or otherwise, operate upon the valves in such a manner as to play any tune desired, by simply changing the position of the cogs, which are intended to be movable.

One of these instruments can be heard from ten to twenty-five miles on the water, and every note will be perfect and full. We heard the inventor play, "Rosalie" on it, and it looked like "getting off tall notes" mechanically. This invention is so completely under the control of the operator that, were it arranged with a key board similar to a piano, it would obey the slightest touch, and a child could play slow or quick tunes, every note of which might be heard several miles.

It is the design of the inventor to place those instruments upon locomotives and steamboats. It would appear rather novel to John Bull to hear "Yankee Doodle" from one of our ocean steamers as she was about to enter a British port, (say twenty miles,) and it would remind a Yankee of his jack knife to hear "Sweet Home" from the same vessel on its return to New York or Boston. This invention, if it meets the expectations of most who have seen it, will alter the tone of public demonstration on important occasions very essentially.

From the first of January to the 30th June, 1855, the total killed by accidents on railways in Great Britain and Ireland was 113, and 158 injured; of which three were killed and 107 injured from causes beyond their own control.

It appears that during the twenty-six years of high wine duties prior to 1825, the average annual consumption of wine in England was 5,575,160 gallons, and the revenue £2,259,800; from 1825 to 1851, under low duties, the average annual consumption was 6,474,029 gallons, and the revenue £1,727,644. The decrease of revenue was 24½ per cent. The increase in consumption, only 16 3-5 per cent.

A list of consuls, vice-consuls, and consular agents in the service of the British Government shows the entire number of the three grades to be 538.

THE BEQUESTS OF THE LATE ABBOTT LAWRENCE.—The Boston Courier, speaking of the bequests of this truly great and good man, gives the following particulars, with the accompanying remarks:

We last Monday gave a sketch of the life and character of the Hon. Abbott Lawrence, and after stating that he had given fifty thousand dollars for the establishment of the Scientific School at Harvard College, and four thousand dollars towards the establishment of prizes in the Latin and English High Schools of this city, mentioned that he had, in his will, bequeathed further large sums to other public objects. We are enabled this morning to state precisely the amounts thus bequeathed, which, in the gross, foot up to the sum of one hundred and thirty thousand dollars, viz:

To the Lawrence Scientific School	$50,000
For building Model Lodging Houses in Boston	50,000
To the Boston Public Library	10,000
To the Franklin Library in the city of Lawrence	5,000
To the American Bible Society	5,000
To the American Tract Society	5,000
To the Home Missionary Society	5,000

The princely donation here recorded, in behalf of science and education—fifty thousand dollars in addition to a similar amount given in his life-time—is worthy of all praise. He whose generous admiration falls to be intensified in the atmosphere of such capacious munificence, and who is not moved by the Alpine grandeur of the thought and the act, must be dull indeed, and incapable of appreciating the lofty motives of a Christian heart. This act alone stands out in bold relief, like a colossal statue. But it is the more domestic and thoughtful bequest, in aid of the "Model Houses," that opens at once the flood-gates of the heart, and makes every pulsation of humanity joyous. Such a feeling recognition of the poor and needy who are to share the benefactor's bounty, during the unconscious slumber of the giver, place all his other glorious gifts, and portrayal in characters of living light his goodness of heart and wisdom of mind.

There is no unworthy selfishness in the desire to gain the approbation of an approving conscience, or the appreciation of mankind for deeds of charity and love. On the contrary, it is the elevating incentive of a noble soul. The goodness of Abbott Lawrence was like "a city set upon a hill, that cannot be hid." The ignoble reverse of action, that studiously does nothing that is laudable and exalted, for fear of publicity, may possibly consign both name and fame to the mere dust from whence they sprung—unwept, unhonored and unsung. The name of the Lawrences glow with unfading effulgence in the same moral constellation which embraces those of Heyrard, Franklin, Lowell, Appleton, Perkins, McLean, Lyman, Shaw, Smitheon, Girard, Cooper, Astor, and hosts of other luminaries, who have left the shadowy earth to shine among the stars of heaven.

"He was born of poor, but respectable parents," say the biographers. We have quite a list of men of our own country, who were born of poor, but respectable parents, who are not unknown to fame and usefulness. George Washington, Ben Franklin, John Adams, Roger Sherman, Nathaniel Green, David Rittenhouse, Nath. Bowditch, Benj. West, Robert Fulton, Andrew Jackson, Martin Van Buren, J. C. Calhoun, Geo. McDuffie, Walter Forward, Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, Thomas Ewing, Thos. Corwin, J. J. Crittenden, Silas Wright, and Abbott Lawrence, whose recent death has filled the land with deepest regret at the decease of a man so useful to his race. Mr. Lawrence died in the full possession of his mental powers, and in the glorious triumphs of the Christian's faith.

A "FAST" CHILD.—Children have sometimes a peculiar way of saying things very subversive of gravity in the old folks.

Mr. Frederick Flizgerald Smith had a luxurious growth of whiskers. The lower part of his countenance was entirely enveloped in hair from ear to ear. The pilous vegetation stood out in large, matted, tangled and curly magnificent masses all over his jawn and chin. Indeed, it was commonly reported that he had taken a promium on it at a fair held by the society for "ameliorating the condition of the Jews, and encouraging the growth of the hair."

Nature, if too profuse in her gifts in one direction, is very apt to correct the redundancy by a compensative deficiency in another.

So it happened with Mr. Frederick Fitzgerald Smith. All over the upper part of his head above his ears was very curly. But per contra:

"His head no hair on the top of his head,
In the place where the wool ought to grow."

Mr. Smith lodged one night and breakfasted at the house of Mr. John Simpkine, his friend. Mr. Simpkins had, like every parent who has children, a very smart little girl. It is surprising how many smart children there are now-a-days! At the breakfast table young Miss Arabella Simpkins could not take her eyes for one moment from the patrinrchial countenance of Mr. Smith.

"Arabella, love, don't be so rude," nudged Mrs. Simpkine, primus.

"Arabella, eat your toast," frowned Mr. Simpkine, secundus.

But Arabella kept staring at Mr. Frederick Fitzgerald Smith.

"Betty, remove this naughty girl from the table," cried Mr. Simpkine, in a rage.

"I don't want to go, ma, I don't!" squalled the smart Arabella. "I want to look at that man a little longer. Don't you see, ma, he has got his head ou wrong side up!"

The young lady was living and doing well at last accounts, but it is difficult to conceive how she can survive.

ARAB ODDITIES.—An Arab, entering a house, removes his shoes, but not his hat. He mounts his horse upon the right side, while his wife milks their cows upon the left side. With him the point of a pin is its head, while its head is made its heel. His head must be wrapped up warm, even in summer, while his feet may well enough go unked in winter. Every article of merchandise which is liquid he weighs, but measures wheat, barly, and a few other articles. He reads and writes from right to left, but figures are read from left to right. He eats almost nothing at breakfast, about as much for dinner, but after the work of the day is done, sits down to a hot meal swimming in oil, or, better yet, boiled butter. His sons eat with him, but the females of the house wait till his lordship is done.

He rides his donkey when travelling, his wife walking behind. He laughs at the idea of walking in the street with his wife, or even vaoating his coat for a woman. He knows no use for chairs, tables, knives, or even spoons, unless they are wooden ones. Bedsteads, bureaus, and fire places may be placed in the same category. If he be an artisan, he does his work sitting, perhaps using his toes to hold what his hands are engaged upon. Drinks cold water like a sponge, but never bathes in it, unless his home be on the sea-shore is rarely seen drunk—too seldom speaks the truth—is deficient in attention for his kindred—has little curiosity and no imitation—no wish to improve his mind—no desire to surround himself with the comforts of life.

THE ALLIED NAVAL STRENGTH IN THE BLACK SEA.—The maritime forces of England in the Black Sea at the present moment are as follows: Seven sail of the line—that is, two 120 gun ships, three 90, one 84, and one 78; three frigates of 18 guns, three of 27, three of 50, and one of 8 guns. The ships with steam power attached are—four with 90 guns, and two carrying 101 and 121. The screw frigates are five in number, carrying guns from 5 to 23. In addition to which there are seven other steam frigates carrying various weights of metal up to 22 guns. There are also thirteen small screw steamers—forming in all 64 vessels of the royal navy. There are no less than 300 hired steam transports and sailing vessels constantly employed. Immediately before Sebastopol there are eight screw steamers, eight steam frigates, two corvettes, and five sailing ships, with six cannoniers. The French have also stationed two steam frigates and six corvettes—in all, 37 ships before the fortress. The remaining ships of the Allied squadrons are at Kamiesch and Balaklava. It is calculated that the Allied maritime forces employed at the present moment in the Black Sea, including transports, amount to 1200 ships.

FALL OF A BRIDGE.—As Van Amburg & Co.'s menagerie was crossing a bridge in Burlington, N. J., on the 24th ult, the bridge gave way, and the cage containing the rhinoceros went down. The rhinoceros, horses and driver were badly bruised, and a lad who was standing on the bridge at the time was so seriously injured that his life is despaired of.

LATER FROM TEXAS.

By the arrival on Tuesday morning of the steamship Mexico, Capt. Lawless, we have received dates from Galveston to the 8th and files of papers from interior Texas.

In regard to the election the returns are still incomplete. The Galveston News says:

The race between Fields and Crosby is getting very close. El Paso has given her entire vote to Crosby, about 860; this brings him up within a hundred of Fields. The Eastern Congressional race is also very close. Ward leads Evans a few hundred—but the knowing ones here seem to incline in the impression that Evans will be elected.

The Legislature will be largely Democratic. The Public Debt Bill is behind, and it is said that in some counties where it has obtained a majority the members elect will vote against it.

The latest news from many parts of the State inform us that the cotton crop is greatly suffering in consequence of the wet weather. The seed is sprouting in the ripe bolls and the young bolls are dropping off. The Titus county Lamplighter states that Western Texas has been flooded by continued storms of late, and we learn that in many places the cotton crop has been injured.

The oldest inhabitant, says the Lagrange (Fayette county) Paper, has scarcely any recollection of so wet a spell of weather as we have had during the past ten days. Very serious damage has already been done to the cotton crop; and, should it continue, we apprehend that the crop will be very materially shortened.

The Palestine Advocate says:

Several hard rains have fallen during the past week, which has, no doubt, seriously injured the cotton which was ready for picking. It will be the making of potatoes, however, of which, report saith, we are extravagantly fond.

In Navarro county the weather has been very favorable for crops.

The Gonzales Inquirer of the 25th ult. says:

A heavy rain fell in this place on night before last and yesterday. Potatoes and ducks may need it, but cotton and cotton planters do not.

The same paper has the following in regard to the crop prospects in Jackson and Lavaca counties:

Mr. Dennet, who came through Jackson and Lavaca a few days since, informs us that the worms have made their appearance in the cotton crops of those counties, but had not done much damage. On Peach Creek, in our county, we also learn that they have been seen in two or three farms, but they soon commenced webbing without doing any material damage. It is thought they will reappear in two or three weeks, but their depredations cannot affect early cotton much—it is only the late plantings that will suffer.

The Galveston News has the following paragraphs:

We learn that Mr. Thomas D. King, accompanied by Mr. Morse, an experienced diver, has gone to Brazos Santiago to make an effort to recover some of the specie lost by the wreck of the steamship Yacht, which occurred some time ago. They are provided with sub-marine armor and other appliances for the enterprise.

The San Antonio Sentinel says a very disgraceful affair occurred the week before last, at a fandango house west of San Pedro, in which a Mexican was shot, and two Americans seriously cut with knives.

The Indians have been committing fresh depredations near San Antonio and on the upper Nueces. The San Antonio Herald states that several horses had been stolen in the immediate vicinity of the city and others wounded by arrows. The Herald also gives the following particulars:

On the night of the 27th, sixteen head of horses were stolen from Mr. Bennett's rancho, and several from other ranches, about five miles from the city. Early next morning a couple of gentlemen who were camping out, discovered five Indians leading and driving a number of horses, some of which they recognized as Mr. Bennett's. When the Indians saw them they moved off behind some chapparel. The gentlemen obtaining aid, returned and recovered all of Mr. Bennett's horses but three. The Indians, no doubt, becoming alarmed at being discovered, left all the animals they could not conveniently take, and made off in a hurry. They are supposed to have taken with them some twenty head of horses. They were followed four or five miles when the pursuit was given up as useless, the Indians being well mounted, and having a good start.

Horses were also stolen from Mr. Twohig's place, on the San Antonio river, about thirty miles below the city. One hundred and fifty head were taken from San Patricio.

It appears as if the Indians did not fear to come in the vicinity of the town, emboldened, no doubt, by previous success.

A letter in the Nueces Valley Advertiser of the 1st inst., from Fort McIntosh, says:

On the 20th inst. a Mexican was wounded by Indians, near Santa Barbra, about fifteen miles above here, to the right of the Eagle Pass road. He made his escape and got within six miles of here, where he was found and carried into Laredo. He died the following day from the effect of the wound which he received.

On the 21st inst., two Mexicans were attacked by one Indian, on the river, eight miles above here. The Mexicans were unarmed. The Indian killed one of them, the other taking "leg ball." The Indian gave chase for a considerable distance, crying out to the vanquished at the same time (in Spanish) "stop and give me your old clothes and I will not kill you." But the former found he was distancing the latter, so he had no idea of surrendering himself or his old clothes.

The Seguin Mercury, of the 1st inst., has the following:

A report reached town yesterday that the Indians, supposed to be seven hundred in number had captured the little son of the Rev Mr McGee, on the Cibolo. He was going from the residence of his father, two miles below the crossing of the old San Antonio and Seguin road, down the Cibolo to Mr. Rector's, a few miles this side of Sutherland's Springs, when he was taken. Accompany, under Captain McCulloch, armed themselves and started for the Cibolo yesterday evening. We hope they may overtake the enemy.

We have since learned that the Indians killed the boy. The old man Rector narrowly escaped the same fate, by leaving his horse and taking to the bushes. The Indians took his horse.

We take the following from the San Antonio Texan, of the 30th ult:

We have just received information from a gentleman of our acquaintance from Fredericksburg, that a boy, some twelve or fifteen years of age, was in the country some twelve miles from town, when several Indians suddenly came upon him, but as he happened to be well mounted, and having the advantage of position, he fortunately escaped with no other injury than a shot in the hand. Had they taken him, there is little doubt but he would have lost his life; but what they most wanted was his horse, and as they took away several from the neighborhood around, probably they went away satisfied.

It is a well known fact, that many of the Lipan Indians are encamped on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, some six or eight miles of Laredo, and they can cross the Rio Grande and come within fifteen miles of San Antonio, commit depredations, and if they get six hours start they can defy pursuit, and he the way do this occasionally.

☞ The prevalence of incorrect notions upon the subject of Medicine is a great cause of misery. Medical practice should not be governed by principles continually deduced from the contradictions of long experience and loose observations. How important, then, that no medicine could be taken by invalids unless it emanates from the hands of men of talent, judgment, and the strictest probity. Hoofland's German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, Philadelphia, is a preparation emanating from one of the most celebrated practitioners of modern times, and one of the ancient medical writers Germany ever produced. This article is now in their hands, as evidences that the article is prepared carefully and skillfully, it is producing the effect the original inventor intended. HOW A SINNER WAS CONVERTED.

The late Dr. Cone's account of his being converted sounds a good deal like Methodist experiences we often hear in love feasts, and we find scoffers and unbelievers would be disposed at once to say, "it is only a Methodist way of talking, like the way," but when they are told that a learned Baptist minister who speaks English would be confounded—at a loss for an explanation, which, indeed, is not a matter of wonder, for the carnal mind cannot discern spiritual things.

The correspondent of Zion's Herald details

He had many requisites for the stage—a voice and figure, a powerful and musical ear and a perfect knowledge of the art of pantomime. However, he became disgusted with the actor's disguise," and left the pro-

Dr. Cone then became book-keeper in the office of a Baltimore newspaper; subsequently became one of the proprietors and editor of the Baltimore Whig; and at this time—during the last war with England—fought in the battle field for his country. He was captain of a company of volunteers, and was present at the battles of Baltimore, Bladensburg and Fort McHenry. After this he was clerk in the Treasury Department in Washington. Here his wanderings were about coming to an end; teacher, editor, politician, actor, literary man—restless, unsatisfied—the Divine Spirit moved upon these troubled waters and soon there was to be a great calm—the blessed effect of the prayers and tears of a mother were about to be seen in bringing her erring son into the Redeemer's fold. In his own words: "For two years I do not recollect attending public worship more than twice; politics and war completely engrossed my mind." One would think, after this neglect, Mr. Cone's early religious instruction would have been obliterated; not however.

But I must give his own account of his conversion for sin, and remarkably clear and full conversion:

"In the month of November, 1813, after breakfast, I took up the newspaper, and saw among other things, a large sale of books advertised at Wood's auction rooms, and said to myself, I will look in as I go the office, and see what they are. I did so, and the first book I took up was a volume of the works of Sir Isaac Newton. In an instant my whole life passed in review before me. I remembered seeing that book out of the college library, when at Princeton, and reading Newton's works to my mother. His dream of the last day reminded me forcibly of my dream of hell, and I felt an ardent desire to own that book and read the dream again. I left the room, having first requested Mr. Wood, who was a pertienlar friend, to put it up for me as soon as he saw me in the evening, as he was the only work I wanted. He promised to do so, and I immediately went out towards our office, which was nearly opposite; but I had scarcely reached the middle of the street when a voice 'like the sound of many waters,' said to me—This is your last warning! I trembled like an aspen leaf—I felt myself to be in the grasp of the Almighty, and an earthquake could not have increased my dismay. Sermons heard when only eight years old, on the Balm of Gilead, and on the Lamb of God—the dream—all were painfully present, and I thought my hour of doom had come. I went to the office, took down the day book to charge the new advertisements, but my hand trembled so that I could not write, and I put the book back in its place. I went out into South street—then walked up Wall down Market street in the crowd till some time, to drown, if it were possible, my horrible and feelings. But all in vain. The voice still sung, not only in my ears, but through my heart, like the sound of a trumpet—This is your last warning! I went home to dinner, endeavoring to conceal my feelings as much as possible from my wife. They were heavily away; I was at the table room at the hour; purchased the book that seemed to be strangely connected with my weal or woe; returned to my house immediately, and read Newton's eventful life entirely through before retiring to rest. There seemed to be some strong points of resemblance between us; he had been rescued from the wrath to come! What would become of me? I found that he read the Bible and obtained light. I went to bed with the determination of rising early to imitate his example, and search the Scriptures. My dear young wife thought I was going mad. No! no! I was not mad! He who had possession on the poor Gadarene, was now forcing me to my right mind in a way that I knew not.

"I commenced reading the Scriptures with deep interest, to find out how a sinner could be saved; and in two months, read the Psalms. John's Gospel, and the Epistle to the Romans, were particularly precious. It required great effort to attend to domestic duties, and my business in the office; for I felt continually that it would profit me nothing, to gain the whole world, and at last lose my own soul.' I sought out preachers, and heard Mr. Duncan frequently; but could not learn from any of them the way of salvation. One evening, after the family had all retired, I went up into a vacant garret, and walked backwards and forwards in great agony of mind. I kneeled down; the instance of Hezekiah occurred to me; like him I turned my face to the wall and cried for mercy. An unction seemed to be vouchsafed in an impression, that just as many years as I had passed in rebellion against God, so many years I must now endure, before deliverance could be granted. I clasped my hands and cried out, 'Yes, dear Lord, a thousand years of such anguish as I now feel, if I may only be saved at last.' I continued to read, and whenever I could steal away unobserved into the garret, there I walked the floor, when all around was hushed in sleep; there I prayed and poured out tears of bitter sorrow. While thus engaged one night, the plan of salvation was revealed to me in the figure of Noah's Ark. I saw an ungodly race swept away with the flood, but Noah and his family were saved, for God shut them in the Ark. I felt that as a sinner I was condemned and justly exposed to immediate and everlasting destruction. I saw distinctly that in Christ alone I must be saved, if saved at all; and the view I at that moment had of God's method of saving sinners, I do still most heartily entertain, after thirty years' experience of his love. This was Saturday night, and that night I slept more sweetly than I had done for many weeks. Before daylight on Lord's day morning I awoke, and went down stairs quietly, made a fire in the front parlor, and threw open the window shutters, and as soon as I could see, commenced reading the New Testament. I opened to the 13th chapter of John, and came to where Peter said, 'Thou shalt never wash my feet;' Jesus answered him, 'If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me.' Simon Peter saith to him, 'Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head?' At that moment my heart seemed to melt. I felt as if plunged into a bath of blood divine—I was cleansed from head to foot—guilt and the apprehension of punishment were both put away; tears of gratitude gushed from my eyes in copious streams; the fire in the grate shone on the paper upon the wall, and the room was full of light; I fell upon the hearth-rug, on my face, at the feet of Jesus, and wept and gave thanks; my sins which were many, were all forgiven, and a peace of mind succeeded which passeth understanding. Bless the Lord, O my soul! from that hour to the present, a doubt of my calling and election of God has never crossed my path. With all my imperfections, shortcomings and backslidings of heart, I have from that hour steadfastly believed that 'Neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creatures shall be able to separate me from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus my Lord!'"

METHODIST PREACHING.

There is a growing tendency in Methodist literature to accommodate the spirit of the age, by acknowledging that its ministry, is not exactly the thing for modern society. Its organs do not plainly declare that this is the case, but they leave their readers to infer that the intelligence of the people has outgrown the intelligence of the pulpit, and that it is, therefore, indispensable that theological schools should prepare a more learned and polite generation of preachers than have heretofore done execution in the work of evangelizing the world:

We are afraid of this thing. We do not believe it is true that Methodism has outgrown its efficiality. Learned men are in the ministry, and learned men will continue to increase as educational advantages multiply. What we fear is that the tone of certain recent articles will tend to excite an increased fastidiousness in hearing the plain, old fashioned truths of the gospel; and that the usefulness of many preachers will be lessened by the capriciousness of ignorant pretenders to good taste and polished periods. A few days ago, the subject was incidentally spoken of in our office, when an intelligent gentleman present remarked, that he had recently been at a camp-meeting, where educated men delivered long and eloquent discourses; but that the impression made by a rough illustration, thrown out by an exhorter of little pretenseloue, probably was more effective than anything said by all the rest. He was speaking on the danger of impenitence and resistance to God, and quoted the passage, "He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." He introduced two oxen, and supposed that one on the application of the yoke, became so refractory as to be entirely unmanageable, exhausted the patience of his owner, and was finally turned loose to feed on the best of the grass, where he might enjoy the coolest shade. "If he could reason," said the preacher, "how he would compliment himself on the success of his resistance, on the ease and prosperity of his condition, not knowing that when he becomes fat and plump the knife will be suddenly put to his throat, and his carcass fill the shambles of the butcher. Just so it is with you, prosperous sinner; you disregard the breaking of God's laws, will not yield yourself to the yoke of the gospel, and God's spirit, ceasing to restrain and coerce you, you are given up to worldly indulgence and enjoyment—and make yourself happy in your possessions. But know this, that just when you are sleekest and fattest, destruction, as suddenly as a thunderbolt out of a clear sky, will fall upon you, and that without remedy!" The effect was electrical—and, though the illustration might be pronounced rough and vulgar, it did execution and brought home conviction to the hearts of the rebellious. "That," said our friend, "is what I call good preaching. But the polish of theological schools, and the ado made about the refinement of city congregations, if not watched, will go far towards softening these homely but forcible illustrations; so that, while they put in more elegance and grace, they will take out the point and power of Methodistic address from the pulpit." There is something in that,—don't you think so, christian reader?—Meth. Protestant.

A TEXIAN'S EXPERIENCE.

As long as Methodism produces such trophies as the following, her end is out of sight. Let the prophets prophecy on—God is with her, for she is doing his work. The lost sheep are also wild. The ministry goes after them. From a rude box and unlearned man the truth takes its aim. We clip it from the Texas Christian Advocate:

"My father was the 'old ringtail panther' of Missouri. I was raised until fifteen in the wilderness of the upper part of that State, our nearest neighbors were the Sioux and Osage Indians. We had to fight them often; all that I recollect of learning in those few years was, that the Indians must be whipped. During this time I had never heard anything of religion, save I had heard an Old Hard Shell Baptist preach, who I was for years confident was John the Baptist, that I had heard of.

You would be astonished at my exceeding ignorance on this subject; be placed in a waste howling wilderness full of Indians, your parents irreligious, you would know but little about it as I did. My father moved here in 1825, and just after that I was in Allen's settlement in Louisiana, and for the first time in my life that I can recollect of, I heard of the Methodists as a people; noisy and frolicsome, as I had heard, the outside appearance pleased me, for I was all for fun; war whoops, war dances, and war speeches, and killing Indians, was the most I knew; but to return, I went to see the Methodists that had assembled at a camp meeting, on "Flat Lick," and I was prepared for a frolic, but as I rode up, I expected to hear the favorite war whoop as usual, but I heard a sound that I never heard before; it seemed a voice from the tomb all sweetened with love. I stopped my horse and looked around, all I saw looked sorry for me; and I was sorry for myself and them; it struck me if that is Methodism they are playing a game I never played. I had not yet hove in sight, though I drew nearer, and was in hopes the sainted voice would become funny, but not the case. I saw old Father Henry Stevenson standing in a box, as I thought, talking to the people; they all seemed charmed with what he was saying, but I paid no attention to anything but the voice.

I was then sixteen; had never heard a chapter read, nor a sermon preached, save the one that I thought was John the Baptist I did not know that there was a Saviour, or ever had been. I could not read of course. But to return: I rode up and got down, and went off some distance and sat down on a log, and felt that I was in the wrong box. I would occasionally see the face of the speaker, and there seemed to be something on it I did not know what he was talking about; there was a kind of galvanic process about his face that it made him look to me that he was the most honest man I had ever seen. I would have given him my buttom dollar and Roan, if he had asked it; by this time something ailed me, but I did not know what; I had not spoken to any one, but about this time an old gentleman came towards me, and asked me if I would not take a walk; I told him gladly. I thought perhaps there was a funny crowd out where he was going, that would suit me better; therefore, I began to cheer up, and would use a bad word, to which the old man would grunn; it struck me he was sick, and I did not feel well myself, but we did not go far till he fell on his knees. I saw he had not fainted, and nobody had shot at him; I was astonished; he said something that I did not understand; he finally got up. I asked, what are you? "A Methodist." What have you been doing? "Praying." Does anybody pray but Methodists? "Any one can pray." Can I pray? "Yes." Why did you not tell me before? for I must do something for I have felt bad ever since I saw that man in the box. I told him I would go back and hear him make his next speech, which I did, and in his sermon I understood something of the plan of salvation; at the close of his sermon he invited all that wanted religion to go to the mourner's bench. I went of course, and thought every other one without religion would certainly go, but it was not the case; many stayed away who had no religion, as they do now; and I thought then and think now, that a man or woman has not common sense that will not seek the salvation of their souls after being convinced that it is their duty; there is a want of honesty about it if they refuse. But, to the mourner's bench; the first I had ever seen; it was the half of a split log with legs to it; the ends were east and west, and I knelt with my face towards the north. I felt sick, and not sick either—there came round a brother and told me to give up all to God. I told him I had nothing but Roan, and he was welcome to him if he wanted him; the brother then told me of my error. I then began to try to say, not my will, but Thine be done; and, in an hour, I suddenly felt that I was in the middle of a dark world, in the middle of a dark room on my knees, on a black pile of powder and it flashed, and I went up with it. I then found out what was on the old preacher's face; it was glory, it was on everything I could see—the trees, the ground, the people, all, all seemed and shined glorious—the word to me seemed to suit the occasion. I felt that I could scale the universe. I tried to tell the isles of the sea what God had done for me. I do not recollect noticing the company that was with me. I felt desirous to converse with those far off. Brother, you know how I felt. I felt glorious, and even now, while I write, I can hardly stand it. I felt victorious and triumphant in Jesus, my blessed Saviour. Speaking of it brings it so forcibly to my mind, that my pen gets lost; but I soon began to meditate, to see if I could understand why I was so happy. I first thought I was mistaken in the hay; it was not Tom, it was somebody else; and after close examination on this subject, I yet had not decided until finally, I recollected that I had smashed my finger nail not long before, and there was a white speck under the nail, if it was Tom. I looked and it was there; I then traced the finger to the hand, and to the arm, and to the body, and found it was I. Brethren! forgive me; and I'll say glory! Glory! Glory to God and the Lamb forever and ever. I then went to the dear blessed mourner's bench, and it shined like glorious gold; I felt that I knew all about religion; yet, I knew nothing of the Bible. The next morning, old Father Stevenson gave me a Bible and Hymn Book, with these words: Take these, my son, and be faithful.

MORE WAR PROPHECY.

Dne Dr. Nihill, of the English Church, publishes, in the Philadelphia Christian Observer, a contribution to an answer to the question: Is Sebastopol, which the Allies are vainly endeavoring to take, the Armageddon, spoken of in Rev. XVI: 16?

"Learned interpreters of prophecy, (says Dr. N.) some years ago, brought down from totally independent considerations, our present chronological position to the outpouring of the sixth vial; under that vial the Battle of Armageddon takes place; so that we ought now to be looking out for Armageddon."

Sebastopol, like Odessa, was a miserable Tartar village little more than sixty years ago. Its capability of being made a naval position of great power was then made known to Queen Catharine, who put the engineers to work, and changed the name to what it now is.

The following remarks are not without curious interest:

"Commentators, writing before the present war, have, I believe, generally drawn their conclusions or explanation of the word from its first syllable. Ar, signifying a mountain, but this has thrown no real light upon the text. There is, however, another Hebrew word having the same sound (Ar,) though formed from a different letter. This Ar signifies a city. Joining it to the word Megeddon, which in Hebrew signifies pre-eminent, or illustrious, we get Armageddon, the illustrious city. Now Sebastopol is commanded of two Greek words, which together form the same thing, the august or illustrious city. This as far as I know is in substance, the discovery suggested by the present extraordinary siege. The coincidence is at least curious, but the point admits of further elucidation. St. John wrote in Greek, and if he had not in the passage under consideration forsaken the Greek for the Hebrew, that passage would have run thus in our translation: "And he gathered them together into a place called in the Greek tongue Sebastopol."

But this would have been too plain for prophecy, which employs enigmatical devices for the purpose of presenting truth, as it were looming in the mist, to the eye of faith, while it conceals the precise event foreshadowed from certain knowledge until the proper period for its development. In this instance, the enigma consists in substituting the Hebrew word Armageddon for the plain name of the place Sebastopol. It deserves remark that had St. John used the Greek word Sebastopol, this too might equally have hidden his meaning up to the time when the Russians gained fraudulent possession of the Crimea, but no longer. The Tartar name of the place was Aktiar. Dr. Clarke in his travels, published in 1810, alluding to this change in the designation of the city, says: "We reached the great Bay of Aktiar, upon which place the Russians, in the time of Catherine II., bestowed the fantastic name of Sebastopol."

PREACHING CHRIST.

For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord.—2 Cor. iv. 5.

To preach Christ Jesus, is to preach the necessity of his atonement. This results from the sinfulness of man, and the impossibility of pardon, except through a full satisfaction to the justice of God. His law is broken and its curse incurred; hence Christ must die that man may be forgiven. It is to a lost race that Christ is preached. Man is fallen, sinful, degraded; and to preach Christ Jesus is to lay open to man his own sinfulness.

To preach Christ Jesus is to preach the sufficiency of his atonement. By him the justice of God is satisfied. His sacrifice is infinitely meritorious. His blood cleanses from all sin: 1 John i. 7. As he is God manifest in the flesh, there is in Jesus Christ a sufficiency for all our wants. All we need, and just what we need, is found in him—an all-sufficient Savior.

To preach Christ Jesus is to make a full and free offer of salvation through him to all who hear the gospel. As the sinfulness of man makes an atonement necessary, so the sufficiency of the atonement opens the way for the free offer of salvation. Since Christ has died the invitation is given, "All things are ready, come; ho, every one, come!" Matt. xxii: 4; Isa. lv: 1. "Whosoever will, come; come one, come all; come, come." Rev. xxii. 17.

To preach Christ Jesus is to declare that he is the only Saviour, the only way of salvation. "There is no other name by any can be saved," Acts iv: 12. They who reject him must be lost. Reader, how shall you escape, if you neglect so great salvation?—Presbyterian.

HISTORY OF CATECHISMS.

At a late Congregational Association meeting in Boston, Mr. Livermore read a paper on the subject of Catechisms. The Puritan Recorder says:

"Mr. Livermore commenced with some historical notices of the practice of catechising. He remarked that in all ages past, the Church had attached great importance to the practice of catechising children, though this practice now was esteemed of less importance by reason of the introduction of Sabbath Schools—which, by the way, is another form of catechising. Formerly it was a part of the employment of the Common School teachers, who devoted the forenoon of Saturday to this exercise. Parents also employed a part of the time on the Sabbath in catechising their children. Ministers catechised the children in public and from house to house. A thorough catechising of children was a test of the thoroughness of their Christian education. But this practice has been gradually in a great measure superseded by Sabbath Schools.

The practice of catechising did not originate with the Romanists. They received it from the early fathers. In the first centuries there was a catechist in every Church; Chrysostom, and others eminent among the fathers, had been distinguished as Catechists. Indeed, the Jewish Church had essentially the same form of instruction. The Jews were commanded to teach their children in answers to questions, and to instruct them in the house and by the way.

Ursinus, the author of the Heidelberg Catechism, says that catechising is an ordinance of God, (for God is the God of the young,) that both parents and children may be instructed in the doctrines of salvation. Hence the catechising commanded to be connected with the Passover, was a perpetual practice in the Jewish Church.

Calvin, alluding to the practice introduced into the Romish Church, by which the habit of conveying solid instruction through catechising was set aside says that the devil overthrew the sacred policy of catechising, and left nothing but trifles which beget superstition.

The most distinguished Christian writers in all ages have laid great stress on this mode of instruction. The Church cannot be built up without catechising. Shepard, after he was forbidden to preach by the bishop, begged the privilege of catechising, as a sort of compensation for the loss of his former function, but he was denied that privilege.

The Pilgrims brought over to this country the practice of catechising their children. In 1629, Matthew Craddock said: We appoint, that all secular business cease at three o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and that the time should be spent in Catechising. Higginson, of Salem, testified that the people had a plenty of preaching and catechising. The colonial records show that the legislature ordered that all parents and masters of families do once in a week catechise their children, and that the selectmen see that this order is obeyed. Cotton Mather spoke of drawing out the breast of catechism to young ones, and said that to keep school and catechise the young was a noble work, fit for angels.

THE POWER AND DEVICES OF SATAN.

There is nothing more important to those who desire their salvation than be fully on their guard against the adversary of souls and know the way in which he may be successfully resisted. Dr. Chalmers has some important and encouraging remarks upon the subject in his "Scripture reading" in the third chapter of Genesis. He says:

"The serpent was actuated by Satan, as is evident from other Scriptures. That is a very lax theology which disowns, and still more which derides the doctrine of this evil spirit and of his mischievous agency in the hearts of men. I feel as if it gave additional security to my salvation, and inspired additional confidence in Him who is the author of it—when I view his works as a warfare, and the success of it as His victory over him whose works he came to destroy. It seems all the more to identify my safety with His honor; and never, never will he give power or reason for the great adversary to say, 'there is a poor sinner, who, misled by the assurances of your Gospel, trusted himself to you, and you have disappointed and deceived him.' Let me not be afraid, then, but only believe; and let this view not only confirm my faith but animate my practice. Let me enter in the spirit of the warfare; and in the name of Christ my captain, let me resist the devil and he will flee from me."

It is an important part of the Christian experience to be able to say with St. Paul, 'For we are not ignorant of his devices,' the devices of Satan. And to reiterate and rely confidently upon the promise, 'Resist the devil and he will flee from you,' is an appropriate means through Divine grace of ensuring the victory.

We are naturally led to the same train of thought from a consideration of our Lord's temptation by Satan. This was the great contest between the power of Satan and that of Christ as the Head of His Church. In view of that contest and of his victory, we may well adopt the emphatic language of Dr. Chalmers and be satisfied that 'his honor and the interests of his kingdom are identified with his promise in the defence of his poorest disciple against the wiles of the devil.'

What an encouragement and consolation must it be to the poorest disciple of Christ, to know that in this contest he is one with his Master.

Details of Foreign News.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMSHIPS ARAGO AND AFRICA

The steamship Arago left Southampton on the 20th ults., and arrived at New York on the 11th. Her mails are principally occupied with long accounts of the battle of Tchernaya, to which we have not room. The following items comprise about everything in the way of news:

Her Majesty the Queen and family left Edinburgh on the night of the 27th ult in the Royal Yacht Victoria and Albert, and arrived at Osborne Isle on the following morning. Her Majesty rode from Paris with the Empress Eugenie and the Prince Napoleon in the Emperor's state carriage. The farewell was most enthusiastic and the Rhoufhatians superb. General Canrobert formed part of the cortege.

A dispatch from Gen Simpson dated August 26, states that the works of the Allies were making satisfactory progress.

A telegraphic dispatch received by the French Governor from Gen Pelissier, congratulating the army upon their late success on the Tchernaya, in which he says—"Tell those brave soldiers, who for more than a year have undergone unheard of fatigues, that the termination of their trials is not far distant. Sebastopol I hope, will soon fall beneath their blows; and even if the event should be delayed, the Russian army, I know, by information which appears, positively cannot again sustain the struggle in the Crimea through the winter."

The last accounts from Odessa state that the Russians had launched several vessels which had been on the stocks at Nicolayeff. An attack by Gen Mouravieff on Erzeroum appeared inevitable. The fortifications of the place are incomplete.

The Allies have placed 150 new mortars in position before Sebastopol. The Russians have doubled the garrison of that place, and are preparing for a desperate defence. The Allies expect the most favorable result from the bombardment. A British brig, the Louisa, has been pillaged at Sulina.

The news agents report an engagement which took place off Riga on the 11th ult. Seventeen Russian gunboats, as is said, came out of Riga, and fought for two hours with Her Majesty's screw blockship Hawke, 11, and the screw corvette Desperate, 8. The result is said to have been indecisive.

Advices from Constantinople of the 20th ult., announce that Omar Pacha and Hussein Pacha were to leave on the following day for Batoum, where the sultan had given orders for the landing of 25 battalions, selected from the Turkish troops in the Crimea and on the Danube.

Gen Pelissier, in an order of the day, dated August 17th, says that the Russians lost in the battle of the 16th, more than 9000 men.

The Times' Baltic correspondent states that on the 15th ult, six Russian gun boats came out from Cronstadt, and having ingratiated by their movements that they were prepared to measure their strength with any vessel that dared to go out to meet them, the Impregnable, Bulldog and Cyclops were ordered to chase in close and try to cut them off. The Russian gun boats, however, beat a retreat as quickly as possible into shallow water. The steam English ships opened fire upon them, which was returned. The engagement lasted about two hours, with little damage to either side.

The Kanna Gazetteer says: According to reliable advices of the 25th of August from Constantinople, the garrison of Kars has made a successful sortie against the Russians. The Russian corps which threatened Erzeroum has withdrawn.

The following is a condensed account from the London Times of the affair on the Tchernaya:

We have full details of the battle fought on the Tchernaya on the 16th. Encouraged, it may be, by the arrival of a portion of the Grenadiers, and probably urged on by the impatience of high personages in St Petersburg, the Russian General determined on an attack on the allied position, and made preparations for many days, with a disregard of caution which revealed his plans, and, but for extraordinary carelessness, should have caused their more easy discomfiture.

It is said that the movements of the Russian force were plainly visible that their collections of pontoons and engineering materials were exposed in front of their position, and that no means were taken to hide the proximity and the magnitude of the attack from a foe whom the Muscovite General might have learnt to respect, but whom the oft repeated alarms of an attack had lulled into security.

At last, on the morning of the 16th the Russians, pouring down the steep sides of their position and favored by the mist, without cry or beat of drum, burst upon the Piedmontese position; driving in the outposts, they reached the Tchernaya, forded the narrow stream, and, notwithstanding a heavy fusilade from the Z moves, rushed upon the Allied camp. They attacked two French regiments in front and flank with a desperate bayonet charge, and a hot contest ensued, in which Gen. D'Herbillon, with 10,000 men, had to sustain the attack of the Russians, who probably by this time had brought a much larger force into action.

Reinforcements, however, soon arrived, and a long and formidable combat ensued, in which the Russians were beaten on every point. Their artillery were silenced by the superiority of the Allied fire, and they appear to have been on this occasion entirely outdone in the effective management of their favorite arm. Their greatest loss, no doubt, was from the deadly action of the enemy's cannon and rifles against their advancing columns. Descending a slope, they presented the fairest mark for the well served artillery of an enemy, and the Minnie and Carabine-a-tige, with which the French are armed, must have done deadly execution upon them before they could reply with their inferior weapons, or close, as they appear to have attempted, in hand-to-hand combat.

The superiority of position as well as of military skill on the part of the Allies is proved by the great disproportion of loss on the two sides. While the Russians are officially declared to have suffered to the extent of 9000 men, probably a fifth of those actually engaged, the French and Sardinians together compute their loss at only 1200 men. No less than 900 prisoners had arrived at Constantinople when the packet left.

No attempt was made to follow up the victory, and indeed such an enterprise would have been impossible. General Pelissier says that General Morris, who commanded the cavalry, was eager to pursue the enemy, but his own opinion was that enough had been done, and the judgment of the Commander-in-Chief must command assent.

In a country so difficult as the Crimea the attacking party has always the disadvantage; and though the defeated and retreating Russians might have suffered from a charge of cavalry, it is difficult to say that some such fate as that of Balaklava might not have awaited the adventurous General, had he advanced far into a tract of land where cavalry might easily be placed in a difficult position, and where the enemy possess the advantage of a superior knowledge of the ground.

As for an advance against the Russian position itself, that is a matter for the most cautious strategy, and not for soldiers with blood roused by the excitement of a new victory. The day went sublimely against the Russians, whom it foiled in a long planned scheme, and roused from a dream of success, which we may think absurd, but which we see was sufficient to lead them on to bloody actions and a most hazardous and deadly conflict.

It is not difficult to see the object of the Russian General, though how he could hope for success is surprising. Gortschakoff knew that the Allies were pressing close their works round the Malakoff; that the batteries they were erecting were a scale and of a power unknown in the past history of the siege; that in spite of sorties and unbounded sacrifice, his soldiers never regained a foot of ground that they had lost; he knew that the ships and the steamers in Sebastopol were in danger, and that even the daily communication with the north side of the harbor might soon be interrupted. It was necessary, then, to seize a position from which the combined army the Allies, might be assailed, and advantageous attack, and divert them from the assault of the Malakoff, or force them to attempt it with diminished forces while the flower of their army should be watching the Tchernaya.

It was a bold idea, and the means taken to carry it out were probably correct enough according to the rules of war. But the Russian Generals forget one thing, for, with negligent cruelty to those they lead, disregard it, where the faintest hope of success appears. They have yet to learn, or more thoroughly appreciate the inferiority of their troops in the open field. The late Czar could not, it is said, believe it, yet probably a conviction of its truth reached his heart sufficient to embitter his latter days.

BY THE AFRICA.

The advices by the Africa are three days later. She arrived at Halifax on the 11th, and the following are her dispatches to the New York Associated Press:

The week had been productive of no event of moment, and the attitude of the belligerents was entirely unchanged.

In corroboration of the battle of Traktir Bridge, on the Tchernaya, and the official accounts of the Allied commanders, had been received.

Another Russian attack upon the Allied lines near the Cemetery was looked for, and preparations were being made to resist it.

It is definitely announced that Omar Pacha is to take command of the forces in Asia, forthwith.

The Tchernaya Battle—Additional Particulars

Gens Simpson and Pelissier both furnish reports of the Tchernaya affair. They say the Russian attack was a deliberate effort to raise the siege of Sebastopol, and if the Russians had succeeded in holding the heights on the Allies' side of the river, they intended further to attack the Allies from four points, namely: a fresh attack on Balaklava, another on the British camp, and another simultaneously on the extreme right and left of the French lines.

Gen Simpson says the Russians advanced three times with the most determined bravery. Thrice they carried the bridge and crowned the heights, but were thrice driven back by the French batteries.

Gen Pelissier calls the French loss 17 officers killed and 63 wounded; 172 men killed, 150 missing and 1,160 wounded. The Sardinian loss was 250. The loss of the Russians was 8,000 killed, and 5,000 wounded, including 1,600 wounded prisoners in the hands of the French, and 200 in the hands of the Sardinians. The Turks were not engaged.

The Russian report admits great losses and three Generals killed. It attributes the loss to the two great impetuosity of the attacking columns of attack. The Russian troops engaged had just arrived in the Crimea.

General Gortschakoff commanded in person from the Mackenzie Heights.

General Pelissier issued a grandiloquent order, announcing the victory, but his account does nothing favor in Paris. They say that he did not make the most of his victory, nor prepare a sufficient force to crush the attack.

From Sebastopol.

General Simpson's mail dispatch of the 18th says: General Pelissier having announced to me that the batteries against the Malakoff and adjacent works were prepared to open fire, it should be commenced yesterday morning against these works and the Redan. This was continued throughout the day, and the effect produced was as much as was anticipated. The Russian fire, which at first answered briskly, became gradually feeble. In the afternoon shells from our mortars ignited, and a number of them exploded in one of the enemy's batteries, doing apparently much damage. Captains Oldfield and Hammet have been killed. The British loss 138.

General Gortschakoff, on the night of the 27th, telegraphs:—Affairs are unchanged, but the fire of the Allies is occasionally very strong.

There is a report in London to day that Gen. Simpson is sick, and that General Bentinck, the senior officer, has taken command.

Decisive operations will not be undertaken until the Allies have crossed the Tchernaya, and occupied the heights on the right bank, and succeeded in separating the Russian forces on the Tchernaya and Belbec rivers.

The reinforcements are collecting for this purpose. Meantime, however, the Russians are expected to offer the Allies another battle near the Cemetery.

The Russians are daily expecting the arrival of General Parmatine, with 9000 cavalry, 3000 infantry, and 160 guns.

The Baltic.

The London Times contains an editorial article, couched in very severe language, on the non-effectiveness of the fleet, and says that "Nelson and Collingwood must blush in their graves."

Private letters state that the loss of the Russians at Sweaborg was not less than 2,000 men. The Russian paper Nord says that the loss was only 50 killed, and that 1,350 guns still remain in position, and that the batteries are still wholly uninjured.

The Berlin correspondent of the Augsburg Gazette states, that the Prussian Cabinet has recently replied to Count Buol a circular, to the effect that Prussia is disinclined to make any change in her policy in regard to the Eastern question, because she is unable to see what practical guarantee the three mentioned four points can afford for its settlement; further, that Prussia cannot consent to bind herself to these four points, while the parties principally concerned reserve to themselves the right of going beyond them. Finally, Prussia rejects the decision of the Germanic Bund, made last December, acknowledging the entirely as of the proposed conditions of peace, without, however, pledging itself to maintain them.

From the above it is evident that Prussia and the Germanic Federation, stand precisely as they did twelve months ago.

A Berlin letter says that Count Nesselrode had addressed another letter to the Russian Ambassador, in which he says the Czar is willing to make honorable terms of peace.

The "Nord," Russian journal, says: Omar Pacha freely expressed himself at Constantinople, that the Allied commanders—especially General Pelissier—were humbugs, and that he should twice have lost his army if he had followed their advice.

Boni, the engineer, writes that the Russian Railway is in a condition to stand the winter.

Abdel Kader had arrived at Constantinople.

Great Britain.

A national shilling subscription is proposed to be raised for a testimonial to Admiral Charles Napier.

A list of bankruptcy has been issued against Edward Oliver.

Five hundred Highlanders had embarked on board of the steamer Hannibal at Liverpool for Malta. On board of the Great Britain cavalry were about to embark.

Methodist Books.—The publications of the M. E. Church, South, are for sale by McGhinn, No. 36 Camp street, at Nashville prices. Send him your orders. The agents require cash, in advance.

Talladega Institute.—President Ross informs us that on the 1st Monday in October this Conference Institute opens. We hope to hear of full halls from the beginning. If excellency of faculty, beauty and health of locality, be considerations, it will not be otherwise.

Some It-as Known I.—A subscriber writes to have [illegible] he owes the Advocate. He [illegible] dite him back that [illegible] preacher, has his account, with others—just to step over the way and settle.

There are many like him, ready and anxious to pay or subscribe, if they knew to whom and how much. Will the preachers give out publicly that they have accounts, will take names and money? Let it be known who and where the agent is.

"Old Shoes and Clouted."—We ask the attention of the publishers to the tardiness with which the "great official" comes to our office. Better late than never, but we prefer our bread fresh—not dry and mouldy. Instance—the El Heraldo, 2d Sept., published in the City of Mexico, reached us on the 11th; the Nashville Advocate of 30th Aug. came to hand on the 13th inst. This is falling behind the former time, for our mail from the City of the Montezumas announcing the flight of Santa Anna, was laid on our table with the Advocate from Nashville of same date!

Taking an Airing.

On Friday evening last we went, as the phrase is, to take a breath of fresh air, and got it. After sweltering in this superb brickkiln through the summer, and becoming as lean as Cassius, it was grateful to every sense to be on the Creole, where Capt. Post does the navigation, and the clever Chapman the civilities for passengers. Taking the benefit of all the Lake Shore, we disembarked at Ocean Springs. What a contrast between the quietly reposing villas of Friday evening and the desolations presented on Monday's return!

As if for our special accommodation, there was a breeze got up. We cannot return the puff to old Ocean, but will say that his blow was grand, beyond the memory of the oldest inhabitant. That individual had been raised on a bluff, under a grove of grass spreading palm. Old Jerome is desert of Gipsey—a cradle. Under those grand oaks his children and grand-children were rocked. About noon, on Sunday, 16th inst., we saw the floods digging about their roots and wrestling with their venerable trunks, and a half dozen fall.

In another place, the history and work of the tempest are given, generally. We only speak for Ocean Springs. Early Saturday morning our friend and host, Rev. E. R. Porter, remarked on a roaring in the direction of Ship Island, which was never heard but immediately before heavy weather. Fishermen understood the sign and did not venture out. Sailors furled their canvass, and housekeepers their curtains, and people, whether on ship or shore, got ready for storm. This knocked our boat excursion in the head, and fishing on the banks for Spanish mackerel and trout, and a good many other projected fair weather entertainments.

By Sunday morning the worst had come. Wind from the East hauled round to the South. The elements were unchained and furious. The bath houses were lifted off their foundations, and quickly worked into plank and scantling, piled up on shore. Boats were dashing about, like riderless horses in a battle. Wharves were stripped of the last plank; every liquid thing seemed reduced to spray, and every solid to splinters. The bay boiled like a pot; and the sound was awful. Sea-birds of long bills and curious shapes were driven to land.

The sight and the impression of a storm at sea obtained from a land stand point—that is grandeur with safety!

The schoolmaster belabored our brain, including the onomatopoeia of a certain line in Homer, which has these two words in it—prēsphōizein thalasses—"the loud roaring sea." The prēsphōizein, he was wont to say, imitated the heaving of the waves and anaspasis roar of the sea when tempest lashed. Much better nature teaches the poetry of that line! Nature, from whom Homer learned it.

From the sublimities of the scene, attention was pleasantly and practically diverted to Capt. Walker, who [illegible] keeps it, had gone out about two miles in the morning, with his boy Dennis, to capture the Creole. At daylight he saw that [illegible] was cut off—every plank was gone, and the pier on which he stood was built entirely from them. In the blank where [illegible] he [illegible] refuge, but every moment was expected to be its last, as the waves came higher still rolled heavier. He hung on a flag of distress—built a fire to be better seen in the half darkness of the storm; but for aid to reach him was impossible. The suspense was long and anxious—"Poor Walker" was looked upon as doomed—in sight, but beyond help. Between him and the shore upon which the wind drove were rows of piles, on which the best swimmer would be impaled, even could he outlive the waves. Our friend Porter offered one hundred dollars to any one who would bring Walker and his companion ashore. "I," said Mr. Abram McGehee, "will give another." Major Galbraith offered two Spaniards in addition to this his light and tidy yawl for the adventure, and to make them a present of it if successful. It was now about 3 P. M.; a slight mitigation of tempest and the tide setting out. The brave fellows were watched with a solicitude better imagined than described, as they put out, and many a prayer silently ascended for their success. Like a feather the frail bark rode, now hid by a wave, then by mist. As they neared the pier head those who had been watching from every house and hotel window breathed easier; but again the fitful darkness enveloped them! This uplifted—the boat was seen shooting home like an arrow. Four are in it. They are safe! Thank God. When next we go airing and taking "a fresh breath," the almanac shall be consulted—the Southern Methodist Almanac—and the trip pitched at a seasonable distance from the equinoctial.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Rev. A. T. M. Fly adds a P. S. to a business letter:

Natchez, Miss.

The Lord has blessed us with a glorious revival of religion recently. A three days' meeting, which commenced on the 10th of August, and was protracted three weeks, resulted in the accession of 127 white and 153 colored persons to our Church, and since the 15th July, 322 accessions.

Leake Co., Miss., Sept. 6, 1855.

The fourth Sabbath in July we commenced a meeting at Willow Springs, a church twice dead, pinched up by the roots. It was protracted seven days. The members much revived; many of them praised God aloud, from a sense of his love shed abroad in their hearts. Many mourners were at the altar of prayer, pleading with God for mercy, from time to time; but, strange to say, none made an open profession or joined the Church.

At our Third Quarterly Meeting Brothers Drake, Campbell, Booth and Forsyth preached with demonstration of the Spirit. We had a precious love feast. In the evening eight united with the Church; and it was thought by many, could the meeting have been protracted the entire neighborhood would have been brought under religious influence. May the Holy Spirit continue to pursue this people.

B. J. WOODWARD.

Salem, Jefferson Co., Ala., Sept. 7, 1855.

The Lord is blessing the labors of his servants in the Warrior Mission. I commenced a two days' meeting at Holly Springs, embracing the first Sabbath in September. I preached on Saturday. On the Sabbath, Brother A. Watson, from Jasper Circuit, came and preached the funeral of Sister Parsons, to a large and attentive congregation, with power, and the Lord met with his people by his Spirit to bless. The meeting continued four days, and resulted in the conversion of six or eight persons. The Church was abundantly blessed.

R. B. HALL.

Plaine Store, East Baton Rouge, Sept. 15, 1855.

A week ago Brother Jones, of Jackson, commenced a protracted meeting at the Union Church, which continued until yesterday. The Spirit of God was there, the altar was crowded with penitent mourners, who were anxiously seeking their soul's salvation. Fourteen were added to the Church, all of whom will, I am confident, make useful and zealous members of the Church. Never have I seen a more intelligent and attentive congregation than have been in attendance here during the present meeting. Brother Jones had the assistance of the following brethren: A. G. Miller, ... Millsaps, J. L. Wheat, Campbell and R. Malloy. He had just concluded a protracted meeting at Olive Branch, where, I was informed, some fifty or sixty persons joined the Church.

We are not fully organized as yet, but expect to be in a few weeks. We are going to commence a Sabbath School soon as we receive the proper books.

The Baptists commence a protracted meeting to-day, conducted by Rev. J. B. Smith, of Clinton, assisted by Bro. Millsaps.

WM. A. BRYAN.

Black Hawk Ct., Miss. Conf., Sept. 8, 1855.

The Lord has visited Black Hawk Circuit. We have had a peaceable and pleasant year, and occasionally a very happy meeting at different points of my circuit: a gradual increase. On the 30th of August we commenced a camp meeting at Enon, near Salem, because there was much water there. At the first service there were thirteen persons at the altar for the prayers of the Church. The work went evenly on, increasing in power; the altar was crowded with mourners every service; mourners prayed for mercy and were made happy in love. The last day there was preaching at 8 o'clock A. M., but such was the excitement that it was impossible to preach after. There was an accession of 58 whites and 20 colored. We suppose there were at least 100 converts among the whites, but there was no calculating those among the colored.

I am doing what I can for the Missionary enterprise. I trust to bring up to Conference a good collection for the Missionary Bible, and worn out and destitute, &c., I am not forgetful of the interests of all our periodicals. I have been here two years, and shall feel the pang of separation from this noble people. But for the general good I shall go willingly, for I love an interchange and I love our Church government on this account, although I feel pained to leave my friends. May God bless the Black Hawk Circuit.

JOSEPH NICHOLSON.

"Leasing" Extraordinary.

The most taking form of falsehood is a streak of truth and a streak of lie. The following specimen appeared in the Catholic Standard of Sunday, the 9th inst:

"From the N. O. Christian Advocate, Sept. 1."

JESUITS IN NEW ORLEANS.

"This active society of Romanists have suffered severe losses by the death of their most eminent men. Rev. Blackney, President of the Jesuits College on Baronne street, and a highly accomplished man and scholar, died of yellow fever last summer; his successor, Rev. J. Adams, died of the same malady August 23d, in Baton Rouge, whither he went to address the students of St. Peter and St. Paul's College, but his attack with fever, almost immediately upon his arrival, prevented the performance of his mission.

He was born in 1816, near Bardstown, Ky., educated at St. Joseph's College, Bardstown, and at St. Mary's College, Baltimore; after which he served several years as priest in Kentucky. He entered the society of Jesus in 1848, and about the same time was made Vice President of Spring Hill College, near Mobile.

Two weeks since died Rev. E. Plantaz, in this city, a native of Savoy, and a member of S J.

Honored be the dust of those holy and true ministers who died at their posts. Their graves among us are "Evidences of Christianity" more forcibly appreciated by our people than arguments draw out in books.

The bones of such pastors, with the memory of their life and death, are a richer inheritance to a church than the most eloquent pulpitian alive of whom it is it is said, at the approach of danger, "he ingloriously fled."

A moral power attaches to the faithful pastor who passes with his flock through a trying time, that mere talent never bestows. A sympathy, a confidence grows up that is rooted in the heart when the hardest is cleft deep and thoroughly. The very sound of the voice that mourned with them, when mourners were few, is associated with painful and pleasing memories; and a propitious medium for sacred truth is that voice ever after.

A season of peril is equaled by no other for doing good instantly to the souls of men, and laying the foundation of future good.

The yellow fever is spreading out and reaching into the interior. Pastors of Protestant churches within the afflicted districts will have an opportunity of imitating the bright example of Romish priests and showing their faith by their works. We cannot conceive of a more unenviable position before a community than that of a minister who, having fled from it, returns with returning health.

Having left them to make their own beds in sickness—to be buried without Christian forms—to contend, uncheered by gospel ministrations, with the gloom and sorrow of the solemn and black-palled time—to drag through the dreary months of woe—with only such a sympathy as he could extend at a safe distance, he has come back, like a tender and brave shepherd. A congregation must have great charity and forgiveness that gives him a hearing.

A few of these prudent pastors have done more against the character and moral power of the Christian ministry than its professed enemies. We hesitate not to say, in military phrase, it ought to break the renegades."

Does the reader of the Advocate recognize that? It took us sometime, after the "first burst" of indignant surprise, to make out the mosaic. The first part of our editorial of Sept. 1, with its caption, is published. Then follow, without any notice, portions of another and entirely different one of that date. The reader is imposed upon by taking this compost to be an integral article, as it originally appeared in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate, Sept. 1."

The paragraphs of the second editorial are not even patched on to the first, in their original order, but, collocated ingeniously so as to predicate of one subject what was predicated of another. As the scissors ran through them, for this transposition, the click of the blades must have said to any tolerable conscience, lie—lie—lie!

Not stopping at suppression and perversion, the third element of falsehood is resorted to—Invention. Besides, an arrangement that violates our meaning, words are interpolated, never used by us. Perhaps the reader may have patience to search out others, but this instance is too deliberate and wilful, to pass by—We said, Sept. 1:

"Pastors of churches within the afflicted districts will have an opportunity of shewing their faith by their works."

The Catholic Standard, Sept. 9, makes us say:

"Pastors of Protestant churches within the afflicted districts will have an opportunity of imitating the bright example of Romish priests and showing their faith by their works."

There are "Jesuits in New Orleans!" And this is the "Catholic Standard"—of truth! Can Romanists be trusted with history, when with the original before them, under our eyes, and only a week intervening, they falsify copy thus! Falsehood is ingrained with the system, either by the dogma, that the end justifies the means; or, the cheapness of indulgences and absolutions.

We put this "Leasing Extraordinary" on record, as a nugget specimen.

As for the Catholic Standard—patronized by Archbishop Blanc, &c., we dismiss it. It has sunk below respectful consideration.

Clerical Independence.

There are a few hard places in this lower country, as preachers of more than one denomination can testify.

Rev. B——, of the Episcopal Church, after laboring in a small old town in Louisiana (name begins with a vowel letter) long enough to have planted a vineyard and eat of it, became discouraged and even disgusted. In his farewell sermon he told the whole matter out, and thus shook their gold dust off his feet:

"And now, if there is any man in this congregation that can prove he ever paid me a dollar, it shall be refunded him on the spot."

A Methodist preacher, not a hundred miles from Manchac, was visiting an appointment on the last round. The officials had opened the door for him and shut it, sung and listened; but nobody ministered to his necessities. He made bold to take up a collection, giving out the following hymn as the hat was passed round:

"Lord, what a wretched land is this,
That yields us no supply!"

OUR NASHVILLE CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor: We have been greatly rejoiced of late, in this city, by revivals of religion in several of the churches. The work commenced among the Cumberland Presbyterians, who seem to be a zealous and useful people, and the public interest is gradually increasing. Our excellent pastor, Brother Irwin, began a protracted meeting nearly three weeks ago, which has been productive of much good. Some twelve or fourteen have professed to find pardon. The brethren of the publishing house have not waited to be called upon to assist, but as far as their official duties allowed, have promptly volunteered their aid, like genuine Methodist preachers.

Dr. Hamilton left us a week ago to visit the Western Virginia, Kentucky and Louisville Conferences. Dr. McFerrin has just returned from a very effective trip to the southward, and in a few days Dr. Huston will leave in order to attend the Kentucky Conference, of which, I understand he is still a member.

The General Conference officers are not all here yet. Dr. Sehon seems to find some difficulty in leaving Louisville, which is a little unfortunate for the Missionary Board, considering always the needy state of the finances; but I suppose it must be all right.

There is but little news of general interest. I am happy to report that matters at the Publishing House are still progressing with the utmost activity. Every man is in his place and "hard at it." I feel proud of our great publishing privilege. Blessed be God, it begins to look like marching abreast with the foremost ranks of the sacramental host, and fully meeting the demands of this advancing age. I heartily wish that every member of the Church could stand within the roar of those hundred wheels, and feel the joy of the reflection that every revolution they make helps to send to the million assurances of a Saviour's love.

Our much abused river has been in good boating order all the season, and the hopes of business men, especially property-holders, have been greatly increased by a late act of the courts, by which the immediate completion of the railroad to Louisville was rendered certain. The city continues remarkably healthy.

I have just read a formidable communication in your last issue from A. Z., and am not exactly surprised, but painfully confirmed in a suspicion I began some time ago to entertain, viz: that the simple, honest utterance of truth is always sure to give offence somewhere. I anticipated some "whining," but had no idea that any one would be so unguarded as to yelp out aloud. There was a time in the history of this world when a certain class of Doctors of Divinity, now in existence, would have found themselves in a more modest position than the one they at present occupy. In the name of common sense, Mr. Editor, what does any man want with a title intimating the possession of something he has not? My friend quotes Webster's Dictionary; allow me to do the same:

"Doctor—A learned man; a man skilled in a profession; a man of erudition."

"Erudition—Learning; knowledge gained by study, or from books and instruction; particularly, learning in literature, as distinct from the sciences."

Now cannot any one see that the bestowal of such a title upon a man who does not in a single particular illustrate its meaning, simply proves either that we do not understand its importance in the history of the Church and of literature, or else that we disregard our own reputation as a just and discriminating people, bestowing the highest literary titles where they are not deserved, and rendering what should be an honor in all cases "a lighter thing than vanity!" Because a man is good, and amiable, and pious, but unfortunately weak enough to desire such a thing, is no reason for making his name a falsehood.

I thank you, sir, for your editorial comment on regarding this thing in the light of a charity. It is neither kindness nor charity to sanction this growing evil in our Church, and I confess it is one of my "perverse concits" to feel heartily ashamed whenever I see good and useful, and, in their proper sphere, respectable men, thus held up to the ridicule of a discerning public. We have Doctors of Divinity in the Methodist Church who well deserve the title, and no man honors them more than I do. Men who are really worthy of it would be the last to cavil at a remonstrance against its indiscriminate bestowal; and I suspect that the part of my letter that gave Brother A. Z. so much offence is the part to which he has not alluded at all. Why, do you suppose, is he not in a situation to receive the Doctorate?

But what a blind plunge your correspondent makes at Brothers Greene, McFerrin and Irwin! Up here, in their home, we "Crotchet" and all) consider them beyond the reach of such insinuations as he has been pleased to cast upon them—namely, that, on the subject of college honors, they live in glass houses, which fact should keep them silent; that they were but telling their own experience, &c.

The report these brethren brought back from the college commencements was a simple narrative of facts, given to me by other parties. It was I who spoke of the temerity of the colleges in conferring the Doctorate. I have never heard either of these gentlemen allude to the subject, and must myself claim the entire credit of the offensive paragraph.

Criticism and ridicule are rather dangerous weapons in unskillful hands. A. Z. laughs at what he calls my nome de plume, a literal translation of which would be, an Egyptian government or division of a feather, or a poem of a feather. I suppose he wanted to say nom de plume, or, more properly, nom de guerre, which means a fictitious name, or one assumed for the time.

Speaking of books of reference, I have seen a pictorial primer with an illustrated alphabet, beginning, "A stands for Ape," and ending with, "Z stands for Zany" (See Webster's Dictionary.) Surely, Crotchet will do as well for a nom de guerre as A. Z.!

The author of this letter congratulates himself in that he has no acquaintance with "Mr. Crotchet." Perhaps he has not, perhaps he has. Persons striking in the dark are notoriously in danger of making mistakes. I have only to say, in conclusion, that whatever may be my claim to the Doctorate, it can never become sufficiently urgent to make me ask for it.

Yours, with all good wishes,

Nashville, Sept. 7. CROTCHET.

Help for the Germans.

Another liberal deviser and doer writes:

"Enclosed I send you $25 for the German Missionary, whose statement I have just read in your journal. He will appropriate it as he deems best, for building or for books. With their enthusiasm and simplicity these Germans make good Methodists, when soundly converted. "The land to the French, the sea to the English, the air to Germans"—the Prince of the power of the air has been operating powerfully among the Germans lately in the West, and should be combated. Methodism will make better citizens of them than Rationalism. Wesley is a safer guide than Straus. I have a great horror of their Turner Bunds and Singen Bunds, and Sabbath blasphemies and Vandal Democracy. J. W. B."

BOOK EDITOR'S DEPARTMENT.

NEW BOOKS.

Dublin: An Historical Sketch of Ireland's Metropolis. 18mo, pp. 185; price thirty cents.

This beautiful book contains a mass of valuable information concerning the noble Hibernian capital. It will be interesting to anybody that is fond of history; but we can imagine that an Irishman—young or old, boy or girl, born on the Emerald Isle, or the Western Continent—let the hulls pass—will read it with great delight. Put it in the family and Sunday School library, and let him have a chance to get it.

Methodist Pamphlets for the People: Package No. 5, pp. 196; price 15c.

This is a select series on Baptism. We regret the necessity of discussing this subject so much in a controversial style; but Romish, Anti-pedobaptist, and Immersionist errors must be confuted. This is done effectually, and in the spirit of Christian charity, in these excellent pamphlets. In many of the works on Baptism now in circulation, arguments are used which seem to bear against the errors in question, but are nevertheless not sound, and, if pressed into service in this controversy, they may be found inconvenient when called up by an opponent in the discussion of other mooted questions. The Editor has kept this point in view in revising these tracts, as well as in writing his Treatise on Baptism. In these works, it is believed, the candid inquirer after truth will find enough to settle his faith and practice in the premises, and those who are set for the defense of the truth will find a sufficiency of reliable aid. Eating what some think an ambiguous passage or two in the first of the series, which, considering its author, the Editor did not feel at liberty, as he did not see the necessity, to change, these pamphlets are remarkably clear and plain in their style—admirably adapted to juvenile circulation. Their titles are as follows:

	PAGES.
Nature, Subjects, and Modes of Baptism, by R. Watson	60
Christian Baptism	8
Subjects and Mode of Baptism	36
Baptism: what it is not, and what it is	8
Regeneration more than Baptism	28
Are your Children baptized?	4
Fact and Mode of Purification	16
Conversations on the Mode of Baptism	36

Some of these Tracts have previously appeared in other series.

Reasons for not joining the Baptist Church. A Dialogue between a Baptist and a Methodist. By the Rev. Joseph Travis, of the Memphis Conference. Price 5 cents.

The numerous friends of the venerable author will be pleased with its perusal. There is nothing hard in it but its arguments.

Christian Liberality Explained and Enforced. Price 10 cents.

The Witnessing Church. Price 10c.

These two pamphlets, from the eloquent pen of Dr. Harris, are too well known to need any recommendation from us. They are brought out in convenient style, and at cheap rates, for the use of Missionary Societies and individuals engaged in promoting the interests of Christian benevolence.

The Divine Assessment for the Support of the Ministry. By the Rev. R. Abbey. Price 10 cents.

We shall not wonder if this is deemed the best production of Mr. Abbey's prolific pen. It is bold and outspoken—as if the author had taken a verse from C. Wesley's versification of the tenth Psalm for his motto, "Misers, hear, hy God abhorred." Mr. A. seems to have the whole tribe in abhorrence—and so have we; hence we yield to the request of the Board of Managers of the Tract Society of the Mississippi Conference, in publishing this Essay—which, by the way, makes a large pamphlet of 72 pages, with cover.

Unity of the Human Race: A Refutation of the Theory of Dr. Morton, Prof Agassiz, and Dr. Nott, on the Characteristics of Genera and Species. By John Bachman, D. D., LL. D., Corresponding Member of the Zoological Society, etc. Price 10c.

We scarcely need state that the venerable author of this excellent pamphlet stands in the front rank of naturalists; and he is, perhaps, inferior to no man living in defending the Unity of the Human Race on scientific grounds. In this essay, he utterly demolishes the theory of Morton and Agassiz, and throws Nott and Gliddon's "Types of Mankind" into pie. He absolutely demonstrates the unity of species among all the varieties of men—as among all the varieties of horses, dogs, etc. We hope this pamphlet will be sold by thousands, and that we shall be encouraged to publish other productions of Dr. Bachman on the same subject. The reverend author is pastor of a church in Charleston, S. C., and President of the General Synod of the Lutheran Church in the United States; but he is far more concerned in the common salvation than in any sectarian interests. He deserves the thanks of all Christians for battling so sturdily and so successfully with infidelity, on its chosen ground of natural science.

THE LATE HURRICANE.

The Gulf shore was visited, on Saturday night and Sunday last, with one of those devastating hurricanes which so often mark their course with the destruction of life and property. On Saturday the wind was from the East, with medium high tides, and from the dark and heavy clouds which appeared in the Southward, denoted that the elements were in motion and gave unequivocal signs of the coming tempest. On Saturday evening, the wind, being from E. N. E., began to freshen and increase until 8 o'clock on Sunday morning, when it temporarily lulled. It came out again, fresher than ever, between 10 and 11 o'clock, from the S. E., and then from S. S. E., and continued up to 3 or 4 o'clock, when it in a measure abated and hauled around more to the South. At sundown, on Sunday, the wind was from S. S. W.

The accounts from all parts of the coast are truly deplorable. The loss of property is beyond calculation, as it is believed that not a sailing craft of any kind on the coast, outrode the hurricane. At all of the watering-places many valuable shade trees—the pecuniary worth of which cannot be estimated—have been destroyed.

Notwithstanding the storm, the mail steamer Oregon, Capt. Myers, continued her regular trips. The California left here for Mobile with the mails on Saturday, landed at the Pass about 9 o'clock P. M., and shortly after, the gale being so severe, she came to under the lee of Round Island, where she rode at anchor in safety for eighteen hours.

With the information now before us, it is impossible to estimate the loss by the gale. Perhaps more distress will be occasioned by the losses among our coasting vessels than in any other quarter, they being generally owned by the master and usually being his whole worldly wealth.

The loss of the wharves at Bay St. Louis, Pass Christian, Mississippi City and Ocean Springs, are a serious inconvenience to the visitors and citizens of the respective villages. The long wharves of Dr. Tegarden and Colonel Bernet, at Mississippi City, from their extreme length, one being nine hundred yards, and erected at great cost, are serious losses. Dr. Tegarden estimates his losses at $10,000.

This has been much the most severe gale experienced on the coast since the year 1823. In the month of August of that year the loss of life was terrible. One packet schooner, bound for Mobile—the schooner Washington, Capt. McCloud—foundered off the Bay of St. Louis, and every soul perished—say twenty-nine passengers, captain and crew. Several other vessels were lost with their entire crews. The Coroner of Shieldsborough held inquests on forty-nine bodies which floated ashore at that place.

In the year 1810 was another terrific storm, in which the U. S. schooner Firebrand with a crew of forty-five persons was lost, having struck near where the light-ship is moored.

Pass Christian was not a village, neither was there a house at Mississippi City, and not more than a dozen at Biloxi at that period, or possibly greater losses, both in property and life, might have been recorded. But we will return to our present subject.

BAY OF ST. LOUIS.

Not a bath-house or wharf left standing. The entire front of the place swept clean. Two or three lives are reported to have been lost. Several buildings blown down and others much injured. The front road is completely cut up by the surf, being in many places impassable.

PASS CHRISTIAN.

This beautiful and favorite place of resort is a wreck of its former self. From one extreme to the other, on Monday morning, it presented a scene of devastation that no pen could accurately describe. Not a wharf left. Of all the beautiful bath-houses that lined its shores, nought is left but heaps of lumber piled on the beach. Nearly every china tree on the Pass succumbed to the storm king, while of shade and ornamental trees the loss has been immense. Several small buildings on the front beach were swept away. One of the buildings attached to Montgomery's Hotel came down about daylight on Sunday morning. The ground floor was occupied as a ten-pin alley, and the upper story as servants' apartments. Two men were injured, though not dangerously, by its fall. A lumber schooner came ashore, and is high and dry in front of the residence of W. E. Leverich, Esq. Lower down on the beach are the timbers and what is left of another schooner. Near the remains of the steamboat wharf, in the back-yard of Mr. Hook's place, there is a good-sized schooner, not much injured. Below the hotel, towards Henderson's Point, there is a large-sized schooner on shore, ten or twelve feet above high-water mark.

The yacht "Algerine," belonging to Mr. Fassman; the "Bertha," owned by Mr. Fisk; the "Ed Sparrow," and "Kenyon," belonging to Mr. Behan, are injured, it is believed, beyond repairs. Com. Story's "Venture" came ashore over the steamboat wharf, and is injured on her larboard side, but not beyond being again made whole. The hotel stood the storm well. All the old trees in the front-yard and on the beach were destroyed. Fences were blown down in every direction.

So far as we could learn, it was not positively ascertained that any lives were lost, although serious apprehensions were entertained for the safety of nine fishermen who were out engaged in their avocations of supplying the Pass with fish. When we left the Pass they had not been heard from.

MISSISSIPPI CITY.

This place came in for its full share of the general devastation.

Between 5 and 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, the large buildings attached to the premises and hotel of Dr. Togarden at Mississippi City, were blown down. The sleeping apartments, a building of two stories, full of lodgers, was the first to give way, from the washing of the foundation by the waves, causing the death of two of our citizens, a son of Mr. George W. Givens, and Mr. Joseph Prentiss, attached to the factorage house of Messrs. Curry & Person, and wounding four other persons, not however, seriously. The other building crushed at this place was the billiard saloon and ten-pin alley.

The other damages sustained at Mississippi City are the entire destruction of the two long wharves attached to Barnes's Hotel, and Paradise Point, with every private bath-house and wharf. In fact, there is not a bath-house standing from Ocean Springs to the Rigolets.

Fences were blown down, and the largest kind of pine trees snapped off like rotten wood.

BILOXI.

Deer Island afforded a partial protection to this place, and to it may be attributed the safety of two wharves; that known as Brown's wharf, and the wharf of Pradet, Green Oaks Hotel; all the other wharves and all the bath-houses are destroyed.

The beach in front of the light-house, and the residence of Jno. G. Robinson, Esq., is much washed and cut up by the surf.

We understand that a schooner passed through one of the streets and now lies two squares from the water's edge—carried there by the force of the gale. Many small crafts were driven ashore and destroyed. Mrs. Thomas Byrne's fine yacht "Edith," was driven ashore and is much injured. The "Coquette," "Gylph" and "Ripple," were fortunately on the ways in the back bay of Biloxi.

OCEAN SPRINGS.

Our information leads us to suppose that this point has had its full share, as the only remains of all its wharves and bath-houses is the pier head of Captain Walker's new wharf.

Pascagoula and the settlements on the Eastern Shores of Mobile Bay appear to have escaped with but comparatively trifling injury, although it must be confessed our accounts from those quarters are not full. Pensacola, we believe, was much injured—having been visited with its full portion of disaster.

We are indebted to a friend who was on the Creole, the following vivid accounts of the disastrous trip:

THE HURRICANE AND ITS INCIDENTS, AS PERCEIVED BY AN EYE WITNESS.

The writer, in company with about one hundred and fifty others, took passage on board of the steamer Creole, under command of Captain Post, for the various watering places on the Gulf shore, on Saturday evening last, under the usual circumstances of such a trip. The steamer, as usual, departed punctually on the arrival of the four o'clock P. M. train of cars of the lake end of the Pontchartrain Railroad. At the hour of departure there was a pretty strong breeze blowing from about S. E., with occasional showers of rain. The steamer sailed finely on her course for the bay of St. Louis, where she arrived at about half-past one o'clock, A. M., of Sunday morning, having been greatly impeded, in consequence of the continual increase of the winds and sea-way. By the time it blew a perfect gale, the wind varying from S. E. to S. S. E.

After landing the passengers and freight destined for Bay St. Louis, Captain Post, deeming it prudent for the safety of his boat and passengers, instead of continuing his voyage, ran up the bay about a mile and a half, and came to anchor under the lee of Honderson's Point, where the boat remained with a prospect of riding out the gale in perfect safety, until about 5 o'clock, A. M., at which time the wind had increased to a perfect hurricane, the force of which, together with the heavy sea which was running at the time, caused the cable to the anchor to give way and drove the steamer directly towards the land shore on the west side of the bay. Steam having been kept constantly up during the night, the captain ordered her to be put under way. The steam, however, not being sufficiently high in the boiler, and the force of the wind being such as to prevent the boat from being perfectly manageable, the captain determined to prevent her from going ashore by backing her round. Unfortunately, at that moment a schooner was discovered lying at anchor directly in his ways and the danger of running the steamer on to her seemed most imminent, which, however, by one of those dispensations of Providence which some times take place did not happen. At the moment of peril, another equally alarming, at least to the unexperienced, presented itself, as two or three most severe thumps of our stern bull upon the sand gave unmistakeable evidence that bottom was not far off. The judgment of the captain in undertaking the maneuver above stated, proved correct, and in a few moments our boat was in a position of comparative safety. The scene of consternation and alarm which prevented itself among the passengers in this critical moment above described, is more easily imagined than expressed, suffice it to say that life-preservers were in general requisition, as the expectation of being lost seemed universal. Several incidents of quite a comical character occured, which might appear improper to relate in a general narrative, and are therefore omitted.

Upon getting the boat under headway against the gale and waves and heading up the Bay of St. Louis, the channels, bars and reefs of which were unknown to Captain Post or his pilots—they never having had occasion to investigate them on any previous occasion—the Captain felt the difficulty as well as the responsibility of his station, recollected that among his passengers there was one of great knowledge and experience in the navigation of the various bays and inlets of Lake Borgne—Captain Pass Jontelle—whose name and services on that occasion will never be forgotten so long as memory holds her seat in the minds of the passengers or crew of the Creole on the route now described. Captain Post at once asked him whether he could pilot the boat into a safe harbor; to which an affirmative answer was given—on which Captain Post placed the boat in his command. He took charge of her and directed her course toward Bayou Portage, at the head of the Bay of St. Louis, in which the boat was safely brought to an anchor at about right o'clock A. M., in a position where she was most perfectly protected from the violence of the storm, and in which we rode at rest in perfect safety, notwithstanding the winds kept on blowing in fury until about half-past nine o'clock A. M., at which time the pine trees on the shore were being wrenched off near the ground by the violence of the gale. After the boat was brought to anchor in safety, and the services rendered by Captain Jontelle becoming known among the passengers, they at once resolved to give him a substantial token of their acknowledgment of his valuable services rendered to the boat and passengers. A subscription was immediately set on foot, which resulted in the subscription and collection of the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, and Col. A. P. Field was invited to become the spokesman of the passengers in presenting it to him.

Captain Jontelle being invited into the cabin without any previous intimation of what was going forward, was addressed by Col. F. in substance as follows:

"Captain Jontelle—The passengers now on board of the steamer Creole having just been informed of the valuable services which you have rendered us, as well as the steamer on which we now are, have requested me to express to you their unfeigned gratitude for the bold and prompt manner with which those services have been rendered in piloting this boat from a position of imminent peril into one of perfect security; and as a substantial evidence of the sincerity of their declaration, they have requested me to ask your acceptance of this small sum of money, which they have collected for you, as a slight compensation for the services you have done them, which will never be forgotten by us as long as any one of us shall survive in this life of perils and trials."

The Captain stood for a moment completely nonplussed by this (to him) unexpected address, and, in true seaman style, replied, in substance, as follows:

"If, in the hands of Providence, I have been enabled to render any services to this boat and her passengers, I have only done my duty, for which compensation is neither due nor expected. I accept, however, your proffered donation, not as a payment of any services rendered, but solely as an evidence of your kind feelings towards me, assuring you that the greatest pleasure I could ever enjoy would be to peril my life and all for the safety of those who may be in danger."

After this little incident, universal gratitude and confidence was depicted in the countenances of all on board, and our steamer remained at her anchor until about half-past two o'clock, P. M., when the wind changed its course to about Southwest, and abated sufficiently, as it was thought at the time, to enable her to pursue her voyage, when Capt. Post resolved to proceed. We accordingly weighed anchor and proceeded down the bay; but when getting out into the lake it was found that the gale had not yet sufficiently abated to enable us to proceed with safety, when the boat was put about and again run into harbor at the mouth of the River Jordan, where we remained in safety until Monday morning, when we again put out for our destination at Ocean Springs. The scene presented at the various landings on the coast was beggers description. At the landing of the Bay of St. Louis, the only remains of the hitherto extensive wharves and bath houses to be seen were a few lonely posts to mark the spot where they had stood, while the beach was covered by a complete raft of drift-wood and debris of various kinds, interspersed with vessels and boats driven ashore by the gale. At Pass Christian, Mississippi City, Biloxi and Ocean Springs, the scene is the same. Not one of the buildings at either of these places having escaped except at Mississippi City, where one of the buildings of Dr. Tegardens's establishment, known as Blue Ruin, is a complete wreck, being only a mass of ruins; having caused the death of two young men and seriously injuring three others in its fall. The only wharves standing at any of the landings are those of Messrs. Brown & Fisher of Biloxi.

The force of the winds raised the water in the bay to about six feet above its usual hight at high-tide, which, together with the great hight of the waves, was the cause of the great destruction of property along the coast.

In closing this narrative, which is already almost too lengthy, it is impossible to do justice to the courageous and manly bearing of Capt. Post, and the officers and crew of the steamer Creole, during her last perilous trip, which has ended by the safe return of all her passengers at their various places of destination. The feelings of the passengers in this respect having been already expressed to the captain and crew, we will say nothing more on that point at present, knowing, as we do that the greatest satisfaction which they can derive is from knowing that they have done their duty, and that their efforts in performing that ware appreciated by those under their care.

General Woll.—This distinguished individual, late commander of the Northern forces of the late Mexican Government, arrived in our city on Saturday last, on his way, it is said, to join Santa Anna in Carthagena. The General, we are informed, is a Frenchman, and entered service under the Mexican standard many years ago, in pursuance of advice tendered him by the General Scott, whom, rumor says, he is about to visit. They were both, at the time that advice was given, much younger than at present, and have both, no doubt, obtained some valuable experimental knowledge regarding military matters as pertaining to Mexico.

Gen. Woll has proved himself not only one of the most able officers of the Mexican army, but what is more rare in Mexican leaders, faithful and loyal to those who employed him. He showed every disposition to fight it out to the last, and unquestionably would have done so had not the abdication and flight of His Serene Highness rendered it unnecessary. There is little doubt that the revolutionists would have found the job of subduing and defeating the General and his troops the most facile of the whole business.

A dispatch states that at a party given at Jamesville, in Haywood county, Tenn., a few days ago, forty-five of the guests were poisoned. One man is dead, and several other persons are not expected to recover. The poison was contained in some of the ingredients of cake used on the occasion.

DIED—Of consumption, in Jackson, La., June the 11th, 1855, ALEXANDER COVINGTON MAGRUDER, aged 27 years.

By the early and melancholy death of this gentleman, society has lost an ornament, and literature one of its most accomplished advocates.

He was born in Adams County, Miss., on the 17th April, 1828. He received his early training entirely from his parents, both highly gifted and both devoted to intellectual improvement. At an early age he gave indications of unusual strength of mind and aptness to learn. He was carefully taught the rudiments of an English education at home, and his reading was so judiciously directed, that at a very early period he was well acquainted with general history, and had acquired a decided taste for literary pursuits. He was sent from home to school only long enough to fit for college, which, under an able instructor, he accomplished in an unusually short time. He was then placed at Centenary College, where in 1845 he graduated with high honor, when but little more than seventeen years old.

During his Senior year, he was selected, and appointed by the Trustees to assist the Professor of Greek, and in that department had the entire business of preparing students for College.

It is generally a work of great difficulty, for one who is himself a student, and amenable to the same authority with themselves to maintain that respect from his pupils, and that influence over them, which is necessary to success in teaching. Yet so fully did he do this, that the two relations of a respected teacher and a beloved associate were distinctly kept up at their appropriate times and places. They were almost exclusively his companions during the seasons of recreation; and while their progress was highly satisfactory, they manifested for him their regard, and ever afterwards a warmth and steadiness of attachment, which falls to the lot of but few men of the same vocation. From that time until the attack, which after a few months terminated his life, he pursued the same calling; he was a teacher con amore, and of course successful and popular in his profession. In this department of life he did good. Many a youth has been stimulated by his example and influence to aim at high attainments in literature and in virtue.

His talents were of a high order and varied. In classical and general literature, and in science his acquirements were extensive and accurate. His taste, naturally good, was chastened by careful and judicious culture. Possessing quick and clear perceptions of moral and intellectual beauty, he had a remarkable faculty of interesting others; and by his correct and discriminating criticisms, directing the minds of young or old to an appreciation of a literary production, or to the points most worthy of consideration in whatever might be the topic of conversation. Nor were his attainments limited to the range of subjects embraced in what is called a "liberal education." In the purely professional departments he was so well informed as to be an agreeable and improving companion to those who were especially devoted to them. His conversation was always entertaining and suggestive.

In his social character, thought not faultless, he possessed as many of the qualities which render social life delightful, as are ever found in one man—amiable in his intercourse with others, ardent, constant and singularly unselfish in his friendships.

From a mere boy he was a member of the M. E. Church; and, though, perhaps, not as zealous and active in Christian life and labor as he might have been, he was consistent, and his influence always on the side of religion. He was taken off suddenly by excessive hemorrhage, but died communing with his Saviour, and the last effort he ever made to speak was an acknowledgement of his trust in Him. A troubled conscience can never leave so sweet and peaceful an expression as his countenance wore when the spirit had departed.

LABOR SAVING INVENTION.—ALEXANDER KIRKWOOD, of Pascagoula, Miss., has secured a patent for a new method of pumping vessels. It saves the expense of raising the water to above its main level, and maintains an advantage of at least fifty per cent over the common method. An engraving of this pump can be seen in vol. 10, No. 50, page 396, Scientific American. Agents who will engage in the manufacture and sale of these pumps are wanted in all parts of the United States. Rights for States can be bought also. For more information address the patentee, at Pascagoula, Miss.

ELLIOT'S INDIAN BIBLE.—A copy of this literary curiosity lies before me. It is in quarto form, rough and rusty with old age, and ballowed by old associations.

The language in which it is written is dead; entirely dead; no man living can either read it or speak it.

This Bible was printed in 1685. The quality of the paper is poor enough, and the type is uneven and unsightly; that of the title page seems in part to have been cut with a penknife for the occasion. It is bound in sheep, with heavy ribs upon the back.

The "illuminations" at the beginning are extremely rude; and the "lines" are bent and broken.

The difference between this Bible and the fine edition last issued by the American Bible Society, in a typographical point of view, appears almost as great as that between the rude "wigwame" which its readers inhabited and those elegant and commodious dwellings which now occupy the site of them. This copy before me contains the old and new Testaments, together with the Psalms of David rendered with Indian verse.

The title at the beginning of the Bible is:

"Mamuwe wunuetu panatamwn
Ut Biblum Oou
Nanceswn Nukkone Testamawt wah knok wuskne Testament. Na quoshkinoumuk nashpe Wuttinneaunch Onriet noh asoowesit. JOHN ELLIOT. Nahobtoou onteohetor Printseoomuk. Cambridge, Printeuop pashpe Samuel Green, 1685."

THE WEATHER.—We have had a precious mixture of wind, mist, rain and mud for the last two days—a regular blaster, gotemp by Old Sol, we suppose, in preparation for his semi-annual ceremony of stepping over the equinoctial line, which will take place in about a week. The only pleasant feature about it has been the change in the temperature, which has caused prickly heat to subside and sleep to become a luxury. The health of the city, under all changes of the weather, continues steadily to improve.

Prevalence of the Fever in Norfolk and Portsmouth.

We extract the following from a letter in the Petersburg Express of the 13th, dated at Suffolk, Va., on the previous day:

Two or three nights during the past week I was upnursing a case of yellow fever we had in this town, young Mr. Riddick, who unfortunately died on Monday morning.

Enclosed I send you several of the yellow fever or plague fly. This fly was minutely described by our Norfolk correspondent last week. They appear to be a sort of cross between the mosquito and common housefly, and have very broad and large wings projecting upwards instead of lying flat.—ED. EXPRESS.]

The tidings from Portsmouth to-day is very heartrending. I feel so sad and melancholy, that I can scarcely find courage to write. The number of deaths for the forty eight hours ending yesterday evening, are said to be FORTY-SIX!!!

On Monday night several very copious showers of rain fell, and all day yesterday the sun shone with a power and intensity which is represented as having been absolutely overpowering. To the cause is attributed the heavy augmentation of mortality.

There were not many new cases reported yesterday. Indeed, such a fearful sweep has the terrible scourge made, there cannot possibly be many now to have it.

Dr. William White, of Deep Creek, Norfolk county, about eight miles from Portsmouth, says he has fifteen cases of fever there, every one of which are from either Norfolk or Portsmouth.

From Norfolk, the news received here is most heartrending. Accounts recently arrived say they cannot get forces sufficient to inter the dead, although persons are constantly on the streets, and compelling the negroes by force to carry the dead bodies out of the city, as also to assist in digging graves.

On Sunday there were twenty dead bodies piled in a heap in the "dead room" at the City Hospital. They were not able to coffin them last enough.

How long, how long, oh God, shall this state of things continue? Was there ever two communities so scourged before? Certainly no such scenes have ever been witnessed in New Orleans or any portion of Mexico.

The following is extracted from a Norfolk letter in the Richmond Dispatch:

Of fourteen physicians who went from Philadelphia to assist the sick, seven have been attacked by the fever, and three have died.

A common spectacle in the streets is a cart laden with coffins, which are deposited at some convenient street corner and removed thence by the undertakers as occasion demands. Three or four of these coffins often stand together. The dead are immediately taken out of the house and placed upon the sidewalks; a strip of parchment, inscribed with the name, age and date of decease of the victim, being nailed upon the lid of each coffin. A duplicate of this parchment record is preserved. The bodies of the dead are conveyed away by carts which traverse the streets at stated intervals. There are three places of burial.

The houses of the citizens who have fled are, it is believed, pretty generally respected. Few cases of theft are reported, and burglaries are not common. A considerable amount of valuable property is frequently in the hands of the physicians. This is always confided to the care of the Sanitary Committee.

On last Sunday six physicians breathed their last.

The Express has the following telegraphic dispatches:

RALEIGH, Sept 12 1855—The Norfolk boat that left yesterday, and arrived here this morning, reports that for the twenty-four hours previous to 6 P. M., on Monday, there were 36 deaths in Norfolk!

There was no report for Tuesday.

The "Howard Association" of Norfolk have declined sending the orphans of that city to Baltimore.

Several families have removed to "Camp Falls" near Hampton.

In Portsmouth the panic is increasing; there were fourteen deaths previous to three o'clock P. M. yesterday (Tuesday.)

Rev. Vernon Eskridge, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his son Richard, and Rev. James Chisholm, of the Episcopal Church, are dead.

Rev. Francis Devlin, of the Catholic Church, has suffered a relapse, and it was thought that he could not live.

RICHMOND, Sept. 12, 9 P. M.—Intelligence received here this afternoon by the Curtis Peck, represent forty deaths in Norfolk yesterday, and twenty-one in Portsmouth.

The Fever at Norfolk and Portsmouth.

The Richmond Dispatch last received, publishes the following letter:

NORFOLK, Wednesday, 12th.

Many of our citizens are still falling victims to the scourge. There are lamentation and mourning in many parts of the town and in Portsmouth. We are yet in the midst of one of the most terrific calamities that ever visited any place. The people are still falling beneath the leveling arm of the destroying angel, at the rate of fifty a day or more! Men, unaccustomed to weeping, are pouring forth copious streams of tears, and hearts are made to feel deeply and almost to break with grief. All nature looks beautiful and charming, but here in our ill-fated city, the silence of death and the look of desolation chill the heart and depress the spirits.

We hear scarce a sound but that of the hammer and saws and wagons of the undertaker, and the rattle of the physicians' vehicles. Business has ceased, and the voice of mirth and revelry is not heard.

More than two hundred have been buried in the two principal cemeteries in eleven days. Many have been buried in the Catholic burial ground and elsewhere. There have been about 1700 deaths in the city! Being hurried to-day, and as the mail will close in a few moments, I must conclude, promising to give further particulars to-morrow.

A Baltimore dispatch, of the 13th, says:

The ladies here held a meeting this morning, to demand in the name of humanity, that the orphans of Norfolk and Portsmouth should be sent here immediately, as large contributions had already been made for their support, and nurses and a superintendent appointed for an asylum in which they are to be lodged. Provisions enough here been donated to support them one year. The Relief Fund has reached $30,000.

A dispatch, of the 12th, from Washington to the New York Herald, says:

"There is no truth in the report that the Ambassadorship to England will be tendered to Gen. Cass. Neither will Allen, of Ohio, nor Mason, of Virginia, stand any chance. Gen Pierce still sticks to Col Greene, of the Boston Post, but Marcy and Davis say no. Buchanan's friends are in favor of Dallas, so that he may be out of the way in 1856. Dallas is on his own hook, and says he will have it. It is, altogether, a very pretty Schr Forney is too busy attending to "Old Buck's" chances in 1856 to interfere.

FINALE OF THE GILA EXCITEMENT—Poole Hanged.—John A Lennon and David Dyar, two citizens of Hannibal, Mo., returned home last Wednesday from the gold hunt, having been unsuccessful. They report that Poole, the leader of a company to the gold regions, had been hung by his companions. They say that Poole's fate was decided by a vote of the persons composing the expedition; and a majority being in favor of hanging him he was accordingly swung by the neck to a limb. Thus the poor fellow expiated his folly in leading an expedition to the locality of the supposed gold mines. [St. Louis Dem.

SIEGE OF DANTZIC.—On the retreat from Russia of the French army, the tenth corps, under Count Rapp, was thrown into Dantzic for its defence. The 21st January, 1813, the Russians invested the town on all sides. Then the besiegers were Russians and Prussians, and the besieged French and their Allies. "From that day," says the history, "all communications were intercepted and the garrison abandoned to its own strength, without being able even to procure intelligence as to what was passing in Germany and France." The garrison reached the number of 35,034 men, but the greater part were sick, wounded and frost-bitten, wretched, harrassed fragments of "la grand armee;" so that at first there were not more than nine or ten thousand available as combatants, and they had to bear the burden and minister to the necessities of twice their number of suffering comrades. In the last half of March the garrison lost two hundred men per day from disease. The sick soldiers encumbered all the hospitals. Two thousand died in February, four thousand in March, three thousand in April, and near two thousand in May. Eighteen thousand sick soldiers burdened the garrison:

From the 20th April the daily ration of meat was fixed at two ounces of horse flesh and one ounce of salt beef. By the 16th September the Russian force had been increased to over 50,000 men, beside 120 vessels; their artillery had arrived and was in place, and they were able to convert into a siege what had been hitherto been only a blockade. In twenty-four hours they fired 7500 discharges—shells, shot, hot shot, and fire-balls. The town was several times on fire, and the provision stores were consumed. Some of the miserable inhabitants, whose provisions were exhausted, sought to leave the place; but they were prevented by the besiegers from passing out, and were obliged to turn back. The greater part of these died of cold or starvation. Woman and children labored on the defences, under the besiegers' fire, to obtain their daily bread. The 29th of November hostilities ceased, and Dantzic being without provisions, was surrendered. Fifteen thousand, seven hundred and thirty-six soldiers had died of disease, one thousand, nine hundred and ninety-six were killed by the enemy, and sixteen thousand marched out of the town.

THE BITE OF A RATTLESNAKE.—A correspondent of the Boston Transcript says: Many may wonder why the bite of the rattlesnake is so fatal. The reasons are simply these. The poison, or the fluid which acts as such, issues from the fangs, and is secreted in the wound made by the bite. This fluid chills and crystalizes the blood, and a benumbing steals gradually over the frame like that felt by a freezing person—the blood being like water in a freezing state.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

Indian Hostilities—Shocking Murders, etc.

The mails by the steamship Granada bring dates from San Francisco to the 15th ult., but the news is not voluminous.

The American and Democratic parties have made their nominations for State officers, the former nominating J Neely Johnson for Governor and R M. Anderson for Lieut Governor. The Democrats have nominated John Bigler for Governor and Samuel Purdy for Lieut. Governor.

From several papers we gather the following paragraphs:

"A terrible massacre of some of the inhabitants of Benicheria, Amador county, was perpetrated by a party of Mexicans and Chilenos on the 31st August. Five white citizens were murdered, including Mrs Hammond, whose husband was severely wounded. Three Mexicans, who gave their names respectively as Peterino, Francisco and Jose, were found guilty of murder in the above case and, after half an hour's time being allowed to prepare themselves, were hung on one tree. While the trial was being conducted, the outraged community burned out en masse and burned every Spanish house in the place. After the three were hung the citizens of Rancheria passed a resolution that no Mexican shall hereafter reside at the above place.

The Indians of Rouge River, Scott River, Shasta Valley, Horse Creek and Klamath, are said to have combined in open hostility to the whites. On the 27th ult. three miners were attacked on Humbug Creek, and a Mr Peters was shot through the breast and died within an hour; shortly afterwards the Indians attacked and killed three men, named Edward Parrish, Thomas Grey and William Hennessey—who lived opposite Buckeye Bar on the Klamath.

Proceeding down the river two miles, they murdered a man named Peter Hignight, and two others, whose names are unknown. The three men were sleeping in their beds at the time. The next morning they descended the river to Pickett's Ranch, some six miles below Buckeye Bar, where they arrived at 10 o'clock on Friday morning. Here they killed four men who were working in the field. Mr Pickens saved his life by concealing himself behind a fallen tree. The names of the killed have not yet been ascertained.

Down the river Indians have made a descent upon the miners at the New Diggings on the Sacramento, and seven whites were wounded, and some fifty Indians killed.

On Sunday two Indians were captured, near the town and hung, and six more were shot on Humbug.

The Scott Valley Indians are said to have surrendered their guns, and are now on the Government Reserve. Five Indians were killed at Humbug Bar on Thursday evening.

A man named John Peters died last night in the County Hospital, from the effects of a stab in the back, which he received on the 28th of last month.

A Frenchman, named Alexis Briant, attempted on the 3d inst to blow up the premises corner of Washington street and Jones's alley, belonging to Mr. L. J. Hitter, the agent in this city for heavy Cephalants to Hazarland. There were great many persons in the building at the time, but fortunately no injury, except some slight bruises received. Briant was the only person injured, and he yet confined under surveillance, in the hospital in this city. He seems to have lost his reason in consequence of heavy losses arising from speculations in real estate.

Two distinct shocks of earthquake were felt in Santa Barbara in the latter end of last month. No harm done.

A man was found in the vicinity of Scorpion Gulch, on the way to Log Cabin, dead, with his pockets turned inside out, and some money scattered about on the ground. He was quite well dressed, about 30 years of age, rather more than ordinary size, with sandy whiskers; had about him an old revolver, addressed, McGloughlin, Marysville.

We learn from the Calaveras Chronicle that Messrs. Wade & Lamson, proprietors of the Bohemiume Hill Canal and Mining Company, are projecting an extension of their valuable canal to Mokelumne Hill, a distance of twelve miles from Camps Seco, involving an outlay of forty thousand dollars.

Hon. O. P. Head, of Stockton, in a letter to the Herald, states it as his opinion that the yield of the grain crops in the San Joaquin Valley, this year, will not amount to more than half the expected quantity.

From the news summary prepared by the San Francisco Evening News, we select the following items:

The Grand Jury have indicted John Stockdale for the murder of his wife, Nancy Stockdale, and have also found a like bill against James McEvoy, for the murder of Henry Fernhurst.

The Grand Jury have found bills of indictment against the proprietors of the different theatres in town, for violating the law interdicting barbarous and noisy amusements on the sabbath day.

A man named Scott Ferrish, was shot at the "What Cheer House," on Tuesday evening, the 31st ult., by Geo. Dubbelly, a former friend, whose wife had eloped with Ferrish from the mines, and were on their way to the Atlantic States.

One hundred and fifty-four patients were admitted in the U. S. Marine Hospital in this city during the month of July; 188 discharged, and 180 remained in the Hospital up to the 1st inst. The number of deaths from July 31 to 26th was nine.

The ball given to the Admirals and officers of the Allied fleets took place on the 3d inst. The French Admiral, owing to some informality for which the projectors were much to blame, refused to attend. The result, on the whole, was a failure.

All the French and British men-of-war have left our harbor; some for Europe and the rest on a cruise. The Alberts carried off all the men who had been suffering with scurvy, quite recovered of their complaint.

Several prisoners left in the steamer of the 1st inst, to join the revolutionary forces under Alvarez, and it is stated, on the authority of Madame Cowgill, that a number of others are preparing for a like trip by the steamer.

A gentleman by the name of A Barret, of Sacramento, committed suicide at Wilson's Exchange, in this city, on the 24 inst, by taking laudanum. The principal cause for this act appears to have been some publication in the Alcalde Sentinel, prejudicial to the character of the deceased.

Two couples were divorced from the holy bonds of wedlock on Saturday: Maria Brittingham from Edward T. Brittingham, by Judge Hagarty of the Fourth District Court, and Adeline Stichmond from M. L. Richmond, by Judge Norton, of the Twelfth District Court.

The U. S. sloop-of-war Decatur came to port on the 5th inst.

I. C. Woods, formerly partner of the Express firm of Adams & Co., in this city, suddenly disappeared on the 9th inst., leaving a letter behind in which he states that instead for the Atlantic to look into the affairs of his late firm. The U. S. Government has caused a fog gun to be planted at Point Bonita, the northern head of this harbor, which will be fired at intervals of every half-hour, in foggy weather, in order to give warning to vessels that may happen to be on the coast at the time. It is a good idea, and one of which mariners will be grateful.

The Nicaragua steamer Uhoa Sam, C. H. Baldwin commander, arrived on the 11th inst., from San Juan del Sud, in the unprecedently short time of 10½ days. She brought upwards of 600 passengers, without a single case of sickness or death during the passage. The Uncle Sam leaves again to-morrow for San Juan.

We have files of the Panama Star and Herald up to the 30th ult., but they contain nothing of importance.

Col. Joseph W. Fabens and a considerable number of unemployed foreigners had left the town of Panama to join the Kinney expedition in Nicaragua.

A large iron lighter had been launched at Panama.

From Australia.

The Panama Herald has received advices from Sydney to the 16th and from Victoria to the 26th of June.

The American ship Whistler and the brig Neapo had been lost on the rocks off King's Island, and several sailors perished.

The Melbourne Argus, of June 26, has the following caution to captains of emigrant vessels:

The captain of the ship Alfred, from Hong Kong, was fined at the Williamstown Police-office, in the sum of £902 upon 162 convictions for bringing into port an excess of Chinese passengers. Each conviction carries with it an imprisonment of fourteen days, making eight years altogether. Captain Brownlow has been committed to prison for the latter term in default of payment.

The same paper has the following items:

Serious collisions have taken place between the Irish at the Maryborough diggings and the miners. The "Tips," as the former are called, attempted to take the law into their own hands relative to "jumping" claims, but the others rose in mass of the number of three thousand, and obliged them to conform to law and usage. The miners are known as "the Allies," in contradistinction to the "Tips." Military and police have been sent to preserve the peace in the district.

A mutual protection society has been formed, with the sanction of the Government.

At the Belfast diggings the Irish have also been placing themselves in opposition to the English, Scotch, and American miners, and scenes similar to those at Maryborough have occurred.

At Maryborough a "Tip" who rashly presented his gun at a body of 2000 of the Allies, was fired at twice and slightly wounded.

A monster nugget weighing 1000 ozres and valued at £4800, was found at Maryborough diggings.

The Mount Alexander Mail says: "Hundred weights of gold are scarce now-a-days, and diggers no longer nugget out 10,000 worth between breakfast and dinner. The new word "Shiner" has been introduced into the Australian vocabulary, and the precious metal is now bought and sold by the pennyweight instead of the pound.

At Ballarat the American miners were busy, making arrangements to celebrate the 4th of July on an extensive scale.

THE POPE VS. THE SPANISH CORTES.—The following is a paragraph from the late allocution or address of the Pope to the Spanish Cortes, in reference to the act confiscating the property of the Church in Spain:

Raising our voice in your assembly, we complain of all that the lay government has done and is still doing, in Spain, unjustly against the Church. The patrimony of the Church has been usurped in spite of all Divine and human law. We therefore, in virtue of our apostolic authority, censure, abrogate and declare without value and without force, null and of no effect, for the past and future, the said laws and decrees.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Charles Morgan arrived from Galveston on Monday evening, but from some cause we did not obtain either her mails or manifest.

The health of Galveston remains good. The News of the 15th states that a few cases of fever had occurred, but they were of a mild type.

The Bellaire Telegraph of the 12th states that cases of fever occur in that town among the unacclimated, but readily yield to the ordinary treatment. The Telegraph says:

"It is reported that an expedition has been raised in Holland and other places, to go into Mexico to recover property that has been felonously abstracted and harbored on the other side of the Rio Grande. Some three hundred men are reported to have joined the expedition."

The San Antonio papers of the 6th and 8th are full of accounts of Indian murders and depredations. The Indians who killed the little boy of Mr. Meller were pursued and overtaken by seven men, but the savages were too strong in numbers, and after a few shots, the white men were obliged to flee for their lives. The particulars of the murder of the boy are most horrible—he was dragged from his horse with a lasso and killed with a lance.

On the 30th ult., a party of Indians and a white man attacked two men a few miles from Fort Merrill, and killed one of them, named Hopkins. The other escaped. A party of twelve men started in pursuit, and on the latest previous the Indians near the 9th inst. The dentilions gives the following particulars of what followed:

"There were eight Indians—first on them were in camp with their horses stalked out; the other three were at some distance on horseback. Those on horseback were first discovered, and pursuit was instantly made. They had not proceeded far when a caballado of horses were discovered not very distant, to one side. The company immediately turned their attention to cutting the Indians off from the horses, and were successful in doing so.

"In coming near, the other five were discovered and charged upon. Two were killed, and the other three very seriously wounded, but succeeded in reaching a dense thicket of weeds and brush, about City or one hundred yards distant, before they could be overtaken by the party.

"When the Indians reached the thicket, they were entirely safe to walk. The grass along their trail was dyed with blood that poured from their wounds. Each of them had received two or more shots through his body."

The party brought back two Indian scalps, two shields and a large number of spears, bows, arrows, etc.

The Texan gives a long account of an affair in which Mr. Frank Pitcmeky and Mr F. O. Jones defended the house of the latter, in Wimbs were a number of women and children, against the attack of fifteen Indians. A number of the Indians were wounded by the rifles of the besieged and by several fierce dogs belonging to Mr Jones. The Indians finally retreated, taking away all the horses they could find.

The Texan appears to be astonished at the obstinacy with which the two men defended themselves, as the Indians "only wanted their scalps."

The Sentinel has the following paragraph:

"We have received news by private correspondence from Fort Chadbourne that Mr Alexander H. Davis was killed some fourteen miles from that place by the Indians, on the 22d of August. It seems that Davis, and a man by the name of Hodge were out some distance from the Fort and were attacked by Indians, and compelled either to surrender or fight their way through. Knowing that there would be no hope for life, in case they surrendered, they determined to fight their way through the enemy; and in so doing, Davis was killed and Hodge fortunately made his escape.

Mississippi.

The Jackson Mercury, of the 11th, says:

Up to the time our paper went to press last night, not a case of yellow fever had occurred in Jackson, excepting the one one mentioned a week ago. The quarantine is still rigidly enforced. The weather has been very disagreeable and unfavorable for several days. This strengthens the hope that we may escape any epidemic this year.

We learn that there have been twelve new cases and four deaths within the past two days in Canton. The town is almost depopulated, but few remaining excepting the relatives and friends of the sufferers. Drs. Dudley and Boyd, Mr. Black, and others of our townsmen, have gone up to attend the sick.

We learn that the fever has appeared at Yazoo City, and that five cases and two deaths had occurred up to Saturday morning.

While the town of Woodville is free from the disease, it is raging with great violence on the plantations in Wilkinson county.

The Holly Springs Times, of the 6th, has the following:

Two citizens of Leake county, near Edinburg, suddenly met their death on the 17th ult. A young man, John Nix, about twenty-one years of age, out of curiosity went down into a well which was said to have damp, or carbonic wood gas in it. On attempting to return, after ascending some few feet, he fell back lifeless. Mr. James Smith descended for the purpose of attaching a rope to Mr. Nix and drawing him out. But he too fell a victim to the fatal gas.

The Vicksburg Whig, of Thursday last, says:

From the very best information we can obtain, three new cases of fever occurred yesterday. The sexton informs us that there have been two burials since his last weekly report, from yellow fever—one on Tuesday and the other yesterday. There are probably from fifteen to twenty cases in all under treatment, up to last evening. Many of them, we are happy to learn, are doing well. There has been a change of weather since our last issue, and the scarcity of material here leads us to hope that we shall not witness any considerable increase of the disease. As we have before stated, our readers shall be promptly and correctly as possible kept advised of the sanitary condition of the city.

The Natchez Courier, of Thursday, has the following:

On Friday, 17th ult., Mr. Alfred Marsh, residing about nine miles east of Nolensuleo, Miss., had three of his children killed by lightning. Their ages were as follows: sixteen, ten and two years. The children were returning to the house when they were killed by the lightning. The eldest had the youngest on his shoulders when death overtook them.

The Jackson Flag of the Union, of Friday last, says:

It affords us much pleasure to be able to say that there is not now a solitary case of yellow fever in the city of Jackson. A most rigid quarantine is enforced, and strong hopes are entertained that our city may escape a visitation of the awful scourge. Quite a number of families left on the first alarm, and are now scarcely rusticating, where we advise them to remain until it is decided to a certainty that Jackson will be an exception to the general prevalence of the disease in all large Southern towns.—P. S. Since the above was in type there has been one case reported in this city.

The yellow fever has made its appearance at Lisington and at the Artesian Springs, though not indigenous to these places. The patients are fugitives from Cooper's Well or Canton. Only two or three cases had occurred up to our last issue.

The Jackson Mercury has the following paragraphs:

We learn from Dr. Harper, of Vicksburg, (on his return home,) that most of the cases in Canton were doing well. Fifteen deaths have occurred in all, and between thirty and forty were under treatment.

In Natchez the Board of Health fairly gave up the efficiency of quarantine to keep out the fever, and say that it is "the visitation of an all-wise Providence." All boats have been required to land four miles below town—no goods carried in except after being aired and smoked—the roads guarded by armed men—and a secret detective police employed in town. Notwithstanding all this, the disease has appeared in all parts of the city.

ARKANSAS.—The Little Rock Gazette and Democrat of the 7th has the following:

The river, after rising several feet commenced falling. There is now, however, some four feet in the channel below this. The Lucy Robinson left for Fort Smith on Tuesday morning, but the Western stage driver reports the river as having fallen two feet at Lewisburg.

The late rains have done considerable damage the cotton crops in this immediate neighborhood. Our news from other quarters incline us to the belief that the crop of 1855 will fall short of the one last year.

The new stage line from Washington to Shreveport has been started.

Much enthusiasm is manifested in regard to the Mississippi, Ouachita and Red River Railroad, and the stock is being rapidly taken up.

The Washington Telegraph of the 5th, says:

We have had several heavy rains since our last, and there appears to be a prospect for navigation in the Ouachita. A gentleman who left Camden on Saturday morning last, informs us that the river lacked only about two feet of being high enough for boats to reach Camden, and that it was still rising.

The Helena Shield of the 8th says:

The corn crop in this section of country, as we have before stated, is thought to be the best ever made. Cotton, but for the recent heavy rains, would have doubtless proved fully an average crop. These rains, however, have resulted in considerable damage, the full extent of which we are not apprised.

Mrs Bodisco and daughter, and Mr. Toombs, U. S. Senator, were among the passengers by the Atlantic.

Miscellaneous News Items.

PROGRESS OF THE FEVER IN NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH.—A correspondent of the Petersburg Express of the 11th says:

There have been, in all, about 900 yellow fever deaths in Norfolk. The undertaker buried 135 last week.

From ten to twelve cases of small pox are reported to have occurred in Norfolk last week.

The aspect of affairs in Norfolk is said to be truly heart rending. It is believed on all hands, that every man, woman and child in the place will be taken down before the tide of disease is completely arrested.

At Portsmouth, on Friday, there were 22 deaths up to 6 o'clock, and 50 new cases. Sunday one report. On Saturday, up to 12 o'clock, there were 8 deaths in the city and 7 in the Naval Hospital. Ex-Mayor Stokes told a gentleman on Saturday morning, that the panic was greater than at any previous period of the epidemic. The disease is spreading to the surrounding country.

The Express publishes the following telegraphic dispatch:

WELDON, Monday, 8 o'clock P. M.—The Seaboard train is in, bringing passengers from the lower district.

Mr. Thomas Rollins, son of Richard Riddick, reported to be dead at Suffolk, Va., died at that town early this morning of yellow fever. He had not been into either of the infected cities since sometime anterior to the appearance of the fever.

The town has been dreadfully alarmed with reliefs ever since the appearance of the fever in Norfolk and Portsmouth, and the death of Mr. Riddick has produced the most terrific consternation and alarm. The citizens and visitors are flying in every direction.

The train on the Seaboard and Roanoke Railroad came in to-day appropriately draped in mourning, as a token of respect to the memory of their recently departed President, Wm. Dobbins, Esq., who died of yellow fever on Saturday afternoon last, as stated in yesterday's Express.

There are 18 miles now here

Agricultural.

A PLEA FOR HORSES.

We have a word to offer to our farming friends who employ horses as their chief draught animals. The horse, of all animals, is one of the most sensitive to sudden changes of temperature, and to impure air or want of cleanliness. We speak from observation, when we say that not half the stables in the country are, at this season, kept in a fit condition to be occupied by horses, even while put in an hour for the noon feeding.

The droppings of horses, both liquid and solid, are among the most quickly fermenting, easily decomposed manures. In warm weather the work of decay commences immediately, and in a very few days one-half or more of the weight goes off in a gaseous form. This keeps the air constantly loaded with noxious, unhealthy matters, which are just as deleterious to the health and vigor of horses as those of men. During the busy season of harvest and seeding, cleaning stables is generally ever attended to regularly. Then animals generally occupy them a short time in the morning, at noon, and perhaps in the evening for grazing, but the stables lie untouched for days or weeks—we have seen them so that for months. The horse is tied up for an hour's feeding and rest in the heat of the day, but instead of standing in a cool, sweet ventilated stable, ten chances to one, he stands sweating and panting, with scarcely a breath of air which is not literally loaded with the fumes of his own decaying excrements, and he goes forth tired and debilitated instead of refreshed, to undergo the severe toils of drawing the plough during the sultry hours of the afternoon.

The remedy for this is very simple. If the stalls do not have a free circulation of air, let a board or two be knocked off in front or on the sides at the head of the stalls; they can be easily replaced when cold weather comes on. Let some such plan be adopted and in every case let the stables be made as cool and airy as possible.

Let all excrements, however small in quantity, be removed at least once a day, and by all means keep the floor well sprinkled with some deodorizing material. A weak solution of sulphuric or muriatic acid is excellent for this purpose; but these are often inconvenient and troublesome, even if readily obtained. Plaster of Paris, Gypsum or sulphate of lime, is very good; common salt is also good. Each of these substances increases the value of the manure more than it costs. Dry straw and muck are also very valuable for the same reason.

We have frequently known lime and ashes recommended for this, but these rapidly decompose the manure, and greatly diminish its value for applying the crops, and they should never be used unless with muck, or with long manure which is to be immediately covered in the soil. These may seem trifling considerations, but they are really of great importance.

As before stated, horses take cold very easily. On this account they should never be turned from a warm stall, where they have prospered for an hour, directly into a wet, bleak pasture. A horse should never be compelled to lie down over night in a wet, unsheltered pasture. Let them always have a dry plot, or what is better, a shed or stable to retire to when they have completed their evening's grazing, especially if there be heavy dews, fogs or rain. A horse will never lie in an open field when a sheltered spot is accessible. Every one must have observed that they always seek the driest spot to be found, and generally lie near a fence, shed or tree.—N. Y. Times.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING.—The following singular case of death by lightning is reported in the Brantford (C. W.) Chronicle. The wife of Mr. John Currie, farmer, on the 18th concession of West Gwillimbury, was on last Thursday killed by lightning. She had gone out to milk in a field near the house; her daughter and servant man were going with her, the latter to hold a wild heifer while being milked. On looking out and seeing it likely to be wet, they returned back, the daughter to throw a shawl over her, and the man to put on his coat. This was the work of a moment, and the daughter having hastily thrown over her shoulders a man's coat, she was stepping out of the house, when a volume of flame rushed toward her, which was accompanied by a most tremendous peal of thunder. Fearing for her mother's safety, the daughter sprang towards where she had last seen her. Here she met a great body of smoke, and saw her mother prostrate in the midst of it, her clothes on fire, and her body lifeless. On going out Mrs. Currie had two milk-pails, one tin and the other wood. The rim of the tin pail was cut in two by the electric fluid, and two holes were made in the bottom of the wooden one as if perforated with a rifle-shot. Her cap was on the same distance from the body, and her shoes a considerable distance apart, and several rods from where she lay. The soles of her shoes were torn from the uppers; the hair of the head and the trunk of the body were greatly singed and burnt, but no appearance of bruise or broken bones. Within a radius of six feet the ground where she fell was perforated in six places, all obliquely, as if by grape shot. An inquest was held on the body, and a verdict returned that the deceased came to her death by being struck with lightning.

A DANGEROUS ANIMAL.—The Montgomery (Ala.) Mail, of Monday last, has the following account of a ferocious attack by a wild cat:

We learn that on an evening of last week some alarm was excited at the plantation of Mrs McCullough, in the lower part of this county, by the onslaught of a ferocious wild cat on some of the people. It seems that the cat sprang suddenly on the back of a woman, tearing her neck and shoulders with its teeth. After much effort it was beaten off by the negroes, and escaped itself. It was appeased by them, in the gloom, to be a mad dog. The overseer, who had been ill, came out and sent the negroes with the dogs to take its track, supposing it had gone to the woods. On returning to his house, he was suddenly attacked by the animal in the same way, and after a long struggle was thrown down. He continued to fight him until the negroes and dogs came up and dispatched the beast, which was found to be a wild cat of the short tail species, and of large size. The animal was a cub, undoubtedly having whelped but a short time previous, and was much famished in appearance, which may account for her unusual ferocity. The overseer was much hurt, having been stabbed in about seventy places.

CANAL.—It is proposed to construct a canal from that portion of Lake known as the Georgian Bay, (in reality an arm of Lake Huron, though distinguished by a separate name,) to Lake Ontario at Toronto or by extending the mouth our readers will see that there is a chain of small lakes almost connecting Huron and Ontario, and we believe it is intended to lock the river Severn, which runs into Lake Simcoe with Lake Huron to the Simcoe lake, and from its most southern extremity cut across the country to Toronto. Should this project be carried out it will have a very powerful influence on the trade in the Upper Lakes, and almost set seriously upon Buffalo.

PARTING WORDS.

Forget not thy mother! she cherished thy youth,
And fenced thee with tenderness, fervor and truth;
She led thy weak footsteps with caution and care,
And taught thee to lisp forth thy first morning prayer.

Forget not thy mother! rest nights she kept,
And knelt by thy bedside to pray whilst thou slept;
When sickness was nigh, she set their stamps on thy brow,
And robb'd thy young face of its bright youthful glow.

Forget not thy mother! when far, far away,
She thought of her first-born by night and by day;
How her heart clung to thee thro' the lapse of long years,
When hope sweetly beam'd 'mid her bitterest tears.

Forget not thy mother! condemn not her deeds,
Let her heart be to thee a green spot free from weeds;
Though, her few Virtues, her frailties still hide,
And be thou the last one to doubt or deride.

Forget not thy mother! thy love should o'er be,
Like ocean's broad billows unchecked and free;
In life's busy moments, or death's darker hour,
Let thoughts of thy mother, all others o'erpower.

Forget not thy mother! unkindness unfeigned
A wound made by those too long open would keep;
And remorse, tho' she heals'd her balm drops to pour,
Could but half heal the bosom all sadden'd and sore.

Be kind to thy mother! let gentle words fall,
Ingratitude's seed-bath its wormwood and gall;
But love blent with duty, rich blessings impart,
And gilds each recess of the desolate heart!

Extracts Jotted Down from Letters of Sydney Smith

"One evil of old age is, that as your time has come, you think every little illness is the beginning of the end." "When a man expects to be arrested, every knock at the door is an alarm;" and again, he says, "Among the evils of getting old, one is, that every little illness may probably be the last. You feel like a delinquent who knows that the constable is looking out after him."

"Very high and very low temperature extinguishes all human sympathy and relations. It is impossible to feel affection beyond 98 deg. or below 32 deg. of Fahrenheit; human nature is too solid or too liquid beyond these limits."

"Quite well," I find, at 67, means about 12 or 14 different ailments."

"If you want to get a place for a relation, you must not delay it till he is born, but make an application for him in utero."

"The curses of Glasgow are itch, punch, cotton and metaphysics."

"Mrs. ——, who, as a literary woman, might be ugly if she chose, but is as decidedly handsome as if she were profoundly ignorant."

Of railroads he says: "Before this invention, man, richly endowed with gifts of mind and body, was deficient in locomotive powers. He could only walk four miles an hour, while a wild goose could fly eighty in the same time."

Of bad spirits he says: "Is Dives not occasionally affected by the Lazaro-phobia?"

"The only consequences of a University education are the growth of vice and a waste of money."

"Our birds, presuming on a few fine days, are beginning to make young birds, and the roots to make young flowers. Very rash!"

"Will you come to a philosophical breakfast on Saturday—10 o'clock precisely? Nothing taken for granted; everything (except the 30 articles) called in question—real philosophers! P. S.—My carriage shall call for you to-morrow at a quarter past 10, at Mrs ——, whence we will proceed to that scene of simplicity, truth and nature—a London rout."

Of goat he says:

"Opium, a glass of champagne, excess in joy, access in grief—any crime, however small—is sufficient for redness, swelling, spasms and large shoes."

Of himself and wife he says:

"We are both tolerably well, bnging out like old houses, but with no immediate intention of tumbling down."

The Scotch "are not to be believed on their oath, where the climate of Scotland is concerned."

"It seems necessary that great people should die with some sonorous and quotable saying. Mr. Pitt said something not intelligible in his last moments. G Rose made it out to be, 'Save my country, Heaven!' The nurse, on being interrogated, said that he asked for barley water."

On inheriting £30,000 from a brother, he says: "After buying into the Consols and the deduced, I read Seneca 'On the Contempt of Wealth!' What intolerable nonsense!"

"Your charming wife, I am sure, would bring any plant in the garden into full flower, by looking at it and smiling upon it. Try the experiment from mere curiosity."

His daughter, Lady Holland, and her children, being with him, he writes: "My house, as I tell my daughter, is as full of Hollands as a gin shop."

"Tell me how to dress the herrings; but, perhaps I mistake, and they are to be eaten naked."

"By deaths and marriages the world is thinned since we met."

"I am literally well, but intalerably old."

"As I never return books, I make a rule never to borrow them."

In one of his last letters he wrote: "If you hear of sixteen or eighteen pounds of human flesh, they belong to me. I look as if a curate had been taken out of me."

"Lucy, dear child, mind your arithmetic. You know in the first sum of yours that I ever saw there was a mistake. You had carried two, (as a cab is licensed to do) and you ought, dear Lucy, to have carried but one. Is this a trifle? What would life be without arithmetic but a scene of horrors?"

REMITTANCES FROM AMERICA.—If the emigration drain from Ireland to the United States is being gradually diminished, as no doubt it is, the influx into Ireland of American money, earned by Irish hands, is steadily on the increase. Just take a few figures in illustration of this statement. The number who left Ireland for all parts of the States, British America, and Australia, in the year 1853, was 192 009; whereas the number who left Ireland in the year 1854, did not exceed 15 ,209. Of these 111,095 emigrated to the United States, 22,909 to British America, and 16,202 to Australia. In 1853 the amount of money sent home by Irish emigrants to their relatives in Ireland, for payment of passages as well as for various other purposes, was $1,439 000; but in 1854 that amount, vast and wonderful as it was, was far exceeded, it having reached to £1,730,000, or nearly £300 000 over that of the previous year. In the history of the world there is nothing like this amazing proof of the strength and intensity of the feeling of affection and family attachment which has ever distinguished and adorned the calumniated Irish race.

THE BEST THING OUT.—An ex-commission merchant, repentant for past transactions, says he once sent the following "returns" for a crop of corn consigned him:

"Mr. Brown—Sir: I have, according to your instruction, made a forced sale of your corn, and received for it, against which I have commission—

For Bostage	$125 00
Cartage	12 00
Wheelage	12 50
Sarcage	90 00
Rakers	3? 00
Salage	43 00
Total	$314 50
Leaving as you perceive, a balance in your favor of	$160 50

You can draw upon me for that amn. Trusting you will honor me with still further consignments,

I remain, sir, yours sincerely,
SAM SWINTON."

By the next mail Mr. Brown sent back the account, with three words at the botium:

"Yun-infernal villain! put in "stealage," and keep the whole of it."

A writer in Notes and Queries states that the good old beique Will Iam and Ann, built in London in the year 1759, which vessel actually conveyed General Wolfe at the time of the siege of Quebec, is now in existence, and is classed in Lloyd's register book as A. No 1, (second class,) and yet is almost a century old.

TALL TRAVELING.—The express train on the Great Miami (Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton) Railroad, with the engine, "L H Meeches," made the run from Dayton depot to Cincinnati depot, on Saturday, 25th ult., in one hour and twenty-two minutes, with five cars, making four stops, and reducing speed through the corporate limits of the villages on the route. Distance, sixty miles; running time, "a mile a minute."

Later from Texas and the Rio Grande

By the arrival on Saturday of the steamship Nautilus we have dates from Brazos Santiago to the 10th and from Galveston to the 13th inst.

The Flag states that an organized band of thieves and burglars exists in Brownsville, and many daring depredations have recently been committed.

Gen. Vidauri holds the supreme power in Northern Mexico. At San Luis Potosi he arrested Gens. Gutian and Parrodi, and proclaimed the plan of Monterey; which is popular with the people, as it places the government in the hands of civilians.

A Brownsville Flag extra, of the 4th inst., relates the following affair:

The latest news we have of the revolution on this frontier is, that on the 30th ult., a battle was fought between the Federals, commanded by Guadalupe Garcia and Miguel Tijerina, and a detachment composed of one hundred and forty government troops, under the command of Pedro Quintero, who was mortally wounded, and has since died; his command was surrounded, when they surrendered, having lost some thirty or forty in killed and wounded. The Federals had ten killed and seven wounded; the action took place in the vicinity of Reynosa. Among the prisoners taken were several officers, who formerly belonged to the Federals, but had deserted from them after they had come in possession of the necessary information, which Woll was anxious to possess. They were immediately tried as spies and ordered to be shot.

Gen. Woll left Matamoras on the 8th or 9th, stating to his friends that he would not acknowledge the new Government, and could not remain any longer. He turned over the command to Gen Castero, who, it is supposed, would pronounce in favor of the plan of Ayutla at once. He has about 1 800 men under his command.

On the 4th, Gen. Woll published a manifesto to his troops, announcing the resignation of Santa Anna, and stating that they would obey the orders of any Government which might be formed by the nation. He was escorted from Brownsville to Point Isabel by ten U. S. Dragoons under command of Lieut. Pelouze.

We find not much of interest in the Texas papers. The Galveston News has the following paragraphs:

The health of this city continues good. No cases of yellow fever have occurred among our population thus far. The weather has been somewhat stormy. Last night the wind increased to a gale, but it soon moderated.

A letter has been received this morning by Col Lacey from the President of the Galveston, Houston and Henderson Railroad Company, stating that the iron for laying twenty miles of the road has been purchased from Corder, Goode & Co., of London, and part of it has already been shipped.

Professor Forshey has made arrangements to establish a Military Institute in Texas.

The Indians continue to commit depredations. A letter in the Civilian from the Upper Guadalupe has the following:

The Indian depredations in our neighborhood seem to be bolder than ever. Yesterday two gentlemen from Curry's Creek came to my house stating that the Indians had stolen Mr Hodges' horses just about the time they were eating breakfast. Mr. Hodges pursued the Indians, and came close up with them about the time they crossed the Guadalupe river. He fired at the Indians, but without much effect, when the Indians broke for the bushes. Mr Hodges and his party recaptured some horses which the Indians had stolen at some place unknown as yet. They got off with Mr. Hodges' horses. The two gentlemen went to the camp of Capt Callahan to get help to pursue these savages. Capt Callahan, with his company of Rangers, re stationed some fifteen miles up the Guadalupe river. He is doing everything in his power to keep these robbers away from our borders, and should his company be continued, we would feel perfectly safe. Lieutenant Kyle and a party of Captain Callahan's men, had a fight with the Indian's on Johnson's Creek, near Fort Terrett road. They killed one Indian and captured all the animals the Indians had. The Indians were Comanches. Articles found in their camp proved that they had killed some white persons. About San Antonio, not more than twelve miles from the city, the Indians stole several large cavalladoe, part of which were retaken again. There is scarcely a day but we hear of some mischief by Indians.

The Austin Times, of the 6th, says:

A party of Indians made a descent upon a settlement on the Upper Blanco. They killed Mr Montgomery's cattle—stole his horses and those of his neighbors. The people are calling for help. Tom McKinney, with others, left on Friday for the scene of depredation. The Indians are supposed to have gone in the direction of Fredericksburg. Montgomery's settlement is only about twenty-five miles from Austin.

The Austin Gazette says:

News reaching the capital that hostile Indians were within four miles of San Antonio, and that several murders had been committed on the upper Cibolo, Gov Pease immediately left our city for San Antonio, with the object of requesting Gen. Persifor F. Smith to receive immediately into service such number of companies of rangers as may be necessary to protect the lives and property of our people on the frontier.

Our paper goes to press before the arrival of the San Antonio mail, bringing us an account of the result of the Governor's visit to Gen Smith. The Governor had already given authority to raise one company of volunteers, and it is organized and in the field. With a hearty co-operation on the part of Gen. Smith, the country may now be saved from much loss of blood and treasure.

The San Antonio Texan says of the marauding parties of Indians, who are plundering the settlements in the west, that with six hours start they defy pursuit, and escape beyond the Rio Grande.

The Columbia Democrat mentions continued rains, but says that the worm has not as yet commenced its ravages very generally. In some places it has not yet appeared. In others the worms are yet few in numbers. It is supposed that the "second crop" will be more extensive. Cotton is opening finely. Cane is doing well, though on Gulf Prairis they have had too much rain.

The Victoria Advocate says it learns from an authentic source that Harris & Morgan, anxious to meet the views of the people of Texas, propose this fall to form the whole of their ships on this Gulf, into a joint stock company, thereby doing away with that odious feature of monopoly so much complained of, and give the public an opportunity of participating in those "enormous profits" they have so long coveted, if such is the case, there will be now no necessity of asking the Legislature to form an opposition line.

The Seguin Mercury states that an unusual quantity of rain had fallen during the previous week. The streets were covered with water, and several cellars were flooded and goods damaged. Fences, and buildings of concrete which were in process of construction, were injured. They had been put up too quickly, the lower layers not having had time to dry thoroughly. Three horses, belonging to the Western stage company, were drowned in a creek between San Marcos and Austin, which, usually, has no water in it.

It is stated that Carrajal is at the ranche of his brother, in Bexar county.

SNAKE ADVENTURE.—Captain Franklin Methews, of this town, while in the woods a few days ago, had a large snake wind himself around his leg—the creature's tail being wound around a tree—and looking with very scrutinizing glances into Capt M's face, in a style of inflimacy not particularly pleasing. Capt M made several ineffectual efforts to disengage his membership, and finally cut him with an axe on his back, when he released his hold, but made another spring at Capt. M., who parried his attack, and finally drove him into the bushes. He was thought to be ten feet long, of a black and yellow color. [Yarmouth Register.

Louisiana.

The Caddo Gazette, of the 8th, has the following:

The weather during the last week has been variable, alternating between all the extremes incident to summer changes, and in the early part of the week was blustering and cool enough for autumn. At the present writing it is dry, close sultry and oppressively hot.

The river rose at this place during the week twenty-six inches; it is now at a stand here, but is falling above; at Harrisons Bluff it has fallen eight inches.

The Gazette says that the low stage of water in Red River has proved an effectual quarantine for Shreveport.

The Franklin Planters' Banner, of Thursday last, says:

A meeting of the sugar planters of the parish of St. Landry is called for Saturday next, in the town of Opelousas, having for its object to devise ways and means for removing the sugar market from the levee at New Orleans to the opposite side of the river. The principal reason assigned for wishing this change, is, that the present sugar platform is too small to suit the steadily increasing demand of this agricultural interest, owing to which all sugar deposited there has either to be sold within thirty-six hours, or warehoused at the expense of the planter.

A correspondent of the Banner, writing from Pattersonville under date of the 10th, states that the yellow fever was increasing in that place, and that five deaths had occurred within a few days.

The Lake Providence Herald of the 8th says:

The yellow fever has made its appearance in our town, and in a most fearful form. Business is almost entirely suspended, and there are but very few citizens remaining who have not had the disease before. Two deaths only have occurred, that of Mr. Goodman and his wife. Mr. Goodman's child is very sick of the fever. There has occurred no new cases up to this time, Saturday morning.

The Plaquemine Sentinel of Saturday last, says:

As a faithful chronologist, we are pained to say that there have been several cases of fever in our town and vicinity since our last issue, and some two or three deaths. At the present moment of writing, there are two or three cases very low, in and near our town.

The Clinton (Feliciana) Democrat of Saturday, has the following paragraphs:

Our town still remains healthy. Many of our absentees have returned, rather prematurely, we think. It would have been more prudent on their part, had they postponed their return a few weeks later.

We learn from Mr. Joh Rowly, who resides six miles east of this, that the army worm has made its appearance among his cotton. He has been noticing it for some days past, and is assured that they are the real worm.

The Concordia Intelligencer of Friday mentions a rumor prevailing in that place, that Francis Hartgraves, one of the men who murdered Jackson in Catahoula parish, has been arrested somewhere in the North. The Intelligencer has the following:

In addition to the rot now so prevalent in all the cotton fields of our section of country, we have to add that immense swarms of caterpillars have invaded many plantations. It seems that a variety of obstacles are combined at the same time to prevent our planters making a full crop.

The Mansfield (De Soto) Times comes to us in mourning for the loss of its editor, Mr. Andrew S. Flowers. The Times says:

The melancholy news we received about ten days ago, of the death of the editor and proprietor of the Mansfield Times, was unhappily too true. Mr Flowers died about two weeks ago, at the mouth of Red River, of yellow fever. He had gone to New Orleans with the view of purchasing printing materials, where, we presume, he contracted the disease. He was taken sick on his way up the Mississippi, and had partially recovered, but relapsed, and died on the wharf-boat at the mouth of Red River.

The Calcasieu Press speaks in the following terms of the recent wind and rainstorm which prevailed in that region:

On Friday night, 31st ult., a violent storm of wind and rain swept over a great portion of this parish, uprooting and demolishing houses, blowing down trees and fencing, and doing great damage to the crops. We are happy to learn, however, that this gale was not so severe at many places beyond the limits of this parish.

Heavy rains have fallen since, and swelled the bayous and rivulets far over their banks.

For some days, by way of relief, hordes of the most gigantic, malignant, and uncompromising mosquitos, of the Shanghae tribe, have been preying upon us.

THE FEVER AT CANTON, MISS.—We are indebted to a highly esteemed friend for the following particulars of the state of the fever in the beautiful and heretofore healthy town of Canton, in our sister State. The information was contained in a telegraph dispatch dated yesterday: Present population, 388; total cases of fever, 107; deaths, 29; sick and convalescing, 78; new cases in the twenty-four hours, 13. The nurses were all busy and the sick doing well.

THE WHISKY REMEDY.—The Point Pleasant (Va.) Republican states that a colored boy, belonging to Mr. David Long, of Mason county, Va., was lately bitten near the knee joint by a copperhead snake. The leg immediately become swollen, and thereupon nearly half a gallon of whisky was poured down the boy's throat, producing no intoxicating effect, but he soon recovered from the effects of the bite.

☞ The prevalence of incorrect notions upon the subject of Medicine is a great cause of misery. Medical practice should not be governed by principles cautiously deduced from the contributions of four experiments and close observations. How important, then, that not medicine should be taken by invalids unless it emanates from the hands of men of talent, judgment, and the strictest probity. Hoofland's German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, Philadelphia, is a preparation emanating from one of the most celebrated practitioners of modern times, and one of the greatest medical writers Germany ever produced. This article is now in able hands, as evidence that the article is prepared carefully, and skillfully, it is producing the effect the original inventor intended. It is used by many of the leading practitioners of Philadelphia in cases of debility of the digestive organs and biliary apparatus, and the diseases arising therefrom. We therefore recommend this medicine to suffering invalids. See advertisement of

We invite the special attention of parents and guardians to the advantages here offered to young men desirous of a liberal collegiate or business education. The location of the college in a quiet valley, ten miles from a town—the freedom, consequently, from temptation to vice—the full and thorough course of study—the superiorness and ability of the Faculty—the wholesome discipline—the facilities for lectures afforded by ample apparatus, libraries and cabinets, and, withal, the cheapness of terms and healthfulness of position, cannot fail to secure to this college, as heretofore, a liberal patronage.

THE HORNS OF THE CRESCENT.

Wrinkle No. 3.

For those who have nothing better to do, the changes which come over the current meaning of words would form an interesting study. The right of the world to change ideal signs from old to new significations cannot be questioned safely in such an age as this, when baby rights, and woman's rights, and all sorts of rights, are made prominent subjects of discussion and popular vindication. We take it that temperance used to mean moderation in all things; and when used specifically, moderation in that particular thing. The word has now another application. A specific phase has appropriated it to itself and brought about a conventional monopoly of its use. Temperance refers to drink—its sound and significance are purely liquid. The word does not lead our thoughts, as of yore, to continence, frugality, economy. Rather it sets the imagination running upon hills clad with clustering vines, malt, breweries, bar-rooms, the wine sparkling tumbler, the red-eyed bottle and the jolly tippler. A modern dictionary would define total abstinence as its synonym. As everything must be reduced to an ism, our English friends over the water have nicked the word temperance" into euphonious "teetotalism." In putting our pen to this wrinkle, we have thus defined, lest it should be thought that in this matter we have rejected the action of modern progress and presumptuously adhered to bible English and Webster's authority.

Washingtonianism came to the Crescent City. Ten years ago we saw the last vestige of it embodied in a gold lettered sign, somewhere on St. Charles street. This society was an exotic from the green-house in the first place, but at this time, like many other horticultural transplants, it had withered. The letters of gold, in a blue ground, were there, but the Washingtonian organization had ceased to be. The pledge system had its organizations still. There were a number of faithful temperance men who continued to live and advocate its principles. Somewhere about 1840-'45 the old temperance societies were astir. The cause then numbered several eloquent defenders, and Lafayette square was sometimes thronged with clamorous hosts, who were swayed by the clarion tones and sonorous appeals. It was in these days that Gen. Sam Houston addressed a large and enthusiastic audience from the pulpit of old Poydras Church. All night the ton and beauty and might of the Crescent were there. Prominent among the City Fathers who listened was the late Recorder Jarvis Peters, and others of like eminence and influence. The Texas Senator signed the pledge around, and many fair hands with "huge paws" mingled their autographs on the same scroll. During the period our history now traverses, the "Louisiana State Temperance Society" was organized. New Orleans was its center, whence it threw out auxiliaries in the different towns and parishes. It numbered amongst its members several of the high officials of the city and State, and flourished for a while. In 1846 we attended a public meeting of this society in the room of the "Young Men's Literary and Lyceum Association," in Exchange Buildings, near the Post Office. This meeting was called for the special purpose of reviving and reorganizing the almost defunct but still pretentious "Louisiana State Temperance Society." Our old and venerable citizen, Alfred Hennen, occupied the chair. Men of distinction were there—an ex-Governor or two, we are sure. Some of the best speaking talent was on the floor. The lesser matters were soon disposed of, and the "Nebraska Bill" of the evening came up: "Whether the partial or total abstinence platform should be adopted?" ..., a thick, round, well-favored person, advocated the partial abstinence, which he attempted to prove, from Scripture and other authorities, to be "temperance proper." Mr., a tall, thin, erect man, with a graceful young aloak depending from his shoulders, was the champion of total abstinence. The question had thus to make its way through thick and thin, and was finally laid on the table. Nothing has been heard of the society since that evening. This question and its other records are now buried in oblivious past.

Afterwards came the "Sons of Temperance" and the "Daughters" as well, with the Temples of Honor. The palmy days of these organizations were from 1847 to 1850. They were, if we mistake not, as many as two flourishing Divisions, and a fair proportion of Templars. The advent of the latter brought about a temperance revival in the city. In those golden days their frequent enthusiastic gatherings, their banner presentations, and their long processions, with unsoiled standards and spotless regalia, were demonstrations of an earnest and stirring strength. Every night of the week one of the Divisions were at work, and hundreds, yea, thousands, must have been initiated to the order. In especial, the number of young men which entered the Divisions was large. It is noticeable that the Daughters of Temperance, as an order, never flourished greatly, even in the golden age. One Division had its existence in Algiers, and one held its meetings somewhere in the lower part of the city. Probably no others were organized.

Since these good and prosperous days temperance in New Orleans has declined in outward demonstration, if not in inward vitality. It has entered upon the silver age of its history. There are now four Divisions left; besides one of the "Cadets," under the persevering patronage and direction of that apostle of young temperance, Mr. P. H. Willard.

The Knights of Jericho have a fast hold still, and possibly the order of the Good Samaritans. Intemperance in this fair Crescent exhibits itself in a state of unmistakable progress. Our three thousand coffee-houses are multiplying monthly. The police reports reveal an equal, if not an increasing amount of crime and wretchedness from this source. Twice has the license question been carried to the ballot box, and the last was a greater defeat than the first. In the course of this decline Father Matthew has visited us, the Reform League, of eloquent and honorable endorsement, has lifted up its voice, and Dr. Harmon, our most enthusiastic champion, has battled with tongue and pen. His weekly quarto has come to us reeking from the press, ladened with the poetry, the argument, and the facts of this noble cause, until it threatens to bankrupt its editor, and to leave our temperance prospects worse than it found them.

In attempting to account for this apparent stand-still and regression, perhaps much is to be set down to the account of local circumstances, to peculiarities of population, and the unfriendly influences of climate and epidemics upon all social organizations. But this method of accounting for it is exhausted before it fulfils its mission. Temperance, in the sense of teetotalism, must be set down simply as a specific moral reform; and as such it will follow the law of all moral reforms. In obedience to this law it cannot permanently go beyond the moral and religious culture of the people amongst whom and the times in which it is advocated. Observe the Sabbath question in this city. It has kept pace with our moral and religious progress, and every attempt to push it beyond has proved a failure. By various and extraordinary efforts the temperance cause was advanced beyond the level of our moral and religious culture, and what we now witness is simply a return to that level beyond which it was pressed. There is, then, in this, no indication that the cause is either dying or dead, but it is the illustration of a law which holds good in all moral reforms. Before the advent of the temperance movement the world, and the Church, too, were further advanced in other respects than in this. Hence the habitual use of ardent spirits was tolerated in religious communions and considered respectable in society. This special reform has benefited the Church by bringing it up to itself in this particular; and it has benefited society by giving to temperance an equal, if not a superior position with its other moral and religious elements. The true and permanent advance of this principle is defined by the general moral and religious culture. This is the average water mark, from which it will rarely vary. For further success temperance depends upon moral and religious progress. These must go before and prepare the way, because they are those preparations of the soil without which it cannot take root. In taking a hasty survey of temperance in our city we would modestly suggest that it may have reached this barrier, and that it must patiently bide its time. It will still go on if wisely advocated, but proportionately and equally with other things.

Whilst we suppose that it cannot go beyond the boundary which this law establishes, there are causes which may keep it back and retard its possible development. We are perhaps in danger of losing sight of the true issue, and of allying and confounding it with what is incongruous. If it is rightly defined a special moral reform, its character must be kept in view. When science comes to its aid by demonstrating the always baneful effects of alcohol, it does not change its moral into scientific reform. When religion approves and endorses, it does not become the special and sole province of religion. And when social and political economy, with their tables of statistics, back the argument, it does not necessarily transform its moral to a political character. Temperance has derived great assistance from all of these, but it is distinct from them. We will venture the suggestion that it is not scientific, religious or political, nor are any of these capable of taking its place. It is a moral reform, and moral suasion is needed for its advancement. Whether, in the abstract, it loses or gains by being thrown into the political cauldron, with the thousand other discordant questions which bubble there, we are not called to determine. But certainly if this alliance relaxes the old mode of operation, if it causes us to lose sight of the pledge and of personal appeal and persuasion, we cannot but feel that the cause is lost. If temperance in New Orleans has suffered from this cause, it leads to no forebodings of its ultimate overthrow. It is here in its primitive purity, and we are hopeful for the future.

SELF-ABANDONMENT.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass."—Psalms 37:5.

There is a passage in the life of Napoleon which illustrates the spirit of self-abandonment required in this verse. It occurred while Marshal Murat was Commander-in-Chief of the army in Spain. Murat was ambitious. He desired to place the crown of the Spanish monarchy on his own brow, and was beginning to adopt his policy to his desire. Napoleon detected his aim; but having other intentions concerning the crown of Spain, he wrote to Murat, saying, "I will attend to your private interests; have no thought of them." It was the Emperor's wish to have the Marshal devote himself exclusively to the rigid execution of his orders, to rely so confidently on his royal master's disposition to secure his personal interests as to exclude all feverish thought of them. It was Murat's part to obey, Napoleon's to reward.

It is a corresponding abandonment of all his concerns to God that the good Psalmist exhorts in the above strain. As Murat was required to leave the care of his private interests to Napoleon, so the good man is directed to leave his in the hands of Jehovah. Commit thy way unto the Lord!—that is, by a solemn act, repeated until it becomes a fixed habit of the mind, ; commit all thy concerns, temporal and eternal, to the care, direction and protection of thy Father in Heaven. Place thy property, health, life, reputation—thy family, friends, enemies—thy body and soul, in his hands, to be preserved, blessed, afflicted, restrained or saved, as thy need may require, as his wisdom may choose. Keep nothing from him. Renounce all self reliance. Abandon thyself wholly and forever to his care; yes, commit thy way unto the Lord.

Having thus by specific acts of the will expressed in fervent prayer, learned to commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him—that is, rest assured that, as your faithful friend, he will keep what you commit to him. Be persuaded that so long as you make it your chief and only business to do his will, he will make it his to attend to your welfare, to environ you with his almighty arms, to lead you in safety along the dangerous highway of life, to protect you from the enmity of your adversaries, and conduct you as a conqueror, aye, and more than a conqueror, into the realms of glory. With such a trust abiding in you, your safety becomes a certainty, for "He shall bring it to pass"—he will surely fulfill his promises.

Such is the instructive import of this delightful verse. Of its practice the life of the Psalmist affords no mean illustration. Never had mortal severer need of the high trust it exacts than he, particularly during the time which elapsed between his anointing by Samuel and his crowning at Hebron. Through that period outward events seemed to war against his ascent to the throne, for which he had been so solemnly set apart. The obscurity of his shepherd life, the malignant hatred of Saul, his wandering life when, as a hunted outlaw his home was with the wild beasts of the desert, his forced abode at Gath, were events which frowned in seeming defiance upon his elevation. But, although often disconsolate, David did not despair. The promise of God always stood stronger than brazen walls between his danger and his destruction. Committing his troubled way to God, he trusted, and God did bring his word to pass. The shepherd boy became King of Israel. The fugitive of Engedi's cave became lord of a palace on Mount Zion. The mock maniac of the court of Gath became the inspired minstrel of the Church of the living God. With such an example of faith on the part of the Psalmist, and faithfulness on the part of God, who can hesitate to commit himself to God? Who can choose to live in the unrest of doubt—in the fearfulness of the man whose trust is in himself? "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him and he shall bring it to pass."—Zion's Herald.

READING THE LINES.—Among the memorials presented to the recent Wesleyan Conference was one from Newcastle-on-Tyne, which prayed that the rule respecting the "giving out of hymns from the pulpit be repealed, in order to the reading of a stanzas at once." The Conference declined acceding to this request.

BAPTISMAL REGENERATION.—The London Christian Times enumerates thirteen instances of clergymen having been rejected by the Bishop of Exeter for not agreeing with baptismal regeneration.

WORSHIP AND INSTRUCTION.

The idea of worship (worth-ship) as homage due to God needs reinstating in our congregations. This part of the service is getting to be more bare, hurried over and disesteemed. The sermon too often smothers praise, restrains prayer, supercedes the reading of God's word in His house. The mere teacher or talker usurps the whole ground, or what he leaves unoccupied is only for taking breath.

We need not argue from the Scriptures on this point. Humanity itself cries out for worship. Even in advance of inspiration it exclaims, "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord." Instruction and worship are alike indispensable. But what is to be done in view of our too obvious neglect of the latter? Let not the two be rivals; we may not ask whether is greater. The doctrinal and devotional should both have place. Feelings are to be cultivated as well as opinions—cultivated in God's own appointed way.

The following extracts from a sermon of Dr. Adams, as given by the Vermont Chronicle, are good:

"The ordinary services of the sanctuary in our churches are included under two heads—worship and instruction. The former addressing itself to God, the latter to man. The prayer for worship, the sermon for persuasion, the hymns for the praise and glory of God. The Scripture lessons, mostly for instruction in righteousness, yet sometimes read by the minister and united in by the people as solemn acts of devotion. We would not bring worship and instruction into competition with each other. Between things so different how can there be a competent comparison? It is our design to make a few suggestions on the part of worship.

The instruction of the sanctuary is by no means to be underrated. Preaching is logically first; men need to be instructed. The devotion of ignorance is fanaticism. Let the sermon still be highly accounted of. Let it not dwindle into a brief, barren exhortation. Yet let us never forget that we are to pray and praise as well as to preach. 'My house shall be called the house of prayer.' 'Oh, come let us worship,' &c. We do not pay sufficient attention to the devotional part of our public services.

We choose our hymns not so much as wings for our devotion as for their adaptation to the subject of the discourse. The choir is requested to sing, as though they were entirely distinct, a part by themselves, and the interval is filled up by the minister, too often, by looking over his notes or gazing about upon the congregation. Like priest, like people. No one thinks of lifting his heart to God in singing. The only thought is of the music.

It is not the sermon exclusively that is to move my heart. In prayer I may be led to exclaim, 'I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear,' &c., and the hymn, may come up from the depths of a heart conscious of its own unworthiness. The sermon awakens practical resolves; in prayer, the man comes to God for forgiveness, and peace steals in upon his wounded spirit while he joins in that hymn,

'Show pity, Lord, O Lord, forgive.'

'There is a fountain filled with blood.'

There is not a grace which preaching would implant in the human heart that worship does not foster and strengthen; not an instruction to which praise and prayer do not contribute their proportion. The prayer should come down as the dew of Hermon. The sermon is the theory; prayer is the practice. Preaching fits us for Heaven: in praising, Heaven itself appears.

And yet, suppose a minister for once to omit the sermon. He gives out a hymn; he reads the 51st Psalm, 'Have mercy upon me, O God,' or the 103d, 'Bless the Lord, O my soul,' &c. He turns to the 5th of Romans; 'Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.' He unites with his people in another sacred song, and then, as the month of his congregation, he prays. He commends each family, each soul, to Him who is very gracious to save; and so dismisses the assembly. For how many would this be just no meeting at all? The devoted young Christian is engaged in a Sunday School. She must lose a part of the services of the sanctury. Which part shall it be? She will so arrange her school that she may be absent from the morning worship, and steal quietly into some retired seat during the singing before sermon. We can do our own praying; but not so with the preaching! The village doctor is called out just as the sermon is about to commence. He has lost the benefit of the sanctuary for that time. 'We hear that Rev. Dr. such an one is to preach in such a church.' 'One of the tutors to the college performed the introductory exercises.' 'Where shall you attend church to-day?' 'I think I shall go to hear Miss S.' 'I thought I should hear Dr. B.' 'Ah! the same church. He preaches where Miss S. sings. * * * *

In our zeal to avoid formality and hypocrisy we are in danger of losing the very spirit of worship. We are afraid to be churchy, lest we be accounted Puseyite. Because others idolize forms, we sometimes reject a decent propriety. We are a practical people, too practical almost to be Christian. * *

We ought to make more of worship—not only as an end, but as a means. Not that we should think of this while we worship, or make it the sole motive. Still, it is a means as well as an end. It may be made the means of attracting people in greater numbers to the house of God. It is a lamentable truth that not one-fifth part of our population are regular, faithful attendants upon the means of grace. What shall be done? Say to these men, come with us and let us worship God together.

Say not quite as much about preaching. They think they can do their own preaching. Let this be the chief idea—we come together to pay our duty to God. There is a power in this idea of worship as our first and most solemn duty to the Creator. Here is no question of profit and loss; not whether the preacher is eloquent or otherwise, or whether it will 'pay' to hear him; but—they must go to God's house to worship Him, whether the same 'pays' or not. Worship is itself the great end of preaching. Glory enough has our preaching achieved, when it has brought man to worship. What is religion in its purest, fullest bloom, but worship? Then are our lives acceptable God, when all our acts are nothing less than grateful homage to the Father, the Son and Spirit.

TWO COLLEGES AGAIN.

Mr. Editor—Although the question has been settled by the proper authorities and agreed to on all sides that we should have a college in South Alabama, and this institution, under happy auspices, has been already located at Greensboro', yet the location of a second institution, as recommended by the Board of Commissioners at Summerfield, is still a question, and will have to come before the next session of the Conference. As I had the honor to be the first who suggested the having of two colleges, through your paper, will you allow me to point to some of the reasons why the action of the Board on this subject should be sustained?

1. The action of the Board itself is a strong presumptive evidence in favor of the two. These able and intelligent gentlemen, representing alike the interests of all sections of the Conference, after thorough investigation of the subject, and with an eye to the good of the whole Church, took this step with great unanimity. Each rival place was willing to pay a compliment to the eligibility and liberality of the other, and thus an arrangement was effected the most satisfactory to both parties that could be hoped for, and as we believe the best calculated to promote the educational interests of the Church. The action of this body should then carry great weight in favor of the two colleges, to such place, and to the minds of the Conference.

2. The failure of Dr. Olin to endow the Wesleyan University, and of Bishop Pelroo to endow Emory College, and the partial failure that has been made in the cases of Randolph-Macon, LaGrange, &c., furnish a strong argument in favor of the two colleges. For these things show plainly that $217,000 would never have been raised in Alabama in so limited a space and time, had it not been for the magic influence of emulation. And we beg gentlemen to consider that, instead of having one central, noble and well endowed institution in Alabama, on their principle, that in all probability we should never have had any, had it not been for the idea of two colleges.

3. There are only two necessary conditions to a college which may properly be called successful, and these are—first, endowment; second, patronage.

We have seen what influence our plan of having two colleges has had in raising the former. So that each of these institutions may now be considered endowed, as well as the University of Virginia (unless more than 200 students are expected at each one.) And may we not reasonably expect that the same cause which led to their munificent endowment will cause them to be filled with pupils? If rivalry will make men donate theis money so freely, will it not also bring their sons into these ample halls? Methodist colleges have suffered vastly from a want of endowment, but never yet from a want of patronage. No colleges in the United States have educated so many students on the same endowment as the Methodists'. Let no one ask incredulously, where are they to come from, who knows the mighty resources of East and South Alabama, to say nothing of foreign patronage. We are certainly as well off for boys as we are for wealth, and we see our wealth is sufficient to endow. Are not our boys numerous enough to patronize?

HOPE AGAINST HOPE.

FEMALE EDUCATION.—Keep as much as possible in the grand and common road of life; patent educations or habits seldom succeed. Depend upon it, men set more value on the cultivated minds than on the accomplishments of women, which they are rarely able to appreciate. It is a common error—but it is an error—that literature unfits women for the business of every-day life. It is not so with men. You see those of the most cultivated minds constantly devoting their time and attention to the most homely objects. Literature gives a woman a real and proper weight in society, but they must use it with discretion. If the stocking is blue, the petticoat must be long, as my friend Jeffrey says. The want of this has furnished food for ridicule in all ages.—Sidney Smith.

LETTER FROM CADDO, LA.

Mr. Editor—Having just returned from church at Greenwood, I thought it would be nothing amiss to drop a line giving a sketch of the state of the work in Caddo. In doing this I insist the very brief, as the preacher will report all at Conference.

During the most part of last year (say from June until new year) everything worked well. The Church prospered at every point, and the preacher found a friend in all men. But this state of things seemed as if only created in part for a speedy change. For it so happened when circumstances called for a bold stand in behalf of Methodism, he was there. Nor was he found to be composed of any weak or wabbling substance. For when tested, he "knows no man after the flesh." This test was fairly made. For when the gamblers, drunkards and grocery keepers became bold and aggressive, he spared them not. And when one of the prominent members of the Church built a dancing saloon, and began the practice of giving public balls, the preacher promptly "called him to law;" and after the lawful proceedings in the case, all in good spirit, (the offender excepted,) on conviction he was dismembered. This, as is generally the case, produced bitterness, which, when affiliated with the dancing, drinking and gambling herd, seldom fails to strengthen wicked hands against the ministry and the Church.

And here permit me to say if the preachers would stand together as one man on this point of duty, the task would be an easy one and the heavy cross of reproach and slander would so divided and equalized among them as to make the burden a light one. Such is not the case, however; for from what I have seen on this circuit, but very few preachers are prompt in these matters. Indeed, from the uniform indifference and inattention of some preachers to discipline it is to be feared that there is some disaffection which causes a secret winking at these things, or that the cross of duty is too heavy for the poor man's nerve.

The result of all this is, many persons think of us we though we warred after the flesh; while worldly-minded, man-fearing, time-serving and money-loving members of the Church take license to drink liquor intemperately, and to attend and give public dancing parties, all with impunity, until some preacher comes along and takes hold of these things. Then he is met with the justifying plea, "I done so when Brother ——— was here, and he never said anything to me; and how did you get to be better than he?" This kind of a plea is handed round from one to another until a fire is kindled in the heart, and the tongue of slander is turned loose against the preacher for the unpardonable sin of doing his duty!

How very forcible and clear has Brother "Caughey" drawn the picture in his humorous witticism on this subject: "When you take hold of a tree and shake it, then look out for your head, for the dead limbs will be down upon it." But our preacher has a large, limy and rough sort of a head, and as the "dead limbs" had become quite rotten before the "tree" was shaken, he has suffered no injury, only in part, as above mentioned; and that part is the one already alluded to; and even these are his witnesses that he does not walk as they walk. But the work is progressing. The rise of forty souls, all told, have been added to the Church this year, and many others are earnestly inquiring for the "old paths and the right way."

The exclusive, selfish and proselyting spirit of the Baptists is here. Like the Episcopalians and Roman Catholics they unchurch the world by claiming to be the exclusive and only Church of Christ! Yet they all admit that God acknowledges the ministry and ordinances of the Presbyterian and the Methodist churches to the conversion of sinners and the final salvation of souls (a few exceptions.) And let me ask, if God acknowledges the ministry and ordinances of these churches to the conversion and final salvation of souls, why do they or any others oppose them? And if God sanction ordinances administered by these men, so far as to convert souls and take them home to Heaven, in the language of Gamaliel, I would suggest that these obtemperaneous pretenders "take heed to themselves what they intend to do, lest haply they be found even to fight against God."—Acts, 5: 35-39. At least, would it not be well for them to settle this title to exclusiveness among themselves before they venture to reject that which God has accepted?

But I am getting off the subject I proposed.

As you are aware, we have had no navigation for twelve months. This has cut us off from market, which makes everything very scarce—money, too. So the finances of the circuit are not so prosperous. But we will do what we can, and then rest easy under the conviction that God requires of us only according to what we have.

September, 1855. METHODIST.

FRENCH PERSECUTION.—Three Protestant preachers at Estrac, France, have been severally fined fifty, fifteen and ten francs, and costs, for worshipping with more than twenty persons, without an authorization from the civil power.

A BONAPARTE CARDINAL.—Prince Lucien Bonaparte, second son of Prince Charles, Prince de Canino, who has assumed the ecclesiastical profession, is to be named Cardinal and Grand Almoner to his cousin, the Emperor of the French. The young Prince, who is now twenty-one, had already declined accepting the Cardinal's hat, and declared that he had no ambition to be other than a simple abbe. He has only yielded out of obedience to the Pope.

Yellow Fever at Norfolk and Portsmouth.

In a letter of the 15th from Norfolk to the Petersburg Express we find the following:

The number of interments yesterday was 31, which compared with those for the past week, shows a decided decrease. Due two to consumption, only for the 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th, being 16, 20, 44 and 31—making 180 for the four days. This statement, however, is not owing to any improvement in the purity of the atmosphere, or cessation of the destructive attack of the pestilence, but is mainly the consequence of want of material on which to prey. There are few individuals here who are not sick or recovering from the fever, and those who have escaped are hourly anticipating a visit from the frightful scourge, and making preparations to meet and repel it.

The deaths from 9 o'clock yesterday to 9 o'clock to-day, as nearly as can be ascertained, have not exceeded 20.

The Express publishes the following telegraphic dispatch:

WELDON, Sept. 13, 11 o'clock P. M.—Mr. J. M. Jacobs, of the Woodis Hospital, Norfolk, left Norfolk this morning, and reached by the Seaboard train of cars. He reports one hundred and forty-nine deaths in Norfolk, from last Sabbath morning up to Tuesday.

A correspondent of the Richmond Dispatch, writing from Portsmouth under date of the 14th, says:

There were not more than ten deaths yesterday among us. I could not, after most diligent effort, find out more than six new cases. So far as my observation goes the disease is mending like as malignant. The physicians sustain me in my opinion on this point. It may be expected there will be alternations on the points—yet we trust the preponderating influence will be as the present.

FEVER IN PORTSMOUTH.—From a Portsmouth letter, of the 17th inst., to the Petersburg Express, we extract the following:

The damp and cloudy weather of the last three days has produced quite a number of new cases, and I fear an increased number of deaths towards the end of the week.

Our heaviest mortality has always been preceded some five or seven days by just such a spell of weather as we now have.

The number of deaths to-day amounted to eleven.

The destitution in our town is beyond description, and not only in it as in town, but the refugees in the woods, and the residents in the surrounding country are sadly in want of provisions; we are compelled every day to send cart loads of the necessaries of life for distribution to save them from starvation.

This state of things is particularly the case in the neighborhood where they are mostly reside; their business being entirely cut off, and as they produce no articles of provision, unless aid be extended them, they must die of famine.

Immense numbers of families are being daily supplied at our Relief Store; numbers go away empty, because it is impossible to wait on the crowds that throng the store.

The demands upon us for relief are now such as to call for additional contributions from our sympathizing friends far and wide!

Besides the provisions that are furnished at the Relief Store, there are daily a large number of physicians' orders for chickens, porter, wine, arrow root, etc., which are required for the sick, and those who are convalescing. Each order sent to the store calls for articles worth from three to five dollars.

Louisiana.

The Ouachita Register, of the 18th, has the following paragraph:

We feel grateful in being able to announce to our friends in the country that the health of Monroe still continues good. To the best of our knowledge there has not been a serious case of sickness in the place for the last two weeks, and but one citizen of the place has died during the summer and his death was occasioned more by old age than sickness.

The weather for the last week has been exceedingly unpleasant from the frequent showers and their accompanying pests—musquitoes. The same has also done considerable damage to the cotton. It is now reduced to a certainty that there will not be more than two-thirds of a crop throughout the Ouachita country.

The Ouachita is now in good boating order, but is falling rapidly again. The steamer Fulton passed down on Monday last, with a fair load of cotton.

The Advocate, published in Trinity, Catahoula parish, states that several cases of fever of a malignant character had occurred in that town, but whether yellow fever or not was uncertain.

The Opelousas Patriot, of Saturday last, has the following:

It is with great pleasure that we are enabled to report uninterrupted good health both here and in Washington, as also through the country generally. No case of yellow fever has occurred within the parish, and cases of other descriptions of fever are rare.

The present condition of the telegraph wires along the public roads through our parish, make them dangerous to travel, and calls loudly for their removal; and it is certainly the duty of the road overseer to look to it. The wire is down in many places, and lays stretched across the road, or in loose rolls in the road. Vehicles and horses are in constant danger of becoming entangled in the wire, and the latter of becoming frightened and running away. Indeed, we have already heard of several frights that horses have had, and in one instance where the horse ran away with a buggy, badly injuring the passengers, and breaking the vehicle to atoms.

SICKNESS IN CANTON, MISS.—By a telegraphic dispatch received by our townsman, Dr. J. S. Copes, from the Mayor of Canton, late last evening, we are informed that the sickness is still alarmingly on the increase. Mr. Drane, the Mayor, calls upon Dr. C. to come to Canton as soon as possible, and we understand that he will respond to this call of his friends and former fellow-citizens by leaving town on this evening's boat. His duties as city physician will be committed to eminent members of the profession, who will fulfil them during his absence.

MISSISSIPPI.—The Natchez Courier of Saturday states that there is very little fever in that town, only one fatal case having occurred within five days.

The Vicksburg papers of Thursday inform us that the fever was then increasing. The Whig publishes the following dispatch:

Canton, Sept 19.—The fever is on the increase. Two deaths occurred last night. Thirty new cases are reported to have broken out within the last forty-eight hours.

A bale of cotton took fire on the cars from Jackson to Vicksburg on Wednesday, and before the flames could be arrested two cars and about 75 bales were consumed.

The Mobile Advertiser of Sunday states that nine cases of yellow fever had been reported in that city during the week, five of which terminated fatally.

HYMN BOOKS AND DISCIPLINES.—These much called for books may now be had at 36 Camp street, of McGinnis, at catalogue prices; usual discount to preachers. Also other publications of the M. E Church South, at same rates. The Agents require the business of the New Orleans Depository to be conducted, for the present, on cash principles.

HEALTH AND WEATHER.—A shower on Wednesday; Monday and Tuesday the thermometer at midday ran high. Whether because their summer lodges were blown away, or on the assurance of better health, our population is fast returning. Fever disappearing; business alive; churches well attended.

TOO MUCH AND TOO LITTLE.—The correspondent who complains that his minister gives too much church time to singing and praying and reading, and too little to the "main performance," is respectfully directed, for our views on his grievance, to an article on first page—"Worship and Instruction."

NORFOLK.—We are glad to have to correct the report of the death of Rev. D. P. Wills. He recovered from the prevailing epidemic. Revs. Eskridge and Jones, of the Methodist Ministry; Chisolm, of the Protestant Episcopal; Bagnall, of the Baptist, have been added to the blessed dead who have died in the Lord, and at their pestilential post of duty.

Bishop Early, on his way to the Missouri Conference, spent last Sabbath in this city, and preached morning and evening service. He brings a good report from the Western Virginia Conference. A gratifying increase both in Ministry and Membership, and also cheering prospects for the future.

PREACHERS.—Preachers would do well to remember that the Discipline makes it their duty, in preparing their returns for the Annual Conference, "to take an exact account of the members in society in their respective circuits and stations, keeping the names of all local elders, deacons, preachers and probationers properly distinguished.

Unless all observe this rule, there will be confusion in making up the statistics of the Church. Heretofore the probationers have been returned with those in full membership. Hereafter they are to be kept separate, and so reported.

The Zion's Herald gives an account in a letter received from the Pacific Ocean, of a revival of religion on board a whale-ship. In the account, says the Herald, is one thing of unusual occurrence. "One man, we hopefully converted at the mast-head, looking out for whales."

THE QUARTERLIES AND MONTHLIES.—The London Quarterly for July gives to the literature of advertising—from the first "Ads." that appeared in the first "Mercuries," as newspapers were called, of the 16th century, to contemporaneous case by which the London Times took $30,000 in a week. The writer could have increased the interest and value of the article by working in the last catch, a la Barnum. He has not brought the subject full up to its advanced position. Quack medicines have ever been a chief staple.

The Edinburg Review, among other leading articles, gives the American reader valuable information on the contest between Rome and Sardinia. These republications by L. Scott are always sustained at the highest elevation of Review style. This a favorable time to subscribe.

HOURS CIRCLE.—No. VII. (July) is upon our table—at home. We must do as we would be done by—quit leading. Go and buy this permission. This is working the golden rule to the advantage of the publisher, whose right is first—and our neighborhood not complain.

HARPER'S MONTHLY OF THE SOUTH.—The first number of this most promising monthly is before us. Terms, $5. Published in Baton Rouge, La., James Francis Harris, editor and proprietor. Three capital engravings, one of Centenary College. If the future numbers sustain this one, it ought, and we think, will succeed.

We have at present no responsible official to look after our interests in China. Our Minister, Mr Ino Leas, has left for Perdu, and Mr Parker, Secretary of Legation, is "acting-envoy" pro tem." Meanwhile, our Consul at Shanghai, having failed in negotiating with the Chinese officials respecting certain items of American merchants' Commodore Abbot had despatched Captain McCleary, in the steamer Powhatan, to bring them to terms.

MR. EDITOR—I informed you in a former letter that we proposed making a tour through North Mississippi and West Tennessee, and would give you some items of our travels. We put the children in our large family carriage, and husband and I rode in a buggy. We would take with us a snack, consisting of good old ham, dried beef tongue, corn bread, and stop about 1 o'clock at a spring or well, get a pitcher of cool milk, sit under a good shade and eat; for dessert, luscious peaches or watermelons. This was enjoying life. How you city folks would have envied us such luxuries. My health improved wonderfully. The weather was exceedingly hot, roads rough and hilly, but the cool water and other luxuries rendered our traveling very pleasant. The country was mostly quite poor, until we reached Tennessee, but it was cheering to the Christian to see churches every eight or ten miles; some neat frame buildings, and others of comfortable hewn logs; and, judging from the grass and weeds all being trodden down about and around them, they seemed to be faithfully attended. And school-houses were met with equally as often.

I must here mention a fact, that in traveling a distance of at least four hundred miles I did not see a person who was drunk, or at all under the influence of liquor, except one candidate for Congress, in Mississippi; and I trust he may be beaten badly, for the sake of temperance.

Such crops of grain I never saw before; stalks of corn with three large ears. A gentleman said he had corn with five good ears—just the common corn. The land is greasing under the immense quantities grown this year. There was a fine prospect for cotton until the immense quantity of rain caused the rot, and some farms were seriously injured by the worm. Meal is now worth three bits a bushel, and a first rate article of flour can be had for two dollars a hundred.

And here, Mr. Editor, let me inform you, as I know you are very fond of fat turkeys, just make a visit next winter up to West Tennessee. I never saw such numbers of young ones. You may see, as you travel along the road, from twenty to thirty gangs a day, with some fifty or eighty in a drove. And if it is a specimen of the interior, I think it the greatest country in the world for Turkeys.

When we reached Tennessee we found the same bitterness of feeling existing with regard to politics among the gentlemen that we had seen in Alabama; but were truly glad to find that the ladies had not so far forgotten their sphere as to meddle in politics. In Alabama, they also attended a political meeting, and exhibited much more bitterness than their husbands. This state of affairs is truly to be lamented. God designed woman should fill a different sphere. She should guard the [illegible] whom He has committed to her [illegible] whenever she takes the place God designed men should fill, then the mother's place is forgotten, and the home for the husband and children is neglected and rendered unpleasant. Let man battle with the world, but oh! let woman make home such a place that husbands and sons can look to it with delight after the day's conflict with the world is over.

We found the model school in Somerville, under the control of Mr. Sloan and lady, (assisted by ten or twelve young ladies, all from Yankeedom,) in a very flourishing condition—over two hundred young ladies in attendance. I did not visit the school, but fear, from what I heard, the ornamental is pursued to the neglect of the solid. I do not object to the ornamental, but am a firm advocate for woman's being educated to fit her for usefulness in life.

The Franklin College of Holly Springs, now under the control of Rev. D. J. Allen, is a very flourishing school, than which no school has stood higher. Rev. S. G. Starks has heretofore been President, but he has retired, and they are needing a President. I learn the Rev. Dr. Wadsworth has been written to on that subject. I have also heard Dr. Deems spoken of, either of whom would certainly give character to the institution.

The Memphis and Charleston Railroad is going on rapidly. The part that is completed, about seventy miles out from Memphis, is certainly doing a fine business.

Since our return, LaGrange College, at Florence, has opened its second session, with brighter prospects than it ever knew, the whole of the twenty-five years it was on the old hill. There are now, on the fourth day, 141 students, and we know of many more who intend coming. We expect to have 175 this term. The Professorship of Mixed Mathematics is now vacant. The Professor who filled that chair "has married a wife in Talladega, and therefore he cannot come." He has been elected President of Talladega Female College. His chair here will be filled temporarily by the other officers until one can be gotten every way qualified to fill the chair, which the Trustees think will not be very long. The Faculty and students have begun in fine health and spirits, and are determined to know no such word as fail.

The Synodical Female Institute, under the O. S. Presbyterians, has now a full corps of teachers, Rev. J. L. Rodgers as President, and has bright prospects for a full and prosperous session. May great prosperity attend it. The very best and most Christian spirit exists between the two churches; long may it continue. The Methodist stationed preacher, Rev. W. G. Dorris, leaves in a few days for Conference. He has filled this pulpit for two years, is a fine preacher, and one of the best of men. His church parts with him with sincere regret. May he always find a home among people who love him as well as the Florentines. One of his flock, an aged and pious sister, who is now only waiting her summons, line often sat under the ministry of John Wesley. 'Tis said to be a treat to the Christian to visit and converse with her.

The College building is now going up rapidly, and will be a magnificent structure. You have doubtless learned that when the College was removed, four of the five Professors were old bachelors; but the prospects of the College brightened up so much after removal, that they felt as if they could take unto themselves wives, and three of them are now happily married, and the other lone one, spoken of by "Sumpter," has, I think, bright prospects. This of itself is enough to reconcile those who were most bitter against the propriety and wisdom of the measure.

You may hear from me again.

Florence, Ala., Sept. 18. FLORENTINE.

HOME CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON, LA., Sept., 1855.

Our fourth quarterly meeting, appointed for the first Sunday in September, was held at Olive Branch, a few miles in the country.

Most of our congregation who live in town had fled, and those who live in the country were afraid to attend church in town, so we removed the meeting into the country. It was protracted nine days, and resulted in the accession of forty-seven white persons to the church, and sixty-nine blacks. A large proportion of these, it is thought, were converted, together with several who had previously joined. The second Saturday of the meeting it was proposed should be given to the negroes, that they might come out and worship God. It was thought that this would be an acceptable offering to God of the Harvest for his abundant mercies. Quite a number of the planters sent out their negroes, and God blessed with the riches of his grace both them and their servants. Three months since we held a protracted meeting at this place and received sixty-five into the Church—making 112 whites and some hundred negroes gathered into the fold of Christ during the last three months. At the beginning of the year there was only one male and five or six females belonging to the Church, and the neighborhood was not thought to be peculiarly favorable to religious influences; but now there is scarcely one left out of the Church. They have organized and put into successful operation a large Sunday School, and a prayer meeting on Sunday evenings; and then the home religion, prayer in the family, and reading the N. O Advocate. Most of those who have joined are heads of families, and are the most substantial and reliable men in the country.

Our Presiding Elder, Brother Lusk, was on hand, faithful and full of labors throughout the meeting. Bros. Muse and Townsend, the whole time, and Bros. Millsaps and Green, a part of the time, rendered efficient service.

By the way of consolation, let me suggest to our planters that to allow their slaves during the leisure portion of the year to attend on week days the house of God, would no doubt be an exceedingly acceptable offering to Him, and one which our abundant mercies continued through every year, make but our reasonable service. If protracted meetings are most efficient means of converting whites, they must be alike so with the negroes; and if the masters desire their conversion, which they do if they are Christians, we think the value of the time would not be thought of. J. J. WHEAT.

E. BATON ROUGE CT., MISS. CONF., Sept. 21, 1855.

This circuit has been steadily improving during the year in numbers and in spirituality. About eighty persons have been added to the Church, some have been converted, and old members generally are revived and coming up to the help of the Lord.

It seems impossible for us on this circuit to get the assistance of ministerial brethren from other circuits, so that we have not the pleasure of saying that this or that brother preached for us one, or four, or six sermons. But we can say that this district is blessed with one of the most faithful of Presiding Elders, one so willing to labor in the altar as in the pulpit, one who proves a blessing wherever he goes.

On one occasion we had the pleasure of hearing the late Rev. T. H. Foster at Bethel, near the Springs. The sermon was a most impressive and useful one, established throughout by unanswerable argument. The Church and especially the Louisiana Conference, has lost a most valuable minister in his death.

On another occasion, at the same place, we met another member of your Conference, an old acquaintance, one of whose commencement in the ministry we knew—Brother Samuel Hawes; were pleased with his zeal and the great improvement he had made of his talent.

You will excuse my concluding this communication by a little reference to myself. I would say that I have never spent a more pleasant or agreeable year, so far, in my itinerant life, and I feel more than ever willing to "spend and be spent" in the glorious work of saving souls. THOMAS PRICE.

SHARON DIST., MISS. CONF., Sept. 19, 1855.

The Lord has graciously visited several of the different churches in this district. There have been gracious revivals on the Sharon, Philadelphia, Carthage, Starkeville and Attala Circuits, and also upon the Vernon Colored Mission.

Our 4th quarterly meeting for Carthage Circuit was a camp meeting, and we had a camp meeting also the third quarter for Attala Circuit. The latter began last Thursday, and was closed to day. I was compelled to leave Monday morning, in consequence of family affliction. Up to yesterday morning there were about thirty-five conversions, I learn. There has been an accession to the Church, within the last three or four months, in the bounds of the several charges named, of about 350 or 400 souls, most of whom, I believe, are happily converted. I have yet an almost entire round to make before Conference, and hope to see still better times. I have been hindered for about five weeks, in consequence of my son having accidently shot himself. His life was despaired of several times, but he is still spared, and we have some hope of his recovery. The yellow fever is still very bad at Canton. There have been some 24 or 25 deaths, and we learn this morning that there are about 70 patients under treatment. No case has originated here as yet. One was imported from Canton, an old lady, reported improving this morning. H. J. HARRIS.

Texana is situated near the head of navigation on Navidad river. Schooners and sloops can come here at all times, except when the river is very high, and why it does not increase like Houston, is something singular. A good back country to support it. Large stocks of cattle around it, also plenty of good land. It is true, people have attended to stocks of horses and cattle mostly, but are now getting to farm, and in a few years the farmers will become more numerous than the cowallados are now. A grogshop cannot support itself here; the inhabitants are moral and religious. They have a neat, large church; the Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists preach in it, and are all friendly, getting along well together. A neat hall for the Sons of Temperance, and also Masons and Odd Fellows have each a division here, and anxious from what I can learn, to help on in the great work of putting down drunkenness. J. S. BRANON.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., Sept. 19, 1855.

As you doubtless are aware, we are now in the midst of a yellow fever epidemic here. It is thought, however, not to be on the increase. There are now some fifty cases in town. As yet we have had but eight deaths. My wife and infant son are just recovering from the fever, for which I feel truly grateful to a kind Providence. The disease is extending into the country. On one plantation, four miles distant, there are thirty cases among the blacks. Brother and I are well nigh worn down.

Where is the preacher to fill Bro. Foster's place? Let him come forward and show himself. The great Captain-General has use for him. A soldier has fallen in the ranks; his place must be supplied. Oh, that it might be put into the mind and heart of each another to "come over and help us!"

I have left all my district appointments for the present, and determined to remain here until the epidemic is ended, if I may live to see it.

No news to communicate in regard to the work in the district. Am in hopes that the general affliction may yet be turned to religious account. P. M. GOODWYN.

WOODVILLE, MISS., Sept. 22, 1855.

The yellow fever has menaced us for several weeks, from various points. It appeared here ten days ago, but was not declared epidemic till last evening. There are five or six cases under treatment at the village this morning. We have had one death in town, and two at the quarantine station, near by. There are 61 cases on Mrs. Smith's plantation, two miles and a half south of town, she and her daughter of the number. There is no great alarm. Indeed, no alarm at all, that I know of. In truth, we all think no place on earth has such good yellow fever doctors as Woodville; we don't except New Orleans. We think the patient lucky that gets the aid of Woodville physicians and nurses.

I think our camp meeting at old Bethel, which was to have began on the 17th October, and to which we looked with much interest and hope, must be deferred. A good supporter suggests spring as the time. It strikes me as a most appropriate time. If death is to sweep over the land every fall, we could not do better than have our spring meeting to get ready for it.

W. P. BARTON.

LETTER FROM PORT GIBSON.

PORT GIBSON, MISS., Sept. 12, 1855.

The following letter from Dr. Capers, President of the Port Gibson Female Institute, and Pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in that place, has been kindly furnished us for publication by a clergyman of our city, to whom it was addressed: [New Crescent.

* * * * That we have "yellow fever" in Port Gibson is, I suppose, no longer a debateable question; but the "medical profession" agree in the opinion that its ravages cannot be experienced to the same extent as in the never-to-be-forgotten epidemic of two years ago. In less than thirty hours after the first reported case of fever, upwards of forty families had left the town, and the people have continued to leave until but few persons are left who have not previously had the fever.

I suppose that in the last ten weeks, we may have had (not many) than ten well-marked cases of fever, and up to this time we have had but two deaths. I understand, however, that some of our physicians affirm that there are patients with the "yellow fever" now, who suffered severely with it two years ago. If this be the fact, then we have a new feature in the disease, and none of the few who are left in town have any security for the future. I am inclined to the opinion that there is some mistake about these cases. If they have well-defined symptoms of "yellow fever" now, I should very seriously question if they had the fever in '48. Many physicians, as well as the people, are so apt to call every type of fever "yellow fever," in time of epidemic, that I am very slow to believe all that I hear about these second attacks. That such cases (under peculiar circumstances) have occurred, and may occur again, is unquestioned, but I have found them to be exceedingly rare. If during the present season, former attacks will not prevent a recurrence of the disease, how solemnly does the admonition come to all, "Be ye also ready."

Under all the circumstances, I am here, endeavoring to put my trust in the overruling Providence of our "Heavenly Father." I feel thankful that I have a calm and abiding confidence in the promises of His "Holy Word."

Our congregation on last Sabbath consisted of thirty-seven whites and a few colored persons, to whom I administered the word of life, from the 6th verse of the 23d Psalm. If the glistening tear and the deep drawn sigh are to be received as evidences of the emotions of the heart, these the few who were present gave assurance of the preciousness of the truth that "God is a refuge for us."

I am glad to learn that most of our preachers are standing firm to their posts, and sharing the sorrows and griefs of their smitten flocks.

We have cause to be thankful that we are not left without the regular ministry in our midst. Dr. Keller, the faithful and energetic pastor of the Presbyterian Church, is at his post, and though in feeble health, is rendering efficient service in visiting the sick and in administering to their spiritual wants. The Doctor never runs.

I have just been read that in several places in the surrounding country, the fever is raging to a more alarming extent than in any of the up-river towns. Mr. McCalpine, an estimable and wealthy planter between this place and Grand Gulf, died a few days since from the fever, and upwards of fifty of his negroes are now prostrated with it. I am also informed that there are several members of the White family who are not expected to live. Where this will end, or what will be the future developments in our town, is known only to God.

We beg an interest in the prayers of all our good brethren, that God's will may be done by us, as well as in us; and especially that we may "have grace" to bow submissively to the dispensations of his Providence.

Yours, &c., Thos. H. CAPERS

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

TO THE PREACHERS OF LA. CONFERENCE.

NUMBER ONE.

BRETHREN—I suggest that each of us take in hand a copy of the last minutes, and prepare our reports and get ready for conference business, in the order and of the nature therein laid down.

THE MISSIONARY COLLECTIONS.

The Louisiana Conference for once stood first on the list in proportion to white membership. Our collections for this noble cause have never yet reached the basis—solid, Scriptural basis—of the ability of the people to give; aye, or their willingness either. They have rather been measured by the faithfulness of the preachers in making collections. Instance: The richest circuits and stations often report half the amount of the poor ones. One medium circuit last year gave more than a wealthy district! The preachers, and not the people, the collectors and not the payors of the Lord's money, are blameable for the poverty of His treasury.

Our missionary Treasury—that faithful gauge of a church's piety and usefulness—is low. Appropriations for spreading Christ's Kingdom have been made that cannot be met, unless something be done. The Lord's box is empty. Souls, not in purgatory, but on the earth, wait for redemption. The price of the means is in our hands. Let the mind be in us that was in Christ.

Are we ready to report "juvenile missionary societies," formed according to the plan adopted, and working? This question will be asked.

Particular days or hours set apart at camp and protracted, and quarterly meetings for missionary matters would be well; lay brethren and local preachers filling the programme, with speeches, exhortations and donations. So a right spirit would be cultivated and information diffused. The Wesleyans, who have done so illustriously in this line, make a regular set-to, a glorious, earnest business of it, once a year. The best talent in reach is engaged for it, and surely it could not be in a better cause.

Those laboring on missions, especially on colored missions, stand in a delicate and responsible relation to the funds of the Missionary Society. To enable them to work freely, independently and without craving embarrassment, the society has taken upon itself their support. Thus relieved of asking for themselves, they are expected to do their utmost for it. The position of the missionary is better than others for raising missionary money. He can point to the actual services the society is doing. The rule adopted by ourselves and printed in the minutes, simply but touchingly says:

"The missionary being thus provided for out of the Missionary Treasury, will be expected and required to use his best endeavors to obtain as much as he prudently can for the society."

The sugar crop of Lower Louisiana brought a high price. The cotton crop—"Ah!" says a Northern Louisianian; "that is piled up on the sides of the rivers." But you have abundance of bread, and ought to be thankful that you have cotton to pile up anywhere. When God gives much, it looks not well if we complain and are churlish because he has not given more to us. A MEMBER.

Missionary Reports.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South.

I herein give a brief account of the state of the Talladega and Alexandria Colored Mission. Owing to bad health, I did not commence until the third Sunday in February, and of course did very little the first quarter. We found it somewhat difficult to organize, and arrange our appointments. We have now nine appointments, which we manage to fill by uniting some two of them together every round, and sometimes bring two together and spend the day at one place. The scattered condition of the colored people in this country renders it impracticable to labor successfully on plantations. We have invitations enough to come to plantations on Sunday, but none say to us come to my plantation on a week night, except some two or three of the brethren. But so far as I have learned, the plan of week night meetings is generally opposed. And here we would say, while we are glad to know that there are some faithful friends and patrons of this mission, we have reason to fear that a majority in its bounds are quite indifferent to its interests. Our plan is to catechise the whole congregation, placing the children in a circle. Congregations number from 50 to 250, and sometimes even more. Suffice it to say, in some places the Spirit of the Lord is among the people powerfully. Up to this time we have received on probation 60, baptized 20 adults and 16 children. R. PATTON.

FEVER AT NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH.—The Petersburg Express publishes the following letters:

NORFOLK, Sept. 16.—I am gratified to be able to state, that there still continues to be a slight decrease in the number of deaths and new cases, which fact, to whatever cause it may be owing, is matter for hasty congratulation. The burials yesterday did not exceed 24, and the deaths reported during last night and today up to 2 o'clock, were but 18. This is bad enough, it is true, but still so great an abatement of the terrific mortality that has previously occurred, that it serves to raise the heavy burden of despair that pressed so grievously upon us, and causes a gleam of hope to penetrate the gloom that filled the city like a mist.

The atmosphere continues heavy and oppressive, and it has been raining incessantly since 2 o'clock, A. M.

WELDON, Sept. 17, P. M.—Intelligence received here states the deaths from fever in Norfolk yesterday, as fifteen.

It is not thought that there has been much abatement really of the fever. The few deaths is supposed to be for the lack of subjects.

On the 14th, Mrs. Gillespie died in Burlington of injuries received by the disaster on the Camden and Amboy Railroad.

Particulars of the Baltic's News.

The Baltic, which reached New York on the evening of the 19th, brought advices one week later than previously received. The war news presents nothing of great importance.

Latest from Sebastopol

The bloody episode of the fight of Traktir seems likely to have little effect on the course of events in the Crimea. The Russians have retired up their narrow and well-fortified passes to the steep plateau, where, according to Gen. Simpson's latest report, they are once more prepared for offensive movement. Attention is, therefore, again turned to the siege of Sebastopol. Little in which a judgment may be founded can be learned either from the dispatches of the generals or the letter-writers before the city. To our previous knowledge that the besiegers' sap had approached very near to the Russian defences, we now learn that the foremost parallel, which was begun at the two ends, was completed and united in the middle on the 18th of August. Since then a fortnight has passed without much incident. Gen. Simpson mentions a small sortie, in which the Russians succeeded in destroying some gabions. For the rest, the daily life of the camp, its hardships and amusements, the death or life of individual officers, fill both public and private letters. On the great preparations of the last ten weeks the hopes of the besiegers are fixed, and the fire that will open when the time comes, will be unexampled in the history of warfare.

The Russians, meantime, are actively engaged in bridging the harbor, to remove their defense to the North side, should the South be taken.

The evils of a divided command are more and more felt. The line from Baidar to Inkermann, a distance of twelve miles, is occupied by French, Sardinians and Turks, with part of the English cavalry, each nationality under its own commander, and totally independent of all the others. Report speaks vaguely of a plan to unite the commands of all the troops on the Tchernaya in one hand.

As six weeks, or at most two months, are the utmost limit that can be assured for native military operations, attention is turned to the means of supplying the armies during the winter. Mr. Beatty, civil engineer, has received orders to construct two new lines of railway; one from the Col de Balaklava to Kameisch, to be worked by horse-power, and the other from Kadikoi to the Woronzoff Road, (near the Sardinian position over Tchergoua,) to be worked by locomotive. The labor of erecting these roads will be supplied by the French and Sardinians. Mr. Beatty believes that the original railway will last during the winter, and two hundred men of the army-works corps are now engaged in repairing it. Stores and sheds are being erected as rapidly as possible, and other preparations for winter are going on with energy.

The War in Asia.

Intelligence from Asia Minor is reported to be more favorable to the Turks. According to a Turkish bulletin, the Russians advanced on the 4th of August, against the entrenchment of Kars, and attacked a battery. An artillery fight ensued, which lasted two hours, and the Russians retired, leaving one hundred dead.

The pro-Russian paper, Le Nord, of Brussels, says:

"If we may interpret in a pacific sense the returning activity of diplomatists, all hope of an arrangement is not lost. M. de Bourqueney and Prince Gortschakoff passed the whole morning of the 30th ult. together, in conference with Count Buol, at Vienna. The Vienna Cabinet has already replied to the last Circular of Count Nesselrode, the existence of which is now out of doubt. The communications which take place between Austria and Prussia give reason to believe that the German powers will end by agreeing upon a political programme, which they will be able to oppose to the belligerent parties, who may be tempted to extend the war beyond the object for which it was ostensibly undertaken.

War Items of Interest.

British steamship Promethens, while on the Riff coast, near Melilla, approached the shore to make out some boats that were observed on the beach. The persons on shore hoisted a white flag, as did the steamer, but on the latter approaching within range, a heavy fire of musketry was opened on her, which killed the boatswain and wounded some others. The sloop replied with shot, shell and musketry, and apparently caused considerable slaughter.

General Sir George Brown has retired from the army.

Gortschakoff has sent Gen Todleben to Simpheropol to recover his strength. Todleben's latest "erection," called the "fort of the holy cross," is armed with guns of the heaviest calibre, and completely commands the Malakoff.

Prince Wladislas Czartoryski has left Paris with several officers for Constantinople, to organize a corps of Turkish Cossacks, to include Polish recruits.

Nearly three-fourths of the village of Kadi-Keni (the ancient Chalcedon) was destroyed August 26, by an accidental fire. A destructive fire had also occurred at Moscow.

Prince Menschikoff is said to have retired to a monastery at Moscow.

Great Britain.

We find neither political news nor gossip, with the exception of a rumor current in the cities, that Britain intends to call Naples to account, and will make a recent insult of the Neapolitan police to an attache of the British embassy the ground work of a quarrel.

Sir Charles Napier has put his threat into execution, and has published a portion of his correspondence with Sir James Graham. The correspondence, on the whole, shows that Napier had all along the approval of the Admiralty, as expressed through Sir James Graham, and that he strictly followed out his instructions, which were not to hazard the fleet against stone walls.

The news of the death of Abbott Lawrence was received in England with every expression of sympathy. On the 7th, the American ships in the port of Liverpool displayed their flags at half-mast.

In the affairs of Edward Oliver, the petitioning creditor has failed to establish his case, consequently Mr. Oliver is not bankrupt. Private statements mention that there is a sum of nearly £100,000 almost ready for division on the estate.

Fergus O'Connor, the noted Chartist, has just died, aged 59. For some time past he was under the care of his sister, having been removed from a lunatic asylum. He did not recover his intellect, but died a complete wreck.

London papers contain severe editorials on the uselessness of the fleets. The maintenance and cost of the Baltic fleet alone is called £30,000 per day.

Mr. Hinks, of the Canadian Legislature, is appointed Governor of Barbadoes. There are those who conceive that his appointment is in reward for his recruiting services in the United States.

The Queen and family are at Belmoral, Scotland.

An American book named "Female Life Among the Mormons," is reviewed by the London Times. The reviewer considers it altogether apocryphal.

Trials at the Corn Exchange.

An ingenious trick has just come to light in the Liverpool corn market. At this season the grain dealers keep a watchful eye on the barometer, and, for some time past it has been noticed that the barometer in the Liverpool Exchange Rooms has (mostly on market days) indicated approaching storms, and consequently higher prices. Watch was set, and a speculator was detected in the act of tampering with the indicator. Now the instrument is secured with a bar and padlock.

On 1st January, 1855, the total number of British steamships was 1 430, containing 298,216 tons, exclusive of anglae space.

Italy.

The Pope is founding a college at Rome for the education of English clergy.

Cholera still rages in Central Italy. In Northern Italy the disease still rages, although somewhat abated in virulence.

Russia.

Mercantile letters from St. Petersburg contain no general news. The rate of exchange tends downwards. The heaviness is attributed to the large amount of paper issued to meet the expenses of the war. Expectations are general that this paper will be redeemed by the proceeds of a loan, to be raised when the war is over. The Nishni fair for manufactures and imports is going off favorably, good prices being obtained, and debts being fairly paid.

Denmark and the United States.

The Paris correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes: One of the very interesting questions at this very moment is the position of Denmark. Its position as regards the difficult question of the payment of the Sound dues at this moment resisted by the Government of the United States. The Paris papers have been for the last two or three days much preoccupied with this; and in the Debats of this morning there is an article, the substance of which is too remarkable to admit of my not analysing it for your readers.

A few words will explain the position: America has out short discussion about rights or no rights, and has simply said she would no longer submit to the Sound dues claimed by Denmark. What is to ensue? Suppose the United States sloops delivered from the payment of the tax, it is then evident that the Baltic becomes an American lake on which American ships are to rule supreme; for the advantage given would be soon nothing short of that. One of two things would seem inevitable; either Denmark, unable to resist, will allow American ships to pass free of the tax, and then, having no pretext by which to extort its payment from other nations, other nations will also follow in America's wake, and profit by the boldness of the United States; or a Danish fleet will stop the ships presuming to pass untaxed, and the guns of Danish forts will unceremoniously sink them. In the first case, Denmark would lose one of the most considerable of her sources of revenue; in the next, she would drew upon herself an inevitable war with a powerful enemy. "Of course," as the Constitutionnel observes, European diplomacy could not let or leave this alone, and there would be congresses and conferences without end; but, at the end of all these, there might still be a conflict, and the result would be to give Denmark as an ally to the Western powers. One thing, however, must be said, viz: that Denmark has drawn a good deal of all this upon herself, by the way in which she has arbitrarily and perpetually altered and increased the rate of taxation of the sound; so that, although probably America would find the Western powers opposed to its pretensions, they might at the same time have a few observations to offer to the Danes, who would probably listen to them, standing in want of protection and help.

PHENOMENA OF GUNPOWDER EXPLOSION.—Professor Olmstead presented to the Scientific Association, upon the second day of its session, an interesting narration of some curious phenomena connected with the Wilmington gunpowder explosion of May, 1854. We copy the following extract from the New York Tribune:

On 31st May, 1854, three wagons from Dupont's mills were passing through Wilmington, Del., each with one hundred and fifty barrels of gunpowder, which all exploded, demolishing buildings and destroying life. Such wagons were accustomed to pass the route daily for fifty years. The regulations prescribed had fallen into disuse. They had left the mills at distances of half an hour, but had got within twenty-five feet of each other. Wishing to trace out analogies between this explosion and some phenomena of tornadoes, Prof. Olmstead wrote Bishop Lee, whose house was destroyed, and received in answer from his son some interesting facts.

The cause of the explosion does not appear, but it is known that two of the men were smoking by the side of their teams. Some of the phenomena were surprising. A splinter from a Venetian blind was blown through an iron board, making as smooth a hole as if pointed with steel. Metals were often displaced. The shoes were torn off the horses' feet, castors from furniture, and hinges from doors. The wagon tire was torn off and straightened, and one piece left on a hill a quarter of a mile off. Windows were destroyed for the distance of more than a mile. Those near the spot were burnt, the others out; these still further off were all burst out. A piano open near the spot was little injured; one closed further off was burst open and nearly ruined.

The effect on the animal system was to produce a sense of suffocation at first, and afterwards soreness of the throat, or even hemoptysis. Many were carried some feet and dropped erect. A man on horseback was lifted out of the saddle and dropped into it again. But the most wondrous effect was exhibited by three depressions where the wagons had stood. The one under the middle wagon was ten feet by five, and three feet deep. It appeared that the earth (Macadamized) had not been removed, but condensed. Prof. Olmstead knew of no instance of greater power, even in the great explosion of Brazil, where two million pounds of powder exploded, that equaled this. Iron water pipes were broken four or five feet under ground. In the New Haven tornado, of 1839, a piece of barrel was carried half a mile, and found sticking into a barn, having penetrated through a thick plank. Feathers have been stripped off fowls, and a woman washing found herself and her tub, with its water, in the cellar, while some of the clothes she was washing were found beyond West Rock, a distance of two miles.

NAVAL RETIRING LIST.—According to the official report, 15 captains are retired on leave pay, $2,600; 16 on furlough pay, $1,250; 3 dropped the service—Levy, Zantzinger, and Ramsay; 17 commanders retired on leave pay, $1,800; 18 on furlough pay, $900; 6 dropped from the service; 18 lieutenants retired on leave pay, $1,200; 44 retired on furlough pay, $600; 19 dropped the service; 3 masters retired on leave pay; 1 dropped from the service; 1 passed midshipmen retired on leave pay, $600; 1 on furlough pay, $300; 18 dropped from the service. Commodore John T. Newton is ordered to the command of the Navy Yard at Kittery, Me., vice Smett, retired on furlough pay. Commodore Stringham, just returned from the command of the squadron in the Mediterranean, is to take command next month of the Boston Navy Yard, vice Gregory, whose term of command has expired. He has built and launched the new steam frigate Merrimac quicker than any of the six frigates. The New York Navy Yard will be next month under the command of Captain Bigelow, relieving Captain Boerum, retired on leave pay. Commander Charles T. Platt, who commanded the Albany, off Havana, when Crittendeu and his fifty companions were shot on shore, has been forloughed. [New York Mirror.

LOUISIANA.—The Baton Rouge Advocate, of Friday, says:

We have heard that the fever had broken out in the Oley Cut neighborhood in this parish. Its origin is attributed to a peddler's pack which was recently opened there. The peddler himself was the first to take sick and the sickness was spreading.

The Natchitoches Chronicle, of the 15th, says:

For the last few weeks there have been rains almost daily, and the cotton bolls have taken the rot. We have heard planters say they cannot possibly gather more than half as much cotton as they believe they should three weeks since. One large planter, who expected to make a thousand bales, thinks he cannot gather more than five hundred. The worm has also appeared, but the season is so far advanced, that not very great injury can be done by it.

The Franklin Banner, of Thursday, has the following:

From a reliable source (a medical gentleman) we are informed that the yellow fever has broken out in St Mary's ville, and that several families had left town, among whom were many prominent citizens. It has also exhibited itself in New Iberia, but in a mild form, not a death having yet occurred to our knowledge.

The Harrisonburg Independent, of the 19th, has the following paragraphs:

With sincere pleasure, we are enabled to say, that the epidemic that has afflicted our town so severely has subsided. No cases have occurred within the last five or six days, and the sick are all convalescing.

We hear of the prevalence of rot in cotton to a great extent. Caterpillar is spoken of in the parish of Concordia, but we have not heard of any certain indications of it in our parish.

The Shreveport Gazette states that the caterpillar has made its appearance in that parish and already committed extensive depredations upon the cotton crop.

The Felicia Coupee Republican gives an account of a horrible affair which took place on the night of the 17th. A small sail-boat, on board of which were two men and a negro woman, loaded for the night near the village of Hermitage. The negroes came on board and killed one of the men, named Jones, and his wife. They knocked the other man Goodwin, down with an iron bar, and threw him overboard. He swam ashore and escaped. They stripped the body of the woman and threw her into the river. They then left, after setting the boat loose, which was afterwards found with the body of Jones and bearing other horrible evidences of the horrible tragedy. Some of the negroes were arrested.

CAMP MEETING.—There will be a Camp Meeting in the Talisia Circuit, one mile from Mississippi Springs. The meeting will commence on Thursday, before the second Sabbath in October. Preachers and people of neighboring circuits are invited and desired to attend. [I] pray my brethren of the Mississippi Conference, come to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. J. T. DEW.

NOTICE.—There will be a camp meeting on the Toplaw camp ground, in Pike county, Miss., to commence on Friday before the first Sunday in October. Ministers, preachers and local, are invited to attend.

GEORGE D. WADE.

Deaths.

DIED—Aug. 10, after a brief illness, at Mayor's Wells, Hinds county, Miss., Hon. [Ja]MES ANDERSON, of Carroll parish, La., in the 59th year of his age.

Judge Anderson, at the time of his death, was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, and a ruling elder in the society at Mayor's Bend. He was a man of prayer, daily read the Scriptures; was fond of religious conversation, and soon convinced any discerning of his associates that he was a novice in religious literature. His neighbors regarded him as a just, conscientious and exemplary man, with a unanimity not usually enjoyed while men are living, and not worth liable to be depreciated by conflicting claims to merit; and since he has passed the contest of life, and his worth is rewarded with unenvious eyes, his praise is visible upon the lips of all. As a friend, he was obliging and faithful; as a neighbor, he was generous and hospitable; as a citizen, he was enterprising and patriotic; as a Christian, unostentatious, sincere and catholic; and in public life, when presiding as judge, practising at the bar or serving in our State Constitutional Convention of 1852, he is said to have maintained in each position that impartiality, dignity, independence and energy of character entitled him to unqualified confidence and respect. BOAZ.

DIED—In Claiborne parish, La., Aug. 8, [Mr]S. JANE, eldest dangter of Anderson and [Mar]y Ann Orr. Five years ago she united herself with the M. E. Church at Little [Cr]eek, in this parish, and she adorned her pro[fes]sion. During a long and severe illness the [Lo]rd whom she loved sustained her, and [en]abled her with astonishing patience and [fo]rtitude to bear her sufferings; and when [the] came, she praised God. When told by [her] weeping parents to put her trust in God, she replied, "I do trust in Him." A FRIEND.

DIED—Of Consumption, in Carroll county, Miss., MARTHA MARIA GLANOIL, daughter of Alex. and Martha P. Gray, formerly of Lowndes county, Miss. She professed religion in the ninth year, and joined the Methodist Church, in which she lived and died a consistent member. The 25th August, after taking leave of her parents, brothers and sisters, she fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, to whom she had given her heart in early life. I visited her often, sang and prayed with her, and conversed on the subject of death. She was not only willing but anxious to depart and be with Christ. I never saw any one more calm and serene. Little Alexander she committed to God—gave him a pledge and token of remembrance—gently desiring that his love to God be as pure as that ring. The day before her death she quoted the language of the poet:

and added, "I soon shall be in heaven, to rest with God forever. Glory! glory! glory!" A few moments before her departure, she called for the doctor, and asked him how long she would live. He replied, "You are now dying." She said she, "this can't be death, for it is heaven on earth." E. F. A. LILLY.

DIED—Two lovely daughters of Rev. T. O. H. P. Raynar, in Holmes county, Miss. ELIZA, on the 17th July, in her 20th year, five years after marriage. She was converted, and joined the Church at Gay's Spring camp-ground, in 1849. She was careful to keep the rules of the Church—never a ring was worn on her finger, or an artificial in her bonnet. On her death-bed she charged her sisters, "Be kind to each other, obey mother, read your Bibles." To her mother she said, "I have not been as faithful as I might—forgive me." Her mother asked her how it would be if this were her last time God should call her—"Pa, I feel like I could fly right home to heaven." When dying she was asked if she was easy? "Perfectly, perfectly—this is the sweetest bed I ever rested upon." The doctor remarking, "This room is too small," she replied, "I see the whole finest house I ever saw, and such beautiful people in it"—and died.

Her sister NANCY ANN, died August 1, in her 20th year. She was converted, and joined the Church at Gay's Spring camp-meeting, 1850, under the ministry of Rev. P. Cooper. While at school she committed to memory 1700 verses of Scripture, and could repeat twenty-one chapters. Her father asking her of her prospects, she said, "I am not afraid to die—it is not hard to die." In Jesus lay all her strong and confident hope. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

DIED, August the 27th, 1856, ANN ELIZABETH SMITH, aged twenty years, having been married only six months.

A prominent trait in the character of Sister Smith was her fondness for going to church and hearing preaching. During the year, I often conversed with her in class meeting, was as often delighted to hear her tell of the goodness of God, express a desire to be more like him and possess more of the spirit of Christ Jesus. She attended a revival meeting at Oakland, the first week in July, and we were well pleased with her encouragement to the penitents at the altar. The weather was warm, and when mourners were called, she would go with them, and fan them and point them to Jesus. I had the pleasure of conversing with her once during her illness, and, as in class meeting, she expressed no fear, but desired to enjoy more of vital religion. She would ask her brothers in the Church to pray with and for her when they would come to visit her. She told her father twice before her death, that she felt prepared for the realities of eternity, that she was not afraid to die. Relatives and friends, live Ann, humble and devoted christians; choose that better part which can never be taken away from you.

J. LANDRUM.

DIED—In Milton, Fla., on the 2d of August, LEWIS FRATER, a native of Germany. The last fourteen years of his life a consistent member of the M. E. Church, most of that time serving faithfully in the offices of class leader, steward, and superintendent of Sabbath Schools. He left the world with bright prospects of eternal bliss.

The loss of Brother Frater falls heavily upon the Church, as well as upon the citizens of Milton. L. P. GOLSON.

DIED—On the 27th of July, of typhoid fever, in Jonesboro, Ala., NANCY ELIZABETH PARSONS, eldest daughter of Joseph K. and Sarah Parsons, in the 32d year of her age. She was born in Lawrence District, S. C.

At a camp meeting, in Jones' Valley, she embraced the Saviour by faith; joined the M. E. Church, and ever after lived the life of a consistent and zealous Christian, and was one of the four that formed the first class in the wilderness where her brother settled in Tuscaloosa county, N. B. HALL.

THE CITY—SALE OF BONDS.

For some weeks an advertisement has appeared in our columns from the Commissioners of the Consolidated Debt, advertising for purchase, by the highest bidder, a series of four hundred and fifty bonds of one thousand dollars each, payable thirty-seven years from the 1st of October, 1855—the principal at the Treasurer's office in New Orleans and the interest coupons semi-annually in New York—bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum. The Commissioners expressly reserve to themselves the right of rejecting any or all of the bids which may be offered. Bids will be received up to the second Monday in October, until 12 o'clock M., and no longer. Terms of payment, cash—or in lieu of the obligations of the old city, the late municipalities, or the late city of Lafayette, maturing in 1855.

Here is a fine chance for capitalists to make investments. Better bonds than these will be, were ever thrown upon any market. The security they offer is unexceptionable. Nothing but an earthquake, or some other immediate calamity, one provent them from being promptly paid at maturity, and the interest punctually coin. Of this no well-informed man—and capitalists are proverbially well informed—can entertain a shadow of doubt.

The present much maligned Common Council—especially the Board of Assistant Aldermen—deserve a great deal of credit for their judicious endeavors to re-establish and place the credit of the city on a firm and enduring basis. They went to work in the right direction—commenced lopping off expensive and stopping leaks at the beginning. Our readers will, no doubt, be surprised to learn that by the practice of rigid economy in every department of the public service, they have succeeded in reducing the expenses of the corporation some $500,000. Here is an item of reform—true, practical, tangible reform—which, if persisted in, will set things all right in a brief period. Much injustice has been done the Common Council by uninformed or designing persons, who make it a rule to grumble or misrepresent, no matter how gross the injustice or how great the expense to the cause of truth and the best interests of the city, while the business community, property holders, etc., have been so much engrossed in their own affairs that they have not taken the time to investigate sufficiently to enable them to do the Council clear and ample justice.

The sale of the wharves was a measure of sound policy which ought to reflect much credit upon the Council. By their sale the city will receive a revenue of about $175,000 per annum from what used to be an expense, instead of a source of profit. The sale was an admirable movement, and it was effected in the very nick of time, for the proceeds of the notes given will enable the city to liquidate its floating debt forthwith. This will be cause for congratulation; and if the same prudence and wisdom that have governed the past six months control in future, the disagreeable incidents, unprofitable to all parties concerned, consequent upon an empty treasury, will never occur again.

In passing, it is well enough to refer to the causeless annoyance and expense which several of the employees of the corporation have seemed delighted to put the city to. We allude to the recent suits, and the manner in which seizures were made. These parties had a right to their pay. That proposition is perfectly clear; they had a right to sue and seize; but several of them went about it in a manner as though that was not all they wanted. They evinced a disposition to give as much trouble as possible, which certainly was, to say the least, very wrong. For instance, on Saturday last, during the absence of Gen. Lewis, the clock in the Mayor's parlor—a costly and beautiful piece of mechanism—was seized on a judgment for $90 and removed, although responsible parties offered to take the office of keeper and be liable for its forthcoming, which was refused! The clock is worth from $1,000 to $1,200, and the mere process of removal, it is feared, will injure it more than the amount of the judgment for which it was seized. [Daily Crescent.

FEVER AT ALEXANDRIA.—From the officers of the steamer Julia, which arrived yesterday, having left on the 17th, we learned that the yellow fever was prevailing to an alarming extent in Alexandria. There were from sixty to seventy cases in the town, besides a great many cases along Red and Atchafalaya rivers.

We much regret to learn that Judge Cochman, of Alexandria, died of the fever on Thursday last.

Heavy rains had fallen along the river, injuring the cotton crops very much.

The City Council of Columbia, S. C., refused recently to allow any papers except the official journal to report their proceedings, on the ground that their organ had a vested right in the publication by contract. Dr. Gibbes, editor of the Carolinian, persisted in reporting the proceedings and was expelled from the room by force. He resorted to a legal course for redress.

THE WHARF REVENUES.

Monday, in compliance with the requisitions of an ordinance of the Common Council, which went into operation on the 16th of August last, Comptroller DeBuys proceeded to adjudicate and sell to the highest bidder, for the term of three years, the revenues of the aforesaid wharves, collectable under existing ordinances from all kinds of water craft trading to this port.

The following gentlemen were the successful bidders: The wharves, from the foot of Canal street to North Market street, were adjudicated to Mr. James A. Lusk, for the sum of $125,000; all the Fourth District wharves to the same gentleman, for $40,100; those from Canal to Toulouse streets to Mr. J. W. Hoffman, for $88,000; and all the rest, viz: from North Market to Felicity street, from Toulouse to Esplanade street, and all the Third District wharves, to Mr. Louis Surgi, for $202,000—making the grand total of sales, $538,100.

We are of the decided opinion that this is the best bargain the corporation of New Orleans ever entered into, and we augur from it many beneficial results. Much credit is due those who were instrumental in getting it through the Common Council, despite the opposition of the Mayor—prominent among whom was the able and indefatigable Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Board of Assistants—Mr. J. Esger.

The wharves under the old system, were a burthen, instead of a benefit to the city. The past year, however, the clear cash profits into the treasury were some sixteen thousand dollars. For several years previous they had not paid expenses. Now they will yield a clear revenue to the city of over $175,000 per annum! If this is not a wonderful change for the better, then we do not understand the correct meaning of the term.

The notes given for these adjudications are thirty-six in number, and are endorsed by men of unquestionable solidity. We understand that one or more of our banks will discount these notes. This will at once place the treasury in possession of funds, and enable the city to meet all pressing claims.

LATER FROM TEXAS.

The steamship Mexico, Capt. Lawless, arrived Tuesday morning with papers from Galveston and interior Texas.

We find little of interest in the way of news. Indian depredations have been less frequent. The San Antonio Texan states that a party of Indians who had been stealing horses in Medina county were overtaken and one of their number killed. The Goliad True American has the following paragraph:

The Indian hunters have returned without effecting anything—being absent only about ten days. One of the company reports having met the Attuscosa company, headed by Capt. Peter Tumlinson, who had, a short time before, a fight with eight Indians, killing five of them, and recapturing the horses taken from the Old Town, and the neighborhood a few miles above this place, on the river. The company were trailing the Indians down the San Antonio river when they met them returning on the same trail, with the horses, and approached quite near before the Indians discovered them. So soon as they discovered their chance for escape was hopeless, the Indians cried out, "Lipans, Lipans—don't Kill Lipans!" Three only escaped.

Another account states that the party which left Goliad saw no Indians until they reached the Rio Grande, where they encountered the chief Wild Cat, who, at the head of three hundred warriors on the western bank of the river, bade the white defiance, and dared them to cross. Their force was not sufficient to cross in the face of such a foe. The Victoria Advocate says that another company was more successful:

They soon missed different bands of the savages, and succeeded in killing thirty-five, without losing a man. In their travels they found the mutilated bodies of two men, who had been evidently murdered by the Indians, and amongst the killed they found the corpse of a white woman and the hat of a young man from Goliad, who has been missing, and was probably killed by the Indians.

The Nueces Valley Advertiser, of the 15th, states that on the previous Sunday evening a child, three and a half years old, was bitten in that town by a rattlesnake and died on the following day at one o'clock. The snake had entered the house and coiled itself upon the bed, and struck the child between the fore-finger and thumb, while the mother was in the act of placing it upon the bed.

Later from Mexico.

The steamship Orizaba, Captain Forbes, arrived Tuesday, bringing dates from Vera Cruz to the 22d and from the city of Mexico to the 16th.

One item of news by this arrival is important, if the continual revolutions and changes taking place in the administration of Mexican affairs can be considered. On the 12th inst. Gen. Carrera resigned the Presidency, in view, El Siglo says, of the difficulties encountered in his administration. He afterwards published an address to his fellow-citizens, setting forth his reasons for the course he had taken. The General Government was thus left without a head, and the command of the district of Mexico devolved upon Gen. Diaz de la Vega, who selected a Cabinet of seven individuals. The chiefs of the garrison of the capital drew up a paper declaring that, although in favor of the plan of Ayutla, they had supported the Administration of Carrera as a matter of expediency, and that they should support whoever might be legitimately placed in authority.

Affairs are in a sad condition in the Department of San Luis Potosi, the chiefs Garza and Tamaris having commenced hostilities against each other and placed the country in a condition of civil war.

Gen. Llavo still holds command in the Department of Vera Cruz. He has wrought many civil and military reforms.

Alvarez, at the head of his army, was on the march for the capital. He was expected to arrive in a short time, and from the posture of affairs, there was little doubt that he would immediately become the supreme head of the Government. Comonfort was also on his way to the capital.

A son of Gen. Santa Anna had been arrested, but what disposition would be made of him, the papers do not state.

CONSUL TO JAPAN.—A Washington dispatch of the 15th to the New York Herald says:

Townsend Harris, Consul General to Japan, leaves this afternoon for New York. Since Mr. Harris has been in Washington, he has been charged with making a new commercial treaty with the kingdom of Siam. It appears that the treaty with that power made by Mr. Roberts is of no value, in consequence of the absurd way in which the tonnage duties were levied and the royal monopolies. He has been instructed to make such a treaty as will open that rich country to the enterprise of our merchants. And this is of peculiar importance, in view of the opening trade with Japan, for most of the products of Siam are peculiarly qualified to meet a good market in Japan. He will proceed overland to one of the Indian ports, where he is to be taken up by the United States steam frigate San Jacinto, which will convey him to Sangkok, in Siam, and after he has completed his negotiations, will take him to Hong-Kong, from which place he will proceed to Japan in one of our men-of-war.

An amateur gardner and joker went to a seedsmen in town the other day, for some seeds of the "pie-plant," which he had advertised—requesting precisely six parcels of custard pie-seeds, and two of mince-pie. The seedsman promptly sent him half a dozen goose eggs and two blind puppies. The humorous gentleman admitted that the joke was rather against him.

Louisiana.

The Concordia Intelligencer of Friday last has the following:

We were extremely sorry to learn, that our neighboring village of Waterproof, in the parish of Tensas, on Tuesday morning of the present week, had been so sorely afflicted with the epidemic, that nine-teen cases were reported—with a population diminished by flight, and not enough citizens remaining to take care of the sick. All mercantile and other business of the town had been suspended.

A death had occurred some eight days before—a Mr Hunter—from which all the recent cases seems to have proceeded. It was said that there would probably be another victim before Tuesday night.

P. S. On Wednesday morning, the day after the preceding was written, we were truly grieved to learn by special messengers, that the fever had increased most alarmingly in Waterproof. The nineteen cases had increased to thirty-one, and hourly reports of cases came to hand, proclaiming in the terrible voice of public calamity, that the end is not yet. These messengers had the good fortune to procure seven nurses in Natchez, who were hurried to the theater of disease day before yesterday.

The Lake Providence Herald of Saturday states that the health of that town is excellent, the fever having entirely disappeared. The Herald has the following paragraph:

We have been informed that an overseer of Col. P. D. Quays, living about ten miles above this place on the river, shot and killed a man on Thursday last. Our informant knew nothing as to the particulars of the affair.

The Thibodaux Minerva, of Saturday, states that the health of that town and the surrounding country is excellent, the weather fine, and the crops improving. The planters of that section are busily preparing for the rolling season.

The Minerva has a letter from Assumption giving an account of the ravages of yellow fever in Paincourtville, in that parish. The disease commenced on the 20th August. There had been thirty-one cases, eight of them fatal. Only one new case had occurred on the day the letter was written, and it was thought the disease had almost run its course.

The Farmerville Inquirer, of the 13th, says:

Our parish has been visited lately by very heavy rains, which have caused our bayous to swell slightly. We learn that a good-sized steamer has gone up the Ouachita for Camden.

GALE ON LAKE MICHIGAN.—In the St. Louis Democrat of the 19th we find the following telegraphic dispatches:

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 18.—A terrific hurricane is now raging on the lake, about two miles south of the mouth of the river. The steamer Sebastopol is ashore on the outer bar; the waves breaking over her; men, women and children, frantic with terror, are seen on her upper deck, evidently expecting immediate death. She is much broken up and will probably go to pieces unless the storm abates. A schooner is also ashore a few rods nearer the river. Two men from the steamer undertook to swim ashore; one was drowned, the other succeeded in reaching it. There are a large number of passengers on board the steamer.

CHICAGO, Sept. 18.—Since the receipt of the above dispatch we have been unable to communicate with Milwaukee, on account of the storm. At this point the gale has been increasing in violence since noon, and now rages in a fully. The big Tuscarora, from Buffalo, was swept around the north pier in the direction of the Central Railroad breakwater; an anchor was dropped which finally caught and prevented the destruction of the vessel and all on board. The masts and rigging were all swept away, and the vessel will probably go to pieces before morning. The crew were rescued in life-boats. The Tuscarora has a cargo of coal, and is fully insured. A fire has just broke out in the southern part of the city.

CHICAGO, Sept. 19.—Advices from Milwaukee, about an hour later, state that the steamer Sebastopol was already going to pieces, and there was no chance of saving her. Her cargo consisted of 600 tons of merchandise for this port.

STORM AT POINTE-A-LA-HACHE.—The Pointe-a-la-Hache National of Saturday has the following:

We were visited here with a very severe gale; the storm began Saturday night last and only ceased Monday in the afternoon. For a moment the old inhabitants who have witnessed and suffered by the hurricane of 1812 and 1815, entertained serious fears that it would again be their sad lot to be left to the mercy of the infuriated elements.

Here at Pointe-a-la-Hache the waters of the back bays covered over a great part of our rice and corn fields. Trees were blown down and the orange crop suffered greatly.

We have been informed by a young gentleman who was at Boras Settlement during the tempest that he never saw anything to be compared to the desolation of the scene.

The ground was covered by the waters of the river. The wind blew down a great quantity of trees in the orange orchards.

It is feared that more than one-half of the orange crop will be lost. In one orchard it is said that more than 12,000 oranges will be lost.

Later advices from Milwaukie inform us that the steamer Sebastopol was completely destroyed by the gale, and that six lives were lost. The gale was one of the most terrific ever experienced in that region. A dispatch of the 19th from Chicago, sums up its effects as follows:

The brig Tuscarora, at the pier, had disappeared this morning, and the fragments of her wreck are scattered upon the shore.

Between here and Milwaukie the schooner Drake, of Cleveland, is ashore four miles north of here, with a cargo of lumber, and will probably be a total loss. The schooner Lady Anne is wrecked at Kenosha, and will prove a total loss. A schooner, supposed to be the Superior, is ashore nine miles this side of Milwaukie, and at 3 P. M. yesterday, the crew were clinging to the rigging, with the waves washing entirely over the vessel. There are three schooners ashore near the wreck of the Sebastopol. We have no particulars. One of them is said to be the Rockwell. A schooner was beached against the pier at Milwaukie, but the crew were rescued. The bark Hungarian, which lately cleared from Milwaukie with a cargo of wheat for Oswego, returned safely yesterday, but in a leaking condition. It is supposed that there have been other wrecks not yet discovered.

Upper Canada exports will exceed this year fourteen million dollars. The exports to the United States to the quarter ended last June, were over six and a half million dollars, of which about $500,000 were Lower Canada produce, and the rest from Western Canada. In the half year ended June last, as compared with the same period of 1854 the falling off in the customs revenue is $630,224. In 1845 and 1846 the revenue from imports into Toronto, from ports abroad, was about $24,000; in 1853 and 1854 it was $1,314,456. For every dollar Lower Canada contributes to the general revenue in any form, Upper Canada pays four.

Punch's last caricature is, "La Belle Alliance, 1856." The pretty Eugenie is feeding the head of the British Lion, which rests meekly in her lap. Victoria is toying with her finger the beak of the French Eagle, which is submitting with a look of very wicked disfavor; while in the back ground a shrewd looking Napoleon, fraternally "gets a light" from the cigar of a very stupid good looking Albert.

THE RAILROAD.—The damage sustained by the railroad by the late storm is quite serious. The extent is not yet known at the office in the city. Three breaks are, however, reported, the principal injury being at Munvila, where the water is said to have risen eight or nine feet over the bed of the road. The water was five feet above the floor of the depot, and two or three small buildings between the road and the creek were entirely swept away. It is not known when the damage will be repaired.

[Mobile Tribune, 20th.

A few nights ago a Mr. Bodkin, who had been out taking his glass and pipe, on going home late, borrowed an umbrella, and when his wife's tongue loosened, he sat up in bed and suddenly spread out the parapluie.

"What are you going to do with that thing?" said his wife.

"Why, my dear, I expected a very heavy storm to night, and so I came prepared."

In less than two minutes Mrs. Bodkin was asleep.

A WIT.—We met a friend the other day who is troubled with a slight impediment in his speech, and finds it especially difficult to pronounce any word beginning with the letter R.

"Well," said he, grasping our hand, "they have had another wiot in the Fwankford wood."

"A what?" asked we.

"Why, a wiot, a wiot!"

"And pray, what is a wiot?"

"Why, don't you know what a wiot is? It's a wiot, wumpus!"

"I don't understand you, now."

"Why," exclaimed he, "I mean a wiot—a wumpus—a wow!"

"Oh, you mean they had a riot, a rumpus, a row, on the Frankford road. Yes, yes—we have heard of that. Good-by."

DISASTER AT SEA.—The schooner Wild Pigeon, Capt. O'Leary, cleared on the 9th inst., by Messrs. Post & Mol, for St. Marks, Fla., arrived at the Basin yesterday, having put back in distress. The Captain reports having left the Basin off the 11th inst. in company with the schooner West Florida and Zalline, the two latter vessels bound for Pensacola. On Saturday the 17th, in lat. 27.18 long. 29 30 at 4 P. M., the gale commenced and lasted until the following morning, during which she lost her deck load, comprising ninety bbls of bacon, jib, main topmast, stay sail, trolley, yawl and forward dash, and had the chain house stove in, and wheel injured, besides otherwise injuring the vessel; the cargo in her hold is badly damaged, owing to the seas making a complete breach over her, the water going through the cabin and forecastle.

On the morning of the gale, the Captain saw two schooners at anchor in Gat Island Harbor, which he supposed to be the two above mentioned. Her cargo is now in the hands of the underwriters.

The vessel will be obliged to go into docks to be repaired.

FROM THE PLAINS.—Mr. Edward Murin has returned to St. Joseph with the remains of Capt. Gibson, killed by the Sioux Indians ten miles below the mouth of Deer Creek, in the Indian Territory. The Sioux Indians are represented by his party to have been in numbers, and an engagement took place between Abercrombie and the Indians, on the 4th July, at the North Platte bridge, in which ten of the Indians were killed.

Gen. Harney left Fort Kearney on the 4th of August, with 1,200 men, making forced marches to accomplish some purpose against Buckhorn. He said to Mr. Morse on leaving, "By H——, I am for battle—no peace." All along the Platte the buffalo were to be seen in great numbers. [St. Louis Republican, 19th.

The census just taken of Boston shows that the total population of the city is 104,829. The number born in foreign countries, with their children under 21 years of age, is as follows:—Irish 59,239; Germans 4,580, other countries, 12,511—a sum total of 10,000 more than the native population and their children. Out of the 23,841 increase during the past five years, 10,296 was by the Irish population, 1,930 by the Germans, and 4,634 by other foreigners, making the increase of natives only 987. It is estimated, however, that Boston business men, with their families to the number of 50,000, reside in the neighboring towns.

The New York Sun, after giving an account of the recent powder mill explosion near Gloucester, says:

Powder had largely advanced recently, and was still rising. There may have been $1,500 worth of powder destroyed, to say nothing of stock and machinery. We understand that the proprietors expected to close their mills in a few days, they being unable to procure saltpetre, and a stock of which article can be procured in the eastern cities. The demand for Russia has caused it to advance in price one hundred and fifty per cent. In the last sixty days our Russian agents in New York and Boston bought by couple all that will arrive this year from Calcutta. It is said that there is but one powder-making firm in the United States that has stock to run sixty days longer. They must close then or sooner and await the result of the Eastern war, for bid against the Czar of all the Russias for that indispensable ingredient for powder, saltpetre.

A magnificent portrait of Washington, woven in silk, at the silk manufactory of Ponson, Philippe & Vibert, at Lyons, and superbly framed, at an expense of ten thousand dollars, was publicly presented to the city of New York, a few days ago, by C. S. J. Goodrich, late consul. It is a gift from the French firm above named, and is the first likeness of an American thus wrought. It was copied from an engraving by Stuart, and two years have been occupied in its manufacture, as it had to pass through the hands of several artists. These specimens of art are but a subject of trade.

On the 18th a singular accident occurred in the cotton gin flouring mill of the Messrs. Haxall, in the city of Richmond. A floor in the fifth story gave way, and an immense mass of grain, about 20,000 bushels, fell through, carrying, with it a portion of each successive flooring until it reached the lower pit. The crash also destroyed or badly damaged three mill wheels in the pit, so that some time elapsed before the water could be shut off. Meanwhile, a considerable quantity of the wheat floated off into the river. The damage was estimated at over $10,000.

John Wise, the aeronaut, writing to the N. Y. Tribune, suggests a means of dispelling the miasmatic atmosphere of Norfolk and Portsmouth. He says:

"A few tons of gunpowder exploded in cannons of the largest calibre, with their muzzles elevated as much as practicable, even to a perpendicular, if possible, would produce atmospheric waves that would travel hundreds of miles. This should be aided by large fires, on open hills and on summits, made of tar barrels or any other highly combustible material. This would put the atmosphere in motion, driving the infected off and receiving the pure from abroad."

He also recommends the fumigation of infected houses with chlorine gas, or chlorids of lime.

The powder mills near Geneseo, N. Y., blew up again a few days ago. The buildings destroyed were four in number, viz: two grinder mills, corning house and press. They were situated a few rods apart, and heavy embankments of earth raised between them. There were probably four or five hundred kegs of powder in the buildings at the time of the explosion. These mills have exploded four times in the last eighteen months and the new mills had only been in operation six weeks. The hands being absent, no one was injured.

The city authorities of New York have found difficulty already in enforcing their quarantine regulations. The Crescent City, after her arrival there, was put under seizure, and the Captain required to give five thousand dollars bond to answer to the charge of violating these regulations. Nevertheless, he unloaded his cargo, and set out to return for Havana and New Orleans on Tuesday. It is said that both Captain and Pilot will be arrested upon their next appearance in New York.

A dispatch of the 17th from Washington, says:

The party who have been here negotiating for a lease of the isthmus in New York to New Orleans have withdrawn their proposition. The lines will remain as heretofore.

It is reported here that President Pierce has restored Commodore Stewart to the command of the Philadelphia station, from which he was removed by the action of the late Retiring Board.

Admiral Breat, in his official dispatches respecting the affair at Sweaborg, says: "It seemed as it Providence watched over us; it evidently did in the following occurrence: a red-hot ball, passing through the desk of the Algerite, got into the powder-house and lodged between a copper canister and the wood-work, which it began to consume, when water from the pump being thrown upon it, put out the fire and cooled off the ball!"

We learn from the Washington papers that Major Markland, who disappeared from that city some time ago, leaving a letter to his family declaring his intention to commit suicide, has been seen near Pittsburgh wandering about in a deranged state of mind. His friends are in pursuit of him.

The clipper ship Black Sea sailed from New York, for Australia a few days ago, having on board several families from New York and New Jersey.

Charles H. Browe, of Philadelphia, was murdered recently while on his way to Salem on board the steamer Mainstonemi. His body was found in Salem Creek, with his throat cut, and the fingers of one hand chopped off, which was, doubtless, done while he was attempting to clamber back into the boat. A number of arrests were made in Philadelphia, and about thirty workmen in the navy-yard were taken into custody as witnesses.

His Holiness the Pope has recently ordered a gold medal of the largest size to be sent to George Cole, Esq., civil engineer, of Buffalo, N. Y., in return for a copy of a work containing his tables and designs of machines for railroads, canals, tunnels, &c. The medal is inscribed "Bene merito," (well merited,) and is to be accompanied by a letter of thanks.

An affray occurred on the evening of the 15th in the St. Nicholas Hotel, New York, between Capt. J. J. Wright, of Texas, and Mr. R. S. Dean, of Baltimore, which resulted in the former being mortally wounded by a bowie-knife. An altercation occurred between them in the saloon, and Capt. Wright struck Dean across the face with a cowhide. The latter then drew a large knife and stabbed Wright twice.

On the 17th, Mayor Wood received a letter from the Mayor of Baltimore, complaining of the quarantine restrictions against Baltimore vessels, and threatening retaliation. Mayor Wood replied that vessels from Baltimore would only be quarantined when they arrived with fever on board.

On the evening of the 14th, a train on the Baltimore Railroad ran over Mrs. Updyke, near Newport, Del., killing her instantly. The unfortunate woman was walking on the track, and being very deaf, did not hear the train. She leaves a husband and family. No blame was attached to those having charge of the train.

Dates from Nebraska City to the 8th inst., inform us that Col. Mounies' party of government surveyors, was attacked by a band of Pawnee Loups, about thirty miles up the Platte River. Col. Mounies and five others reached Nebraska City safely, but six others were dispersed, and have not been heard from. A company of fifty men was immediately raised, and started in pursuit.

SEBASTOPOL TAKEN.

30,000 Men Killed.

THE CITY IN RUINS.

GENERAL BOSQUET KILLED.

ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE NAPOLEON.

BY THE NATIONAL LINE.

HALIFAX, September 27.—The Cunard steamship American, Capt. Leitch, arrived at this port this forenoon, from Liverpool on the 14th inst.—Her advices are consequently one week later from all parts of Europe. They are of the highest importance, as will be seen by the following summary:

Fall of Sebastopol.

Sebastopol has fallen.

On the 8th inst., after a bombardment of three days duration, the Allied army assaulted the city, and after six repulses sustained by the French before the Malakoff, and nine repulses by the English before the Redan, it was taken. The slaughter was terrific. Two thousand of the English, fifteen thousand French, and about the same number of the enemy were killed, making a total of slain of upwards of 30,000 men.

The Russians evacuated the town, after blowing up all its defences, sinking the ships, and firing the town; thus leaving for the victors nothing but a mass of smouldering ruins.

During the assault, five French Generals were killed, including General Bosquet.

A large Allied force was marching along the coast for the purpose of interrupting the retreat of the Russians in land.

The Allied Generals have orders to demand the unconditional surrender of all the Russian troops, forces and defences among the latter being included Odessa.

The fruits of the capture of Sebastopol were an immense quantity of material of war.

Louis Napoleon.

Another attempt had been made to assassinate the French Emperor. It was not successful.

The Pacific Arrived Out.

The Collins steamship Pacific arrived in the Mersey at noon of the 16th.

Liverpool Cottoe Market.

The Liverpool cotton market was rather easier, in consequence of the advance in the rate of interest by the Bank of England, and an expected further advance to five per cent., but quotations are unaltered.

The sales of the week were 40,000 bales, including 6000 bales to speculators.

We repeat the figures reported per Baltic:

Fair Orleans 7¼ d., Middling Orleans 07-16 d., Fair Uplands 6¾ d., and Middling Uplands 6⅝ d. per pound.

State of Trade.

The advices from Manchester and the manufacturing districts generally are less favorable.

Breadstuffs.

The Liverpool breadstuffs market was generally dull, and prices unchanged.

Wheat had advanced one penny per bushel.

The weather had been fine, and the accounts from the crops are favorable.

Provisions, etc.

The Liverpool provision market was generally dull and unchanged.

Lard was in active speculative demand at 58 to 60s. per cwt.

In the London Market, Sugar had advanced 2d.

Money Market.

The London Money Market was more stringent.

The Fever at Norfolk.

NORFOLK, Sept 26.—There has been a considerable improvement in the health of both this city and Portsmouth. The weather is cool, which will, without doubt, have a still more favorable effect.

Departure of the Africa.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—The Cunard steamship Africa left Boston to-day for Halifax and Liverpool. She carries letters of the 15th, 16th and 17th, only name to hand to-day, and were of course too late to be transmitted by her.

River Intelligence.

LOUISVILLE, Sept. 24.—The river is falling, with six feet water in the canal. The steamer T. U. Twisbell arrived on Sunday from New Orleans and the A. L. Shotwell departed the the same day for that port.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—The mortuary returns of last week show a continued and most gratifying improvement in the sanitary condition of the city. THE LOST BOY.

The editor of the Sandusky Mirror was formerly Warden of the Ohio Penitentiary. He gives the following as one of the incidents which occurred while he had the control of the institution:

I had been a few months in charge of the prison, when my attention was attracted to, and a deep interest felt, in the numerous boys and young men who are confined therein, and permitted to work in the same shops with the old and hardened convicts. This interest was more increased on every evening, as I saw them congregate in gangs, marching to their silent meals and thence to their gloomy bed-rooms, which are more like living sepulchres, with iron shrouds, than sleeping apartments. These young men and boys being generally the shortest in their height, brought up the rear of the companies, as they marched to the t rrible "look step," and consequently must easily attracted attention. To see many youthful forms and bright countenances, mingled with the old and hardened sounds of whose voices betokened vice, malice and crime, was sickening to the soul. But there was one among the boys, a lad of about seventeen years of age, who had particularly attracted my attention, not from anything superior in his countenance or general appearance, but by the look of utter despair which ever sat upon his brow, and the silent, uncomplaining manner in which he submitted to all the hardships and degradations of prison life. He was often complained of, by both officers and men, and I thought unnecessarily, for light and trivial offences against the rules of propriety, yet he had no excuse or apology, and never denying the charge. He took the reprimand, and once the punishment, without a tear or a murmur, almost as a matter of course, seeming thankful that it was no worse. He had evidently seen better days, and enjoyed the light of home, parents and friends, if not the luxuries of life. But the light of hope seemed to have gone out—his health was poor—his frame frail, and no fire beamed in his dark eye. I thought, every night I saw him march to his gloomy cell, that I would go to him and learn his history; but there were so many duties to perform, so much to learn and do, that day after day passed, and I would not go him. Having learned that his name was Arthur Lamb, and that his crime was burglary and larceny, indicating a very bad boy for one so young. He had already been three years, and had two more to serve. He never could endure his sentence, and his countenance indicated he felt it. He had worked at stone-cutting on the State-house, hence my opportunities for seeing him were less than though he had worked in the prison yard; still his pale face haunted me day and night, and I resolved on the next Sabbath as he came from Sabbath School, I would speak for him and learn his history. It happened, however, that I was one day in a store, waiting for the transaction of some business, and having picked up an old newspaper, I had read and re-read, while delayed, until at last my eyes fell upon an advertisement of "A Lost Boy. Information wanted of a boy named Arthur, ——." (I will not give his real name for perhaps he is still living.) and then followed a description of the boy, exactly corresponding with that of the convict, Arthur Lamb. Then there was somebody who cared for the poor boy; if, indeed, it was him—perhaps a mother, his father, his brothers and sisters, who were searching for him. The advertisement was nearly a year old, yet I doubted not, and as soon as the convicts were locked up I sent for Arthur Lamb. He came, as a matter of course, with the same pale, uncomplaining face and hopeless gait, thinking, no doubt, that something had gone wrong and had been laid to his charge.

I was examining the Convict's Register, when I looked up, there he stood—a perfect image of despair! I asked him his name. He replied "Arthur!" "Arthur what!"—said I eternly. "Arthur ——— Lamb!" said he hesitatingly. "Have you a father or mother living?"

His eye brightened—his voice quivered, as he exclaimed:

"Oh, have you heard from mother? Is she alive? and tears, which I had never seen him shed before, ran like great rain drops down his cheeks. As he became calm from suspense, I told him I had not heard from his parents, but that I had a paper I wished him to read. He took the advertisement which I had cut from the paper, and as he read it he exclaimed:

"That is me! that is me!" And again ecbs and tears choked his utterance.

I assured him the advertisement was all I could tell him about his parents—and that as I requested information, I desired to know what I should write in reply. The advertisement directed information to be sent to the Christian Chronicle, New York.

"Oh, do not write," said he, "it will break poor mother's heart!"

I told him I must write, and that it would be a lighter blow to his mother's feelings to know where he was, than the terrible uncertainty which must haunt her mind day and night. So he consented, and taking him to my room, I drew from him in substance the following story:

His father was a respectable and wealthy mechanic in an interior town of the State of New York. That at the holding of the State Agricultural Fair in his native town, he got acquainted with two stranger boys, who persuaded him to run away from home and go to the West. He foolishly consented, with high hopes of happy times, new scenes and great fortune. They came as far as Cleveland, where they remained several days. One morning the other two boys came to his room early, and showed him a large amount of jewelry, etc., which they said they had won at cards during the night. Knowing that he was in need of funds to pay his board, they pressed him to take some of it, for means to pay his landlord. But before he had disposed of any of it, they were all arrested for burglary, and as a portion of the property taken from the store which had been robbed was found in his possession, he too was tried, convicted and sentenced. He had no friends, no money, and dared not write home, so hope sank within him. He resigned himself to fate, never expecting to get out of prison, or to see his parents again.

Upon inquiring of the convicts who came with him on the same charge, I learned that what Arthur had stated was true, and that his only crime was keeping bad company, leaving his home, and unknowingly receiving stolen goods. Questioned separately, they all told the same story, and left no doubt in my mind of the boy's innocence. Full of compassion for the little fellow, I sat down and wrote a full description of Arthur, his condition and history as I obtained it from him—painting the horrors of the place, the hopelessness of being returned there, even if guilty, and the probability of his never living out his sentence, and describing the process to be used to gain his pardon. This I sent according to the directions in the advertisement. But week after week passed and no answer came. The boy daily inquired if I had heard from his mother, until at last "hope long deferred seemed to make his heart sick," and again he drooped and pined. At length a letter came—such a letter! It was from the Rev Dr Ballows, of New York. He had been absent to a distant city, but the moment he read the letter the good man responded. The father of the boy had become almost insane on account of his son's long and mysterious absence; he had left his former place of residence—had moved from city to city—from town to town—and traveled up and down the country seeking the loved and lost. He had spent the most of a handsome fortune; his wife, the boy's mother, was on the brink of the grave pining for her first-born, and would not be comforted. They then lived in a western city, whither they had gone in the hope of finding or forgetting their boy, or that a change of scene might assuage their grief. He thanked me for my letter which he had sent to the father, and promised his assistance to ecanre the convict's pardon. This news I gave to Arthur; he seemed pained and pleased; hope and fear, joy and grief filled his heart alternately; but from thence his eye was brighter, his step was lighter, and hope seemed to dance in every nerve.

Days passed—and at last a man came to the prison, rushing frantically into the office demanding to see the boy. "My boy! my boy! Oh, let me see him!" The clerk, who knew nothing of the matter, calmly asked him for the name of his son. "Arthur—" "No such name on our books; your son cannot be here." "He is here—show him to me. Here, sir, is your own letter; why do you mock me?" The clerk looked over the letter; saw at once that Arthur Lamb was the convict wanted, and rang the bell for the messenger. "There is the warden, sir; it was his letter you showed." The old man embraced me and wept like a child. A thousand times he thanked me, and in the name of his wife, heaped blessings on my head. But the rattling of the great iron door, and the grating sound of its hinges, indicated the approach of Arthur, and I conducted the exciled parent into a parlor. I then led him on to his embrace. Such a hall shriek and agonizing groan as the old man gave when he beheld the altered countenance of his boy, we never stood clad in the deep-aching silence and sobbing a convict's cell in his hand. I never heard before. I have seen similar scenes since and became unmoved to them, but this one seemed as if it would burst my brain.

I drew up and signed a petition for the pardon of the young convict, and such a deep and favorable impression did the letter I wrote in answer to the advertisement, have upon the Directors, that they readily joined in the petition. Gov Wood was easily prevailed upon, in such a case, and the pardon was granted.

Need I describe the old man's joy? How he laughed and wept—walked and ran all more in one hour than he had done for years. When the lad came out in citizen's dress, the aged parent was too full for utterance. He hugged the released convict to his bosom and kissed him—wept and prayed. Grasping my hand he tendered me his purse. His gold watch, anything that I would take. I aimed at the thought of pecuniary reward; I took the old man's arm in mine, and his boy by the hand, and escorted them to the gate, literally to wing their way. I never saw them more. But the young man is doing well, and I dig may he live to reward the filial affection of his parents.

This case may be but one among a hundred where the innocence of the convict is clear but even where guilt is clear there should be pity for youth, and some proper means taken to reclaim them to the paths of rectitude and honor.

[Contributed for the Pittsburg Dispatch by Rev. Joseph Reed Asia Presbyterian Mission, Northern India.]

The tiger hunt is one of the great sporting diversions of India. The native princes conduct on a magnificent scale. But to describe one of their expeditions would exceed my limits, and I prefer to select one that was conducted in a way more simple, and no less interesting, but rather more so.

A young civilian and four or five young military officers had towed as many elephants, some of which had been used in such service before. They engaged the services of some Mahometans who had had experience. These, with the ordinary servants of the gentlemen, the tent pitchers and the cartmen, made up quite a company. They provided themselves with all that they might want to eat for several days two guns to each gentleman and one to each native marksman, and took to the jungle. The natives told them where tigers had killed some cattle, and they proceeded to beat up and down the country for three days without finding them. They killed deer and game birds; but what were these, when they had come out to cope with an antagonist only second to the lion? They despised all minor success, and became exceedingly despondent. To go out with elephants and rifles and double-barreled guns, and bring home only deer and wild fowl, was too ridiculous.

On the fourth day, they early discovered traces of the vicinity of tigers, and followed them up with great care and industry. The tigers evidently preferred retreat to battle, and led the sportsmen a long chase. At last they took shelter in a small morass, covered with tall, coarse grass. They appeared to do this by instinct, as the cover was dense enough to keep them from being made a mark for rifles, and the morass was so soft that the elephants could not follow them there. The gentlemen took their stand with the greater part of their people on one side of the morass, and made all ready for the charge of the tigers. They knew that there were at least two in the grass, and how many more they did not know. The difficulty now was to get the tigers out of their cover, and yet not allow them to go out on the ungarded side and thus escape, and the party was too small to guard both sides. To meet this difficulty they tied a long rope to two elephants, having them sufficiently apart to pass by the ends of the morass and drag the rope over it. To the rope they then attached elephant bells here and there.

They sent the two elephants with this apparatus to the undefended side of the morass, and made them ring the rope in the form of a crescent towards the party on the other side. The rope swept over the ground; the bells thumped and jingled; and the natives on the two elephants shouted. The tigers did not seem to have calculated on such an enemy as this, and declined to attack it; they evidently thought the line of elephants and men less to be dreaded. They were pressed forward through the grass, and it was soon discovered that there were four of them—a fearful number for so small a party to encounter at once. As soon as one of them showed himself a little, he was saluted with a ball or, which wounded him slightly, and enraged him not slightly. With a roar he leaped out of the grass, followed by the others. All thoughts of retreat had been given up, and they dashed at the elephants all at once. One was met by a fatal shot in the head, and fell. Another was severely wounded, but came on. The elephant before him raised his trunk high in the air, and stood on his guard.

The tiger flew at him with the evident design of climbing up his fore leg to get at the man, and was struck by the uplifted trunk and hurled back. Here a second shot placed him dying on the ground. The third, unwounded, effected a lodgment on the head of an elephant, and in an instant more would have torn the officer out of the howdah; but the officer and his servant at this critical moment, both placed bullets in his head, and he fell to the ground to be trampled upon in his agony by the elephant. The fourth tiger seemed to think there was truth in the saying—

"He who fights and runs away,
May live to fight another day;"

and, lashed of enraging the line, as he appeared about to do, he took a flying leap high over the heads of the men on the elephants, baffling their aim, and escaping without a scratch. Thus he saved his skin; and the new successful party next morning returned to their station jubilant and triumphant, having had enough of excitement and gained sufficient glory to last them for a reason.

ANOTHER ASCENT OF MONT BLANC.—In a letter to the London Times, Mr. Eustace Anderson thus describes his recent ascent of Mont Blanc, and the magnificent scene he witnessed:

On the 15th we started from Chamounix, and proceeded, as usual, to the Grands Mulets rocks, where we rested for the night. This part of the ascension is very grand, consisting almost wholly in glacier traveling, and here you see more crevasses and blocks of ice than during the latter part of the ascent.

We found but little difficulty in traversing the glacier, using the ladder only once to cross a large crevasse. On reaching the Grand Mulets, we dined upon the roof of the cabin and prepared to enjoy the sunset; but a thick mist came up which obscured everything, and we feared we should lose the splendid sight. We were veuting our disappointment in loud regrets when a tremendous avalanche descended from one of the Aiguilles in our rear, and in the twinkling of an eye, as by the touch of a magician's wand, the mist rolled away, disclosing the most magnificent sight I ever beheld. In the distance was the setting sun in all his glory. Far as the eye could reach, nothing but mountain tops and ranges could be seen gilded by his rays.

On the left was the crescent moon, at present pale. Dark banks of clouds, some of them in appearance perfectly black, were dispersed here and there upon the horizon and the distant horizon itself appeared like a golden plain in continuation of the earth. Gradually the sun sank, his last glories lingering in rosate tints upon the calotte of Mont Blanc; gradually the horizon changed to green, then to cold; ray the moon increased in brightness, and a single star of large magnitude appeared over the summit of Mont Blanc like a crown of light. The rolling away of the mist was, I presume, caused by concussion of the airs produced by the fall of the avalanche; the effect was surprisingly grand.

A curious law question has arisen in London. A man proposed to a lady, was accepted, but not fulfilling his promise, is now prosecuted. It turns out, however, that he had a wife, and couldn't marry, although "Burkes was willin'." The question therefore arises, "what damage does a lady sustain in not being married to a married man?"

WRONG SIDE OUTWARD.

Or the Difference between Cashmere and Calico

"Did I tell you about it, Eunice?"

"About what?"

"My going to the city wrong side outward."

"What do you mean?" said Eunice.

"Oh, I see you never heard the story, so I will tell you. Two years ago I spent a few weeks with my friends, the Wilmots, near the city of A——. In the family were two young ladies who found it necessary to do a great deal of shopping, and not a little visiting in the city, and of course patronized the railroad connecting their little village with the 'Green Street Depot' to no trifling extent.

"Now you shall see what a handsome and gentlemanly conductor we have on this route," said Bob Wilmot to me, as I took a luxurious cushion-headed car for a 'miscellaneous' trip to A——.

"He is a perfect ideal of a conductor," added Kate; but the car he ever saw," added he is sure to find a place for ladies, and never objects to our bandboxes and carpet bags, as many ill-natured fellows, dressed in a little brief authority, are apt to, and if our dresses are short after a shopping excursion, he offers—Kate's ringlets was interrupted by the starting of the train.

"We were whirled off to A—— in about twenty minutes, yet I had opportunity to notice that the fabulist official was indisputably very considerate and attentive, at all events to our party. While I spend the window which was soiled by damp weather, at a look from Kate, and ordered in Buchanan smoking meekly upon the platform, in the baggage car, at a symptom of faintness from Bell. I could not acknowledge that Fanny Fern should add to her list of models a model conductor, taking this one for her original.

"Arrived at our destination, I was again entertained with my friends' praises of the various merchants and milliners they were accustomed to patronize.

"I always purchase silks at Weaver's, they are so conscientious, and never try to palm off an inferior article upon a customer. At Mrs Lasalle's you will find a superb assortment of gloves and embroideries. The proprietress is a genuine French Countess, and one of the most lady-like persons you ever saw," rattled Bell Wilmot.

"And if you wish to buy shoes, be sure and call at Marvin's; they are so accommodating; they never make wry-faces if you happen to break a string or loosen a clasp, or any other such trifling accident," added Kate.

"This was enough, yet if I needed more to convince me of the superior excellence of these aristocratic shopkeepers, that afternoon's observation would have furnished it. No sooner did the rich brocades, and crapes, and ribbons of the fair Misses Wilmot flutter inside a shop door than every attendant, from proprietor to errand boy, proceeded to den their most obsequious smiles and agreeable deportment. It was an intense, Eunice. The young ladies carried heavy purses, and they were easily persuaded to lighten them.

"The afternoon passed pleasantly and fatigningly enough, in chatting and shopping, in shaking hands with old acquaintances, and trying to bow gracefully to new introductions, and on our return, amid many expressions of satisfaction as our purchases were unrolled and exhibited before Mrs. Wilmot and Aunt Lucy, the girls stored me to confess that the A—— merchants and the A—— and O—— conductor far surpassed any others in the known world.

"And so it was almost daily for the first fortnight of my stay. At one time we called on a celebrated dentist for some trifling tooth operation. He was an acquaintance of Bell's, and she presented him to me as a friend. He was very handsome, and his voice and smile captivating to one who could appreciate music and sunshine. Eunice, I was amazingly pleased, with that man. I who am so fastidious, I fancied him the impersonation of skill and benevolence—the head and the heart—the means and the end—glorious combination for those who set themselves up as the world's healers and teachers. He impressed me as one of the few to whom science may safely commit her priceless treasures, sure that they would be used only for the blessing of humanity. Ah, Eunice! I had only seen the silken side!"

"Pray go on," said Eunice.

"One rainy morning I received a letter from home, giving notice that my young sister was about to take a Western tour with a friend. New dresses, of course, are requisite, wrote my mother, and I wish you to procure and send the articles immediately. Then followed a list of the articles needed.

"This letter had been longer than usual on the route; that moment, I knew sister Bib, amid a sympathizing coachee of waiting milliners, marveled at my long delay.

"The articles must be purchased that very day, raining as it was, and moreover I must go alone; for Bell and Kate had gone to bed with hair in curl-papers, and novels under their pillows. Toward noon the rain abated, and I notified my friends of my determination to go to A——. The young ladies stared with astonishment.

"To-morrow I will be at your service," said Bell, but not to-day. Why, you're crazy—look at the clouds—you'll take a dreadful cold—don't get satin striped tissue; it frays shockingly.

I dressed, walked to the station, but a few rods distant, and found myself half an hour too early. Very soon the clouds lowered, and rain fell in sestarnets. Nevertheless, I stubbornly adhered to my determination, the more stubbornly that I knew the girls would ridicule me without mercy if I returned. But I looked at my dress and thought of my bonnet; and was thankful that the old brown veil I found crumpled in my pocket would protect it. My mantilla was of watered silk, handsomely trimmed, and I remembered a lady told me that water would spoil it. How foolish I had been to wear it.

"Well, Eunice, what do you suppose I did? I turned it wrong side outwards. It was lined with the usual black muslin from which the gloss had disappeared in spots. I was the only occupant of the ladies' saloon, and enjoyed the full benefit of an eight by ten looking glass. I glanced in it, and seeing what a ludicrous figure my old veil and rusty outer garment made in contrast with my fine cashmere traveling dress with its richly trimmed basque, the idea of going to the city thoroughly disguised, at once presented itself. The skirt of my dress was separate from the body, and I had lined it for comfort in winter with an old gingham dress clean and whole, but I must confess sadly faded. Well, I turned this wrong side outward, also.

"You don't mean that you went to the city in that style," said Eunice.

"I did, and enjoyed it, too, convinced that I was doing a sensible thing. But you shall hear. Scarcely was my old toilet completed, when the whistle sounded, and drawing the thick veil tightly over my face, I made my way to the nearest car. And now commenced the development. The handsome and gentlemanly conductor nearly knocked me over in the doorway, in his willingness to pioneer a lady in blue silk with four flounces, a satchel, a hat-box, a parasol, and a lap-dog, safely out upon the platform. Returning while I stood gazing vacantly at the rows of hats and boots, none of which moved to relinquish a seat in my behalf, the model conductor pointed to an uncomfortable corner seat, between a black woman with a baby, and a white woman with two babies. Of course I accepted it, and the evening pranks of the little African made my hard seat endurable.

"Well, I reached the city, and made my way to Weaver's fashionable store. The skies were weeping briskly, and I, scarping a blue cotton umbrella, probably did not call up golden visions to the eyes of the young gentlemen clerks who lounged upon the counters, or sat with feet elevated. When I inquired for silks, tissues, grenadines, any fine summer dress goods, there was one undivided stare.

"It would take too much time to tell how some stammer silks, and half cotton barèges were at last produced, and how I eventually convinced them that I understood their proper quality. Suffice to say, I purchased nothing there, though tempting articles were finally displayed before me, but suited myself at less pretentious establishments.

"Next, to Mrs Lasalle's I went, whose anathemas upon me for detecting the cotton laces presented me for linen, I will not repeat, but must say that they were delivered in a very uncountry-like rage, though in excellent French.

"I did not try the shoe store that day, but in passing Dr. B.'s office something prompted me to enter. I had been aunused, and not the least disappointed by my fastidiousness experience, but now a little anxiety mingled with much curiosity. I thought me of a nervous tooth-ache that had robbed me of sleep for a portion of several nights, and which I had assiduously concealed from the family, chiefly because Aunt Lucy's infallible remedy in such cases was whisky and ginger, boiling hot, a remedy to me infinitely worse than the disease. Perhaps Dr. R. could name something less objectionable.

"I rang grimly, and was admitted. The Doctor, who was talking and smoking with a dashing young man, glanced at my dress as I entered, and without further notice, went on with the conversation. Finally, I instituted a slight cough, and he turned toward me, with—

"Well, old lady, what is the matter with you?"

I inquired in a suffering voice, "the best cure for an aching tooth?"

"Crooked iron, marm, applied cold, is the best thing, and animal magnetism is next best. Ever try it, hey?" And the man of science winked and grinned to his companion, who, in turn, ejected a quid of tobacco from his mouth, quite near my poor gingham skirt, and laughed immoderately. In two seconds I was in the street, and on my way to the depot, questioning within myself, whether there are such qualities yet remaining in our world as unbought honesty and kindness. My doubts were to be removed. The train stood at the depot as I came in sight, and I hurried myself as fast it should depart without me.

"I managed to gain a seat, but had no time to purchase a ticket, and when the conductor came I felt for my porte-monnaie to pay the necessary fare. It was gone. An exploration of my pocket to its lowest depths availed nothing, and I was in a dilemma. I explained the matter to him, asserting him I should leave the cars at the next station, and would there borrow the amount. He left me muttering his suspicions that the story was a lie and went his rounds.

Soon after some one touched my elbow, and on looking round I was greeted by a lank, rugged, uncombed Irishman, who smiled and held something towards me. It was my portemonnaie.

"Faith, and havn't I been searchin' the cars for ye this blessed while," said he; "sure it was meself that saw ye take yer handkerchief from yer pocket, and send this 'ere thing a sploring upon the paving stones. And yo didn't see Pat Crugan after ye—(with if I hadn't been comin' the same road, a precious hunt ye might have had for it.' Bless the untutored, uncorrupted Irish heart!

"And now I was at O—— station; and the sun, though low in the west, was shining brightly. I went directly to the ladies' room, and in five minutes emerged therefrom a well-dressed lady, with an uncovered bonnet of the latest importation. As the conductor crossed the platform to give moving orders, I stepped up and tendered my fare, saying my purse had been found and returned to me. You have a vivid imagination, Eunice; if, you can picture the countenance of that gentleman.

"Did you relate your adventures to the young ladies?" said Eunice.

"No, indeed! When the goods came, they were delighted with them, affirming that 'this silk came from Weaver's; no other merchant had anything like it; and this lace from Mrs. Lasalle's, they remembered seeing it there?' I kept my own counsel; and now, Eunice, what do you think of it all?"

"I think the wisdom you purchased was cheap enough, et all events. Yet there is one other place to which I wish you had gone."

"And where is that?"

"To church," said Eunice! [Ohio Farmer.

SPELLING WORDS MORE THAN ONE WAY.—Several years ago," when the country was new," Hon. Nyrum Reynolds, of Wyoming county, enjoyed quite a reputation as a successful pettifogger. He wasn't very well posted up either in "book larnin" or the learning of the law, but relied principally upon his own native tact and shrewdness—his stock of which has not failed him to this day. His great success created quite an active demand for his services. On one occasion he was pitted against a "smart upperring," well-dressed limb of the law from a neighboring village, who made considerable sport of a paper which Reynolds had submitted to the court, remarking, among other things, that "all law papers were required to be written in the English language, and that the one under consideration, from its bad spelling and penmanship, ought, in fairness, therefore, to be excluded." "Gen'l'mee of the jury," said Reynolds, when he summed up"—and every word weighed a pound—"the learned counsel on the other side finds fault with my ritin' and spellin' as the right the merits of the case depended on such matters! I'm agin lugging in any such outside affairs, but I will say that a man must be a great fool who can't spell a word more than one way!" The jury sympathized with Judge R., and rendered a decision in favor of his client. ☞ The prevalence of incorrect notions upon the subject of Medicine is a great cause of misery. Medical practice should not be governed by principles or morals deduced from the accidents of long experience and hearsay revelations. How important, then, that no medicine should be taken by invalids unless it emanates from the mind of a medical man, of judgment, and the strictest probity. Holland's German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, Philadelphia, is a preparation on the footing of the most celebrated practitioners of modern times, as will be seen in the annexed testimonials, which are the strongest evidences that the article is prepared carefully and scientifically, in producing the effects the proprietor intended. It is used by many of the best of our physicians of Philadelphia in cases of debility of the digestive organs and biliary apparatus, and the diseases arising therefrom. We therefore recommend the medicine to suffering people. See advertisement.

We invite the special attention of parents and guardians to the advantages here offered to young men desirous of a liberal collegiate or business education. The location of the college in a quiet valley, ten miles from a town—the freedom, consequently, from temptation to vice—the full and thorough course of study—the experience and ability of the Faculty—the wholesome discipline—the facilities for lectures afforded by ample apparatus, libraries and cabinets, and, withal, the cheapness of tuition and healthiness of position, cannot fail to secure to this college, as heretofore, a liberal patronage.

ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION.

THE ERRORS IN THOSE PREACHING IT AND THOSE SEEKING IT.

Entire sanotification—what a sublime sub- It implies the complete renewal of the in holiness, after the image of God; the re destruction in that heart of the works the devil; the bringing all the feelings emotions of it under the influence of love; the removal of that tendency that is in it to fly off from Christ, and the ing it under a sweet influence by which continually drawn to him as its centre, and which it revolves, while it abides in Christ. Surely, there cannot a more sub- subject employ the tongue or pen of or sage! And it is a subject on which has been said, and much is now being much that is scriptural, and much that scriptural.

feeling deeply interested on this heavenly ject, we give attention to what is said by various instructors who come under our eration. We have, ourselves long con- ined the views of this subject presented Wesley, Fletcher, Watson, and the rest of standard writers of the Wesleyan Method- body and the M. E. Church rational and ptural; but at a late camp meeting which attended, we heard teaching from some who assumed the right to teach, which we think contained errors equally at variance th Methodism, reason and Scripture. At ed Lion Camp Meeting, the one referred to, e promiscuous assembly, some no doubt erously inquiring after a deeper work of ce, but with very vague ideas of what is ded in entire consecration to God were cussed and obscure. We heard it said, You may every one of you be sanctified w before you leave this place—this very ment. Only consecrate yourselves to God, d believe he accepts your offering, and e are holy, just because he says, I will ac- t you. And surely this is not believing thout a reason. It is believing on the rd of God. And can we want a better son? Why, ye are not your own! con- crate yourselves, then, to God, and believe u are holy, for you are holy." &c.

This, we think, leaves repentance out of question altogether. We find that all ough the divine word the command is, ect and believe; and we hold that it is dressed as much to the seekers of a clean rt as to the seekers of pardon and adop- n.

It was further said, "If you could weep ams of blood, you could not induce the viour to be more willing to save you than e cow is." We never thought penitent ars were shed to induce the Saviour to be more willing to save us than he now is; we ought they were the natural consequence a broken and contrite spirit, and it is to ch the Lord has promised to look. This the sacrifice he has promised to accept; d any sacrifice, which, without this, we ay bring, he calls "a vain oblation." The ove mentioned statement could not have en made to induce mourners to look away m their tears to Christ, for indeed there as very little weeping, if any; we saw one.

Again, this saying, "Consecrate yourselves God, and believe he accepts the sacrifice, d ye are holy," which we heard so much leaves the agency of the Holy Spirit out the question. The transaction is altogether ween the Father and the individual; but e Scriptures constantly represent the Di- ine Spirit as the great purifying agent who pplies the precious blood of atonement, and ho sits as a refiner and purifier of silver. gain, it was said to seekers of entire sancti- ication, "You have made the consecration, ave you not? You believe God accepts your offering, just because he has promised o do so. Then believe you are holy—you are entirely the Lord's—you are holy, and ive God the praise. That is believing the ord of God, and that is surely not believing without a reason. Why, it is the easiest hing in the world, the simplest! It is just o consecrate yourselves to the Lord, and be- ieve he accepts your offering, and you are oly," &c.

This, we think, is fraught with error. In the first place, it makes the individual the judge of his own heart, and of the entireness of the consecration, which, we think, belongs to God. The Psalmist says, "Search me, O God, and try me, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." But these put language like this into the months of individuals: "O Lord, there is no wicked way in me; I know all my heart, and there is in it no reserve; I don't need to be tried, for I am an offering entire to thee, and I am holy, I am clean, for thou hast promised to make me so, if I would comply with certain conditions, and I am so sure that I have complied with the conditions, that, though I have no evidence that thou hast cleansed me, I know thou hast, for it could not be otherwise without forfeiting thy faithfulness; therefore, I will profess to all the world that thou hast cleansed me, and I will go on professing it until I die, if thou dost see proper to withhold the evidence." Perhaps they would start alarmed at the charge here brought, but this is plainly implied in the spurious impressions that are urged by those teachers, whether they are aware of it or not. Are not the light and heat of the sun evidences to me that it shines? But if darkness prevails and vegetation droops, will not people suspect my sanity if I insist on their believing the enlightenment! On the contrary, when I see its influences all around, can I help believing it shines? Do not I see it in its own light, and feel its effects? Just so when God's Spirit works in the heart, his light shines upon his work, and there is no difficulty about knowing it.

Again, it makes one believe God says one thing, because he says another. Thus, it makes one believe that God says, I have sprinkled clean water upon you, and you are clean, because he says, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean." God requires us to wait on him, believing, for the sprinkling; these forbid us to do so, because we believe we have made the consecration, and they tell us we sin against God every moment we refuse to do so, which implies that we are able to judge of the whole matter without the light of God's Spirit shining on his work.

As to the expression, "It is the easiest thing in the world," we regard the matter in a different light. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? O, say these, it is the easiest thing in the world, it is perfectly simple. But, with reference to all dwellers upon earth, God says not one, but of himself he says, "I will cleanse the blood I have not cleansed, I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean; from all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you." It requires omnipotence to perform it. It is a great work. If God were to operate on us as mere machines, we would set no bounds to omnipotent power; but his plan is to have us co-workers with him; and it is not an easy thing to get the human heart and mind and will to an entire surrender to God. It is easy to get some persons to sing, even on their knees—

"Take my body spirit, soul;
Only thou possess the whole."

But to get them to enter into the spirit of this consecration, to fully renounce all right to themselves, to give up all legislating into the hands of God, so as to say, give or withhold what thou seest best, only give me thyself, is a different thing, and not so easy. Neither is it very easy to get the people so to comprehend what the gospel of Christ offers to us as to believe for it, and it is done unto us according to our faith; but this faith must be consistent with the divine arrangement, and it requires much searching of the Scriptures and much self-examination, aided by the Divine Spirit, before we can see the divine arrangement and its adaptation to our wants.

After this preparatory process, which we with the standard Methodist writers, think necessary, then comes the exercise of that faith which claims the blessing now; and thus entire sanctification is both progressive and instantaneous. But instead of being the easiest thing in the world, it is a work that none but God can perform; and he will not do it without our co-operation in every part of it. And it requires all our energies; for all earth, and all hell, and all the carnality of our own hearts are opposed to it. But, blessed be God! his omnipotence is always present to aid us, and all these must fall before it. But this regarding it as an easy thing has caused a host of mushroom professions to spring up, which have but an ephemoreal existence, and have brought much reproach on the holy cause.

Another evil is, that justification is greatly underrated. Give the Lord your whole heart say they, and you are entirely the Lord's; you are entirely sanctified, which conveys the idea that one may have pardon and acceptance if he surrenders a part to God; and the opinion prevails, to a great extent, especially among the young, that conformity to the world, and a great deal which the Bible condemns, is not at all inconsistent with a profession of justification; indeed, they think the Lord made very little demand on them while they profess this, while entire sanctification alters their obligations. We do not understand giving a part of the heart to God, nor do we understand being justified and condemned at the same time; but we do understand the difference between God controlling evil tempers and evil desires and rooting them out. We understand the difference between sin having the dominion over us and God working in us so that we have entire dominion over sin, and have the approval of God, and the peace which it brings, and in order to do this, we must give him all our hearts; but it is a further work in those hearts which have been given to God, and in which his peace rules, to have all disturbing influences set right, all the affections and emotions brought under the influence of love. Here, we think, is the difference between justification and regeneration and entire sanctification; and not the one giving a part of the heart to God, and the other the whole.

Pain at the abuse of gospel truth and concern for some sincere persons, who are living beneath their privilege, because they have been led to look for it in this way, and find it does not lead them into the rest of perfect love, has called forth this article. No one's person is assailed; error alone is aimed at. There was much that is good mixed with those errors, much that is excellent said on the duty and importance of self-consecration. But this is so much the worse, for it serves as a passport for the errors. And we think, if those who would "apprehend that for which they are apprehended of God in Christ Jesus," would, seeking the light of God's Spirit, examine the Scriptures, and call into their aid Wesley's "Plain account of Christian Perfection," or Fletcher's "Address to Imperfect believers," or "The Experience of Mrs. Hester Ann Rogers," or "Wilbur Fisk," or some such, or Mr. Foster's book on "Christian Holiness;" any or all of these, and a number of others of the same kind, approved of by the M. E. Church, we think they will soon reach the desire of their hearts. This may be a slower way than the other, but many have found it a sure way.

The Bible is the only unerring standard—the Holy Spirit is the great teacher. May we all keep close to the one, and pray much for the assistance of the other!

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

EDUCATION OF MINISTERS' CHILDREN.

Mr. Editor—In a former communication my object was to try and awaken a deeper interest among the ministers, members and friends of our Church in the Conference Education Society, the object of which is the education of the children of our itinerant ministers and the orphans of those who have died in the work.

My mind has been directed to an enlarged view of this subject, and its importance is such that I think it will commend itself most favorably to the friends of Methodism within the bounds of the Alabama Conference. We expect soon to have two colleges in operation, one at Greensboro and one at Auburn—both eligible locations, and admirably suited to meet the wants and wishes of both East and West Alabama. These will go into operation under such favorable auspices as to give assurance of great and extended usefulness, each having funds sufficient to erect the necessary buildings and supply the proper apparatus; they will also be respectably endowed. This will be done, however, to a very great extent, by the friends residing in their respective vicinities.

Permit me, therefore, to suggest to our members and friends residing in all parts of the Conference, the practicability, as well as the great importance of raising $50,000 for each of these institutions, to be vested for the express object of boarding and educating the sons of our itinerant ministers, and the orphans of our deceased ministers, and further, for the education of such young men as are in indigent circumstances, of clear heads, of deep piety, and who, withal, give satisfactory evidence that they are moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel. Many such there are who have not the means of obtaining such an education as would prepare them for more extended usefulness, but who would gladly and gratefully to God avail themselves of all the means within their reach to do most faithfully and efficiently their Master's work. But I feel that it is unnecessary for me to argue the importance of this proposition. Its bare suggestion will find a warm and ready response from every enlarged and Christian heart. Who among us but owes much to our ministry, who have been the instruments, in the hands of God, of awakening us to a sense of our danger, and then in pointing us to the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world? To whom do we, as parents, look with anxious hearts for the salvation of our children? To the ministry! Then, while they are giving to us and our children spiritual things, will we not give them and their children temporal things? Are we not, as laymen of the Church, as much bound by the grace of God to do good in our sphere and with our means as is the minister? While he should consecrate himself, his wife and his children, also his property, (if he have any,) to God, we, too, should consecrate our all to God, and be ever ready to do good as we have opportunity. Where, then, is a wider, more beautiful and inviting field of usefulness than fitting such pious and promising young men as feel that they are called of God to preach the gospel, to be workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. There are many such who would study to show themselves approved unto God, but then want of means precludes them from such an education as is necessary for them to become leaders of the blind. Who does not desire a part in a cause so noble and heavenly? Who would not gladly participate in the cultivation of so glorious a field, the very gleanings of which would be better than all the vintage of the fashions and honors of this world?

While I would earnestly advocate the claims of our male colleges and the education of young men, I would not be understood as feeling less solicitous for the education of the daughters of our ministers, and the importance of placing the Centenary Institute in a situation to give as great collegiate advantages as are enjoyed by the males. This can only be done by an endowment of fifty thousand dollars. For what should we live, and what should most absorb our attention here? Is great wealth best for us or our children. All concur in saying that it is not. Is it not the true object of life to do good, to love mercy, to glorify God, die in peace and get to Heaven? This is the only object that can ennoble life and make it lovely and of good report. Then the best legacy to be left to our children, when we are gone, is a pious and useful life, and the evidence that living and dying we are the Lord's, and that in death our heads were pillowed on the breast of a dear Saviour, and we breathed our lives "out sweetly there."

There are other literary institutions under the patronage of the Alabama Conference which ought to have like facilities of extended usefulness. Our people have all the ability, and I trust, the willingness to place them in honorable competition in this field of pious effort to do good.

Some limitations and restrictions should be used in accomplishing the great work suggested, which I cannot now discuss.

And now, brethren, let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and good works. Who will move in this matter?

Yours, truly, H. A. BAKER.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

ONE OR TWO AGAIN.

Mr. Editor—I am so thoroughly under the conviction that we should have but one Methodist denominational college in Alabama, that I again importune you with a word or two upon that subject. The design of the Conference, as announced before the meeting of its delegates, at Summerfield, was a result worthy of the deliberations of that intelligent body. One college!—one Methodist college! The fact that we are able to support only one ought to preclude the idea of two. And are we to sacrifice the interests of the Methodist denomination to the individual interest of any portion of our country? I think not. Suppose that Marion, Selma, Mobile, Montgomery, all had said we have good subscriptions, and therefore we must all have a college. Is that a reason why we should give them colleges—by division lose all our strength? Let it be remembered that Professor Garland has accepted the Presidency of our State University; that he will exercise great personal influence in the State, being highly and deservedly esteemed by every one who knows him. And now, with Marion, Spring Hill, LaGrange, the State University, and Oxford, Miss., close by, all of which will attract the students of all denominations in their respective vicinities, and some out of them, shall we go and build up two more colleges—one in Greensboro', one in Auburn. Where are the students to come from? It costs something to build a college, and something to support one. It will take about $200,000 to endow the professorship, so as to command the first talent in our country, and this is what we proposed to do. One hundred thousand dollars for professors' houses, college buildings, library and apparatus, I should think, was little enough; making in all $300,000. With this sum we can erect a Princeton, a Yale. Imagine such an institution in our midst, and what would be the result? The young men from every portion of our own and bordering States—not of the Methodist only, but of all denominations—would flock to her splendid halls, and there, protected from the unfortunate influences that generally surround them, and finding every facility to scientific research and the acquirement of classic lore, they would go forth well prepared to climb the rugged path that leads to virtue, honor, fame. Soon the literary atmosphere would be felt in every portion of our State—our homes be made happier, and the devotees to learning and religion richly multiplied. Parents send their children to Yale and other colleges because they believe them to be well endowed—to furnish every facility, and to be under the guidance of superior talent. But few like to send their sons to a poor college. They take it for granted that the library is poor, the apparatus is poor, the teaching is poor; and we do not want to found a poor college here. Get enough already. We want to erect a Yale, and it can be done. Can Greensboro' do it? Can Auburn do it? Or can we not build up a Yale at each place? No! We must unite. United, we may rear an institution that will combine all the elements of success; one that will be respected by all denominations; whose fame will be trumpeted afar in our fair land, and render the names of its founders immortal. Divided, our gigantic structure dwindles to an edifice of less splendid proportions—a name without a substance—a college without a HOPE.

POETRY NOT PIETY.

An exquisite relish for music is no test of the influence of Christianity; neither are many of the exquisite sensibilities of our nature. When a kind mother closes the eyes of her expiring babe, she is thrown into a flood of sensibility; and soothing to her heart are the sympathy and prayers of an attending minister. When a gathering neighborhood assemble to the funeral of an acquaintance, one pervading sense of regret and tenderness sits on the face of the company; and the deep silence, broken only by the solemn utterance of the man of God, carries a kind of pleasing religiousness along with it. The sacredness of the hallowed day, and all the decencies of its observation, may change the affections of him who loves to walk in the footsteps of his Father, and every recurring Sabbath may bring to his bosom the charm of its regularity and quietness. Religion has its accomplishments, and in these there may be something to soothe and to fascinate, even in the absence of the appropriate influences of religion. The deep and tender impression of a family bereavement is not religion; the charm of all that sentimentalism that is associated with many of its solemn and affecting services is not religion. They may form the distinct folds of its accustomed drapery; but they do not, any or all of them put together, make up the substance of the thing itself.—Dr. Chalmers.

QUENCHING THE SPIRIT.

A few years ago, as I was laboring in our Western wilds, an individual rode up, and taking me by the hand, inquired earnestly, 'Will you go and see a dying young man? He is in agony, and says there is no hope.'

There was no time to be lost. I went with him. After climbing many a rocky ascent, I came to an open path, which soon conducted me to the house. Anxious ones stood weeping without, and soon held both my hands, conducting me up a long flight of steps to the room of the dying man. Not a word was spoken. Other hearts were too full, and my own was sinking beneath a weight of responsibility. Earnestly seeking the Divine blessing, I ascended the steps.

On reaching the top, a venerable mother approached me, saying, 'I'm glad you have come. Do speak to my son; perhaps he may yet be saved.' I pressed the hand that led me in, and in a moment the most heart-rending scene was before me. A young man in the agonies of death, rolling his eyes and flinging his arms wildly about him, crying out, 'O, I am lost! Hell is before me! In a few moments I shall be among the damned!' He ceased speaking, and I feared his spirit had taken flight for the regions of woe. He soon revived again. Seizing the opportunity I repeated slowly the words, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' 'The blood of Jesus cleanseth us from all sin.' Seeing I had his attention, I spoke of the free, unmerited mercy of Christ, able to save the chiefest of sinners, saying, 'There is hope for the repentant sinner, even at the eleventh hour.'

He replied, 'No there is no hope. Once I might have been saved, but now it is too late, too late.' Then, with a groan of the deepest despair, he exclaimed, 'O, that I had heard them!' In vain, I urged him to cast himself unreservedly on the sovereign mercy of God, as 'able to save unto the uttermost all that come unto God through him.' He only replied, 'I have resisted the Holy Ghost, there is no hope.' I proposed prayer. He only replied, 'Pray for others, not for me.' I knelt. Perfect silence reigned, save as a low, deep moan came from the dying bed. I tried to commit him to the mercy of Christ.

I spoke to him again, but he hopelessly said, 'It is of no use. I am hastening to eternity.' No tear fell. He manifested no contrition for sin, no ray of hope. A wild, piercing cry wrung our hearts with anguish, and he sank upon his pillow.

Reviving yet again, he said, thoughtfully, 'Once I was brought to feel myself a sinner. For days and weeks I was anxious about my soul. Something said, now is the accepted time; my heart said, not now, to-morrow. But when to-morrow came I still put it off. My gay companions laughed at my seriousness, and tried to allure me back to the follies of sin. I said to myself, I will go with you to-day, but to-morrow I will not.'

Pleased with present victory, they led him on from pleasure to vice, the card-table and social bar. He took wine, he laughed, and was the gayest of the gay. Conscience raised her warning voice and bade him pause, but he rushed heedlessly on.

He stated that one pleasant Sabbath morning a young man met him when on his way to join his companions, and taking him cordially by the hand, said, 'Friend, you seem to be enjoying yourself; come with me, and we will have better enjoyment still.' He joined him in a walk, which ended at the house of God. Startled, he drew back, and would have fled from the sanctuary, had not his friend affectionately urged, 'Do come in a little while.' He yielded to the entreaty, resolving it should be only a little while, and took his seat among the worshipers. Here conscience, as if roused to a final conflict, reminded him of broken resolutions, and bade him seek Christ to-day. 'No, not to-day,' was his response to the gentle whispers of the Spirit. He remained through the morning services. His friend, encouraged by his stay, drew him into a Bible class, where the teacher faithfully enforced the duty of immediate preparation for eternity. The young man was impressed, and sat thoughtfully revolving the question, 'Shall I, or not?' I will decide now, or else put it forever out of my mind.' The class was dismissed. The words, To-day prepare to meet thy God rung in his ears as he walked down the aisle.

The decision was made: 'Not to-day, but to-morrow I will. From that moment all was darkness, terror and dismay. Ere the night had passed over him, he was seized with a malignant fever, which in two days left him in the state I found him. 'And now, he added, 'I have oursed my Maker, and am dying without hope.' I still urged him to flee to Christ, but in vain. Despair only was his. One deep groan and shriek of terror, and he expired with these fearful words on his lips, "Lost! lost! lost!"

Quench not the spirit of God. Heed its gentle admonitions. Once grieved away, it may never return, till in another world its memory pierce your soul with anguish past hope. 'You might, but you would not. I entreated, but you refused to hear. I stood long waiting, again and again urging your acceptance of offered mercy. Now it is too late; the door of mercy is shut forever shut.'—American Missionary.

Later from California, etc.

GREAT SLAUGHTER OF EMIGRANTS BY THE INDIANS ON THE PLAINS.

By the arrival on Monday evening of the Crescent City, we have received files of San Francisco papers from the 19th of August to the 5th of September. From the news summary of the Alta California we extract the following items:

The steamer day has been changed from the 1st and 16th to the 5th and 20th of each month.

The 21st August, the primary election day of the Democrats, was remarkable throughout for street fights and bloody encounters.

Jose Lamente, an intelligent Chilean, connected with the editorial department of the Sud Americano, of this city, stabbed his wife, Maria Martinez, on the 21st August. The victim died two days after. A domestic dispute is the alleged cause of the deed. Lamente is now in the county jail, pronounced by some insane.

The brigantine Amphitrite arrived from the Amoor river on the 21st August, having left that river on the 15th July, touching at Sitka on her way to this port. Again, a small town on a river of that name, was visited, but found to be deserted. A proclamation was issued declaring that private property would be respected. A small iron steamer belonging to the Russians was blown up.

A slight shock of earthquake was felt in San Francisco on the morning of the 28th August, at about three o'clock.

The new custom-house and post-office is nearly completed, and meets with general admiration.

The Whig party has revived, nominated a ticket, and issued a party newspaper entitled the Whig. They exhibit much enthusiasm, and have made strong nominations.

State.

The first trip on the Sacramento Valley Railroad was made on the 18th August. It was a short excursion from the Sacramento levee to Seventeenth street. The train, consisting of three platform cars, was densely crowded. Invited guests from all parts of the State partook of the occasion, which forms an era in the annals of California.

A Temperance Nominating Convention assembled at Sacramento on the 21st August.

A man named Amiel Bricknell, proprietor of a public house on Eighth street, Sacramento, was shot and mortally wounded on the 26th August, by his son-in-law, Samuel Garrett. Bricknell died soon after. Garrett had run away with Bricknell's daughter; upon his return the latter assaulted him and was shot.

Gen. C. H. S. Williams, the Temperance nominee for Judge of the Supreme Court, has declined. Myron Norton's name has been substituted.

Oregon.

The news from Oregon is up to the 27th ult. The Colville gold mines, first pronounced a humbug, are now well spoken of again.

Mr Benton, just arrived across the plains, reported a terrible Indian massacre of emigrants this season, at Devil's Gate, on the Sweet Water river. A train of 800, men, women and children, were attacked by the Chieunes Sioux and 150 killed, and all their stock, provisions, etc., captured. The remainder of the train reached Salt Lake City in a starving condition. Among the slain were Gen. Lane's brother and family.

It is reported that 70 whites have been murdered near Fort Colville by the Indians. Lt Derby has just completed the survey of the military road from Salem to Astoria, a distance of one hundred miles.

Sandwich Islands

The new Odd Fellows' Hall at Honolulu, was dedicated on the 16th of July.

The frigate Amphitrite, reports the arrival at Ayau, of the brig Leveret, having on board Messrs Swan & Clifford, the forgers of whaleman's drafts at Honolulu. A Mr Packard was with them. The brig remained at Ayau for a few days, and then sailed for parts unknown.

General.

The Amphitrite reports a whale ship, name unknown, was wrecked on Cape Lowsaburg, (Sea of Ochotsk) previous to July 8th.

China.

The news from China is from Shanghae up to June 30th. There is but little of importance. There were several large American clippers at Foochow, from 800 to 1700 tons burthen. The trade of the past season has been prosperous. It is estimated that at the close of May, an export of altogether of 25,000,000 pounds of tea had been shipped to Great Britain, the United States of America, and Australia. An attempt had been made by the Chinese authorities to levy an inland tax on teas on their way to Foochow. This was promptly resisted by Mr. Consul Medhurst.

Woohang and Hangkow have again fallen into the hands of the rebels.

The San Francisco Herald thus describes the earthquake which was experienced in that city, and at other points, a few days before the sailing of the steamer:

The shock was quite perceptible in the lower portion of the city, but was most severely felt at the Presidio and the Mission Dolores, and along the hills intervening west of the line of Jones street. A family residing in St. Ann's Valley were started from sleep by a violent shaking of the house, which caused a general commotion among the picture frames hanging on the walls, and several articles of furniture were moved from their places. At the Presidio Barracks the inmates were all awakened by the shock, and at the Mission Dolores the inmates of every house were awakened, and in some instances the people rushed into the street in alarm for their personal safety. A rumbling sound, as of a heavily freighted vehicle passing over a bridge, accompanied the shock. A gentleman who arrived here last night from a farm situated near the Coast Range, about six miles south from the Mission, says that the shock was very severe in that vicinity, and in view of this fact, it is not unreasonable to conjecture that the next arrival from the South will bring us news of a heavy earthquake on the lower coast.

A war of extermination has been commenced upon the gangs of murderers and thieves in Calaveras and Amador counties. The Columbia Clipper gives the following particulars of the exciting scenes daily occurring in that region:

The massacre at Rancherin, in Amador county, has so incensed the community that hundreds of men are armed and in pursuit of the murderers. We have it from good authority that thirty Mexicans have been convicted, hung, and shot in Amador and Calaveras counties. On Sunday last, Sheriff Phoenix, his deputy, Mr. Durham, and others, passed through Columbia on the track of three murderers; they went to Sonora, and from there to Salvado, a Mexican camp near Chinese, where they corralled some suspicious looking greasers—this was in the night. The Mexicans made the attack and killed Sheriff Phoenix. One of the gang was killed and another was wounded, the balance made their escape. Sheriff Phoenix's remains were brought to Sonora, where they were interred with Masonic honors, he having been a member of the Order. The murder of the Sheriff has caused great excitement in our county, and it is now under patrol. On the arrival of the news here of the murder of Sheriff Phoenix, our citizens called a meeting and appointed a committee to select a force of efficient men to scour the country, and arrest all suspicious looking Mexicans who cannot give a good account of themselves.

Another committee was appointed to collect contributions to pay the necessary expenses of the men—the meeting was then adjourned until 8 o'clock P. M. this day—Monday. About dark two suspicious looking Mexicans came into town. Mr. John H. Ward and others trailed them to a house kept by a Mexican woman. Mr Ward opened the door, and inquired if there was any man in the house? He was answered there was not. Not being satisfied, he opened the door, when a Mexican presented a pistol and would have shot, had not Mr Ward knocked it down. He then jumped out of the window, and Ward after him; he shot at Ward, then ran about fifty yards, wheeled and fired again. Ward pursued, but being lame, did not overtake him. The alarm was sounded, when a large concourse of people assembled, and a force was appointed to guard the town. A feeling to exterminate the Mexican race pervades the whole community; and those who are not well known, and cannot produce good evidence as to character, will be forced to leave the country.

By 12 P. M. no less than nine had been captured, and by daylight this number was increased to twelve. Officer Coroner was informed by the principal people of some suspicious Mexicans near the town; he and his posse went and examined a Mexican quarter near Springfield, they discovered a man rolled up in a blanket under a tree. Mr Floyd went to him, and gave him a shake, at the same time presenting a pistol at his head; he told him to arise, and in doing so, two large six shooters were found in his possession, one under his head and the other by his side, cocked. Another man was taken at Jennings' Exchange House. Sheriff Solomon recognized him as a murderer, and has taken him to Sonora.

At S. A. M., Tuesday, Sheriff Clark, of Calaveras, Deputy Durham and others of Amador, arrived from Sonora with a prisoner supposed to be connected with the gang. They were requested to look at the party we had in the jail to see if they could recognize any of them. As soon as they set eyes on Rafael (the man who was found so well armed) they exclaimed that it was the scoundrel who murdered Mrs Dimon and child at the Rancheria, and he was handed over to them, and they hastened to Jackson, where he will go up on the oak tree that so many have been suspended from.

LATER FROM HAVANA.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMSHIP CRESCENT CITY.

The steamship Crescent City, Captain John McGowan, arrived Monday evening from New York via Havana. We are indebted to her purser for the following memoranda:

The United States mail steamship George Law, Capt. Gray, arrived at Havana on the 27th last., with the California mails and passengers. The Crescent City was detained three days and a half at Havana, waiting for the George Law. The royal mail steamship Oregon left San Francisco on the 5th inst, and arrived at Panama on the 21st. The Golden Age arrived at Acapulco, from Panama, on the 5th instant—all well. The steamship Uncle Sam (Nicaragua Line) arrived at Acapulco on the 8th inst., having lost thirty-three passengers by cholera since leaving San Juan. Three more died while lying in port. The epidemic was confined principally among the steerage passengers.

The following is a list of the passengers by the Crescent City:

From New York—John Johnson, A Druids, Gan Hunter, Mrs J Quirk, S. P. Morilly, J Brown, W Brown, Messrs. Brown, Murphy, Burge, Stebbins, Meyer and lady, Phillips, Chilcote, Bertrand, Grassac, Fortner, Daniel and wife, Kelly, Van Horn, Harrison, Nicks, Miss Cohen, Mrs Thius.

From Havana—Mrs J P Fraser, J B Labon, A F Vallalia, Peginlota, Lasa, Brohen, Gaston, Penfield, Miss Belle Clinton, Castillo, Carlin, Sanchey, Neri and wife.

From California—Mrs Jones, D O'Allen and wife, D Abbott, N Lesse, wife and child, Young, Levy, Mrs De Caseres, daughter and son Mr Hole—and 45 in the steerage.

We have received files of Havana papers up to Thursday last, but they contain no news of moment.

A correspondent of the Diario, writing from Porto Rico on the 13th of September, states that an agent had arrived at that place with the object of contracting with the planters for the introduction of coolies. No progress had yet been made in the matter, but as laborers were much needed, the writer thought the idea would be regarded favorably.

A New York correspondent of the Diario gives a shocking picture of the condition of New York society and the depravity of Yankee human nature generally. The affray at the St. Nicholas between Mr. Dean and Captain Wright he speaks of as an affair between a Fifth Avenue aristocrat and a dandy of the Hotel St. Nicholas. A previous number of this paper has an editorial article nearly two columns long, summing up and commenting upon, with the most holy horror, the catalogue of crimes furnished by the newspapers from the States. Dignified employment for the editor of a dignified journal!

GEN. HARNEY'S BATTLE WITH THE INDIANS.—The following letter, which we find in the St. Louis Republican of the 25th, gives some particulars of this affair not previously received. It was written immediately after the battle and may be relied upon as correct:

CAMP ON BLUE WATER RIVER, September 4, 1855

Dear Sir: An express leaves us in a few moments for the States, and I drop you a few lines by it to let you know that Gen Harney had a fight yesterday morning with one of the principal bands of the Brules under Little Thunder, and very nearly, if not quite, "rubbed" it out.

The Indians were encamped on the Blue Water River, a beautiful stream which rises in the sand buttes to the North of the Platte and empties into the Platte about three miles above Ash Hollow. The Indians were discovered as we came in camp at Ash Hollow, on the evening of the 2d, and General Harney at once determined to attack them. Accordingly, the mounted force, under Colonel Cooke, turned their position before daylight next morning, while at daybreak, Major Cady, with a battalion of the Sixth Infantry, attacked in front. The infantry commenced the action, and as the Indians retreated, they all at once found themselves upon the dragoons, who suddenly debouching from their ambuscade, charged the Indians with sabre and revolver, and that between the troopers, the infantry, and the Indians, there was seen as fine a specimen of a free fight as one could wish to see. The fight and chase lasted for two or three hours, at the end of which time there was no Indians to be seen except the prisoners and the dead bodies which were piled up in all directions. The Indians lost about eighty-five in killed, including their chief, Little Thunder, and between sixty and seventy prisoners (women and children); they also captured a large number of horses and mules—to say nothing of wagon-loads of new lodges, buffalo meat, and Indian fixins in general. We lost four killed, four severely, and four very slightly wounded. Two of the wounded will not likely recover, as the arrows which struck them penetrated their lungs.

Our camp is now at the mouth of the Blue Water, where we shall remain a few days, until a small work can be thrown up at Ash Hollow, which will be garrisoned by one company, for the protection of the road.

In the Indian camp many papers and articles were found which had been taken from the mail party.

General Wolfe, overhearing a young officer say, in a very familiar manner, "Wolfe and I drank a bottle of wine together," said: "I think you might say General Wolfe." "No," replied the subaltern, with happy presence of mind, "did you ever hear of General Achilles, or General Cæsar?"

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $2 00 per annum, in advance

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1855

A Call.

Call of Dr Palmer.—The Presbyterian congregation of Lafayette Square, in this city, have given a unanimous call to the Rev B M. Palmer, D D, of South Carolina, and have obligated themselves to pay him $5,000 per annum, if he accepts.—Creole, Oct 3

A pretty loud call! Two fort Methodist ministers of this city, all together, do not get paid $6,000 per annum. Among them are two D.D's and at least that many college men. Some of them, we know, work hard winter and summer.

We hope, on the report of Dr. P's catholic spirit, his ability and evangelical ministery, that he will accept. We make no apology for feeling an interest in the matter. It is an influential post in our social and Christian community, as well as ecclesiastical, he is called to. None more so. Protestantism here is so far one body in Christ as to feel this sympathy. If one member (church) called, all the members unite with it; or, one be honored, all rejoice with it. May it never be otherwise.

Advertising Medium.—We are not going to speak for ourselves now, but for another. It is strange that those who have business in that Empire State, Texas, have not all found out the best medium for advertising in the State—the Texas Christian Advocate, published weekly at Galveston. It has the largest circulation of all papers in that State, and circulates among people who make business. This hint is to our merchants, who desire a share of the increasing trade of that Empire, and others who will improve it.

Relief for the Afflicted.—The German Methodists of New Orleans have greatly shared in the sickness that, we are glad to announce, is well nigh past. The pastor of the Church in the First District, Rev. J. Pauley, has been especially affected in the afflictions of his people. But he was graciously enabled to abide with and minister to them. A collection taken up in the Felicity street Church (Rev. L. Parker, pastor), put well timed and ample hands for dispensing relief.

The Mobile Register, 29th ult., says: 'We have inadvertently failed to allude to the effort made at the Franklin street Methodist Church last Sunday week, in behalf of the Norfolk and Portsmouth sufferers. Though the day was very inclement, and the congregation comparatively thin in consequence, a sermon appropriate to the occasion was delivered by the worthy pastor, Dr. Dorman and a collection taken up which amounted to about $77.'

Personal.—We were glad to see Hon. J. M. Bass in the city this week, looking in good health after his arduous benevolent labors through the epidemic in Baton Rouge.

Fifty Thousand Dollars.—The proposition of Hon. R A. Baker is well timed and generous. We invoke its consideration.

Commencements.—They have good news for the Church. We welcome them.

Harper for October.—We have it thro' McGinnis. It contains a suggestive article on Postal Reforms. A money order system is suggested, as in England and France. One post office to draw on another for all sums under $25. Charging (say two per cent.) enough to pay expenses. This would accommodate newspaper subscribers and agents, and all others who have small payments to make. Larger sums exchange banks generally provide. This system would save most of the money lost by mails.

The Late Prelate.—Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, formally deposed his son, a deacon in his diocese, 15th ult. He has submitted himself to Rome.

The Churchman says: "It is in all respects a most distressing case. We have been made acquainted with all the circumstances of the painful occurrence; and the only conclusion we can arrive at is, that it is a manifestation of approaching insanity," &c.

"There is no one in our Church," continues the Churchman, "with whom the deluded convert has been connected, who has anything to answer for in the sight of God and His Church, as respects this most deplorable event," &c.

Revival in Caddo, La.—The Bienville (La) Times, 26th ult., says of a Baptist meeting at Summer Grove Church:

"The church is under the pastoral care of Rev. Jesse Lee. In these meetings he was aided by Revs. A. J. Rutherford, Baskus and Irvings, and by Rev. J. M. Workum, of the Methodist Church. During the two meetings 109 were added to the church, ninety of whom, by baptism. At the close of the last meeting there were still many anxious inquirers."

Under the authority of the law relating to Retired officers, the Secretary of the Navy has ordered a Court Martial to try Lieut. Maury, on his present petition as Paymaster-Gen. of the National Observatory; and, also, has ordered Lieutenants Stevens and Smith upon examination on duty—the former to command of the Philadelphia Navy Yard, and the latter as Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Progress of Humanity,

AS DEVELOPED BY YELLOW FEVER.

A comparison of epidemics in past ages and the present favors the progress of our race. If the ills flesh is heir to are still malignant and numerous, there is an amelioration in the sympathy evoked by them. The single-handed Howard, or the Samaritan, of former times, is now represented by associations. Witness Norfolk and Portsmouth. Without respect to sections, aid has been furnished to those sick cities of 1855, as to ours in 1853. The relief Fund, as last published, amounted to $173,000. Of this sum, New York, the city where are the Tabernacle and Tammany, gave $30,000; Boston, of Burns notoriety, and out of which some Southern ears, on and below the latitude of James River, think no good thing can come—Boston gave $7,500; Philadelphia, $27,000; Baltimore, $37,000; New Haven, Ct., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Cincinnati, Ohio, and Mobile, Ala., each $1,000; Chicago, Ill., and New Orleans, La., each 4,500. Humanity, fairly touched, knows no North, no South, no East, no West. These are times when it nobly vindicates itself. So can afflictions be sanctified by our Heavenly Father to the good of the race as well as the individual.

The aid of New Orleans, as thus set down in dollar figures, looks comparatively trifling, her size considered, and her indebtedness on a former score.

But it must also be considered—1st, that during the summer season many heavy capitalists are away; 2d, the city has passed a sickly summer—an epidemic at home required to be met by a heavy outlay of labor and charity; and, 3d, New Orleans has given besides what money could not buy, and what was most needed—thirty or forty experienced yellow fever nurses, with competent superintendents of hospitals and physicians. Mobile has also done eminent service of this kind.

The world is improving. Humanity shows signs of progress. Evidently there is a vast, pervading and elevating moral power operating. The history of plagues brings revoltingly to view human selfishness. Where do we read of the far off sending aid, money, provisions, and even coffins for the dead; or of the healthy plunging into the infected regions to succor?

Telegraphic and locomotive communication may have quickened, freshened and sustained it, but they do not account for that intensity of fraternal feeling so widely manifested.

Men are brothers; at farthest, neighbors. This sentiment is growing apace. The teachings of the gospel have leavened the mass, ennobled humane offices, sanctified the ministry of mercy, and created a public opinion that admits the heroism of beneficence.

Our Publishing House.

Up to the 7th September, the presses of the Publishing House had been in operation five months. This statement will show the amount of work which has been done. The number of pages printed has been—

Folio	864.000
Quarto	103.000
Octavo	2,762.000
12mo	20.585.000
18mo	18 628 000

Making a grand total of 49,589,000, or nearly fifty million pages of all kinds.

A creditable and encouraging showing, considering the backsets at the outset. The Book editor says, moreover: "We had hoped before this time to have announced for sale 'The Wesleyan Psalter,' an elegantly printed edition of the Psalms, versified by the Wesleys, 'The lives of the Popes,' and many other excellent books we have stereotyped; but we have not been able to get them bound. The bindery is yet too contracted, so that a sufficient number of workmen and workwomen cannot be employed to execute our orders and those from other sources. We must be patient, especially as another building will probably be soon finished, which will afford the needed accommodations.

The Preachers' Tent.

No inconsiderable spot on the camp ground is this, considering the influences that go forth from it. Alas! if levity and jesting prevailed there! The keynote of the meeting is often struck in the preachers' tent. Not that the work of God or the people of God are dependent on men, but in the Divine economy we know the ministry is assigned a responsible place. An itinerant of North Louisiana writes: "At our camp meeting we had a very good time. One night (or morning) about 1 o'clock, there was a singular out-pouring of the Spirit in the preachers' tent. I cannot pretend to describe it only as another Pentecost. There was shouting there by those who had never praised God before aloud. The noise continued more than an hour. Tell Bro W. that M., who once led the choir in his church, was present, and has been powerfully converted."

Buenos Ayres.—The Argentine Confederation, composed of thirteen South American provinces or States, not including Buenos Ayres proper, has adopted a Constitution which makes religious liberty the law of the land—a novel thing in South America. But let the Bible have free course a few years longer, and let the preacher of the gospel lift up his voice in the land of Romish idols, till every ear shall hear the glad tidings, and neither civil nor religious liberty shall long remain a novelty in what is now emphatically the "region and shadow of death."

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE CREED OF ALL MEN.

"This work is from a ready pen and ingenuous reasoner. It is an attempt to meet infidelity by assuming the bold ground that the abstract principles of Christianity are the common principles of man." Such is the language of Brother Cobb, of the Memphis Christian Advocate, in reviewing this very excellent sermon of Rev. R. Abbey, published by Stevenson & Owen.

I think it cannot be denied that this is the strongest production the writer has given to the public, and one that is to make, upon this age of thinking men, its mark and impress. The kind of skepticism that at this day, floats upon the surface of society, is entirely undermined by it. There may be a few questions underneath this debate, questions that deny, for example, the truth of the existence of any principle at all that it may not fully meet. The author does not design it for such. He directs his attention principally to those who have faith in the common principles of nature, in the steadiness of moral virtue, and in the ties of our common civilization. It makes havoc of the supports upon which they commonly lean. The work is one that should be encouraged, and that should be put in the hands of the young men of our age who are prone to think that the Christian religion demands something of them, which they have only to yield at the expence of fair reasoning. They are apt to think that there is in religion a demand for credulity as a voluntary tribute, given at the cost of reason. This work is well calculated to undeceive them.

Bro. Cobb has, in the Advocate at Memphis of August 22, I think, misapprehended the design and scope of the argument. He takes exception to the author's reference to the doctrine of the Trinity. Bro. Cobb thinks this is one of those profound mysteries of revelation for which we can find no verisimilitude, no true analogy in nature.

This subject of the Trinity is one that we all approach with reverence and with diffidence. That there is no true analogy in nature, is not to be denied. The "Creed" does not say there is; but that the principle upon which it is based, upon which it reposes, is readily admitted by all. All that I understand the author of this treatise to urge is, that there is in nature a ground work for the belief. For example, to take the illustration he gives, there is the "union of the soul and the body." This is evidently a ground work for the union of Three. The union to two establishes the principle. Of course, it is no true analogy, but it is enough for the purpose of the author, and chimes in with the thread and leading purpose of the argument. The man who sees and admits the existence of two in one, is thereby prepared to receive, upon the strength of revelation, the mysterious doctrine of the Trinity; and I do not think a work of very great merit otherwise should be depreciated upon account of a resort to the little strength that is to be drawn from the partial analogy of nature.

The cardinal position and leading idea of the author is carried out with a good deal of ingenuity and very considerable analogical power. He does not undertake to defend Christianity. He does not undertake to explain its mysteries. He does not seek to establish its truth or its evidence. I understand him to lay all that aside for the occasion; and for as the argument he expects to hold with the infidel, "I have no argument," says he, "to make in favor of Christianity. I expect to attempt none." His object seems to be to inquire into the principles of the infidel, and upon which he reposes his hope for happiness. He is working all the time, it is true, along side of Christianity, and does as much for it, indirectly, as his argument with infidel principles will let him. But he is upon the platform on which his opponent is upon. Now, "tell us what you believe, and what you disbelieve." He meets him in his bosom and at his inner shrine. He shows him that his principles, when true, find an echo in Christianity, and when false, dangerous and deceptive. These he recommends to be given up for the true principles of Christianity.

I read the argument with much profit. I think no man can read it without profit. It is not enough to prove Christianity to be true by an appeal to reason and fact. Nothing can be true which is unreasonable, although many things may be true which reason cannot explain. But however true Christianity may be, and however demonstrable may be the argument sustaining the truth of it, still the infidel has his own peculiar notions, his own mental platform of principles, his own private reasons for non concurrence in the faith and practice of the Scripture. These the author handles, and in the handling dissipates them into thin air. "I desire to show," says he, "the folly and inconsistency of irreligion." "The free thinker, the unbeliever, the skeptic, or the infidel," or any other man, may sit here in my seat, and, so far as the logical framework of this essay is concerned, I care not whether it be written with his hand or with mine. All I ask of him is, that he will do no violence at home—that he utter his own sentiments precisely as they are entertained, avowed and acted upon by himself every day. His principles are not to be feared." Of course they are not the Principles of the system of Jesus Christ, because true logic is based upon true reason, and the want of logic is want of reason. Christianity must either be reasonable or unreasonable. There is no other intermediate ground which it can occupy. Everything that is true is, then, reasonable, because God is truth. There are in the Christian system many things that are above our limited comprehension; but what of that? That is no proof they are unreasonable. It is only proof of our ignorance of the true reason of them. They are reasonable in the eye of Christ; would be reasonable to us, provided we were able to see with divine precocience. Says Christ, "I am the truth."

The reasoning of the author of the Creed is not directed to maintain the doctrine of the Trinity drawn from analogy. He has not only not attempted such a thing, but has expressly disavowed all intention of attempting it. Let justice be done if the sky falls. What does he say: "One of the loudest objections supposed to be urged against Christianity is its doctrine of a Trinity. This, it is said, is absurd, for how can there be three in one? And it is often times supposed that Christians are put to considerable trials of skill and logic to maintain this doctrine against the objections of skeptics and infidels. This is all wrong. So far as this objection is concerned, like the previous ones we have looked at, it is not necessary to maintain or attempt to maintain the doctrine at all."

This treatise gives abundant evidence of a thinking mind, fearless religious principles, firm confidence in the steadiness of truth, and unconquerable love of it. ALPHA.

SOCIETY FORMED IN SUMMERFIELD, ALA.

At the meeting of the Board of Trustees of Centenary Institute, in July 1854, a resolution was passed by that body inviting those both males and females, who had been students in the Institution to meet in Summerfield during the last examination, which closed July 4th, and Dr. Hamilton was appointed to address them. Accordingly, a respectable number attended. On Tuesday, the Doctor performed his duty in a short but appropriate manner.

At the conclusion of his remarks, he made known the object contemplated by the Trustees in the passage of the resolution. He said, they desired that they should form a society of an alumni character.

A proposition was then made that six—three males and three females, be appointed from their number to draft resolutions which should serve as a constitution for its future government. The committee appointed met, and drew up in substance, the following, which being submitted to a meeting held the next morning, were adopted:

1. Resolved, That we, the former students of Centenary Institute, will meet in Summerfield on the occasion of each annual examination.

2. Resolved, That the object of our meeting will be to manifest and increase our interest in the welfare of the institution, and for social, intellectual and moral improvement.

3. Resolved, That we will assemble, while there, at some convenient time, for the purpose of hearing an address from a speaker chosen at the preceding meeting by a majority of those present.

4. Resolved, That the officers be a President, Vice Presidents and Secretary; the last to attend to the correspondence of the society.

5. Resolved, That either office vacated may be filled at any regular meeting.

Before concluding this notice, we beg leave to make a few remarks in reference to this move. We wish all who have sustained, at any time, the relation of students to the Institution, to feel themselves interested. It is not intended that any shall make great sacrifices to be present on such occasions; but when we consider the good that must necessarily result to the institution and themselves, we feel authorized in saying that all should feel themselves bound to undergo some trouble to do so. A woman of antiquity, pointing to her sons, said, "These are my jewels." The jewels of every school and college are the young men and ladies whom they send forth yearly into society. These reflect what they are, and indicate the measure of confidence the public ought to repose in them. What institution, considering the length of time since its establishment, has done more for the country than Centenary Institute? Everywhere in our own State, and in different portions of the surrounding States, are to be seen her sons and daughters, shedding the blessed light which always emanates from well improved minds, ruled and guided by pure and virtuous hearts. Methodism owes a great deal to her. In the ranks of her ministry are to be found her sons doing battle in the cause of virtue, truth, and their God. Some of the strong pillars of the laity were fashioned by her hands. In view of all this, she is worthy of noblest efforts to sustain her. Those who have been prepared for the duties of life under her fostering care ought more especially to rally around her and bring to bear their influence to advance her interests. Gratitude calls for, and duty to the great cause of sanctified education demands this reasonable service. Whatever, therefore, has a tendency to keep alive and increase their interest in its prosperity, should be heartily engaged in. And who will say, that going every year and witnessing achievements of mind and heart, as displayed in the examinations, compositions, speeches, concerts, &c., of her students, will not have this effect? Who that was an eye witness of the scenes of the last commencement occasion did not leave with his feelings sublimated, enlarged and soul elevated? No one that had a mind to appreciate and a soul to feel. There are other advantages to be derived from this annual visit to the place where the village masters taught their school, and while uttering

"Words of length and thundering sound.
Amazed, the gazing rustics ranged around.
And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew.
That such small heads could carry all they knew."

How well calculated is it to renew the friendships and revive the pleasant memories of school days? But it is useless, Mr. Editor, to dwell on the benefits which will result to all, socially, intellectually and morally. Any one, by thinking for a moment, must be convinced that they will be great. Without troubling you further, my friends, we ask you to think on these things.

Revival in Tuskegee, Ala.—For some weeks past a protracted meeting has been in progress at the Methodist Church in this place, at which there appears to be a good state of religious feeling. A number of persons have manifested their anxiety to seek religion, and there have been a goodly number of conversions, how many, we are not informed. The labors have devolved most entirely upon Bro Hamill, who has been unable to procure ministerial aid, from the fact that ministers are generally engaged in similar meetings or absent in discharge of duties which they cannot pretermit.—*S. EXTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

Mt. Zion Circuit, Ala. Conf., Sept. 14, 1855.

The Lord is owning our work on Mount Zion Circuit. For two months past we have been holding a series of two days and protracted meetings, at some of which we have witnessed outpourings of the Holy Ghost. At Pine Springs we joined sixteen into the Church, about the same number professed faith in Christ. The Church all full of the love of God. At Mount Pleasant our meeting continued for ten days. We had a refreshing season from the very commencement. The Church was baptised with the holy unction. I never saw as many happy Christians, all feasting on God's eternal love, as during the administration of the Holy Sacrament on the first Sunday night of the meeting. Nor were sinners unconcerned. When Christians get happy, sinners tremble, and consequently the altar of prayer was crowded at every hour's service, and many were happily converted. Some Twenty-seven joined the Church. Among the converts was an old man, about seventy, his head grey, his steps tottering; now happy in God's love, and going on his way rejoicing in hope. We also had a refreshing season at Smyrna, during the third quarterly meeting. Our Elder, Charles McLeod, preached three times before he left, with great effect. We continued the meeting ten days. Many souls were brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. We have had other meetings, with varied success. We have a little band of local preachers here in the woods, that cannot be beat in efficiency, and we must tender our thanks to S. G. Hamel, F. Weaver, S. Mayfield, J. F. Martin, S. Gillmore, L. Lyndsay, P. Dunkin and S. May for the good service they have rendered the Church at nearly all our meetings. Some of these are nearly worn down serving the Church they love; but, thank God, some of them have some hiding fair to fill their places. The cause of temperance is advancing on this work. Our local brethren have talked on that subject nearly all around the circuit. Dram drinking Methodists (a nice qualification for a Christian!) are quite scarce here. We are doing something for the cause of Missions, and are trying to do yet more. O that God would open the hearts of the people in this great cause. O. HAWKINS.

Bellevue, La., Sept. 20, 1855.

We have some excellent times on the North Bossier Circuit, recently a glorious meeting at Bellevue, a place where there never was a soul converted until the 11th of August last at which time was commenced a two days' meeting, but protracted for six days. Bros. O. Carroway, David Lawrance and R. G. Skinner, (local preachers,) from the Minden Circuit, helping us. The result of the meeting was, ten precious souls professed to find peace in believing in Jesus, and were added to the Church.

Our third quarterly meeting was held at this place commencing on the 9th inst. Our P. E., Richmond Randle, was with us, and preached in soul awakening style. Brother Carroway and Skinner were with us again; also, Brother R. C. Goodgoin; and on the day appointed for the close of the meeting, just at night, our beloved brother, Dr. C. G. Young, arrived and preached for us. He protested against our closing with the prospect of good before us. We protracted another day. The Doctor stayed with us and preached twice on Thursday. Our meeting here closed. The result of this meeting was twenty-one conversions and twenty accessions. Bellevue has been celebrated as a place of amusements. Dancing was one of the almost constant employments of a large majority of the people of this place. Yesterday I joined in holy wedlock a couple of the young people of this place, and instead of the hall room, they attended church in the evening. There is a good influence resting upon this community. The result of our last on the circuit was forty-five accessions and thirty-nine conversions. We look for good times on our present round. Pray for us. We are trying to live humble and prayerful. We expect to get to heaven. J. L. WRIGHT.

Midway, Miss., Sept. 25, 1855.

We began and carried on a protracted meeting at Concord Church, on Hillsborough Circuit, from the fourth Saturday in August until Sabbath week following. Making sixteen days. For several days most of our labors were directed to the members, who were very cold and discouraged. The meeting increased in interest even to the close. There may be between thirty and forty conversions. Many backsliders reclaimed, and some deemed to be hopeless cases. I heard an aged brother say, since the meeting was closed, it was the best meeting he ever saw. A good Baptist brother became so happy that he rejoiced all the way home, four or five miles—had to have his buggy driven for him and his rejoicing continued long after his arrival at home.

A most distressing case occurred in a Baptist sister. Her sister was powerfully converted, and she became satisfied that she had been mistaken in her conversion. She looked as if she would go deranged. I was called on to talk to her. She said she felt her sins were not pardoned. I told her they would be if she would claim the promises of the Lord and instructed her as well as I could. Many were alarmed about her. But, thank God, she felt she was fully pardoned before the meeting closed.

Bro. Rogers was with me on Saturday and Sabbath, but not able to preach. Bro. Harris and Bro. Franklin Alford, both on missionary work in Madison county, labored with us true and well. Nineteen joined our church. Some fifteen others will join the Baptists.

G. W. Stewart.

Greensboro' Dist., Ala. Conf., Sept. 27, 1855.

This has been a year of more than ordinary pressure in money matters in this District. Much cotton is yet unsold, and there are no advances on the coming crop, as usually is the case. Provisions, till recently, at fair no price, and more calls for the exercise of charity at home than I have ever known.

Corn has been bought at from $1 to $1 50, and then hauled fifty or sixty miles. Our collections generally will be scant, in comparison with former years, both missionary and Conference.

The preachers' hands have been tied; they felt the pressure, with others. Thus, in this district, though matter of regret often referred to by all of us, in conversation, we have been but inefficient newspaper agents the present year. We (I plead, and cry peccavi,) have had compulsion on us, the stern force of necessity—no money.

The prospect is somewhat brightening just now. Good crops and prospective chances of money ahead bring out the hoarded and long clung to loose change into circulation. But yet faith in our rivers is almost lost.

Closed a good camp meeting at Mt. Homer, Brush Creek circuit, this morning; about 40 converts. A meeting of much interest under way at Marion. Some signs of vitality at almost every point in the District.

T. J. KOGER, P. E.

Westville Circuit, Miss. Conf., Sept. 26, 1855.

We held two protracted meetings, one at New Providence, the other at Bethel. The first continued seven days. The result was 24 conversions and 17 accessions of whites, and three blacks. I never witnessed just such another meeting in my life. It was one continual flow from the first to the last. The old ship swung off while administering the sacrament. The second lasted eight days. At first it was a drag, but the interest increased until it seemed there two currents, an upper and an under current. For three or four days before the meeting closed, it seemed there was such a holy atmosphere about there that every one who came within its range breathed it, and there were many converted and added to the Church.

J. R. THOMAS.

Apalachicola, Fa., Sept. 26, 1855.

The health of this city is very good. The Lord is reviving his work here. Last Sabbath evening we closed a meeting of considerable interest, which we had protracted from day to day for two weeks. Many souls were converted, backsliders were reclaimed, and the Church was revived. One Sabbath School teacher and three Sabbath School scholars were among the number converted. Our Sabbath School is in a flourishing condition, ranging between seventy-five and one hundred scholars, with eighteen teachers.

The work is still going on. Since we closed our meeting we have held evening prayer meetings at private houses, for the benefit of those who are enquiring for the way of salvation. We have no help, except the members of the Church here.

J. M. CAMPBELL.

Union Church, Brandon Ct., Miss., Sept. 29, 1855.

On this day two weeks since I had an appointment at Union Church, Brandon Circuit. On the second day of the meeting we had a number of mourners, one conversion and three joined the Church. The meeting increased in interest, and on Sabbath even those out of the Church stood near and listened with deep attention. Through the instrumentality of Bros. James Harris, Holland Jayne and others, the meeting was carried on with great success, and there were more than sixty conversions. O. W. STEWART.

Crawford, Ct., Ala. Conf., Sept. 26, 1855.

We have been favored by our Heavenly Father with refreshing seasons at Waccohie, Andrew Chapel, Olivet, Uchee, Union, Shady Grove, Crawford, and also at Silver Run camp meeting, the latter being jointly ours and Glennville Circuit's.

At some of them we had times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and there have been accessions at every appointment, except one or two, in the Crawford Circuit. Nor is the work ended. In union with Bros. Hayes, Wardlaw, Keating, Cherry and Freeman, we hope to see the work continue, God being helper. J. C. M'DANIEL.

YELLOW FEVER IN JACKSON, LA.

Opening of the College session postponed.

Mr. Editor—In view of the fact that the yellow fever is so generally spread over the country, and that it has appeared in this place, and recently been fatal in several cases, in the absence of the President of Centenary College, and other members of the Faculty, the members present, believing that it is not safe for students to come here now, assume the responsibility of adjourning the opening of the next session of the college from the 1st of October to the 15th. The public will be informed from time to time of the health of the place.

Other papers will please copy.

Tribute to the Memory of Rev T. H Foster.

I do not think that you have ever published an item of news, which has so filled my heart with sorrow, as the announcement of the death of our dearly beloved brother, Rev. T. H Foster. It is no disparagement to others for me to say, that there was no member of the Alabama Conference more sincerely loved—more deserving of that love—and, to those of us who were intimately acquainted with him, the news of his death does indeed "strike us with stunning grief"—and many, very many hearts, will share with us in this profound sorrow, in all the various fields of labor, where he was known as a Christian minister.

My first acquaintance with brother F. was at Frankfort, Ky., during the session of the Kentucky Conference in September, 1845. He was then a student in Transylvania University, where he remained until he graduated in the autumn of 1847. In 1848 he joined the Alabama Conference, in Montgomery, and from thence forward, in all his various fields of labor, he endeared himself to the people of his charge, by his pure life, and by the faithfull performance of all the duties of a Christian pastor. His wee one whom no danger or alarm could frighten away from the post of duty; as an illustration, when the yellow fever prevailed so alarmingly in Demopolis two years ago, he was the only minister in town, and he gave himself wholly to the work of nursing and visiting the sick, and burying the dead. His life was then preserved, and he escaped the disease, but it did, alas! in two brief years among strangers. During the four years which brother F. spent in the towns of Eutaw and Demopolis, it was my good fortune to be with him a great deal. We met frequently, and often passed many days together, and our associations were of the most intimate character, and I can truly say, a kinder heart, or a better spirit, I have never known. He was an able and successful minister, and he had many souls to his ministry. But the Heavenly Master has called him away from His vineyard, in the days of his youth, and, with sorrowing hearts, we bow submissively to His command, cherishing the precious hope of a re-union with the pure spirit of our brother in the Heaven to which he hath gone only a little before us.

It affords me a melancholy pleasure to be able to give from his own hand, a most gratifying representation of his spiritual condition at the time of his death, or at most, only three or four days before he died. I quote from a letter to me, dated Aug. 30, 1855:

"My Dear Brother—A number of times during the year have I thought of writing to you. I have thought of you frequently and kindly. We have assembled together; seasons of refreshing among sinners and joy in our own hearts—shall we ever see such again? I am frequently reminded of those seasons by the spiritual barrenness in which I am laboring this year.

Well, here I am, family absent, yellow fever, sick and dying all around me—never had it myself, and am expecting it daily. But I remain here from a sense of duty, and if I die, as Bishop Soule says, "no matter when, no matter where, so I sleep in Jesus." My faith is strong, my hopes are bright. I feel sometimes, if it were not for those left behind, it would be so sweet to go and sleep with Jesus. Grace preserves me from all undue alarm. I shall hardly be able to escape it, for it has full two months to prevail. If I live, you need not be surprised to see me at your Conference."

Four days after the above was written, our beloved brother had ceased to work and live; and we shall henceforth miss him from our usual convocations, and from his loved employment in the Heavenly Master's vineyard; but we hope soon to meet him on the banks of the river of life. Amen!

"There is a world above,
Where parting is unknown;
A long eternity of love,
Formed for the good alone;
And faith beholds the dying hour
Translated to that glorious sphere."

Newspapers in Great Britain.—Thirty millions of people in Great Britain only purchase and read ninety millions of newspapers in a year, whilst the twenty-five millions of the United States require over four hundred millions.

Reading Sermons.—The Central Presbytery of Texas have unanimously passed a resolution discouraging the reading of sermons by the ministers in their connection.

Louisiana.—The Bienville Times of Saturday last says:

The cotton in North Louisiana will be short. There may be found, here and there, a plantation which will turn out an average yield; but they will generally produce but little more than half an average crop.

The Bastrop Times states that a boy fifteen or sixteen years of age, named Pinkney Brigham, killed a large female panther a few days ago in that parish, and captured two of her whelps.

The St. Martinsville Constitutional of Saturday last publishes the following paragraph:

"It becomes our duty to announce the increase of the fever since our last. All classes of our citizens are attacked with it, which we regard as the most alarming feature of the disease. Ten deaths have occurred in town since our last issue, three of these, we understand, were caused by genuine black vomit.

The town of Opelousas is under strict quarantine, and persons from adjacent places where fever is supposed to exist are not permitted to enter it.

The Claiborne Advocate states that a slave belonging to Mr. McLane killed his overseer a few days ago near Vienna. He was pursued for six days, and finally captured by dogs in Lafourche Swamp.

Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad. The editor of the Ouachita Register avows his belief, founded on information he received a few days ago from Col. Bonner, the engineer of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, that the road will be built from Monroe to Vicksburg in two years from this time.

Deaths.

Died, in Monroe City, Miss., Aug. 11th, 1855, Miss MARY JANE DAVIS, aged 14 years and 8 months.

The deceased was the daughter of Sherwood and Martha Davis. Rarely are parents called to mourn the loss of such a daughter. Possessing an amiable disposition, a strong intellect, and genuine piety, she commanded the love and esteem of all who knew her. She professed religion and joined the M. E. Church Sept., 1853, since which time she always maintained the character of a devoted christian. She was a great lover of Sabbath schools, and of her influence in enlisting the feelings of the young companions in favor of that Institution.

N. P. RUGAN.

Died, June 16th, in Marion county, Ala., Mrs. ELIZA ANN DUNKIN, Daughter of Rev. S. G. Worrell, in the 28th year of age.

She embraced religion in her fourteenth year; joined the M. E. Church, and lived a consistent life till her death — calmly dying as she lived, the Christian. Three of her children had gone before her to the goodly land — her last, a little boy, just a little over one year old. The mother breathed her last. The night before she died, while in great pain, he called his parents to his bedside, and told his mother he could not be long, if she was faithful, till she could see him again where Jesus was. He told his dear uncle of his to come and go with him, that he could not live. Soon after, the next day, during his father weeping, he said, "Father, don't take it so hard; don't weep for me; I'm going home." The mother has soon gone to meet her little ones.

Marriages.

MARRIED, by Rev. J. C. McDaniel, Rev. J. M. Brown, of Ala. Con., to Miss M. E. LOCKHEART, daughter of Rev. David Lockheart, of Russell county, Ala.

MARRIED, by Rev. James L. Wright, on the 26th Sept., 1855, in the town of Bellevue, Mr. HENRY W SPERLIN to Miss ISABELLA ELDER, all of Bossier parish, La.

We seldom recommend a manufactured article, believing that, in most cases, Nature herself performs a cure more speedily and effectually than can be accomplished by the aid of any medicine of mere human science. But in the matter of Dyspepsia, or chronic costiveness, should it, which very often defy, the power of nature to create a healthy action of the digestive organs, it is not unfrequently hoped that thousands suffer but from the want of some remedy, both in body and in mind, from indigestion and its attendant ills, to which HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, prepared by C. M. Jackson, are truly a most valuable preparation. Its use in giving a healthy action to the stomach, and thereby, consequently to all secretions, but especially during the Dyspepsia, can only be cured by a patient perseverance in the use of these Bitters, and to all those suffering under this sad affliction we can confidently recommend a fair trial of Hoofland's German Bitters, to be had at the Arch street, Philadelphia. See advertisement.

In the afternoon of the 25th ult. a woman named McNamee, accompanied by her two children, had taken passage in the cars at Ninth and Green streets, Philadelphia, and before starting the mother got out to purchase some cakes for her little ones. On returning, she saw the unfortunate woman, in attempting to step on the platform as the cars were going, fall under the wheels and was almost instantly killed—the wheels passing over her body and breaking her back. She belonged to Camden, where her husband was in waiting. The children proceeded homeward.

By dispatch of the 24th, from Boston, we learn that the British bark Asaia, from Pictau, N. S., arrived at Provincetown on the 23d, off Cape Cod, came in collision with the schooner Chesapeake, from Rockland to New York, with a cargo of lime, and lost foremast, mainmast and bowsprit. The schooner was seriously damaged and was abandoned by her crew, who arrived here in safety. The schooner doubtless sank shortly after the collision, as nothing could be seen of her at daylight.

During the past summer, the wool growers of Hartford and Haverhill, N. H., have lost between three and four hundred sheep. The loss of mutton was at first supposed to be a wolf, then a dog, but now it is believed a panther has done the mischief. Hundreds of men are hunting the animal, whatever it is.

It is said that Austria has proposed to Denmark to be the mediator between that power and the United States, by way of settling the difficulty with regard to the Sound dues. We believe, however, that Austria is now seeing as get into a row to helping us out of it.

On the 18th inst., Mr. Benjamin C. Reynolds, county clerk Larkin Reynolds, a youngsar brother, with all their homes on the Mowah river, near Rome, Ga., and Mr. Manchester, who absconded from Cincinnati some time ago with the funds of a savings bank, were arrested in San Francisco, under a requisition from the Governor of Ohio.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP PACIFIC.

RUSSIANS NOT RETREATED.

Turkish Victory at Kars.

The Czar Going to the Crimea.

NEW YORK, October 3d.—The Collins steamship Pacific, Captain Nye, from Liverpool on the 22d ult., arrived off Sandy Hook at two o'clock this morning, and reached her dock a few hours subsequently.

Her advices are one week later from all parts of Europe than those received by the America at Halifax, but are not of much importance.

The Bremen steamship Hermann, from New York, arrived off Southampton on the 22d ult.

Liverpool Cotton Market.

According to the circulars brought by the Pacific the Liverpool Cotton Market was dull, and prices had experienced a slight decline since the departure of the America. [The sales of the week are unaccountably omitted from our report.] The closing quotations were for Fair Orleans 5¾d., Fair Uplands 5¾d. and Fair Mobile 6¼d. per pound.

The stock in port was estimated at 547,000 bales of which about 350,000 were American.

Breadstuffs.

In the Liverpool market Flour was firm at 38 to 39s. for Western Canal, and 38 to 40s. per barrel for Philadelphia and Baltimore brands.

Wheat also was firm at 12s. per bushel for White, and 11 to 11s 6d. per bushel for Red.

Corn was a trifle lower, Mixed being quoted at 38s. to 0d. per quarter.

Provisions.

Pork had slightly advanced in the Liverpool market. Lard also was somewhat higher, with sales at 62s per cwt.

Consols.

Consols for money were quoted at 90¾.

The Crimea.

The news from the seat of war by this arrival contains nothing of startling importance.

The reported retreat of the Russians to Perekop is contradicted.

It is stated that the Czar is going to the Crimea.

Asia.

The Russian army in Asia had made no attack on Kars, but was repulsed by the Turks with considerable loss, and had retired to Erzeroum.

Russia.

Russia had offered to Denmark to mediate with the United States on the questions of the Sound dues.

Portugal.

The inauguration of the young King of Portugal was celebrated on the 16th ult.

Italy.

King Bourbo, of Naples, had apologised to England and France.

River Intelligence.

LOUISVILLE, September 29—There are now 5 feet 8 inches water in the canal

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 2.—The river has been rising since our last, but is now stationary with 5½ feet water in the canal. The steamer Antelope departed last night for New Orleans.

LOUISIANA.—The Concordia Intelligencer of Friday has the following paragraphs:

The whole week, up to the day of our publication, has been distinguished with very variable weather—the wind at all points of the compass—dashes of rain—northers, easters and southers, all wound up on Wednesday morning by a nor wester. Over and through all, a burning sun scalds ta the bone when it is permitted to shine. That's the weather we have in Vidalia.

The sickness in our region almost puts the creeps out of our mind. We hear of the rot still progressing, while the variable weather is extremely unfavorable to gathering and housing the cotton.

In Waterproof, Tensas parish, there are now more than sixty cases of yellow fever Quite a number, we know not how many, have died. Coffins are daily ordered from Natchez for that place. Fifteen nurses and one physician, Dr Helecombe, have gone up from Natchez to render the needful aid to the sick, as, it was said, but six white persons could be found in the village able to stand on their feet. The panic, at the breaking out of the disease, had driven very many families and individuals who could leave, away.

The Pointe Coupee Echo announces the capture of four negroes, who are supposed to have committed the murder on board a flatboat, of which we gave an account a short time since. They were to be tried last Saturday before two magistrates, and a jury of ten freeholders. The Echo says:

We regret our inability to chronicle this week any abatement in the ravages of the yellow fever, which are now becoming quite alarming. During the past week quite a number of new cases have originated, the majority of which terminating fatally, and there are still several whose recovery is considered rather doubtful.

We extract the following from an article in the Calcasieu Press of the 22d:

In connection with this state of the atmosphere at present, we will mention a very strange phenomenon on the Calcasieu river. Its surface, on the opposite side of the lake, and for many miles above, is literally covered with dead, turpid and dying fish, of every variety inoident to its waters. We are at a less to offer any philosophical argument for this unprecedented appearance. The most plausible conjecture seems to be, that the immense quantity of gum and other herries blown into the ponds and marshes communicating with the river, and into the river itself, on the night of the gale, has saturated the water with a stupifying and poisonous influence, hence the result alluded to. We learn that the stench arising from the dead fish has become so offensive as to induce some families, residing immediately on the river above this place, to abandon their homes and seek more sanitary locations.

The Shreveport Southwestern, of the 19th, states that a religious excitement had taken place at Summer Grove, in that parish, and about a hundred persons had been baptized. The Southwestern says:

We regret to learn that the caterpillar has made its appearance in the lower part of this parish. Experienced planters state that under the most favorable auspices, the cotton crop in Caddo will fall short one-fourth. The Alexandria Republican reports that the caterpillar has been discovered everywhere in Rapides parish, and that the ret has also appeared.

The Democrat states that the business of Shreveport during the past year has not equaled by one-half that of any other year for a long period.

The Gazette of Saturday says that the fever in and about that town does not appear to abate, but rather to increase.

THE FEVER IN MISSISSIPPI.—The Vicksburg Whig, of Thursday last, says:

The Angel of Death, with its dark wing, still shadows our afflicted city. The epidemic manifests more and more its relentless malignity, and despite the skill, the science and the devotion of our medical faculty, holds its dread carnival among us. We have to record the loss, among others, since our last issue, of C. O. Jackson, Wm. H. Hampton, and Wm. E. Francis.

Few new cases have occurred, and we see no prospect of a diminishment of the disease until there is nothing left for it to feed upon.

A dispatch of the 26th, from Canton, states that there had been seven new cases and four deaths during the previous twenty-four hours.

The Woodville Whig is down to a half sheet in consequence of the sickness in that town.

The Jackson Flag of the Union, of Friday, says that up to that time, there were no cause for alarm in regard to the fever, few cases having been reported, and those generally of a mild type.

TITUS POMPONIUS ATTICUS BIBB has been appointed Assistant Secretary of State for Kentucky.

FROM THE RIO GRANDE.

By the Charles Morgan, arrived at twelve o'clock last night, we are placed in possession of files of Texas papers and from the Galveston News, of the 29th ult., we extract the following as the only items of interest:

DONA LUCINDA, the distinguished woman who was said to have shared in the command of Matamoras with Gen Woll, and who was charged with unusual cruelty to one of her own sex not long since, is also on board, destined we presume, to follow the fortunes of the now exiled General.

Matamoras still continued under the command of Castro, as left by Gen. Woll, but the revolutionists under Capistran and Garcia, had approached to within a short distance of the town. Castro had issued a bulletin, stating that orders had been received from the existing Government for a cessation of hostilities, and inviting an armistice.

The revolutionists, according to a statement in the Flag, demanded a surrender of the city together with all arms and munitions of war. To this the army in Matamoras objects, and contend for the privilege of retiring with arms and a certain amount of money. Thus matters stood, and Garcia was awaiting the arrival of artillery to enforce his demands.

The inhabitants of Matamoras, fearing the city would be sacked, were flocking to the Texas side of the Rio Grande.

The Flag states, the garrison of Matamoras was thrown into great confusion on the retirement of Woll. Castro was in favor of the plan of Ayotla, but a portion of the soldiery, with Col Sauvieges at their head, were for the plan of Vidaurri. Meanwhile the revolutionists demanded an unconditional surrender.

The Flag has a report to the effect that San Luis Potosi had been captured by the revolutionary forces, General Guitman killed, the army dispersed and the city made to change its plan from that of Ayotla to that of Monterey.

Tampico is also said to have pronounced for Vidaurri and his plan. Gen. Casanova, the Commander of Tampico had been driven from that city, and civil government substituted for military rule.

THE FEVER AT NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH.—A correspondent of the Petersburg Express, writing from Norfolk under date of the 23d, states that the fever during the two previous days was awful, the mortality being as great as it had been at any former time when the population was much greater. There were forty burial on the 22d, among whom were Dr. Alexander Galt, postmaster, Wm. B. Ferguson, President of the Howard Association, and Charles H. Beale, former editor of the Norfolk News and correspondent of the Express.

The deaths in Portsmouth on the 23d were reported at 17, but there were no facilities for obtaining correct accounts.

Wm. Ried, late opponent of Hunter Woodis, deceased, for the Mayoralty of Norfolk, has fallen a victim. The correspondent of the Express says that there is scarcely a family in the town that has not suffered from the scourge. We extract the following from his letter:

Of our own physicians not less than ten have fallen, all of whose names have been already published, besides five who have come from abroad to help us, among whom was Dr. Richard Blow, of Sussex, who died on yesterday morning, raving madman, after having successfully served several of his friends.

Among the new cases is John D Gordon, an extensive broker, who lost his wife a few days since, and all of whose family, consisting of some eight or ten children, besides servants, have suffered from the fever. In several families the whole have been swept off, while in others all have been sick at once, not able to help one another, and some of the nurses have been so dishonest and wicked as in many cases to have absolutely neglected their victims for the sake of plunder.

In the present state of disorganization, when all societies have been disbanded and everything out of joint in every department, there have arisen a set of lawless ruffians, who prowl about working all the evil their vile propensities suggest. You cannot possibly imagine the state our plague stricken, afflicted city is in. Nothing to be seen or heard but hearses full of coffins rattling through the streets all times of the day and night, the death rattle perhaps just at the front door of the houses as you pass, and often the poor sufferers exposed to public view, like so many dogs. The heart sickens at the sight, and oftentimes the living envy those who have been cast into their silent graves. Many times waggon loads of common rough boxes run races to the burial ground, and huddle them in the trenches without ceremony, after joking, cursing and swearing, as if they were not human creatures.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday the fever raged with unmitigated fury, carrying off some of our most estimable citizens.

THE WAR OF THE REVOLUTION NOT YET DECIDED.—It will be seen by the following, which we find in the San Francisco Herald of a recent date, that the news of that declaration of peace which put the seal to our national independence, has not yet reached the utmost limit of our great country, and that a portion of our barbarous but faithful allies are still carrying on the struggle, with a full determination, no doubt, to fight it out to the last. We hope they may succeed in wiping out King George's friends entirely; and really one would suppose our Government could now afford to assist them to that desirable end. Here is the Herald's account of the matter:

For several years past, a deadly feud has existed between the Indians residing on the frontiers of the American and English settlements on the North Pacific. The Indians residing within the English territory are known as the "King George" Indians, from the fact that they believe that the celebrated personage whose name they bear, still lives and sways the destinies of North America. They call the Americans residing on the frontier "Boston men," and look upon the Indians who reside within the same territory as their allies. Fights constantly occur between these Indians when the opposing come in contact outside of the common fishing grounds, where both parties generally fraternize and spend the time in feasting and merriment. Outside of the charmed circle of the common fishing grounds they are deadly enemies, and waged a war of extermination against each other. Recently a party of Indians residing within the territorial limits of the United States went on a fishing excursion, but were wrecked upon the northern coast of Vancouver's Island. They were immediately seized by the King George Indians and murdered, sixteen in number, in cold blood. Both parties are now armed for a war of extermination, and bloody doings are expected. It is supposed that white influences is at the bottom of the whole affair, and that an opportunity has been lost by admirably disposed whites residing among them, to foment a quarrel and kindle a general war among the ignorant Indians. We are informed that the U. S. armed war Decatur, which is at present undergoing repairs at the Navy Yard, is under orders for Vancouver's Island.

THE TELESCOPE — ITS RANGE.—It is a well known and often proved fact, that light travels two hundred thousand miles per second; and electricity speeds over copper wire at the rate of two hundred and eighty-eight thousand miles in the same time. The mammoth telescope of Lord Rosse is capable of penetrating so far into space that it would require two hundred and fifty millions years for light to traverse the immense interval between us and the remotest point brought to our view by that giant reflector.

Inference 1. Swing it upon its pivot to a section diametrically opposite, and an equal degree of remoteness is reached on the other side of our stand-point. Direct it towards various other quarters, and the extremities of these long radii, if joined together, would form quite a capacious sphere.

Inference 2. The light daily arriving at the speculum of the telescope and revealing the existence of those distant tracts of visible matter, proves that they must have existed at least two hundred and fifty million years.

Inference 3. Their very existence, now demonstrated by ocular evidence, shews the vast durability of light, and that the creation must have commenced considerably more than six thousand years ago.

In Dr. Franklin's time when the King of England sent some of his convicts over to this country, Dr F. sent a box of rattlesnakes to his Majesty's Prime Minister, advising that they should be introduced into his Majesty's gardens at Kew, and expressing the hope that they would propagate and increase until they should become as beneficial to Great Britain as the British convicts were to this country.

We don't think the American people would be willing at this time to make such an exchange. They would greatly prefer keeping their rattlesnakes to exchanging them for foreign criminals.

FROM OREGON.

RETRIBUTION FOR THE FORT BOISE MASSACRE.

It will be remembered that a company of emigrants were murdered last year under circumstances of horrible barbarity by Indians, near Fort Boise, Oregon, the men being shot and the women and children put to death by torture. Major Hallar was a few months after sent out with troops to punish these atrocities. The Oregonian publishes a letter from one of the expeditionists dated Camp Ripley, Cammas Prairie, July 29, 1855, from which we make the following extracts:

We had no incidents of any consequence after leaving the Dalles, until we arrived at Fort Boise, where the major held a war talk with the Bannick tribe of Snake Indians. While holding the council, four of the Winnass band (which is the tribe by whom the massacre was committed) had the temerity to come into the council, they were known to the interpreter, who signified to the major that they were in camp as spies. The major did not intimate to any person his knowledge of their being there until the war talk was over, when he had them arrested. They were tried next day by a military commission consisting of three officers, and the first one on being tried confessed all, both the share he himself had in the massacre, and also that of his fellow prisoners, and even went so far as to promise to take the troops to where there were more of the murderers, a promise which he evidently did not intend to fulfil, as circumstances which transpired afterwards proved, for while the sentry over him was being relieved, he made a spring from the tent the court was holding its session in, threw off his buffalo robe, and bounded with the speed and agility of a deer for the river, which he would have reached in a very few springs, and if he had, his escape was certain, for they are the best swimmers I ever saw. The whole camp was now in an uproar, officers and men running for their guns and revolvers, and hallooing to shoot him. Sergeant Kalliehard was sergeant of the guard and was relieving the sentry over the prisoner at the time he jumped from the tent: he drew up his musket and fired, and fortunately, (for I consider it only a chance shot for him, although only a few steps off) hit him in the back; he made one spring in the air and fell on the lee, and in three or four minutes all was over with him. The whole affair from first to last, did not occupy more than two minutes before everything was again quiet. The court proceeded with the trial of the others; they were found guilty of participating in the murders, and were sentenced to be hung over the graves of the murdered emigrants, a sentence which corresponded with the feelings of all present. Accordingly, next day, (July 18,) we took up our line of march for the massacre ground, which is about twenty-five miles from Fort Boise, on the river of the same name, where we arrived about noon, and immediately set about constructing a gallows, in order to carry he sentence into effect.

Lieut Hedges was detailed with a party to bury the bones of the murdered emigrants, the wolves having dug up the bodies after they were buried last fall. The gallows was erected immediately over the mound the bones were placed under, and on the spot the immigrants were shot. Everything being now in readiness, the citizens and soldiers marched to the execution, were paraded at sundown, the prisoners placed in a wagon and taken to the gallows, and their sentences having been read and interpreted to them, the ropes were placed around their necks, and at the signal, the wagon drove from under them, and they swung into eternity. They were told by the interpreter what they were to be hung for. They said it was right and just that they should die on behalf of their tribe, to satisfy the Sockelly-tyee and the Bostens for the murders committed by their tribe, so that the whites should not molest any more of their tribe, but let them alone. In this opinion they were a little mistaken, for if any more of their tribe are caught, they will be served in the same manner. The bodies were left hanging until sunrise next morning, when they were taken down and buried at the foot of the gallows, which was contrery. I believe, to Major Rains' instructions to Hallar, which said if any were taken, they should be left hanging, as a warning to the other Indians; but the officers would not stand it, it being anchristian-like and barbarous, and I believe they were right; for I think with them, that instead of being a terror to the Indians, it would have been an incentive to them to commit worse acts of barbarity. The gallows was left standing, which is warning sufficient.

The citizens held a meeting and passed resolutions to expel from that part of the country all mals perseas from Mexico and South America who could not give a good account of themselves.

A man named Wm. S. Ksene, from Washington county, Texas, had been killed near the Tejon Indian Reservation by a grizzly beer.

The excitement in regard to the Indian murders in Northern California was about over. Many Indians had been killed, and five who were supposed to have been concerned in the murders were under arrest on the reservation in Oregon, awaiting a requisition from the Governer of California. The following is the account given by the Herald of the origin of the trouble. Among civilized people it would be regarded as a very tolerable casus belli:

A white man bargained with an Indian to give the latter a horse for a squaw. The Indian not being able to suit him from the stock of squaws under his control, went over and stole a squaw from the Applegate tribe. Big Tom, the white man, was so well pleased with his mother for some trivial offence, after which she sent him to the woods to procure some good switches, to be hereafter used on him for bad behavior. He was accompanied by a younger brother. After going into the woods a short distance, he sent the brother home for a rope, in order, as he said, to bring a large bundle. On his brother's return, young Kelsey was stiff in death. In the absence of his brother he placed some blocks on the ground, placed one of his suspenders around his neck, and tied one end to the limb of a tree, kicked the blocks away, and hung in that position until he was found dead. This is indeed a sad affair, for one so young to take his life by his own hands. Those who have seen the corpse say that even in death his countenance exhibited the picture of determination and courage.

TEXAS ITEMS.

A letter from Eagle Pass to the Houston Telegraph states that the Indians were still committing depredations in that region. A man named Hendersen and a Mexican were pursued by them recently near Los Noras. The former had a bag of silver amounting to about fifty dollars. He scattered it upon the ground and made his escape while the Indians were scrambling for the pieces. They caught the Mexican, robbed him of his blanket and let him go.

A party of Indians still lurked about the Cibole, at latest dates, killing cattle and stealing horses.

The San Antonio Ledger, of the 22d, states that an old citizen of New Braunfels had been murdered in his bed, and his wife, daughter and son-in-law were suspected of having committed the deed.

The Austin State Times, of the 15th, informs us that cotton was growing finely in that region.

An old man named Duiz died in Webberville on the 17th from the bite of a rattlesnake. He ran a mile after being bitten, and stated before he died that the snake was about eight feet in length.

IS DR. HEINEKIN ABOUT?—We find the following joke in a western paper. Dr. Heiniken, it will be remembered, caused the New Jersey Railroad disaster by driving his carriage upon the track, and had caused an accident a couple of years before in a similar way:

On Friday, as the two o'clock train from Philadelphia stopped at Burlington, a gentlemanly looking man put his head out of the window and asked if Dr. Heiniken was about. Being answered he was not, he thanked the individual, and turning to some ladies on the adjoining seat, said, "Well, thank fortune, we are safe—Dr. Heiniken is not about. Conductor, go-ahead." As the train departed, the gentleman leaned back on the cushioned seat, as calm and collected as if in his own easy chair.

Kossuth upon the Right of Search.

Whatever may be said of Louis Kossuth, it cannot be denied that the advice which he so gratuitously proffers to the nations of the earth, sometimes, sensible, and generally straightforward and without flattery. We make a few extracts from a letter which he recently contributed to the London Atlas, upon the proposal thus to convert the war against Russia into a simple blockade, and re-establish the system of visitation and search, which brought on the war of 1812 with this country:

* * * * *

Mr Ashley, in advancing his Bonaparte-Palmerstonian war by blockade, took care to secure for his plan the enthusiastic cheers of the meeting by coupling his advice with a flattery to national pride. He thus spoke:

Blockade the Russian ports, and reassert the good old English right, the right of search (Cheers.)

From his fervent desire to "bring the war to a glorious issue," he is not content to have to grapple with Russia alone, (though that's already a nut not to be cracked without the aid of Poland,) he is so pugnacious as to desire to grapple with neutral Sweden, Denmark and (mind well the words) the United States of America at the same time. It is sad enough that England did not knew how to get Sweden for an ally (though it was easy to be done) the Birmingham meeting cheers an opinion which would infallibly drive even Sweden to the side of Russia.

In this war, such as it is, nothing could be more dangerous for England than to see the contest reduced exclusively to such a measure (with blockade) which would needs force upon you a dispute with all the world about the very delicate question of the right of search.

I would advise you to recollect some historical antecedents.

Several seafaring powers have repeatedly resisted the pretensions to visitations and search; a distinction which Lord Aberdeen endeavored to establish in the discussion with the United States in 1851, but which Secretary Webster, through Mr. Everett, most categorically refused to admit. Sweden and Holland employed in the 17th century an escort of armed ships to protect their merchant vessels from being stopped and searched. Sweden and Denmark did the same at the beginning of the last French war, and declared their determination not to allow their vessels to be searched when sailing under the protection of an escort.

In 1799 a conflict occurred near Gibralter, between a Danish frigate escorting a merchant fleet and English cruisers, in consequence of the refusal of the former to allow a search. England complained, taking a stand upon the principles established by Sir William Scott in a preceding similar case with Sweden. But Count Bernstorff, the celebrated Danish Minister, refused to submit to the authority of the learned judge, and England has left the controversy undecided. Soon another similar dispute happened to occur about the Danish frigate Freya, in escort of merchant vessels, having come to shot and shell with the English in the Channel, on account of the right of search. Lord Granville sent a fleet to the sound to give weight to the representations of Lord Whitworth on the subject.

Such "arrangements" had, of course, their weight with Denmark. It consented to suspend in future, the habit of escorting its vessels, until the question of right was decided; but not even under such pressure did it acknowledge the right in principle. It get its frigates and merchantmen restored, and England consented to reserve the question of principle for further examination, which question is left undecided up to this very day.

So surely as the armed neutrality league of 1800 did force England to a war with the Baltic Powers, just as sure would a war by blockade inevitably lead to a new armed neutrality league to which the United States of America would be a party, and that event would doubtless involve England in a new war with America.

I have already, in my above quoted article, warned England of this. I have told her that she has not yet heard the last word of Brother Jonathan about "free ships, free goods." Jonathan likes the traditions of Jefferson. Read his instructions to the American Minister at London, of September, 1793. There you will find words to this effect: "If two nations choose to war with one another, the other nations preferring to remain at peace, conserve their natural right freely to trade with all nations, whether neutral or belligerent, to come and go with perfect freedom without molestation from whomsoever; in a word, they ought to be at liberty to consider the war, to which they are no parties, as non-existing with regard to them." Brother Jonathan was an infant then, and Jefferson prudently departed in practice from the vigor of his principles; but Jonathan has grown a giant since; now he would answer you with "material" arguments which your diplomatists, together with your confusion-makers, would be hardly able to digest.

Yet there they are, your confusion makers, and they speak to you of the good old English right of search, and advise you to make a blockade war. Do it, and in six months you will be at war with the United States; and they are no Copenhagen of 1801, be sure of it.

SUICIDE BY A BOY.—The Menashn (Wis.) Advocate of the 13th gives the following account of the commission of suicide by a boy only twelve or fifteen years of age:

Young Kelsey imagined himself to be whipped and abused too much by the village boys, and on Monday evening he told his mother he would stand it no longer—that he would hang himself. No attention was paid to the threat, and on Thursday morning he was whipped by his mother for some trivial offence, after which she sent him to the woods to procure some good switches, to be hereafter used on him for bad behavior. He was accompanied by a younger brother. After going into the woods a short distance, he sent the brother home for a rope, in order, as he said, to bring a large bundle. On his brother's return, young Kelsey was stiff in death. In the absence of his brother he placed some blocks on the ground, placed one of his suspenders around his neck, and tied one end to the limb of a tree, kicked the blocks away, and hung in that position until he was found dead. This is indeed a sad affair, for one so young to take his life by his own hands. Those who have seen the corpse say that even in death his countenance exhibited the picture of determination and courage.

OPELOUSAS RAILROAD.—Another important link in this road is on the eve of being completed. We learn that the laying of the rails on that portion between Tigerville and the Terrebonne Crossing will be completed some time during to-day, and that a train of cars will shortly go over the track to Tigerville. Our Terrebonne, Bayou Black and Attakapas friends have cause to rejoice in the early completion of the road—one month sooner than was at first contemplated—and will now be enabled to participate in its many advantages. The Tigerville connection is an important one, as it will secure to the road all the business of the rich and growing parish of Terrebonne, which will be no insignificant item in its receipts the coming winter, and for all time to come. The Attakapas country will also be greatly benefited by this connection, as we learn that two steamers have already been chartered to run from New Iberia, on the Teche, and connect with the road at Tigerville, thus securing an immense patronage of both freight and passengers, especially during the low water season.

Our Government, says the New York Herald, having experienced great difficulties from the want of saltpetre during the Revolution, as well as in the war of 1812 has since been more provident for future contingencies, and Congress has for some twenty or thirty years past appropriated about $30,000 per annum for the purchase and storage of saltpetre, so that we might now probably stand a five or ten years' war even without entirely exhausting our supplies. This precaution was the more necessary on the most prolific mines in the world, as the tributaries of the Ganges in India, were under the control of England. As great as the resources of this country are known to be, yet so far they are found to be deficient in supplies of saltpetre and the latter is one of war we can get on without the latter, but not without the former. To be equal with other nations we must have ample stores of saltpetre, the chief element in the composition of gunpowder.

THE OBJECT OF EMBALMING IN EGYPT.

A French chemist, M. Gaston Fontenelle, in a discourse communicated on occasion of the opening of an Egyptian mummy in the amphitheater of the Sorbonne, at Paris, has delivered an opinion respecting the cause of embalming in Egypt. "It the Egyptians were led to it from physical necessity. During four months of every year the inundations of the Nile cover almost entirely the whole surface of Egypt which is under cultivation. Under the reign of Sesostris, for an extent of territory of about 2250 square leagues, according to D'Anville, there would be a population of 3222 persons per square league, which would present 850,000 deaths per annum. These corpses must be gotten rid of either by burning or by interment; if the latter, they must be buried around the inhabited spots, or in those which were inundated by the Nile, and then the decomposition of these bodies would have been a source of destruction, and for burning there was no sufficiency of wood. But the soil of Egypt abounds in springs of tration—saltpetre—and as this substance is perfectly antiseptic, the inhabitants were naturally led to preserve with it the corpses of the dead. In support of she opinion that sanatory views were the cause of embalmment down to the third century before the Christian era, when the practice was abandoned, M. Fontenelle observes, that during the whole of that period the plagues was unknown in Egypt, where it is now endemic.

In becoming the hon. of a party does a man necessarily have to unmake a beast of himself?

The following directions for restoring suspended animation in cases of supposed drowning, are sanctioned by the best authority:

Convey the body to the nearest house or shelter, with the head raised; strip and rub it dry; wrap it in warm blankets; suffocate the lungs by closing the nostrils with thumb and finger, while you blow forcibly into the mouth; and then press on the chest with the hand; again blow into the mouth, and again press, and so on for ten minutes, or until the patient breathes naturally; keep the body warm and the extremities also; continue the rub and do not give up for an hour or more if there is the least reason to hope.

You can go, says the Boston Post, into the North Bridgewater Museum for ten cents, and see a spoon owned by King Phillip, and taken at his capture; a pestle which belonged to Massasoit; a wine glass used by Washington during a brief stop at Easton; two candlesticks one of brass and the other of china, brought over in the Mayflower; an apron worked to a beautiful manner, 200 years ago, by a girl of fourteen years.

"VIVE LA REPUBLIQUE!"—The Red Republicans of this city, says the New York Express, of the 24th, celebrated on Saturday the anniversary of the French Republic of 1792. The speeches and addresses, of course, were of the usual blood-and-thunder revolutionary sort—with a strong sprinkling of Socialism and Fourierism. A good deal was said about the rights of man, the "solidarity of the peoples," and that grand republique universelle, which is always coming but somehow never does come. Liberal libations of lager beer were offered to the toast: "A la mort de tous les tyrans!" while the inevitable George Saunders delighted the people with a vehement declaration that he was for the Guillotine, and would, if he could, work it by steam. Tocqueville George!

It is stated in a Missouri paper that a fatal duel fight took place a few days ago in the town of Richmond, in that State, between Hon. M. Oliver and Governor King. They were separated just as the Governor was to a fair way to be whipped. The Governor struck the first lick. The quarrel occurred in the court room, and originated in the examination of witnesses. The judge fined them fifty dollars each.

Mr. Meriam, the Brooklyn meteorologist, says that thunder produces the potato rot, just as it changes milk in the cellar, checks the fermentation of brewer's yeast, and causes the meat on the hotcher's stall to change.

On a farm near Middletown, Conn., there is said to be a hybrid sort of tree, three feet in diameter. One-half is composed of maple and the other of white oak. The body of the tree is round and smooth, and the junction of the two varieties is marked by a slight ridge in the bark, which would hardly be noticed. Twelve feet from the ground, the tree divides; one side is maple, the other oak. The maple throws out a branch that has become entirely surrounded by the oak, and on either side the singular appearance of a white oak tree throwing out a maple limb.

Professor Emmons, State geologist of New York, gives it as his opinion that the whole valley of the Adirondack river is underlaid by the magnetic oxide. The bed of iron ore has been clearly traced for about two miles and a half, and Professor E. has calculated the contents of the vein lying within two feet of the surface, at nearly seven millions of tons, most of which could be raised without blasting, and which would make at least 3,000,000 tons of iron of the very best quality.

The Soft Shell State Committee have selected Nicholas Hill, Barnburner, for Judge of the Court of Appeals, in place of John A. Lott, Hunker, declined. Mr. Lott's letter declining the nomination was suppressed.

An address to the people of the United States has been issued by the committee appointed by the late Lexington (Mo.) Convention, denouncing the sending of emigrants to Kansas by societies in the free States, as dangerous and calculated to circumscribe slavery to its present limits, and defeat the true intent of the Nebraska bill. The address also declares that the rejection of Kansas as a slave State would be a gross insult to the South; an assertion that slavery is incompatible with republicanism, and an equivocal step towards disunion. The document is signed by J. A. Napton, late Supreme Judge; Sterling Price, the present Governor of Missouri and Mordecai Oliver, a member of Congress from that State.

The case of the United States vs. Hertz, for recruiting men for the foreign legion, came up in the U. S. District Court in Philadelphia on the 21st. By the testimony of P. O. Strobel, Mr. Crampton, the British Minister, was implicated in the making of arrangements for recruiting in this country. Strobel

THE ORPHAN'S INVOCATION.

My sorrow is no dream—the earth has none
Whose bosom chords are quivering for me;
If the unending universe bears one,
My mother—oh, my mother! it is thee.
And since the dark grave veiled thee from my sight,
I have endured the loneliness of years;
Then let me pass on thee this restless night;
Come, I invoke thee with a spell of tears!

I know not of thy spirit, might float far
To loose themselves amid the shades of space,
Thought wanders wildly on from star to star,
But does not reach its final resting place.
Well, yet heavenly's strong barriers stay
And mock the weakness of my midnight prayer;
Perchance love rushes to the shadowy skies,
It shall not seek to pass that light from there.

No—no! I lend a love and listening ear
When every song-bird's weary wings are furled;
Then speak one word—I will not ask to hear
The mournful music of the angel world.
I gaze through darkness, but 'tis not to view
The jasper glory of the spirit's shore,
Bring the resistless beauty that I knew
Ere life was clouded—I will wish no more.

Ah! my mind wanders, for the grave is deep,
And they have laid thee with its lovely dead.
I tremble when the mourning night-winds sweep
Above that place of silence and of dread;
For day-earth-dews have a fearful power—
They fall on lips and brow to leave no trace,
And not one spell that stirs this haunted hour
Can call them from oblivion's dark embrace.

Ah! then if earth nor heaven will ever give back
The beauty and the spirit that have flown,
If none retrace the soul's ethereal track,
If I must bear life and the world—alone,
Then let my childhood's dreamy memories wake
And chill the brow or agonize the brain—
I care not though my heavy heart-strings break,
For then thy last love will be mine again.

Ye gave on me, my mother, when day's light
Is fading from the crimson clouds of even,
And when the quivering stars of the solemn night
Light the blue loneliness of their far heaven,
And murmur to me, though I hear thee not,
When autumn days are dead and autumn winds are wild,
"I, 'll thy early anguish is forgot,
Try my own and smile as thou hast smiled.

The Silver Lake "Snaik"

An eye witness of the Monster—Indian traditions—A problem for Zoologists.

A gentleman is now in this city who has had the good fortune to see the monstrous creature that inhabits the shores and has its lair in the crystal depths of Silver Lake. His story is such as will bring conviction to every listener that there does exist in that Lake a creature not yet described in the natural history of the State, and, that in all human probability it belongs to the family of snakes. Mr. S., the person from whom the information is derived, is a highly respectable mechanic residing in this city, whose full name and residence he wishes to keep incognito, for the obvious reasons that thousands of curious persons would be flocking to hear the strange tale, and to put questions to resolve their doubts and incredulity. While returning from the West, he stopped last week at the beautiful village of Perry, near Silver Lake, in Wyoming county, in this State, where the wife's uncle, J. N. Hallet, Esq., resides, a highly esteemed citizen of that place, as is vouched for by the editor of the Wyoming Times. On Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Hallett, in company with Mr. S., went down to the Lake, partly to enjoy a stroll, and partly in hopes that they might see the monster that has appeared swimming on the surface of the Lake.

They went to a platform which has been erected on the eastern shore of the Lake, and commands a full view of the surface. Here they found two men who have been engaged by "The Experiment Co.," got up for the purpose of capturing the monster, and awaited his appearance. It had been now a week since any one had seen the snake, and it was supposed that it was either engaged in digesting a full meal, or that it had been alarmed by the structures which had been erected, and the other preparations for capture on the shore, for snakes are notoriously timid and suspicious creatures. Some distance off there was a man, an old resident, who had gone prospecting among the rushes at the outlet of the Lake, where it is thought the snake is wont to retire occasionally for concealment, food, or digestion, or all three together. Silver Lake is a fine sheet of water three miles long, and about three quarters wide at the broadest part, having an inlet and outlet both fringed with rushes, and is evidently one of the relics of that vast inland sea which once spread the western part of the State of New York, some of the deeper portions of which are indicated by this and the other lakes of the region. The depth in one part of Silver Lake is said to be unfathomable. Why may not this monster belong to one of the antediluvian tribes that traversed the waves of the ancient lake like the megalesauri and the plesiosauri of what Dr. Buckland calls the Oolitic Sea?

To return to the snake. Mr. Hallett, Mr. S., and the two watchmen were standing on the platform gazing on the placid waters of the lake, which the setting sun was bathing in a flood of the metal whence it derives its name, when lo! a dark object raises itself from the waves, four feet or more above the water—it is the snake. Their hearts fluttered. Mr. Hallett watches it through a glass, and Mr. S. sees it moving rapidly along the shore for more than thirty feet, moving down toward the outlet, when it suddenly turns and swims swiftly across the lake. After about a minute, Mr. Hallett handed the glass to Mr. S., who saw the head distinctly, then about a foot out of the water and looking as big as an ordinary hat. He marked a dark line beneath the water, extending about fifteen feet from the head, and then a portion of the back out of water, apparently considerably larger in bulk, and four feet in length, and then a wake like that of the body of a snake stretching out forty or fifty feet behind. The party watched the motions of the creature until it grew dark. It would generally swim about a minute on the surface, and then go under. The motion was swift, easy and undulating, resembling in appearance the swimming of a water snake. Mr. Hallett first saw the monster, and pointed him out moving over the water. His children, and those of the two employees of the Experiment Company will be published soon, and corroborate the statements of Mr. S.

The man who selected the rushes as the best chance to observe the monster, has lived in the vicinity for over twenty-four years, and had remarked that when the Indians inhabited the county in considerable numbers, he never saw one bathe in the waters of Silver Lake, nor hunt or hunt along its shores. When an old Indian, who now lives in the neighborhood, was asked to explain this singular avoidance of the Lake by the hunters of his tribe, he answered with a look of terror, "Big Serpent." The waters of Silver Lake are well stocked with pike, pickerel and sun fish; on these it is thought the monster may occasionally regale, while the wild fowl among the bulrushes may, at other times, form his prey.

The Experiment Company have associated to secure the creature dead or alive. They have erected a platform on which persons are stationed to watch the Lake; they have placed decks floating on the water and attached to floats or buoys, and with a heavy hook fastened under each wing and secured by stout lines. They have also sent down to this city for a large seine, which they propose to stretch across the inlet, which is overgrown with rushes, and which is believed to be a favorite resort of this monster. In case of the failure of these and other similar means of capture, it is suggested that the bulk of the lake can be drained off at a trifling expense, and the probability is that the creature may be thus easily secured. The existence of the snake, or other undescribed animal, is proved almost beyond a peradventure, and the next thing is to catch it. Such a consummation will gratify the curiosity of thousands; besides that, it may throw great light on zoological science.—[N. Y. News, 20th.

Dr. Thomas, of Monticello, Ind., reports a case of rattlesnake bite. Mr. J. H. B., aged thirty-eight, who stands six feet in his stockings, who, by the way, was very fond of brandy, had just been bitten on the inside of his left hand by a large rattlesnake; both fangs had been well inserted in the muscles. In thirty-six hours he was sound and well. I gave him, in the short time alluded to, one quart of brandy and one and a half gallons whisky, all without intoxication. He wanted more, and I refused to supply his wants. The next day, Mr. H., his next neighbor, was passing along, and saw him with his pants rolled up to his knees, barefooted, and wading around in some weeds and grass with his feet. He asked if he had lost anything. "No, sir." "What are you doing, then?" "I'm hunting a snake. There ain't any liquor only what Dr. Thomas has, and he won't let me have any unless I am snake-bit, so I'm hunting one."

Immortality and Baby Shows.

The "mutual admiration societies," which are the characteristic of small cities, are constituted on the principle of "You puff me and I'll puff you." We are not in favor of such combinations, for the reason that they are a barrier to the growth and development of manly men. Mr. Phineas T. Barnum, however, is of a different kind. He is moved by different springs. He sees, with the adroitness of an experienced showman, upon this weakest of sustaining contrivances, and makes a novel and, no doubt, profitable exemplification of the principle. A friend who attended the white baby show on Saturday afternoon has described a curious scene which took place on the occasion. The chief showman appeared on one of the long platforms, where the babies were arranged, and his junior partner on the other. Small cunning radiated from the smirks of the temperance magnate and scintillated from the glossy whiskers of the confederate. After much fussing and arranging, a speech was made to the crowd, informing them that a daguerreotypist, with his instruments, had been secured to take the scene for the London Illustrated News, and that the spectators were desired to stop walking and talking, and to "spread themselves" into becoming attitudes, so that the artist might obtain good likenesses. The hustle and stir was wonderful. The Maine giantess brushed away half a score of dry goods clerks to get a front position next the cradles of the "quartettee," where she raised her lofty head, dropped her eyes, folded her hands, and stood like a six-penny print of the Belle of the Season. She was "stern to view," as the poet hath it. The clerks strung their tallow physiognomies around the folds of her calico, peering under her elbows, and assuming the romantic expression of professional "lady killers." The cradles ceased to rock, and the nursing mothers through the room commenced a simultaneous "prinking." The vanity of female nature was aroused; every bonnet ribbon was readjusted; fat, clumsy and delicate fingers alike were run lightly over the front hair, to insure a becoming smoothness, and the two hundred and eighty women and girls who occupied the two hundred and eighty seats usually devoted to the orchestra, rose with one accord, shook out the folds of their dresses, spread their lineps becomingly, and again sank simultaneously back, with puckered mouths and a nonsorted look of satisfaction on their brows, such as Queen Elizabeth may have worn when she strode on Raleigh's cloak, across the bird cage walk.

On the other side of the grand piano—o, p—there was a similar scene of preparation and equally amusing. The Mary Anns, Claras, Melfinderinas, Eugenias, Kates and Jullanes, who, in their best bonnets and costliest shawls, were mustering to the foreground, to partake of the immortality of the print shop thus suddenly opened to their humble aspirations, were ordered to cluster more to the right, much to the "messing" of their starched skirts; and "a place for the press" was loudly claimed by two constables, who marshalled into the foreground, near the grand piano, that graceful and gallant band, the news reporters of the daily journals. Conscious power shone in their intellectual faces—they, too, were to reap a lion's share in this Show Window (immortality of newspaper illustration. What their pens had often adorned, was now to be ornamented by their thoughtful countenances. By an instinctive motion, for we heard no word of command, every reportorial hat was lifted, and every reporting right hand was gently run through clustering locks, arranging them into a gentle confusion, antipodean to the "smoothing" process performed by the tender sex. Those who wore moustaches or beards, saw carefully to their arrangement in the most telling manner, and some of the more juvenile drew the implements of their profession, to indicate they were of the "ohiel among us taking notes" order of society, and were not to be classed among that vulgar crowd who had paid their "quarter" and were only entitled to a quarter's worth of the display. Probably a thousand persons were in the hall at that moment, and a thousand hearts vibrated joyfully at the idea of having their pictures taken. A thousand faces giggled sympathetically to the motions of twice a thousand hands, arranging those little accessorial details which indicated the natural and instinctive emotions of that vanity of vanities, the human heart.

There are more fools in the world than philosophy dreams of, and it was hard to tell whether Barnum was more happy in gulling his thousand dupes, than were the thousand dupes in being gently and graciously "soft-soaped" in that most tender and susceptible spot of their organization, their vanity.

"He shall not take my face, to go into the newspapers," sounded a sweet, clear and youthful voice near us in the gallery. We looked, and saw a bright, beaming and classic face, which might have smiled on fifteen summers, turning as she spoke towards the mysterious camera, and arranging all her prettiness of expression for the benefit of the inanimate reflection. The consciousness of humbug was too strong even for her vanity, and when she met our glance, a blush of candor worthy of the pencil of Raphael suffused her cheek, and she turned her face from the camera. Sweet girl—a pang ran through our heart, if by that thoughtless look we have deprived that pretty face of the immortality which should be the meed of beauty—forgive the fault; thy innocent candor will secure a more purer immortality than even the brilliant but fleeting beauty which adorns thy form. At this moment, in a loud and overtasked semi-scream, the head humbug demanded of the humbugees, "Are you ready?" The audience were changed to stone. The god of silence was enthroned in the hall, surrounded by a thousand worshipers—no sound audible but the beating of a thousand hearts. Even the babies caught the inspiration, and hushed their squalling. The cradles ceased to rock. The faces of the watches ceased to indicate the moving steps of time. It was a scene like Allston's Belshazzar's Feast—the same rawness of coloring and incongruity of drapery. The great partners had each struck an attitude—Barnum that of an Ajax defying the "Daily Advertiser," and instructing the editor of the "Journal"—and Col. Wood that of an indignant Joseph, hurling wrath at the committee which accused him of sin. The pure heroic breathed from their nostrils: mutual admiration shone on their sharp fronts. The woolly horse was wanting to complete the grand historical picture of "The Spirit of the Age." Then it was that the daguerreotype was taken, and cheap immortality the same moment secured.

The white baby exposition closed on Saturday evening. Mr. Barnum made an impudent speech. He said that he had come to Boston to show some folks who wanted "to dictate" to him what he should do, that he understood the show business better than they did. He had been blamed by some of the "old fogy presses," some of whom had predicted that there would be no babies from New England on exhibition, and that the respectable residents of Boston would not attend the show. He prophesied that there would be 100 New England babies exhibited—and there had been. He prophesied, too, that 100,000 people would attend the baby show. He was happy to say that there had been 103,000 visitors. (!) He came here to prove that "baby shows" are not the beastly and vulgar affairs they were represented to be by the press, and he thought the result of his exhibition showed he knew more about the business than the pretended showmen. In conclusion, he thanked the citizens of Boston for their patronage, and retired. The decent citizens of Boston are glad to bid the show farewell. [Boston Courier.

NOVEL ARITHMETIC.—An Ohio correspondent becomes sponsor for the following, which, as a matter of fact, he wishes to put on record. Whittaker is one of the richest men in those parts, and has made his money by driving sharp bargains. His hired man was one day going along with a load of hay, which he overturned upon a cow. The poor thing was smothered to death before they could get her out. Her owner, Jones, called upon Mr. Whittaker the next day and demanded payment for the loss of his cow.

"Certainly," said Mr. Whittaker, "what do you think she was worth?"

"Well, about ten dollars," said Jones.

"And how much did you get for the hide and tallow?"

"Ten dollars and a half, sir."

"Oh, well, then you owe me just fifty cents."

Jones was mystified, and Whittaker, very fierce in his demand, and before Jones could get the thing straight in his mind, he forked over the money.

FATAL LEAP INTO MOUNT VESUVIUS.

Some Germans of good family, on a recent occasion, had toiled to the summit of Mount Vesuvius, and after resting themselves on that sulphurous bed, they descended the steep incline to the mouth of the crater. There was little smoke that day, and the scientific gentlemen began to get into danger without being aware of it. The guides having had quite enough of soft ashes and hard work in the ascent, sat down on the upper rim of the crater, not feeling inclined for more exertion. So many people had gone to peep into this chimney of the infernal regions, day after day, without an accident, that these lazy guides preferred some sour wine and a slice or two of lemon sprinkled over with salt, a very common comestible amongst the lower orders of Neapolitans, and a little siesta, to looking after the souls and bodies of those entrusted to them. One of the most adventurous of the Germans, finding he could hear the little sulphur which seemed emitted from the crater, resolved to penetrate further; but scarcely had he placed his foot upon an apparently solid projection, than the whole crumbled beneath him, and he was precipitated at least one hundred feet. The interior of the crater seems as soft as the exterior, for the first words heard from the unfortunate man were, that "he was not hurt." In vain he tried to extricate himself; whatever he grasped moulded in his grasp. He could not regain his feet—of this his companions above were informed.

They seemed to have become more stupified than the unfortunate victim; for instead of dispatching the guide to the Observatory of the Hermitage for ropes or assistance of some kind, they stood listening to their friend below, who gave them the idea of going elsewhere then where they remained useless and spell-bound. There is everything in Naples but what is required; and at the Observatory, although ropes must be always in request, and at least, a precautionary utility, yet none could be obtained either there or at the Hermitage; and the guides were obliged to go to Resina for that which ought always to be at hand. In the meantime the sulphur began to operate upon the poor fellow in the crater, and he felt himself gradually sinking, not only in strength but in position. With a wonderful self-command he took leave of his friends, being perfectly certain he could not survive the natural dilatory delay of Neapolitans. For two long hours did he survive, when his voice got feebler and feebler. Perhaps as he by slow degress slid deeper into the crater, hope gradually vanished—until the voice was entirely lost. An occasional groan was heard, until after the expiration of the above time, when all was silent. The body was many hours after rescued by a guide, who descended two hundred feet before he found it. Of course it was perfectly lifeless—the sulphur had suffocated the poor fellow.

MUTATION OF MATTER.—With a very near approach to truth, the human family inhabiting the earth has been estimated at 700,000,000; the annual loss by death is 18,000,000. Now the weight of the animal matter of this immense body cast into the grave is not less than 622,400 tons, and by its decomposition produces 9,000,000,000,000 cubic feet of gaseous matter. The vegetable productions of the earth clear away from the atmosphere the gases thus generated, decomposing and assimilating them for their own increase. This cycle of changes has been going on ever since man became an occupier of the earth. He feeds on the lower animals and on the seeds of plants, which in due time become a part of himself. The lower animals feed upon the herbs and grasses, which, in their turn, become the animals; then, by its death, again passes into the atmosphere, and are ready once more to be assimilated by plants, the earthy or bony substance alone remaining where it is deposited; and not even these unless sufficiently deep in the soil to be out of the absorbent reach of the roots of plants and trees. Nothing appears to me so cannabalizing as to see a flock of sheep grazing in a country churchyard, knowing it to be an undeniable fact that the grass they eat has been nurtured by the gaseous emanations from my immediate predecessors; then following up the fact that this said grass is actually assimilated by the animal, and becomes mutton, whereof I may perhaps dine next week. "Truth is stranger than fiction," and here is a truth that exemplifies the proverb. It is not at all difficult to prove that the elements of which the bodies of the present generation are composed have all passed through millions of mutations, and formed parts of all kinds of animal and vegetable bodies in accordance with the unerring law of nature.

MILITARY LITERATURE.—American papers are remarking on the absence of all literary effort in the Crimea, and are therein noting—very much to their own glory—a characteristic difference between the surroundings of an American and an English army. The contest is fair. The self-laudation is not unjust. Our readers know that when the Yankees marched into Mexico they carried with them a printing press, and published a newspaper along the line of invasion. Across prairies, through dangerous passes, over mountain ranges, sometimes on mules, oftener on men's shoulders, occasionally in wagons—traveled press, paper, type and ink—editors, contributors and pressmen, fighting, foraging, writing, working onward. Infinite were the uses of the press. It carried orders through the camp. Every morning the soldier read in it the story of the previous day. It anticipated the gazettes. It disseminated orders of the day. It perpetuated the gossip of the camp; reflected public opinion in the army; made known every want; supplied every information; exercised, inspired and animated every heart. Had the Americans been in the Crimea they would have had daily papers at Balaklava, Eupatoria, Yenikale and Constentinople; and these papers reflecting the humors, incidents and life of the camp, would have ranked among the best historical documents on the war. As it is, our soldiers in the Crimea are indebted to the London journals for authentic information of what occurs in the camp itself, and within a mile or two of their own tents. Jonathan is far ahead of us in some respects. [Athenæum.

EDITORIAL LIFE IN CALIFORNIA.—A good picture and life-like, of a California editor, may be had in the perusal of the following from the Alta Californian:

"First, he gets up in the morning at ten o'clock; dresses himself, puts on his hat, in which are six or seven bullet-holes, and goes to a restaurant for breakfast. After breakfast, starts for the office to look over the papers, and discovers that he is called scoundrel in one of them, a liar in another, and a puppy in another; he smiles at the pleasing prospect of having something to do; fills out and dispatches three blank challenges, a ream or two of which he always keeps on hand, ready printed, to save time; commences writing a leader, when as the clock strikes eleven, a large man with a cowhide in one hand, a pistol in the other, and a bowie-knife in his belt, walks in and asks him if his name is ——; he answers by knocking the intruder down two pair of stairs with a chair.

At 12 o'clock finds that his challenges have been accepted, and suddenly remembers that he has a little affair of that nature to settle at the beach that day at 3 o'clock; goes out and kills his man, then comes in and dines on stewed grizzly. Starts for the office, and while going there gets mixed up in a street row, and has the heel of his boot shot off by accident; laughs to think how beautifully it was done, arrives at his sanctum, and finds an "infernal machine" upon the table; knows what it is, and merely pitches it out of the window; writes an article on "moral reform," and then starts for the theater; is attacked at the corner of a dark alley by three men, kills two of them, and takes the other to the station-house. Returning to the office at 11 o'clock at night, knocks a man who attempts to rob him, kills a dog with a paving-stone, gets run over by a cab, and has the tail of his coat slit with a thrust from a knife, and two bullet-holes put through his beaver as he steps within his own door; smiles at his escape; writes until two o'clock and then turns in, with the happy consciousness of having two duels to fight the next day."

Europeans and Americans are accustomed to regard the Chinese as novices in the arts and sciences, and yet the imperial casual is one of the most gigantic works in the whole universe, displaying eminent practical engineering skill and genius in its construction.

A VALUABLE INVENTION.—The Pittsburgh Post gives the following description of the great American Car-brake, recently invented by an engineer of the Pennsylvania Central Railroad, named Wm. Loughridge:

The following extraordinary results on a well track, must convince every unprejudiced mind that this is "the brake" of the world.

On Friday last, in coming from Blairsville to Pittsburgh, the train was stopped at twenty-one stations, two of them to wood and water. The average time was thirteen seconds for each stop, requiring only 4 minutes and 50 seconds for the twenty-one stations. The time was counted from the moment the engineer laid his hand on the lever to brake, until the train came to a dead halt. In several cases it only required from eight to ten seconds. This is five times as quick as the hand-brakes. Indeed, with this brake a train can be stopped before the breakmen in most cases can get to the brakes. The principles are very simple, and not likely to get out of order; cheap of construction, and reliable in its operation.

Mr. Loughridge informs us that after four months' practical experience, the following results have been accomplished:

1. The engineer can, at any speed, apply or relieve all the brakes in the train in twelve feet run on the track.

2. Every wheel in the train receives an exact equal pressure.

3. The brakes are applied to the hindmost car in the train first, which stretches out the train and keeps the bumpers apart until the engine stops.

4. The power applied to the brakes can be graduated from one pound up to locking the wheels.

5. The machine can be set to throw off the motive power at any desired point, preventing the possibility of locking wheels unless desired.

6. The hand brakes work in combination with the new brake, or separate, if desired.

7. The cars can be drilled or turned as usual.

The following is the nearest technical description we could gather from the patentee:

A chain barrel four feet long hangs behind the driving wheels of the engine; the left end has a permanent bearing—the right end hangs in a swinging lever, which passes up in front of the engineer. On the right end of the chain barrel there is constructed a friction wheel, fourteen inches in diameter, with a groove in it to fit the flange of the driving wheel. On the left end of the chain barrel there is constructed a double ratchet wheel, with two pawls, one for the forward and the other for the backward motion. From the chain barrel a chain passes back through the train, acting on all the brakes in a new and novel manner. When the brakes are to be applied, the engineer pulls back the lever, which forces the friction wheel against the driving wheel, and sets the chain barrel to revolving; this folds up the brake chain, which is held by a pawl and ratchet. When the brakes are to be relieved, the pawl is pulled out of the ratchet, when the tension of the chain unfolds the chain barrel, and the brakes are relieved.

ASTOUNDING DISCOVERY.—We find the following account of a marvelous discovery in an Irish paper, the editor of which remarks that it will not probably be doubted by anybody who has sufficient credulity to believe it:

We have been informed, but what exact amount of credibility we should give to the statement we are not prepared to say, that in the progress of the formation of the Foynes Railway, some laborers discovered, at a small distance beneath the surface of the earth, within about two miles of Askeaton, a gigantic skeleton eleven feet in length. Beside the remains was found a vessel, with an inscription on it, indicating that something would be found by digging deeper. Following this intimation, they uncovered another vessel, something resembling a bottle in shape, inscribed with a legend which directed that three drops of the contents should be poured into the mouth of the skeleton, whereupon its owner would come to life again. Although much doubting they followed the instructions; but on letting the second drop into the mouth, the skeleton began to stir, upon which the men became so frightened that they took to flight, expecting, as they ran, to be pursued by the half resuscitated giant. The report of this strange story caused such a sensation in the neighborhood that the police had to close up the grave, and thus the old Fenian giant has been once more consigned to his long slumber of many ages.

One of the minor curiosities of Paris is the enormous vine which ornaments the court of a house in the Rue des Marais, St Germain. It is said to have been planted by Racine, and supposing that he did it in the last year of his life, the vine must be now about 155 years of age, as that celebrated writer died in 1699. It is this year in a flourishing condition, and covered with fruit.

An ancient and exceedingly common way of book-keeping, is to keep all the books you lay your hands on.

The prevalence of incorrect notions upon the subject of Medicine is a great cause of misery. Medical practice should not be governed by principles cautiously deduced from the contributions of long experience and close observations. How important, then, that no medicine should be taken by invalids unless it encounters from the hands of men of talent, judgment, and the strictest probity. Hoofland's German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, Philadelphia, is a preparation emanating from one of the most celebrated practitioners of modern times, and one of the greatest medical writers Germany ever produced. This article is now in ohe hands, as evidence that the article is prepared carefully and skillfully, to it producing the effect the original inventor intended. It is used by many of the leading practitioners of Philadelphia in cases of debility of the digestive organs and biliary apparatus, and the diseases arising therefrom. We therefore recommend this medicine to suffering invalids. See advertisement. se17 1m

ANOTHER POEM BY FANNY FORRESTER.

E. P. Willis sends the following beautiful poem, by Fanny Forrester, to the Home Journal, which ha is not ever been published. He adds: "The widowed of the gifted one—with her apostle husband just before her to Heaven—thus exquisitely tells the of their earthly love, and its still lingering 'held of

I gazed adown life's labyrinth,
A withering mass to see,
Crossed o'er by many a tangled cline,
And wild, as wild could be;
And as I gazed in doubt and dread,
An angel came to me.

I knew him for a heavenly golde,
I knew him even then,
Though meekly as a child he stood
Among the sons of men—
By his deep spirit levelness,
I knew him even then.

And as I leaned my weary head
Upon his profered breast,
And scanned the peril-haunted wild
From out my place of rest,
I wondered if the shining ones
Of Eden were more blest.

For there was light within my soul
Light on my peaceful way,
And all around the blue above
The clustering starlight lay;
And easterly I saw upreared
The pearly gates of day.

So hand in hand we trod the wild,
My angel love and I—
His lifted wing all quivering
With tokens from the sky.
Strange my dull thought could not divine
'Twas lifted but to fly.

Again down life's dim labyrinth
I grope my way alone.
While wildly through the midnight sky,
Black hurrying clouds are blown,
And thickly in my tangled path
The sharp, bare thorns are sown.

Yet firm my foot, for well I know
The goal cannot be far,
And ever, through the rifted clouds,
Shines out one steady star—
For when my guide went up, he left
The pearly gates ajar.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

There are signs of modal changes. Christian denominations are showing the effects of association—like individuals long dwelling without constraint and in good neighborhood. Going to and retreating from fixed points—relaxing all round.

The Presbyterian family are seriously discussing LITURGIES. The introduction into their congregational worship of pro-composed and even responsive services, to a greater or less extent, seems probable at no distant day. The Independent, speaking for the Congregationalist branch of this family, says no difficulty. A liturgy is Calvinistic, and retains to the earliest ages as well as the Lutheran Reformation. The one-man service in church is not good. The people, all the people must be set to work and worship instead of being an assembly, not of living actors, but of silent, passive hearers. The church has become mere listeners to preaching—a roll of names baptized, permitted to take the Lord's Supper, and expected to enjoy good preaching. Like the door on the hinges, they come and they go. They are prayed for, and sung to; and often sung and preached to sleep, if not to death. Thus year after year, this continues round, this continues round, this dead flat, over which not a breath of emotion passes to disturb the dull and decent monotony.

"It seems then to be agreed, on all hands, that the subject is one which deserves and demands more general attention than of late has received; that it concerns the best education and the most efficient Christian action of each church; and that pains should be taken in all such assemblies of God's people, to adopt and to maintain that order of worship which is shown by philosophy, or is proved by experiment to be best in itself, and best adapted to the use of the gathered Christian households. It is admitted further, that a very disagreeable want of order is now exhibited in many churches, in their public services; some standing in prayer, while others in the same assembly sit, or kneel down; some standing in singing and facing the choir, while others stand and face the pulpit, and others still do not stand but sit; whole congregations standing during the singing of one hymn, while they sit during another, etc. And no dissent has been expressed, that we know of, from the simple, obvious and easy rule suggested by us: that a particular posture of body be selected by each church, as appropriate and applicable to each part of the service; and that that posture be uniformly and always taken whenever that part of the worship to which it is appropriate recurs. For example, it seems proper that a congregation should arise in praise, should bow down or kneel in prayer, and should sit during the reading of the Scripture and the sermon. Let these attitudes be adopted then, or where if they are preferred in any church; and let them afterwards be universal in that church. Whenever there is singing, let there be standing; whenever there is praying, let there be kneeling; and so throughout. An immense improvement in the appearance of our congregations, to say the least, would be effected by the adoption and application of this simple rule."

So much for posture, which would be an improvement. As for the rest—these are suggestions:

"Whether, for example, the responsive reading of the Psalms, by the minister and the people, might not fitly take the place of one of the three hymns that are wont to be sung at each service in our churches; whether a Confession of faith, brief, rich and scriptural, cannot be compiled or selected by each church for itself, and used by it with profit once on each Sabbath, as recalling to the minds of the worshippers, at the outset of the service, the great supernatural facts revealed to us in the Gospel; of the Incarnation, the Atonement, the Resurrection from the dead, the Communion of Saints, and Eternal Judgment; whether it would not be possible to have the Lord's Prayer repeated once on the Sunday by the whole congregation, each for himself offering up its comprehensive and fit petitions; whether, even, a form of general Confession of Sin, and of general Thanksgiving for God's goodness, could not be adopted by each church, under the guidance of the pastor, or of skilful and devout men in the assembly, which should be statedly used, until a better one should be substituted for it, in connection with the extemporaneous prayers of the pastor. These suggestions have been made, and are open to discussion. As has already been said, we see some reasons for such changes, some reasons to think they would be real improvements; and we certainly are not unaware that there are objections to them which deserve to be carefully examined and measured."

To guard the opponent hearing of these admissions:

"It has been perseveringly affirmed, in some quarters, by those who certainly ought to have known better, that we desire to imitate or reproduce the Episcopal liturgy in our Congregational churches. Nothing can be more untrue. We would not imitate any thing, or anybody; but would allow, and would prompt, the Christian intelligence and experience of each local church to express themselves naturally, in the adoption of such forms as shall be best suited to each, whether they have ever been adopted by any other or not. We certainly would not be debarred from the appropriation whatever seemed wise and profitable in itself, simply because it had been used before, by either Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, or Dutchmen. But neither, on the other hand, would we take it because it had been so used. Some of the chants, the Te Deum for instance, and the Magnificat, are the earliest and noblest Christian hymns. They came into existence long before the Episcopacy. They have been sung in catacombs and in caves, amid the deserts and on the arena, by those who have now for ages been saints in heaven.

* * * * * * * *

"Let each church investigate the subject for itself, and take what it wants, without imitating anybody; this is our principle. And if anybody detects a hankering for Episcopacy in this assertion of the full authority of each local church, he had better explore the next Burr mill-stone which he meets for ante-Ptolemaic hieroglyphics, and an enchorial text."

The Princeton Review contained an article on the subject, which has been copied into the Southern Presbyterian, (S. C.) The objections to an cast-iron ritual are strongly stated, and they are many. But it is shown to be a mistake to represent liturgies as an adjunct of Episcopacy. Calvin composed a liturgy for Geneva, Knox for Scotland, and some of the best portions of present Episcopal forms were drawn from or through them. The article we allude to says:

"Is it wonderful, then, that a strong repugnance to the very name of a liturgy, should be roused in the minds of the Presbyterians of Great Britain and of their descendants in America? Of the liturgies of Calvin, of Knox, of the Huguenots, of the German and Dutch Reformed Churches, they know nothing. A liturgy in their minds meant the Book of Common Prayer, framed for the comprehension of papists, enforced by the will of Elizabeth, rejected at the cost of property and life, by their pious ancestors. It would be contrary to the laws of our nature, if such a struggle as this did not lead to some exaggeration of feeling and opinion on the other side. No candid man can blame the non-Conformists of England, or the Presbyterians of Scotland, if their sad experience of civil and ecclesiastical tyranny in enforcing an obnoxious prayer-book, led them to the extreme of insisting that a certain form should alone be used, begat the extreme of insisting that no forms should be allowed. It is obvious, however, to the candid, that between these extremes there is a wide and safe middle ground. That safe middle ground is the optional use of a liturgy, or form of public service, having the sanction of the Church. If such a book were compiled from the liturgies of Calvin, Knox, and of the Reformed Churches, containing appropriate prayers for ordinary public worship, for special occasions, as for times of sickness, declension, or public calamity, with forms for the Lord's Supper, for funerals, and for marriage, we are bold to say that it would, in our judgment, be a very great blessing.

These two conditions being supposed first, that the book should be compiled and not written; and secondly, that its use, should be optional—we are strongly of opinion that it would answer a most important end. The great objection to the use of liturgies are, that the authoritative imposition of them is inconsistent with Christian liberty; secondly, that they never can be made to answer all the varieties of experience and occasions; thirdly, that they tend to formality, and cannot be an adequate substitute for the warm outgoings of the heart moved by the Spirit of genuine devotion. These objections we consider valid against all unvarying forms authoritatively imposed. But they do not bear against the preparation and optional use of a Book of Common Prayer."

A Presbyterian Church in Rochester has adopted the name of St. Peter's, built an edifice with an eye to the suggestions of ecclesiology, and practices responsive worship. The Universalists, not to be behind their neighbors, are to have a national convention, one subject of which is to agree upon a liturgy.

The Philadelphia Presbyterian says—plainly:

"We have no idea that such efforts will find favor. Whatever may be the occasional defects and abuses of the extemporaneous method, neither our ministers nor people could be persuaded to relinquish their present freedom for the bondage of a stereotyped form. If any pastor wishes to draw up a marriage, funeral, or baptismal service for himself, or to adopt one already prepared, let him do so. There is nothing to hinder, and his liberty is not to be trammeled by his neighbor. Further than this, we presume none amongst us will feel inclined to go."

A Baptist paper, The Recorder, gives its mind in a slight discussion of the subject: thinks the solemn order of liturgies overstated—at least in the Editor's experience:

"We remember that when attending the service of that church for the first time unable to 'keep the places' in the prayer-book, the whole was so unintelligible as to banish devout feelings. The risings and kneelings, the ducking of heads, the inarticulate murmur of responses, with the attitudinizing and the rohs shifting of the 'priest,' were gazed at with more ridiculous than solemn wonder. It was not till we had studied the rubric, and "learned the ropes," through mortification at our inability to unite with a company of christians in the worship of our one Lord, &c.

"No doubt a congregation audibly responding, appears to unite more actively in the public devotion than one that is silent. But will it do to say that the fact corresponds with the outward appearance? Is it certain that there is more true prayer, more of sincere and earnest worship where liturgies are used than were they are discountenanced? We must think not."

The Episcopal Church, meantime cramped and ice-bound, and isolated by forms, is seeking a change within herself. Change is demanded. Liturgy has been overdone. Flexibility, social and moral adaptation is wanted. About her ministers less raiment, and in her pulpits more food. The masses are being thought of and earnest effort is made for some plans to reach them. Not an insignificant movement is that of a new order of preachers—fresh from the people, and in sympathy; local preachers, as Methodists would say. The red-tape system does not answer in Church any better than state. Said Bishop Elliott, of Georgia:

"If the Church is to be limited to the more refined classes of society, the present education of her ministry is highly suitable and efficient, but if she craves to conquer the great masses of the country, civic or rural, she must train a very different set of men, with entirely different qualifications from those which at present distinguish her clergy. I would appeal to you who now sit before me, an able and intelligent body of clergy, and ask how many of you are qualified to enter upon the arena of a rural parish and address men face to face with argument, and appeal, and in controversy, where you should be stripped of your usual preparations upon paper, and be without the usual arrangements of a settled parish? And yet this readiness and address are what is wanted, if we are ever to reach those classes of the community. But all this is checked and restrained in the Church, and extemporaneous preaching, which ought to be a power, capable of being used by every clergyman, is rebuked and discountenanced. Flexibility is wanting, and until we acquire it, and until the opinion of the Church sanctions and cherishes it, we shall call in vain for legislation. Canons can do nothing for us so long as the people of the Church are opposed to the catholicity of the Church."

Pews are going out, and free seats coming in. Extemporaneous preaching is encouraged. There are unmistakeable efforts at itinerancy in certain quarters.

Whither do these changes tend? A compiled, optional and moderate liturgy.... Preachers from and of, and to the people. Free seats. Flexibility in adaptation. A position Methodism now occupies.

THREE MISSIONARY THOUGHTS.

Dr. N. Adams closes a sermon with this summing up:

1. I would make an appeal to Christian gratitude. Every Christian possesses that which our missionaries are seeking to bestow on the pagan world. Let him be faithful towards others.

2. It is a great loss and sorrow not to have shared in the work of Christian missions.

3. The sure success of the empire of love should influence our plans and efforts. We should have large faith and feel that we have a warrant for every expenditure which sound judgment approves. No chapters are more appropriate to be read in this connection than those in the Old Testament where Joshua is commanded to partition off the undivided and unconquered land. With those Israelites, though their battles are not yet fought nor their enemies subdued, there is no such thing as "chances of war." The land is theirs before the battle. So is it with the Church of God! Let us go up and possess the land. Despondency shall never affect us.

THE PEEN AND THE POETESS.—Frances Browne, an unfriended poetess in England, recently contributed to the 'Athenæum a poem of much merit, called "Is it come?" The poem attracted the notice of the Marquis of Lansdowne, who, hearing that the author was poor, immediately sent her five hundred dollars. It was a noble tribute to struggling genius, and deserves to be recorded.

FATHER GRIPE.

Father Gripe is friendly to Christian missions, at least professes to be. He has many objections to the mode of conducting them, but freely admits their importance, and his obligation to contribute to their support. On one occasion I went to him to solicit a contribution to aid a worthy young brother to obtain an education; he declined giving anything, as he was of opinion that young men, by industry and economy, might easily obtain an education themselves. He took occasion, however, to expatiate on the deep interest he felt in the mission cause, and his willingness to contribute to so noble an object. I suspected, not uncharitably, that his zeal in this noble cause was assumed merely to conceal his parsimoniousness in refusing to aid the young friend whose case had just been brought to his notice. I determined that I would catch him in his own net. Not long after this, Elder Gatherum, Agent of the Mission Board, came among us, and I resolved to take him to Father Gripe. After giving the Agent some instructions how to proceed, we went in the evening to the beautiful Gripe Mansion. We found its proprietor comfortably seated in his parlor, and alone. After some civilities had passed, and knowing that delay might frustrate our purpose, I opened the object of our visit. "Father Gripe, I heard you say not long since, that you felt a deep interest in the Mission cause, and were willing to contribute to its support; and as Brother Gatherum is an agent for that cause, I have taken the liberty to see you, hoping that you may give him a liberal offering." The agent, who well understood his vocation, took up the subject, and spoke feelingly of the perishing wants of our missionaries, the embarrassments of the Board, and the responsibility of Christians, especially such as God had prospered in their worldly circumstances. The old Father seemed to hear very little of what was said, but to be absorbed in his own thoughts. "I am friendly to the cause of missions," said he, "but I am entirely opposed to sending money out of the country, while we have so many heathen at home." He breathed more freely, and seemed more composed after this remark. The conversation was continued on this subject for a few minutes. Father Gripe avowed himself ready to give liberally to the Home Mission cause, but could not give to the Foreign Mission. There was no use of further discussion on that point. "It is," said the agent, "most providential, that just as I was about to leave home, the excellent Secretary of the Domestic Mission Board placed a commission in my hands, and urged me, in view of their peculiar necessities, to collect something for their treasury, if I found a fit opportunity of doing so." "I have," said the old brother, "peculiar notions on this subject—I would rather my money should go to aid in circulating the Bible, than the support of Missionaries. I know that is God's Word, but I do not know that Missionaries are good men." "Very well," replied the agent, "the Domestic Board has a Bible department, and your contribution can take that direction." Father Gripe was caught. He walked slowly to his desk, and after turning over his bills for some time, he returned with a five dollar note. "You need not," said he, "publish my name; I dislike ostentatious charity." It was a niggardly offering, reluctantly bestowed. He ought not to have given less than fifty dollars, and he might have given five hundred more easily than brother Trueheart gave fifty, and sister Meroy gave one dollar. We returned, felicitating ourselves that some little had been obtained, which, though it could not bless the giver, might promote a good cause: but on inquiry, it was found that Father Gripe's note was on a bank of very doubtful solvency, and it had to be passed off at a heavy discount.

Father Gripe promises to make a liberal provision for the cause of Christian benevolence in his will; but I much doubt whether he will do so. I shall be deceived if the same penuriousness which has followed him through life, does not accompany him to the tomb. His family all partake of his spirit, and would consider any diversion of his property to the cause of benevolence, a serious calamity on themselves. They need not fear it; for the old man is now very much influenced by the views of his children. He has trained them to his own habits, and found them sound in the main point—taking care of money.

The Bible has not, I think, been much studied by the old Father. There are, however, a few passages of Scripture exceedingly precious in his sight, and very frequently on his lips. "We command you," that if any would not work, neither should he eat." "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." Another passage is a great favorite with brother Gripe. Whether he supposed it to be a portion of Holy Writ, I do not know; judging from the reverence he has for it, the frequency with which he quotes it, and the potent influence it exerts over him, I should conclude he does. I do not know in what verse or chapter of the book of Diabolus it is found, but it runs thus: "Charity must begin at home."

I ought to say, before I conclude, that this aged brother does not take a religious paper. He was once persuaded to do so, but at the end of six months he discontinued it in disgust, because it contained so many appeals for money. I learn, however, that he frequently borrows the paper from brother Allgood, to read interesting articles, and particularly to look over the prices current.—The Mirror, by Dr. Jeter.

The royal mail steamship America, when she arrived at Halifax with accounts of the Crimean victory fired thirty-six guns in honor thereof.

Particulars of Foreign News.

THE FALL OF SEBASTOPOL.

The New York papers of the 28th are filled with the accounts brought by the Washington, and have also full telegraphic dispatches from Halifax, of the news by the America, three days later. The London correspondent of the Herald says:

It appears that the attack on the 16th of August was a last desperate attempt by Gortschakoff to compel the Allies to raise the siege. His signal defeat on that day must have shown him his case was hopeless. Nearer and nearer came the batteries, inch by inch, step by step, through solid rock, each yard in advance marked by blood, but still onward they came against the mighty walls, and as one man fell another took his place.

The bombardment which preceded the last attack was with guns and mortars of much heavier calibre and at much closer range than the previous bombardments. The first result was the sinking of a Russian man-of-war and the burning of a frigate.

On the ever memorable morning of September 8, orders were issued for the attack. The French were to storm their old enemy the Malakoff, the English the Redan—in fact, the assault was to take place on the same ground as on the 18th of June last, when the Allies were driven back. For the previous twenty-four hours the town underwent a fearful bombardment.

The Herald condenses the following particulars:

The English who attempted the Redan were not successful. During the night the Russians, in the exacerbation of despair, began to sink their ships, blow up their magazines and burn their city, and on the following morning Sebastopol was evacuated, and the communication between the north forts and the town broken off.

The assault on the Malakoff was made at noon of the 8th inst. the redoubts and the Redan of Careening Bay were carried by storm by the French soldiers with admirable intrepidity to the shouts of "Vive l'Empereur!" The Redan of Careening Bay was not tenable, owing to the heavy fire of artillery, which was poured upon the first occupiers of that work. On beholding the French Eagles floating on the Malakoff, Gen. de Salles made two attacks on the Central Bastion, but did not succeed. The French troops returned to their trenches. The losses were serious.

The plan of the battle appears to have been as follows:

The place was attacked in four directions. The British troops attempted the storming of the Redan, the French attacked the Malakoff. The extreme right of the French made a diversion on the Little Redan, and a united attack of the English, French and Sardinians was made on the Central Battery. All the attacks were made simultaneously, with great spirit and energy; but the one which was eminently successful was led by Gen. Bosquet and Gen. M'Mahon on the Malakoff. Both the Redan and the Central Bastion were at times in the hands of the storming parties; but so accurately did the guns of the Russians cover these, that as soon as the English had gained possession of them, it was found impossible to hold them.

The intelligence of the fall of Sebastopol was received in London with demonstrations of great joy. At the various theaters and places of public amusement the fact was officially announced, and the bands at each place immediately played the national anthems of England and France. Throughout England the demonstrations were general.

On the night of the 8th inst., whilst the Emperor of the French was at the door of the Theater Italien, at the moment the carriage containing the ladies of honor of the Empress stopped at the entrance of the theater, an individual who was attending on the trottoir discharged, without taking aim, two pocket pistols at the carriage. No one was struck. The man, who had more the appearance of a maniac than an assassin, was immediately arrested. The name of the individual arrested is Bellemarre. He is about 22 years of age, and was born at Rouen. When 16 years of age he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for swindling.

The Madrid advices of the 3d inst. have arrived. An official return represents that the number of persons attacked by cholera at Madrid, from the commencement of May to the end of August, was 2958, and that 1783 of them died. The cholera has broken out with extreme violence at Pampeluna, on the 28th ult. not fewer than forty persons had died of it. A letter of the 3d, received in advance of the mail, says that the Queen continued to be in perfect accord with her Ministers. It states that the Captain-General of Catalonia had reported that two Carlist bands, under chiefs named Guibert and Huignat, had been routed at Osort and Adrian, and it announces that extraordinary heavy rains had caused great damage to the railway from Madrid to Albacete.

The following reliable accounts embrace everything of importance by these steamers:

General Pelissier's Dispatches.

BRANCIA REDOUBT, September 9th—3 A. M.—I approached, this morning, the Quarantine Battery, on board the Brandon, and ascertained myself that they are now evacuated. They have just blown up. Our soldiers have left their trenches, and are spreading themselves in groups over the fortifications of the town, which appear to be totally deserted.

CRIMEA, Sept. 9, 8 P. M.—The enemy has sunk his steam vessels. The work of destruction continues under the fire of our mortars, as mines are successively sprung at different points.

It is my duty to defer entering the place, which has the appearance of a great furnace. Prince Gortschakoff being closely pressed by our fire, has demanded an armistice to carry off his wounded. The bridge near the fort of St. Paul has been destroyed by the enemy. I am engaged in ascertaining the amount of our loss. Everything is going on well.

We are watching the movements of the enemy on the Tchernaya.

Admiral Bruat's Despatches.

CRIMEA, Sept 9, 1855.—The assault upon the Malakoff Tower was made yesterday noon, and later, on the great Redan and Central Bastion. A gale from the north kept the ships at anchor. The mortar boats, to be enabled to fire, were obliged to enter Sleletzeka bay. They fired 600 shell against the Quarantine Bastion and Fort Alexander. Six English mortar boats, also at anchor in Sleletzeka bay, fired about the same number of shells. Last night violent explosions and vast conflagrations made us suppose that the Russians were evacuating the town. To-day we ascertained that the Russian vessels had been sunk. The bridge was covered with troops retreating to the north side. After 8 o'clock the bridge was destroyed. A few steamers remained in the port, anchored near Fort Catherine.

CRIMEA, Sept. 10, 11 P. M.—I inspected today Sebastopol and its lines of defence. The mind cannot form an exact picture of our victory—the full extent of it can only be understood by an examination of the place itself. The multiplicity of works of defense, and the material means applied thereto, exceed by far anything seen in the history of the war.

The capture of the Malakoff has placed in the hands of the Allies a large amount of material and immense establishments, the importance of which it is not possible to state exactly. To-morrow the Allied troops will occupy the Karabelnaia and the town, and under their protection an Anglo-French Commission will be occupied with making out a return of the material abandoned to us by the enemy. The exultation of our soldiers is very great.

CRIMEA, Sept. 12, 1855.—The enemy has destroyed the remainder of his fleet. Nothing now remains afloat.

The Allies are hastening preparations in case of Gortschakoff attempting to reach Perekop, or to unite with Liprandi.

The Sardinian Report.

Gen Mermora writes that the Russians have withdrawn from the town after having set it on fire, blown up all the public buildings and works of defense, and sunk their last ships. The Sardinians have lost forty men in the trenches.

Losses of the Allies.

The London Post says the English loss in the assault on the Redan, was five to six hundred killed and fourteen hundred wounded, including one hundred and forty-one officers.

The Moniteur says that up to the morning of the 11th, 4,503 wounded, including 240 officers, had gone to the ambulances. The number of the dead was not ascertained, but it is probably short of 2,000.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times writes that five French Generals were killed, besides ten superior officers.

It is also affirmed that Generals McMahon and Frocher have died from the effect of wounds, and that General Bosquet is either killed or wounded.

Russian View of Affairs.

The Russian paper, The Brussels Nord, says the resolution of Prince Gortschakoff exhibits the energy of a great commander. It saves Russia from an inextricable position into which a false interpretation of a point of honor would have thrust her.

The Russian army concentrated north of Sebastopol will henceforth have that unity of movement and action which, until now, it has wanted. The Sebastopol of the South is replaced by Sebastopol of the North—a formidable position, bristling with innumerable guns, which a compact army hemmed around will defend. The partial history will do justice to Prince Gortschakoff, who, by making a momentary sacrifice, and avoiding useless effusion of blood, has preserved for Russia an army trained to war by a struggle of a year's duration, and placed that army in a position which enables him to command the situation.

Paris correspondence says Pelissier has telegraphed for instructions in case Gortschakoff should ask to capitulate. The reply, as reported, is in substance that the Russians must surrender at discretion, lay down their arms and give up all fortified places in the Crimea, including Odessa, and all their munitions of war, without doing any previous damage thereto. But Gortschakoff has not yet asked for terms.

Pelissier has been created a Marshal of France, and Paris completely illuminated on account of the victory.

A grand national te deum was celebrated at the church of Notre Dame, the Emperor attending in person.

Queen Victoria has sent an address of thanks to her army, and directs General Simpson to congratulate Marshal Pelissier on his brilliant victory.

Throughout France and England the rejoicing is immense.

The Very Latest.

[BY TELEGRAPH FROM LONDON TO LIVERPOOL.]

LONDON, Sept. 15, 11 A. M.—The Paris correspondent of the Times says it is reported that 25,000 men have embarked at Balaklava for the north of Sebastopol; also that the Russians are in full retreat towards Perekop.

The Paris Debats contains an editorial article discussing the question, whether Sebastopol is tenable by the Allies, while the Russians are masters of the forts on the north side, fronting the sea, and asserts that the town is quite tenable, the possession of Fort Chersone and Balaklava superseding the necessity of entering the harbor. The Russian armies will probably continue in observation within their positions, until the Allies make some movement; hence all speculation as to the plan of the campaign must be purely imaginary.

It is rumored in the Clubs to-day that the Allies found 1000 guns within the lines of Sebastopol, and also that the Russians are falling back upon Baktschelarai; but rumors from Paris are to the effect that Prince Gortschakoff will certainly hold the north side of Sebastopol to the last extremity. From the same source we learn that the Allied Admirals have sent a dispatch stating that it is not expedient to enter the harbor of Sebastopol until Fort Constantine shall have been silenced. It is conjectured that the Allies will attack Fort Constantine from Fort Alexander and Artillery Bay.

The Times suggests the celebration of a day of national thanksgiving, on account of the fall of Sebastopol.

A dispatch from Dantzic, under date of the 14th instant, says that the block ships are expected to be ordered home on Monday next.

Prince Frederick, of Prussia, is at present on a visit to Queen Victoria.

Denmark.

Austrian Mediation in the Sound Dues Question.—A letter dated Berlin, Aug. 4, says Austria is said to have offered her mediation to Denmark, in her difference with the United States. Doubts are entertained as to whether the United States will consent to the compromise which Denmark intends proposing, of lowering the Sound duties generally; but Prussia would be quite ready to accept it.

Russia.

A telegraphic dispatch from St. Petersburg states that the Czar intends leaving there on the 13th for Moscow. At Warsaw he will be attended by Count Nesselrode, who will, it is thought, arrange an interview for him with the King of Prussia.

Commercial Intelligence.

LONDON MONEY MARKET.—The Bank of England had advanced its minimum rate of interest to 4½ per cent., and a further advance to 5 per cent. was looked for during the coming week. The money market exhibited increased stringency. Consols for money closed at 90¾ to 90¾. The bullion in the Bank of England had decreased during the week to the extent of £721,000. Eagles quoted at 76s 4½d. Bar silver at 5s 4d.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.—Very little had been done in American stocks, and prices for the most part were nominal, and would probably remain so during the existing value of money.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET.—Messrs. Brown, Shipley & Co. report the market easier, in consequence of the increased stringency in the money market and the advanced rates of discount by the bank; prices however were not quotably lower. Messrs Denistoun & Co say that the market opened at an advance of ⅛d, but afterwards receded and became dull at last week's prices. The sales of the week amounted to 48,000 bales of which speculators took 6000 and exporters about the same quantity. The sales of Friday were 8,000 bales. The following were the authorized quotations:

	Fair	Middling.
New Orleans	7⅛	6⅝
Uplands	8¼	6¾
Mobile	6⅞	6 3 16

Ordinary to good ordinary, 5⅝ to 6⅜. Interest, 4 to 5⅝.

Messrs Dennistoun & Co. quote Uplands fair, 6⅞. The stock on hand amounted to 514,000 bales of which 329,000 were American.

A FLEETING JOY.—The Providence Transcript says, that about three weeks since, two men by the name of Rufus M. Rose and Francis Godon discovered behind a bridge abutment in Wickford, which they were repairing, seven pieces of copper pipe, filled with Mexican quarter dollars, amounting in value to about three hundred dollars. The discoverers resolved to keep the matter secret, and Godon, buying the share of Rose, carried the whole to the Blackstone Canal Bank, in Providence, and exchanged it for gold. Subsequently the teller discovered that the quarters were remarkably well executed counterfeits, and seeking out Godon, informed him of the fact, and offered a re exchange, and the poor man, who for a few days past, had been building castles in the air, found his bright hopes for the future dashed to the ground as suddenly as they had been awakened. The Transcript says that several quarter dollars similar to those counterfeit coins have recently been discovered in circulation in Providence, which leads to the supposition that the rogues are not far distant.

Further News by the America.

NORTHERN SEBASTOPOL.

The Royal Mail steamer America arrived at Boston on the evening of the 28th ult. We have already published a telegraphic skeleton of her advices. The English papers received by this arrival regard the question of the fall of Sebastopol settled in a practical point of view. The Times says, in regard to the ability of the Russians to maintain themselves on the northern side of the harbor, that the works of defense there are inferior and do not comprise the resources of an arsenal and town, and that they are badly supplied, especially with water, which can only be obtained from wells. The Time further says:

We take the final destruction of the Russian steamers the order by Prince Gortschakoff, to be a further proof of his intention to retreat, otherwise these vessels might have been sheltered for a short time under the large northern batteries. From these indications we conclude that the present object of the Russian Generals is mainly to save the remains of their army, and the strategical question which remains to be determined by the brilliant vigor of the respective belligerents is whether the allied forces will not prevent that object.

The Paris correspondent of the Times states, that when the French assault succeeded, the Russian artillery men were at the guns, but with that exception a complete panic took possession of the Russian army at the appearance of the Allies at the Malakoff tower.

The Independence Belge says that at the third assault generals, officers and soldiers were all mixed together.

The Paris Debats of the 14th contains the following notes on the present occupation of the Allied army, from the pen of Colonel St. Angel:

"It has been asked if Sebastopol is tenable, so long as the Russians remain masters of all the forts on the north side, which line the sea in front of the town? Undoubtedly; it may be held in spite of this. It is true that the occupation of the north by the Russians prevents our entering the roadstead and the port. What need have we of them, when we already possess excellent harbor? Have not our fleets already passed the winter without incurring any danger in those waters? It has also been asked if the Allies will have to undertake, now or later, the siege of the forts on the north side? There appears no absolute necessity for so doing.

The forts of the north side can neither prevent our occupation of Sebastopol, nor can they thwart our operations in the interior of the Crimea, on account of their eccentric situation. We should not be surprised at their being blown up as soon as the Russian army is compelled to retreat from the neighborhood of Sebastopol. For the present the Allied army holds its strong position until the occupation of the town shall have been properly arranged, and its chief defenses thoroughly repaired. It does not appear to have anything else to do at present. The Russian army, for its part, occupies the excellent positions of Mackenzie strongly entrenched and lined with redoubts like our own. The Russians will probably continue in observation before us within their strong positions until the Allied army gives signs of some movement.

A Paris letter says, in regard to the losses of the French:

It is reported in Paris that no less than four French Generals were killed in the attack on Sebastopol on Saturday. The death of General Desalles, however, who made the attack on the Central Bastion, is not confirmed. The names of those killed are Generals Rivet, Le Breton and Nell. Gen. De Marolles is missing, and it is feared that he has met his death from the explosion of a mine. Gen. Couseteau is severely wounded, and the favorite, aide de-camp of General Pelissier, mortally so. Of the French casualties otherwise, we know nothing positive. The total number is as yet not allowed to transpire. Some believe that it will be found to amount to 10 000, including the English loss, while others form a lower estimate. Probably the returns will not be given until after the celebration of the Te Deum in Paris.

France.

Te Deum at Notre Dame was chanted on the 12th with all pomp for the fall of Sebastopol. All the state bodies were there in uniform. The Emperor went to the cathedral in grand procession, escorted by strong detachments. He was in a carriage drawn by eight horses, led by hackeys in splendid liveries, and was accompanied by Prince Jerome. He wore the uniform of a general. The National Guards and troops of the line were drawn up on both sides of the streets leading from the Tuileries to Notre Dame. All the houses on the line of procession were profusely decorated with English and French flags. The old cathedral of Notre Dame was decorated internally and externally with English, French, Turkish and Sardinian flags. On the column also were large escutcheons bearing the English and French arms. The sight of the standard of Protestant England in the venerable Catholic cathedral of Paris was one of the most curious things that has occurred in the course of the alliance.

A Paris letter says: "Notwithstanding the rumors which are afloat, Gen. Bosquet has not received any wound. Generals Rivet and Cassigne, the latter aid de-camp to Gen. Pelissier, are among the killed. The death of Gen. Cassigne has caused deep regret throughout the army.

The nomination of Gen. Niel to the list of marshals is spoken of. Gen. Niel it was, who, on his arrival in the Crimea, designated the Malakoff tower as the vulnerable point of Sebastopol.

A dispatch from Vienna states that Baron Kulmo, President of the Council, had died from cholera.

An order has been received at Marseilles to suspend the embarkation of bombshells, and to land those already shipped.

Gen. Canrobert was offered the dignity of Marshal of France, but declined to accept it, that he might not detract from the merits of the achievements of Gen Pelissier.

A dispatch dated Paris, Wednesday, September 12 says that fresh reinforcements are ordered to proceed to the Crimea immediately, to join the grenadiers and the guards.

The London Press of the 10th sums up the achievements of the Baltic fleet thus:

"The operations of the Baltic fleet are concluded for the season; the campaign of '55 is over, and it is probable that in a short time Admiral Dundas and his liners will return to England. In summing up the operations of the fleet, it is impossible to avoid expressing the utter disappointment felt by all classes at the futile and trivolous result of the campaign. With an enormous fleet, with a vast profusion of means, and with the whole experience of '54, both the Admiralty and their Admiral have contrived to achieve, in a four months' cruise, at best, but one partial success. The triumphs of the year comprise the solitary bombardment of one arsenal, the burning of a few balks of timber, and the capture of a dozen or two small trading vessels. * * * At present, the public cannot understand what is the essential difference between the guns of Sweaborg and the guns of Copenhagen and Algiers. They are impatient to learn whether that marked contrast between the naval tactics of the last and the present war is to be attributed to the change in the relative value of the forces employed altogether favorable to the foe, or to the increased caution of our Admirals. This is a question to be submitted to the decision of a court-martial.

Terms: $2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1855.

Madison College.—This college, located at Sharon, Miss., will not be open for students until the 1st Monday in November, instead of October, in consequence of fears that the yellow fever, which is prevailing at Canton, may reach there.

The Methodist Magazine—Baltimore: Alexander W. McLeod, Publisher and Editor.—This is a spirited publication, edited with ability, spiritual and evangelical in its character, and well adapted to the religious wants of the age.

For the Beer Garden: A neat letter, postmarked Havana, Alabama, encloses $5. Done as directed.

Centenary College.—A commendable care for the health of students has caused the faculty to postpone opening the next session till 1st Nov., instead of, as last, published, 15th Oct. President Miller writes us that prospects for a full session were never better if the fever delays not too long in the adjacent country. Three hundred students are looked for.

Der Deutsche Christliche Apologete.

Number 2 is on our table. This is the German Christian Advocate, published by the M. E. Church, South, in Galveston, Texas; P. Mosling, Editor. A very neat quarto, weekly sheet, for "since dollar," per annum. We thought and will think $1 too low; but that is all the better for subscribers. It is all Dutch to us, but so much the better to Dutchmen.

Our German friends must do their best to sustain their Advocate, and the American brethren ought to help them. If you have a poor neighbor of the fader-land, take it for him. Those Germans, who are not Methodists, will hardly find even here a better newspaper literature of their own, than we judge Mosling, "Der Editor," can furnish. Send $1 to him, or Rev. C. C. Gillespie, Galveston, and it comes for one long year.

Death of Rev. A. T. M. Fly.

A note from George J. Dicks, Esq., dated Natchez, Miss., Oct. 3, says: "Our beloved pastor, Rev. A. T. M. Fly, in great peace breathed his last, on Monday, (Oct. 1,) at 11 o'clock, of the prevailing epidemic."

The Church, in this succession of pastoral bereavements, is driven for consolation from her members, to her Head. Christ ever lives. He can put the dead in more efficient relations to us than they held living, by that Power which pardons and sanctifies the most effective dispensation.

Brother Fly was prominent in a Conference which has many able ministers of the New Testament. He was not of the doubtful class called "star preachers," but what is better—solid, industrious and useful. Lovely in spirit, well balanced and judicious; he belonged to that stock company of laborers, who, without fame, bear the heat and burden of the day, and do the main tillage of the vineyard. There were times when the word preached by him rose to powerful unction and eloquence. The pleasure of the Lord prospered in his hands. Within the last few months scores of souls healed his ministry. He leaves a widow and children. Our personal associations with him were of later date and more limited than we could have wished; but they were such as to give us fellowship in the painful feeling of very many, that a good man, a useful minister, a dear friend and brother, is gone.

Quaker Quarantine.—There are curious examples of it now at work in Louisiana. In St. Landry Parish, Opelousas has quarantined Washington; and Washington Opelousas—seven miles apart. The Presiding Elder of New Orleans District, (Dr. Keener) and Rev. N. A. Cravens, of Franklin, went to Opelousas to preach, last week. A man in a boat, with a gun, kept them out from Washington till Sunday. Sunday morning they were let in to preach, provided they left directly. Sunday night they again met a large congregation, on like conditions, no carrying. Afraid of the fever, but liked the Gospel. Wanted the Gospel and nothing else.

Want of Success.—Walked by moonlight in the grounds, reflecting on the missions. My soul truant that been tried by desponding thoughts; but God wonderfully assisted me to renew him for the wisdom of his dispensation. Truly, therefore, will I say again, who art thou, O great mountain! Before Zerubbabel, thou shalt become a plain. How only for God to do it! and it shall be done in good time; and even if I should not see a native converted, God may design by my patience and continuance in the work to encourage future missionaries. But what surprises me, is the change of views which I have since from what I had in England. Then my heart expanded with hope and joy at the prospect of the speedy conversion of the heathen! But here, the sight of the apparent impossibility requires a strong faith to support the spirits.—Henry Martyn.

Multiplicity of Sects.

WHAT IT DEMANDS OF US ALL.

The Church Herald (Jackson, Miss.) states the case as nearly as its views and feelings allow. Others could make a nearer approximation to substantial unity.

Much will those have to answer for, who seem to be not for dividing and scattering Christians, whose delight, judging from their acts, is to array brother against brother—embroil sects—blow every spark of bigotry into a blaze—who never are so well at themselves as when a "Christian fuss" is brewing.

Strange appetite for the regenerate!

Christ prayed that his people might be one. How much are they doing to realize that prayer?

Verily—all of us have more or less to answer for in this thing. There is cause for wide repentance and deep. A mourner's bench, on this subject, would hold a number of editors and preachers. Indeed, there would hardly be enough blameless ones to comfort the mourners, and administer suitable spiritual directions.

Beginning, where we advise every body else to begin—at home, we find the provocations to moral assault and battery, many: perhaps, we give some. Certes, we get them. Self-defence, justice, truth, sometimes demand reply and rejoinder. Silence would be counted for guilt. Impunity would but encourage encroachment. But laid away in our own pigeon holes are many documents, that could and would have made a sensation. Spicy, polished, authentic, they lacked neither point nor edge. Their oblivion has been an offering to peace. How little we can say and publish against other orthodox churches, and fulfil duty, and not how much, should be the rule.

We invite the Herald to the same stool of repentance, from which we have arisen, and would like to hear his confessions for his belligerent course of life, while we republish his remarks, which are pretty liberal for a high churchman:

"Among the multiplicity of sects into which Protestantism is divided, there are four generally called orthodox, who constitute the great body of the reformed, and it is remarkable that they all, however widely they may differ in other and minor particulars, agree substantially in all the great truths of Christianity which are essential to salvation. There is scarcely a sentence in the Apostles' Creed which the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist cannot repeat with a reverent recognition of its truth. However christian men may differ about the forms of public worship, or the more important and substantial verities of the constitution of the ministry and the nature and administration of the sacraments, they all unite in confessing that there is one Triune God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; three persons and one God, our Creator, Saviour, and Sanctifier; one Church of his institution, for the salvation of men, a ministry ordained by Him for the preaching of the Gospel and the care of souls; and two heavenly and mysterious sacraments, by one of which we are admitted into the Ark of Safety and enrolled among His children, evermore to remain such unless we wilfully renounce our birth-right and reject his salvation; and by the other are strengthened to live the life of God in the flesh. In these things, at least, the great body of the religious press accord, and if they would more frequently express this agreement, and indicate this accordance, rather than perpetually keep their points of difference before their readers, they would rob infidelity of one of its strongest weapons against the truth of the Christian system, and would prepare the way for a kindlier review of those points wherein a difference exists, even though it be an irreconcilable one."

DIVINITY OF CHRIST.

Two men were once engaged in a discussion on the divinity of Christ. One of them, who argued against it, said:

"If it were true, it would certainly have been expressed in more clear and less equivocal terms."

"Well," said the other, "admitting that you believe it, and were authorized to teach it, and allowed to use your own language, how would you express the doctrine, to make it satisfactory and indubitable?"

"I would say," replied the first, "that Jesus Christ is the true God!"

"You are happy," rejoined the other, "in the choice of your words; you have hit upon the very words of inspiration. St. John, speaking of Christ, says, 'This is the true God, and eternal life.'"

Religious Destitution in South America.—The Rev. G. D. Carrow, Methodist minister at Buenos Ayres, says: "After passing the town of San Jose de Flores, there is not, with the single exception of the little Scotch chapel lately completed, one building devoted to the public worship of God, on the long line of country stretching from a point within two leagues of the gates of this city to the base of the Andes, a distance of at least six hundred miles. You may easily judge what must be the moral character of a population utterly destitute of religious privileges. The natives retain a few of the Roman Catholic rites, but are in a state of the most deplorable ignorance; and without check of any kind upon their inclinations, they are living in a state of nature. Excepting the confused notions they have of the existence of one God, there is not, I verily believe, on all the African continent, a tribe or nation in a more abject state of heathenism than are the mixed race of men inhabiting these old grounds of the Spanish conquerors."

Influence of the Holy Spirit.

THE POWER NEEDED.

The annual meeting of the A. B. C. F. M. Society in Utica, N. Y., was prefaced by free and edifying conference on the need of the out-pouring of the Holy Ghost. We quote from the Independent:

"Rev. Dr. Pomroy said, that it was proposed to take into consideration the subject of the great necessity of the Divine influence in order to the successful prosecution of this work. We seem to have approached a time when there is an absolute necessity that the windows of heaven should be opened, and that the influence of the Spirit should be poured out upon the missions and the churches. How can we go on without it?

* * * * * * * * *

Now, we all feel that this enterprise has gone as far as it can be expected to go without the descent of a mightier power from God. We have not been without evidence of the power and favor of God, it is true, in past years. The somewhat more than one hundred churches that we have established at different places, have had happy experience of the power of God. We know that this is so; but we wish for more. Is this great out-pouring of the Divine influence to be expected? Are we to look expecting that the windows of heaven will be opened and this influence poured down? I suppose that every one will answer "yes." We have the promise. Prophets contemplated this much, and expected that the Kingdom of Christ would be carried on by the extraordinary power of God. Why, then, may we not expect this outpouring soon? Do you answer that our sins are too great, and that we must not pray nor expect God to hear us? Then there is no hope for us and no hope for the world! We are lost! If God acts on that principle, we must die. The Holy Spirit must come, or we shall perish.

* * * * * * * * *

A few days ago I made a visit to a village which was the residence of a gentleman who had been my fellow-traveler in the East, and who is a prosperous manufacturer. I walked about his grounds with him, and he pointed out to me the different objects of interest. He shewed me his old mill—the first mill built in that part of the country, and which he himself had superintended for a number of years. And then he took me to his new mill, a fine building, and showed me how it was fitted with new machinery throughout, new looms, new spindles, everything in the finest order. "But," said I, "your machinery seems useless and inactive; you are not using it." "Oh, no," he replied, "I can't use it now; I have't got my powers." And then he showed me how he had a good head of water in another place, from which he was digging a canal, that he might bring it down upon his wheels and set all his machinery in motion. Now, sir, we have been enlarging our operations, and changing our plans; we are saying to our missionaries "get up new machinery, enlarge and alter;" but we must have the power, sir, the power, or our machinery is good for nothing."

Another speaker contributed this thought on the prevailing theme:

"God Almighty tells us that he is more ready to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him, than parents are to give good gifts to their children. Now, do we believe it? or do we want it? I know that we have a cold preference for religion if it does not interfere with our worldly plans. But, would we not want God to wait awhile rather than have a revival of religion now? It is not by-and-by that we want the Holy Spirit, but it is now."

Another presented this idea:

"Can it be said that the Church is advancing as it ought, and that the Kingdom of Christ is coming, when, although the statistics of the Church show that there are thousands added to it yearly, there are at the same time millions, and, perhaps, I might say, ten of millions, added to the population of the world. So that, although the numbers in the Church are absolutely increasing, they are yet proportionally diminishing. If this be so, how much do we need that the Pentecostal season be renewed."

TOBACCO USERS.

WILL PREACHERS READ THIS?

A great evil is about to be felt. What in former days was easily borne, is now freely and boldly decried. Tobacco-chewers had better abandon their profession. It is growing unpopular, even with those following and practising it. Here is a fact worthy of note: How many will recollect it? How many will profit by its disclosure? In one of the towns in which an Annual Conference is soon to convene, heads of families, gentlemen and ladies of refinement have said to the preacher in charge: "Send me eight or ten ministers, if they don't chew or smoke tobacco; but if they use tobacco, we can't take half so many!"

Perhaps the Apostle had an eye to the same thing, when he said: "Let all things be done decently and in order." 1 Cor., xiv. 40. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Let brethren leave their pipes and tobacco at home, when they start to Conferences.

"So mote it ——."

A Call to the Ministry.—Are the Presiding Elders searching out, encouraging, bringing up the young men moved to the ministry? Read the letter of Rev. J. Pipes. The case there told is true of more.

A Good Old Age.—A free colored woman named Victorine S. Mercier, was buried on Wednesday last in Catholic Cemetery No. 2, having died the day before, at the very extraordinary age of 111.

TO THE PREACHERS OF LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

NUMBER TWO.

Dear Brethren: St. Paul always had a collection of one sort or another on hand. Don't be discouraged, therefore, and any ways put out of countenance. The Apostle's theory seemed to be that there were only two classes, those who needed to give and those who needed to receive: that it was good for both; the difference being in favor of the former.

If any one was on neutral ground, not needing and yet having no surplus, he was to "labor with his hands that he might have to give him that needeth."

The two objects of benevolence in the Apostle's day, were preaching the Gospel in the regions beyond and the poor saints. He had a "fellowship" in both. In the missionary department we know how he bore himself: in the commissary, he acted as collector and disburser.

The Fifth Conference Collection is replaced by another way. Thus far it has proved a better. It pays—the other never did. Last year we settled the claims of superannuates, widows and orphans at 96 3-4 per cent. If all the plan calls for had been paid up, there would have been full enough. Therefore, it was, at Franklin,

Resolved, That the Preachers who have failed to pay their Widows and Orphans per cent., be requested to send or bring up the amount to the next Conference.

Here is the whole plan:

Resolved, That at this session the Conference will estimate for the year following what amount will be needed to provide for the support of superannuates, Widows and Orphans, and what per centage that amount is of the sum of the entire salaries of the members of the Conference,

Resolved, That the Conference declare the widows and orphans per cent. for 1855 to be five per cent.

Resolved, That the Conference will, at its next session, collect of each preacher such a per cent. upon his entire receipts for the year.

Resolved, That the Stewards of circuits and stations are hereby requested to add such a per cent. to the salvary of each preacher and provide for it accordingly.

If the special amount so provided at one place by public collection or otherwise go beyond the figures, it will fill the gap of some other place estimated, but not represented, and so work out the plan.

If it fall below, the preacher puts his hand into his own pocket and makes it up. Perhaps in so doing he is paying fine for his own neglect. After all, it is only paying a premium on a life insurance policy. He or his family may soon fall on that fund. By a little sacrifice of the active, healthy man, sure provision is made for the worn out and the widows and orphans.

Once more. Paul thought giving good for people, and he provoked them to it. See how he worked off Achaia against Macedonia, and keyed them up mutually. Let Bastrop, where Conference meets 12th Dec. show her hand with Franklin. North Louisiana outnumbers South. I have even heard some boasting.

Making a clean sweep of the money matters, what are we doing for periodicals, and especially for our Advocate? Are we keeping our promise?

Resolved, That we will exert ourselves to double the subscription to the New Orleans Christian Advocate within our bounds this year.

There is the Bible cause, the Sunday school and the Tract—all told. These are needful church equipments. They must be sustained. To a certain extent every ecclesiastical system is a financial problem.

Lest any body "to whom these presents may come" should get into stingy hollow, I clip an article on "Father Gripe," which, if the Editor will publish it, can smoke them out.

A MEMBER.

MISSIONS OF THE A. B. C. F. M.

It appears by the annual report of the Board presented to the recent meeting in Utica, that it now has 29 missions, connected with which there are 129 stations, and 59 out-stations. The Board employs 155 ordained missionaries, of whom 6 are physicians, 3 licentiates, 7 physicians not ordained, 16 other male assistants, in all 383 laborers sent from this country. In addition to these, the Board employs 46 native preachers, 236 native helpers, making an aggregate of 665 laborers connected with the missions.

The Board has 115 mission churches, including those at the Sandwich Islands, embracing 26,806 members. Added during the year 635, exclusive of those added to the Sandwich Island churches.

EXTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

Homer, La., Sept. 18, 1855.

We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Lisbon, which continued nine days. It was what we here call a basket meeting. The people take their dinner, have service in the forenoon, and again after dinner, with prayer meetings at night and in the morning. These meetings have almost taken the place of camp-meetings in this country. The last three days of the meeting the people ceased their work at home, and permitted their negroes to participate in the meeting; which, we think, is as it should be. A grove being selected, seats and pulpit were made, and there the "poor had the Gospel preached to them." There were twenty-five or six conversions, and a number of backsliders reclaimed, and the Church generally revived. Sometimes you might have seen the altar filled with happy souls, parents and children, together praising God. But what is better, two young men, full of promise, confessed that they were called of God, to the work of the ministry, to one of whom we gave license to exhort, and who promises to be ready for the itinerant work next year, and the probability is that the other one will also. But as a warning to young men, not to resist their convictions, who feel that they are called to preach, I will relate a circumstance which occurred at our meeting:

There was a sealed letter found on the pulpit addressed to the preachers, signed "A poor, miserable man." The letter I have lost, but will give you as nearly as I can its contents: "In the year 1850, at a certain meeting I professed religion, then believed it my duty to preach, which I refused to do, and have become wicked and miserable. Two years after, was at a meeting where I met the same minister who was present when I professed; to him I revealed my condition, and in the woods, while he was praying with and for me, the Lord blessed me again. Still felt it my duty to preach—but did not consent, and again wretchedly backslid, and now I am miserable, and unless I can get relief, will seek an asylum among the heathen; where I shall be away from every thing that I have known or seen."

True, he may get away from what he has seen and known; but not from what he has felt. Let young men take warning who have like convictions. If this young man had yielded to his convictions of duty, instead of being miserable as he is, he would be both happy and useful. There seems to be a good influence in this country generally. It is not uncommon to hear a shout in the camp. Our Baptist brethren are having many precious meetings too.

But with all, I fear that our people here are not fully awake to the importance of the missionary work; collections are small. It is true, that having no navigation and two short crops, necessarily makes money scarce; but, then, in the days of yore drouth and short crops were the result of withholding from the Lord, and as the same cause produces the same effect, it would be wisdom to withhold no longer.

Old Father Stevenson lives in the neighborhood where our meeting was held. Seeing the people pass, he sent us word that he should like to be with us, but his hearing was gone, and he could labor no more, but said he, "tell them that I feel that I am anchored in the harbor, and am waiting to be taken home." One can scarcely look at this we might say model superannuate minister, without feeling, let me live the life of the righteous, that my last end might be like his.

J. PIPES.

Macon, Miss., Sept. 24, 1855.

Yesterday was a pleasant day in Macon. Pleasant to your correspondent, because he had the privilege of seeing a good work rightly done. Our Charge is small, not wealthy, and liberal in their support of the Pastor. Pretty strong reasons sometimes, for low figures in the missionary work. For some two weeks past, we have enjoyed a very fine revival influence, some eight or ten conversions appear as the fruit, and yesterday, after a sermon on the subject, we made a public collection of $184 50 from the entire Charge. Sister Foster, the widow of our late Pastor, Rev. T. H. Foster, was made a life member of the Missionary Society, by the following persons: H. W. Foote, C. G. Bowen, T. P. Harper, R. Raff, S. D. Baker, Leah Murphy and Aohsah McCaskill. The Lord continues to bless us, and we look for a glorious Revival.

W. H. P.

Louisville Ct., Miss. Conf.

We have had another good meeting on this Circuit, a tea day meeting—30 or 35 conversions; 22 accessions.

We truly had a refreshing time. Awakened sinners were still groaning for redemption, when we closed. May God sanctify the Church, and convert manners and save the people.

M. P. DICKINSON.

Midway, Ala., Oct. 1, 1855.

We are doing something on Barbour circuit. The missionary meetings have all passed, and we have subscribed about eight hundred dollars. The other collections are not so good.

There have been some fine revivals lately, and at the last quarterly meeting we reported one hundred and eighty-nine accessions on probation and five by letter.

I am trying to collect the dues of the Advocate, but have done little as yet, owing, doubtless, to the scarcity of money. We will get all, and some new subscribers.

OS. HURT.

Hollow Square, Ala., Oct. 2, 1855.

This being the morning of my well day, I will try and answer. You labor under a mistake in regard to the health and navigation facilities of our country. One-half of the people about here are sick; no exaggeration. We have to send to Selma for quinine, having already used up all in the county, and at Eutaw and Greensboro, Havana, and elsewhere adjacent. Myself and family have been down all at once; from 15 to 20 in other families—chills and fever. Our river looks like it will go dry (the Warrior.) Have had no boating season this whole year; money is therefore scarce, but I have been doing my best for you. There is scarcely a family in our church but takes one or the other of the Advocates.

W. E. M. LINFIELD.

Pinkneyville Circuit,
Mississippi, Oct. 4, 1855.

We have not been blessed with an uncommon manifestation of God's presence, or religious feeling, as at many places. But the Lord has been with us, and often refreshed the hearts of his children.

Ten noble souls have been added to the Church this year. One of whom has since gone to the spirit land. My labors have been greatly crippled by the prevalence of fevers in the community. My family have suffered much from sickness. Our fall protracted meetings will fall through, as the yellow fever is nearly all around on this circuit. As soon as I could leave my sick family (which was on Sunday last) I came to this place (Fort Adams) to visit the sick. And found them in need of ministerial advice and comfort. I visited many suffering families, and gave them the consolations of the Gospel. The pestilential cloud still lowers over this place. Over a hundred persons have been sick; 16 have sunk beneath its chilly shadows into the tomb.

The remaining few persons who have escaped or recovered, are diligently attending on the sick.

Johasy Dorsy, of this place, deserves to be remembered long as a friend of suffering humanity. The noble hearted physicians are at their post. They are truly friends of the sick. Dr. Taylor has been eminently successful. The generous hearted citizens of the country have contributed provisions and money for the relief of the afflicted in this place.

Truly are the people afflicted of God! It is enough. Stay, O! stay the scourge, and sanctify their afflictions to their good.

In haste,

D. W. DILLEHAY, P. C.

Milliken's Bend, La., Oct. 2, 1855.

There is but little doing for the cause of Christ in Lake Providence, or anywhere in this district; most of the people having left the villages, towns, and cities on the river, and retired to the interior for greater safety.

The yellow fever comes with its pestilential train of evils just at the time when we ought to expect the greatest harvest for our Master's grace, and paralyzes the operations of the Church, as well as other things.

We have only had some dozen cases up to last Sunday, and most of them have been convalescent when I left there, some two weeks ago.

I am now at Milliken's Bend, to which place I am attracted by disease and suffering. The fever commenced here the 22nd ult., and up to this time some fifty cases have occurred, including those who took the the disease with them into the country. Only eight cases as yet have proved fatal. I have been up every night for a week, and generally all night. I am setting up to night, day is just breaking, and the patient being quiet, I take the opportunity to write.

If the fever abates here, which it now promises, I go to Waterproof, as I am too much affected in the throat to preach profitably: I suppose I can make myself useful by nursing the sick.

R. J. HARP.

Pleasant Grove, Miss.,
October 5, 1855.

We have had an interesting work among the blacks of "Kingston and colored mission;" seventy-five or eighty accessions, and many of the old members have been renewed in the spirit of their minds. The work was genuine; but little animal excitement; much of melting saving power. The Lord truly verified his promise, "And also upon the servants, and upon the hand-maids; in those days will I pour out my spirit."

All proper minded persons rejoice to hear of the progress of the Gospel among this class of our community; and to find the once formidable prejudice to this work giving way gradually before the influence of the Gospel, and the general enlightenment of the people. That was a cheering paragraph from your Clinton (La.) correspondent of last week, which stated that a week-day was appropriated on a revival occasion to the negroes, and that several planters sent out their folks on that day to hear the glad tidings of the Gospel. And it was encouraging to see the fact set forth as an example for the Church, and that too by a native Mississippian, who understands the subject.

There is no reason in refusing the gospel to any class of God's intelligent creatures, especially to those who are so ready and willing to receive it as our Southern slaves. No class of people on earth hear with more honest and anxious hearts. I know all true Christians will unite in the prayer, that God will raise up for this interesting and important work suitable men, judicious and authorized, who understand the wants and character of the slave; to whom the master can safely confide their spiritual interests; who will win their hearts, and at the same time enforce proper authority and discipline. Could such men be commended to the planters generally, we feel there would not be half the opposition now felt to the Gospel among the slaves.

To return to our report. We have two appointments, to the whites; well attended by respectful and intelligent hearers, most of them seemingly "almost persuaded to be Christians."

The Sunday-school at Kingston has about thirty-five scholars, who are constant. The people have in contemplation the building of a neat and commodious house of worship. The funds are nearly ready, and we expect soon to see its walls going up, and to hear within them the praise of God.

The Sandy Creek house of worship is a neat frame building, ceiled and painted; recently fitted up, and fitted out with a melodeon, which, with a choir, make our music. And though some of the brethren frown at it from the pulpit, and almost get in the brush over it; and though one of the brethren thinks there is nothing like it in heaven, and though the preacher sometimes has serious doubts himself, yet, he it said, it seems we would get along poorly indeed without it.

Withal we have spent a pleasant and delightful year with this excellent people. Should you ever visit them, we guarantee for you many pleasant recollections on your return home.

We have taken quite a liberal missionary collection; and now close this with a prayer that God may bless this people as abundantly spiritually as he has temporally.

THOMAS W. BROWN.

P. S. I write in the neighborhood of Woodville, Miss.; have not heard within thirty-six hours from that place; then the fever know no abatement. We were informed by a citizen just out of town, that there were then seventy-two cases down, some of them quite ill; among the latter Brother W. P. Barton, the Methodist pastor. There had been twelve deaths, and by this time we fear there have been several more. Brother B. thought he had had the fever in '53, in Clinton, La.

AUTHENTIC CENSUS OF THE JESUITS.

A small book of sixty-nine pages at Rome contains the catalogue of the members of the Society of Jesus. The Society divides itself into five great provinces, viz: Italy, France, Spain, Germany, England. The Society has two houses of profession, one at Rome, and the other in Sicily; it keeps open twenty-seven houses for trials. Public education in Italy, except Sardinia, is chiefly entrusted to the Jesuits; in Italy alone they have twenty-five colleges. The number of the fathers is limited. The Jesuit's Almanac numbers 5510, of whom only 1515 with their General, reside in the various Italian provinces; 364 are in Spain, 1697 in France, 463 in Belgium; in the great Austrian empire there are only 177; the remaining 1294 are scattered over England and America. Since the last struggle for freedom in Italy, the Society has added to its ranks more than a thousand regulars.

From an official report, printed at Rome in 1717, it appears that the Jesuits had then divided between themselves the whole world into 38 provinces, where they had 25 houses of profession, 650 colleges, 50 houses of probation or novitiate, 350 residences, more than 200 establishments called mission-houses, and 161 boarding-schools for boys and clerical seminaries. The whole army of the Jesuits, properly called Fathers, numbered 10,036, besides 9848 who had not yet taken the orders of priest; altogether 19,876 individuals. By comparing the past with the present, we find the following figures:

Italy, Sicily and Sardinia,	3,639	1,515
France,	3,119	1,697
Belgium,	1,020	463
Spain,	2,207	364
Austrian Empire,	2,609	177
England, America and elsewhere,	7,282	1,294
Total,	19,876	5,510

Of all the Roman Catholic States, then Austria is the least favorable to the Jesuits; the most favorable are France, Belgium, and parts of Italy. The Jesuits are reduced to a little more than a quarter of what they were.

Fever in Mississippi.—The Natchez Free Trader of Wednesday last says:

Another issue of our paper must appear without our being able to record any favorable change in the health of our city. The fever continues to spread, and attacks indiscriminately all classes of our citizens. We think it has something of its original malignity, though on the eastern suburb of our city, a short distance beyond the railroad machine shop, it appears unusually virulent.

The American Banner, published in Yazoo City, states that the report of yellow fever having originated in that place is without foundation. Cases, and deaths from the disease had occurred, but they were imported ones.

According to the Handsboro Reformer, that town must be a healthy one. The Reformer says:

The health of our town is remarkably good. There has not been a case of sickness in so long a time that the mere mention of one would be an item of news sufficient to interest our citizens for weeks. We do not think there has been more than two deaths in the place during the two past years.

Hurricane in Terrebonne.—Just as we were going to press, we learn that a most violent storm of wind and rain passed through the parish of Terrebonne yesterday morning about four o'clock. The sugar-house and dwelling of Mrs. Pierce, about eight miles below Houma, were completely demolished, and, sad to tell, a child of Dr. W. Jennings—who was on a visit to Mrs. P.—was killed in the wreck of the house. Rumor says that other damage was done, and more lives lost, on Little Caillou. We trust the report may prove false.

Deaths.

DIED—In Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 22d, of consumption,—MARGARETTA HILL, oldest daughter of the late C. Conaor, of this city.

DIED—In Pattersonville, La., on Sunday, the 23d ult., WILLIAM LAWKIN, son of the Rev. R. H. and Corinna A. Read, aged 3 years, 1 month and 14 days. He commenced last Sabbath on earth, and ere its close joined the Sabbath throng above. Thy will be done. Thou gavest—thou hast taken away. We bless thy name, our God!

DIED—In Pattersonville, La., on Saturday, the 29th ult., of yellow fever, the Hon. D. D. Richardson, late Representative from that parish in our State Legislature—aged 35 years.

In the deceased, in whom a large circle of attached relatives and friends is bereaved, the Franklin Banner pronounces, in a few words, the highest eulogy:

"He died in the triumphs of a Christian's faith. At every lucid interview during his protracted sufferings he gave us unmistakable evidence of the soul-sustaining power of religion as he progressed towards the dark valley of the shadow of death. The night before he died, he joined in singing a favorite hymn with his pastor, the Rev. Mr. Crane, expressing earnestly his desire to depart and be with his Saviour, and rest with his friend in Mr. Richardson our community has lost a useful and deservedly popular citizen. From the first appearance of the epidemic he was found in its midst, doing all in his power to relieve the families of the afflicted, both by his own exertions and by sending several of his servants to the aid of the most needy. Of the part of his benevolence I should not have known but by visiting the houses of the sick. His death is an instance of martyrdom in the discharge of duty, as he considered his relation to his suffering neighbors. May the bereaved family be comforted by knowing that more than his own household feel his loss."

Marriages.

MARRIED—On the 2d instant, by the Rev. James A. Peebles, RICHARD SPENCER, of Mobile county, to Mrs. MARGARET ANN POYER, of the city of Mobile.

Louisiana.

The Baton Rouge Gazette of Sunday last says of the health of that place:

"So far as we are able to learn, the yellow fever in our town is largely on the decrease. For the last day or two we have heard of no new cases, while the old ones are all said to be doing well. The changes in the weather of late have probably contributed to this favorable result."

The Shreveport Gazette of the 29th ult. says:

"It is our melancholy duty to announce the distressing fact that "Old Red" is again in a decline, and slowly relapsing into a condition hopelessly low. Unless there be another rise shortly, navigation will be speedily suspended."

The Gazette says that the weather was cold and the health of the town good.

Le Vigilant, published at Donaldsonville, contains a notice, inviting the residents of Ascension and other parishes to meet and appoint committees to take the necessary steps for celebrating Te Doum, with other rejoicings, for the delivering of Sebastopol.

The Concordia Intelligencer states that the fever has entirely disappeared from that village, and was not supposed to exist on any of the plantations in the vicinity.

The Lake Providence Herald of the 22d ult. says that seven or eight new cases of the fever had appeared in that town during the previous week.

The Franklin Banner of the 4th inst. says that the Town Council had passed sundry regulations for the safety of that place against the epidemic, among which was one forbidding any person from an infected district to remain in town after sunset. The fever had become much worse in Pattersonville and its neighborhood, several cases had terminated fatally.

The four negroes found guilty in Pointe Coupee of the murder of Jonee and his wife on board a flatboat, were executed in that place on the 5th inst.

The Iberville Gazette of Saturday last says that several deaths from fever have occurred in that place since its previous issue. Many were sick and a large number convalescent.

A slight frost was experienced in Plaquemine on the 3d inst. The Gazette states that the fever had increased in the number of cases, but appeared to be of a milder type.

Le Messager, of Saturday last, published in the parish of St. James, states that the fever had found several new victims in that region during that and the previous weeks. Le Messager announces, however, that the new cases had appeared to be of a milder type, which it attributes to the change in the temperature. Madame Pratz, Superior of the Convent of the Sacred Heart, had died of the disease, and Madame Barbarin had been appointed in her place.

The State elections of Ohio and Pennsylvania take place to-day. In the former State a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, members of the Legislature, and other officials are to be elected; in the latter, a Canal Commissioner and members of the Legislature are to be elected. The Democratic party of Pennsylvania has a united fee to contend against, there being no less than two candidates for the office of Canal Commissioner.

THE GALE.

REV. H. N. MCTYEIRE,

My Dear Sir: Your graphic account of the late storm on this sea-coast, reminds me to send you a few lines extemporised by me while we were exposed to its greatest fury.

Very faithfully yours,

JOHN BUNYAN.

Pearlington, Miss.

Will the waves around us roar,
On our heads the torrents pour:
Dark and dismal is our path,
God! in pity, stay thy wrath!

Darkness gathereth like a pall,
Thunder bolts around us fall,
But we trust in one above,
God is mercy—God is love!

Lo! the wild and surging tide,
Spreads around us deep and wide,
Rending forests stun the ear,
God is present—do not fear!

Raging winds and angry sea,
Tempest toss'd, we dread not thee,
God can rule thee as He will,
And bid thy stormy voice be still.

O, how grateful we should be,
For the grace bestowed by Thee,
Port and shelter, friends and light,
On this dark and awful night.

New Publications.

NOTICE OF NEW BOOKS.

Stevenson and Owen, Nashville, send the following, bearing the M. E. C. S. imprint:

THE SOUTHERN METHODIST ALMANAC FOR 1856.—This annual contains 48 pages, with a beautiful symbolical cover, designed expressly for it. It has the usual astronomical calculations, adapted to the Southern and South-western States—copious ecclesiastical statistics, brought down to a more recent date than those of other Almanacs for 1856, in consequence of an unavoidable delay in its issue—poetry, engravings, and descriptive Catalogues of our publications. It should, of course, be in every family.

DEVOUT EXERCISES OF THE HEART, in Meditation and Soliloquy, Prayer and Praise. By the late pious and ingenious Mrs. Elizabeth Rowe. Edited by Isaac Watts, D.D. 24mo, pp. 162; price 25 cents. 18mo, 35 cents.

Of this excellent closet classic it is not necessary to say much in commendation. It stands in the front rank of works of this class, which, in these hustling days, are too much neglected. The Editor has added to the interest of the book by prefixing a Biographical Introduction.

THE ANCIENT BRITISH CHURCH: Being an Inquiry into the History of Christianity in Great Britain previous to the Establishment of the Heptarchy. By William Lindsay Alexander, D.D., F.S.A.S. 18mo, pp. 192; price 30 cents.

Alas! for history—the early history of Christianity in Britain—the touch of Dr. Alexander's spear reduces the most of it to fable. Such sifting,—it pains one to see it. However, the process is salutary. It is well to distinguish between veritable facts and murkish legends. Let the praters about old times read this work. The following is the Editor's Preface:

"This book was originally published by the Religious Tract Society of England; and in revising it for our Catalogue, we have made no attempt to Americanize it—this the subject matter forbids. In such a work we can excuse a slight redundancy of the amor patriæ—in this case especially, in view of our own origin. No Saxon or Celtic American, of right feeling, can fail to be interested in the history of his mother country, and particularly its religious history. The present volume gives a condensed but satisfactory account of the Ancient British Church—it is the production of a learned divine, possessing the requisite qualifications for antiquarian and ecclesiastical researches. A few corrections have been made, and notes inserted, by the Editor."

CHRISTIANITY IN EARNEST, as Exemplified in the life and labors of the Rev. Hodgson Casson. By A. Steele. "In labors more abundant." Edited by T. O. Summers. 18mo: in press.

This is a charming piece of religious biography. It is full of life and incident, and instinct with the primitive spirit of the Gospel—"Christianity in Earnest." Mr. Casson was truly a remarkable man—like Stephen, he was "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost," and like St. Paul, he was "in labors more abundant." The perusal of his Memoirs can scarcely fail to be interesting to any one, but it will be specially so to all who are engaged in this work of the ministry, and who are studying to become wise in winning souls to Christ.

SONGS OF ZION: A Supplement to the Hymn Book of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Sing praises to God, sing praises. —Ps. xlvii. 6. There are no songs comparable to the songs of Zion.—Milton. Edited by Thos. O. Summers.

As the Agents are bringing out a new edition of this work, with some slight corrections by the Editor, we take occasion to suggest the expediency of introducing this "Supplement" into general use in social and family worship. Besides the positive good to be realized from its circulation, the exclusion of the numerous works of the sort containing abominable doggerel and questionable theology, is an object bad in view by the compiler, and is one devoutly to be wished for by all who worship God in spirit and in truth. It is very desirable that there should be a general agreement among us in regard to this matter.

Natural good is so intimately connected with moral good, and natural evil with moral evil, that I am as certain as if I heard a voice from heaven proclaim it, that God is on the side of virtue.

Details of Foreign News.

BY THE PACIFIC.

The advices by the Cellius' steamship Pacific, are one week later.

The official dispatch of Gen. Simpson is published. He states that after his storming parties had been driven from the Redan, he planned a second assault with the Highland Brigade, to take place on the following morning, which was rendered unnecessary by the enemy's abandoning the works during the night. The General thus describes the plan of the assault and its execution:

It was arranged that, at twelve o'clock in the day, the French columns of attack were to leave their trenches, and take possession of the Malakoff and adjacent works. After their success had been assured, and they were fairly established, the Redan was to be assaulted by the English. The Russian, Central and Quarantine Forts on the left, were simultaneously to be attacked by the French.

At the hour appointed our Allies quitted their trenches, entered and carried the apparently impregnable defences of the Malakoff, with that impetuous valor which characterizes the French attack, and, having once obtained possession, they were never dislodged. Their tri color planted on the parapet was the signal for the British troops to advance. The arrangements for the attack I entrusted to Lieutenant-General Sir William Codrington, who carried out the details in concert with Lieutenant-General Markham. I determined that the Second and Light Divisions should have the honor of the assault, from the circumstance of their having defended the batteries and approaches against the Redan for so many months, and from the intimate knowledge they possessed of the ground.

The fire of our artillery having made as much of a breach as possible in the salient of the Redan, I decided that the columns of assault should be directed against that part, as being less exposed to the heavy fire by which this work is protected.

It was arranged between Sir Wm. Codrington and Lieut.-Gen. Markham, that the assaulting column of 1000 men should be formed by equal numbers of these two divisions; the Light Division to lead, and that of the Second to follow. They left the trenches at the preconcerted signal, and moved across the ground, preceded by a covering party of 200 men, and a ladder party of 320. On arriving at the crest of the ditch, the ladders were placed, and the men immediately stormed the parapet of the Redan, and penetrated into the salient angle. A most determined and bloody combat was here maintained for nearly an hour, and although supported to the utmost, and though the greatest bravery was displayed, it was found impossible to maintain the position.

General Bosquet's Address to the French Troops before Storming.

The following is the order addressed by General Bosquet to the troops under his command, immediately before going into action:

"Soldiers of the Second Corps of the Reserve, on the 7th of June you had the honor to strike proudly the first blow, right to the heart of the Russian army.

"On the 16th of August you inflicted, on the Tchernaya, a most shameful humiliation upon the enemy's army of relief. To-day it is the coup de grace the coup mortelle, that you are about to strike with that firm hand which the enemy knows so well, by carrying his line of defence by the Malakoff; while our comrades of the English army and of the first corps will commence the assault of the Redan and Central Bastion. This is a general assault, army against army. It is an immense victory with which the young eagles of France are this day to be crowned. Forward, then, mes enfans! Malakoff and Sebastopol for us, and Vive l'Empereur!

BOSQUET,
Commander of the Second Corps."

An account from the Crimea, of the 11th, states that General Bosquet's wound is not serious. The first detachment of the Allied troops entered the Eastern part of the Karabelnaia suburb of Sebastopol on the 11th, by order of General Pelissier; and on the following day, the city having been previously inspected, was occupied, but only by small bodies of troops.

Marshal Pelissier's Account of Stores Captured at Sebastopol.

Pelissier (now a Marshal) telegraphing from Sebastopol on the 17th September, says:

"The enemy have not destroyed their docks, the neighboring establishments, the barracks, Fort Nicholas or Fort Quarantine. A first general survey of the materials left has given the following result: 4,000 guns, 50,000 bulls, a few hollow projectiles, a large quantity of powder, (notwithstanding all the explosions that have taken place,) 500 half-anchors in excellent condition, 25,000 kilogrammes of copper, two steam-engines of 30-horse power, and a considerable quantity of sawn timber for defence works."

Reported Retreat of the Russian Army.

The Gazette de Prusse, the organ of the Russian party at Berlin, publishes the following contradiction of the report from Vienna, containing the retreat of the Russian army upon Perekop:

"The Gazette des Portes and the Gazette d'Allamagne du Nord announce that the Prince Gortschakoff has received a dispatch from Warsaw, stating that the Russian corps of Bakshi-Serai has commenced a retrograde movement from Perekop. We can affirm, in the most positive manner, that this is a piece of false news."

The Morning Post (Ministerial paper) states that, from the best information it possesses, Prince Gortschakoff's armyat the north will soon be destitute of provisions. The Post also believes that the Allies are fully capable of attacking and defeating Gen. Liprandi's forces in the Tchernaya.

The Baltic.

The winter season having set in a month earlier than last year, little, if anything more, will be done this year.

It appears that the rockets, with shells attached, which reached the allied squadrons from France, and which were intended for the utter destruction of Revel and other places, at a distance of 7,000 yards—3½ nautical miles—do not exceed 4,000 yards in their range, while the period of their explosion is very uncertain.

Repulse of the Russians at Kars.

The Russians, who are still besieging Kars, in Asia, were repulsed by the Turkish garrison in an attempt to take one of their outworks on the 7th August, with the loss of a General killed and a Colonel mortally wounded. As the winter sets in early, it is expected that the Russians, if still unsuccessful, will retire before the end of the present month from Kars. They have retired already from the neighborhood of Erzeroum.

Greet Britain.

In domestic affairs there are scarcely any events of interest to notice. The Queen, Prince Albert and their family are still at the Highlands, where Prince Frederic William of Prussia—who the gossips say is going to marry the Princess Royal—is visiting.

The British Association have been holding their annual meeting at Glasgow, under the presidency of the Duke of Argyle. The proceedings closed on Thursday evening, and the assembly is described as one of the most brilliant and successful in the annals of the society.

There were great rejoicings in Liverpool, and other towns on Thursday, (the 20th) the anniversary of the battle of Alma. There was an immense deal of grumbling that the American vessels in the Mersey did not participate in the display of flags, but it was subsequently found that this was not occasioned by any want of sympathy, but was done as a mark of respect to the deceased Captain, well known and much esteemed, Capt. Hooper, of the William Penn.

The authorities here, as in France, are still busied with the dispatch of soldiers and war materiel to the Crimea.

France.

The corn question is described as assuming a very serious aspect. Since the rise of bread on Sunday last there has been considerable agitation in many quarters of Paris, and it is thought that the Government will feel it necessary to go back to the old tariff, and continue, at whatever sacrifices, to make up the difference to the bakers. According to the Times' correspondent, a project is spoken of for an additional centime on several indirect taxes to provide a fund for the purpose.

The exhibition is to remain open until the 25th of November.

The health of the Empress is improved, and she is going on favorably.

The Emperor had a grand audience on the 17th at the Tuileries, including the members of the Statistical Congress, the Pope's Nuncio, a number of foreign Ambassadors and Abd-el-Kadir, who is stated to have been "quite overcome with gratitude to his benefactor."

Spain.

The financial resources of the Carlists are represented by the last accounts as nearly exhausted. An attempt had been made at a revolutionary movement in Valencia, which was, however, suppressed. One of the Spanish newspapers announces that the Queen is encinte, but the government has received no official intelligence of the fact. The Gazette states that the government had obtained from the bank of San Fernando an advance of 100,000,000 reals (25,000,000 francs) on more favorable terms than previously, viz: eight per cent. According to the Espana the army is being increased and re-organized with all possible activity.

Portugal

Lisbon, Sept 16, 5 P. M.—The solemn inauguration of the reign of Don Pedro V took place this morning at the Cortes. His Majesty declared his adhesion to the policy of the former cabinet, and confirmed the ministers in their portfolio. On this occasion, for the first time, use was made of the electric telegraph in Portugal. The accession of the King was received with enthusiasm by the people. The English vessels of war Sanspareil, Neptune and Rosamond arrived just in time to salute the new King.

Holland.

The opening of the Dutch Chambers took place at the Hague on the 17th. The King, who was accompanied by Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, read a speech, by which he announced that the relations of Holland with other powers were distinguished by sentiments of kindness and good will, and that a strict neutrality should be continued during the present war.

Italy.

The King of Naples has dismissed M. Mazza, the director of the secret police, whose recent conduct has excited disgust abroad and fear at home. M. Mazza has distinguished himself by the removal of the bastinado at Naples. He is also the person who conveyed a threatening message to Prince Satriano, because a member of the British Legation had paid that nobleman a visit in his box at the theater.

A dispatch from Vienna, dated September 20, states that the difficulty between Naples and England is at an end, the King having made the amende.

The union of the Sardinian and African coasts by telegraph is being rapidly effected under the direction of Mr. John Brett. Messages will shortly be forwarded direct from Algiers to Paris.

Denmark.

The Sound Dues.—The Correspondenz-Bureau, a newspaper, states that the Russian Government has undertaken to mediate between Denmark and the United States on the subject of the Sound dues, and has already given the Danish Government the assurance that the Americans will not proceed to any extremities in the matter before the close of the Eastern crisis; but should no definite adjustment be arrived at before the expiration of the treaty, a temporary arrangement is to be agreed to, postponing the final settlement to a period more favorable to the consideration of commercial interests.

[From the London Daily News, Sept 22.]

A Danish paper states that in consequence of the misunderstanding which has arisen between the United States and Denmark, the latter has judged it expedient to send considerable reinforcements to the garrisons of the Danish colonies.

Austria.

So soon as the Emperor received the tidings of the capture of Sebastopol, he ordered his representatives at the English and French courts to present his warmest congratulations to Queen Victoria and the Emperor Napoleon.

The Vienna papers are discussing and recommending the renewal of peace negotiations, the time having, in their view, arrived for Austria to appear again as a mediator. The Frankfort Post Gazette positively states that a fresh note will be sent to Russia, through the medium of Austria, in which the demands of the Allied Powers will be once more explicitly stated, and the proposition made for opening negotiations on this basis. Should Russia not accept this proposition, the military convention between Austria and the Western Powers will be immediately ratified.

The Czar to the King of Prussia.

The Pays publishes a dispatch from Berlin, stating that in a private telegraphic dispatch to the King of Prussia, notifying the fall of Sebastopol, the Emperor declared his firm resolve to accept no conditions of peace whatever which should be derogatory to Russia as a great power. "Russia," says the Czar, "never makes peace after disaster."

The Last Days of Sebastopol—The Final Bombardment.

The Crimean correspondent of the London Times furnishes the following description of the scenes before Sebastopol, from the 5th up to one hour before the storming columns rushed to the assault. The narrative is full of interest:

Sept. 5.—At dawn on the morning of the 5th of September, the French opened fire. The air was pure and light, and a gentle breeze from the South-east, which continued all day, drifted over the steppe and blew gently into Sebastopol. The sun shone serenely through the vapors of early morning, and wreaths of snowy clouds, on the long lines of white houses inside those rugged defences of earth and gabionage which have so long kept our armies gazing in vain on this "august city." The ships lay floating on the waters of the roads, which were smooth as a mirror, and, like it, reflected them; and outside our own fleet was that of the French, equally inactive, and not quite so useful to us, were reposing from Kazatch to Constantine, as idly as though they were "painted" upon "a painted ocean."

Small trains of animals and files of men are passing over the ground between the trenches and the camp, and the only smoke that catches the eye arises from the kettles of the soldiery, or from a rifle in the advanced works. On the left, however, it can be seen that the French trenches are crowded with men, and that their batteries are all manned, though the men will keep out of view; and the mantlets and screens are yet down before the muzzles of some of their guns. The men beneath the parapets swarm like bees. A few gray-coated Russians are in view repairing the works of the Flagstaff Battery, or engaged in throwing up a new work, which promises to be of considerable strength, in front of the second line of their defences.

Suddenly, along the earthen curtain between Nos. 7 and 8 Bastions, three jets of flame spring up into the air and hurl up as many pillars of earth and dust, which are warmed into ruddy hues by the horizontal rays of the sun. The French have exploded three fougasses to blow in the counterscarp, and to serve as a signal to their men. Instantly, from the sea to the dockyard creek, there seems to run a stream of fire, and floecy, curling, rich white smoke, as though the earth had suddenly been rent in the throes of an earthquake, and was vomiting forth the material of her volcanoes. The lines of the French trenches were at once covered; as though the very clouds of Heaven had settled down upon them and were whirled about in spiral jets, in festoons, in clustering bunches, in columns and in sheets, all commingled, involved together by the vehement flames beneath.

"The iron storm tore up the Russian lines, tossing up, as if in sport, jets of earth and dust, rending sunder gabions, and squelching the parapets, or bounding over among the houses and ruins in the rear. The terrible files of iron, about four miles in front, rushed across the plain, carrying death and ruin with it, swept with its heavy irresistible wings the Russian flanks, and searched their centre to the corps. A volley so startling, simultaneous and tremendously powerful, was probably never yet uttered since the cannon found its voice."

The correspondent of the Times, with nice particularity, narrates the progress of the combat, until, having reached the climax of description, he says, "there was not one instant in which the shells did not whistle through the air—not a moment in which the sky was not seamed by their fiery curves or illuminated by their explosion. Our practice was beyond all praise. Every shell burst as it ought, and the lines of the Russian earthworks, of the Redan, Malakoff, and of all their batteries, were rendered plainly visible by the constant light of the bursting shells. The Russians scarcely attempted a reply.

At 5 o'clock it was observed that a frigate in the second line, near the north side, was smoking, and as it grew darker, flames were seen to issue from her sides. Men and officers rushed to the front in the greatest delight and excitement, and as night came on, the whole vessel broke out into one grand blaze from stem to stern. The delight of the crowd on Cathcart's hill was intense. "Well, this is a sight to see one of those confounded ships touched at last!" These, and many different and stronger expressions, were audible on all sides, but there were some who thought that the Russians had set the ship on fire, or that incendiaries and malcontents were at work, and one gentleman went so far as to say he "thought it merely a signal—maybe to recall their cavalry from Eupatoria."

It is not precisely known how the thing was done. Some say it was done by the French; others by ourselves; and bombs, red-hot shot and rockets have been variously named as the agency by which the fire was accomplished. In spite of the efforts of the Russians, the flames spread, and soon issued from the sports quarter gallery. At eight o'clock the light was so great that the houses of the city and the forts on the other side could be discerned without difficulty. The masts stood long, and towered aloft like great pillars of fire; but one after the other they yielded; the decks fell in about ten o'clock, and at midnight the frigate was burnt to the water's edge.

September 6.—Last night a steady fire was kept along the front to prevent the Russians repairing damages. At 10 P. M. orders were sent to our batteries to open as soon as there was a good light the following morning, but they were limited to fifty rounds each. At 7 the whole of the batteries from Quarantine to Inkermann opened with a grand crash. The Russians were silent as before. The cannonade was maintained as it was yesterday. There were three breaks or lulls in the tempest: from half-past 8 till 10, from 12 till 5, and from half-past 6 till 7, the fire was comparatively slack.

September 7.—The cannonade was resumed at daybreak, the Inkermann batteries firing briskly. A council of generals was held to-day in head-quarters, the sick were cleared out of the field hospitals, and it gradually oozed out that the assault would take place to-morrow at 12 o'clock. The firing was tremendous all day, but clouds of dust, which a high wind from the north drifted into our faces, rendered a view of the place impossible.

About 8 o'clock a two-decker was set on fire and burnt at night. A steamer towed other vessels near her away to the dockyard harbor, but the lines of the men-of-war are still intact. Flames broke out behind the Redan in the afternoon. The bombardment was renewed at dusk. A Sardinian corps was marched up to reinforce the French. There was a heavy explosion in the town at 11 p. m. The men all take forty-eight hours provisions, cooked, into the trenches with them. Nothing is known of the plan of attack.

September 8th, 11 A. M.—All corners from Balaklava and the rear of the camp are stopped by a line of sentries. Another line of sentries in front prevents any one going as far as Cathcart's Hill, or the picket houses, except staff officers or men on duty. The fire is exceedingly heavy. The assault takes place at noon. The fourth division is now under arms.

Miscellaneous Items.

The receipts of the Ohio State Agricultural Fair, held about two weeks ago, amounted to about $10 000, exclusive of $3000 contributed by the citizens of Columbus. The premiums distributed amounted to $6000. It is stated that $2000 were offered and refused for one of the bulls exhibited. Another was held at $5000, and two others at $3000 each. The owner of a cow also refused an offer of $1800. There were eleven imported bulls exhibited, the aggregate value of which amounted to $25,200 and ten cows valued at $12 400.

A Baltimorean writes recently from London to a friend in his native city in the following terms:

I leave this for Paris on the 1st September. I wish to be at home. From all that I have seen we are in advance of England. We have more comfort, more happiness, and every one that visits England returns more contented than ever with his own country. I am more of American than I ever was in my life. I see every day the advantages at our free institutions.

Mr. Soule received from the Boston Lecture Committee an invitation similar to the one extended to Judges Douglas and Butler, to deliver a lecture on slavery in Boston. He, however, "with great reluctance, is compelled to decline." Mr. Soule writes to the committee: "A Boston audience is, of all others, that which I would be most proud to address on any subject, and especially on that of slavery. But having returned to my profession with the firm resolve to devote myself to its labors exclusively, I would not think of leaving here in the very heart of the business season, and of thus diverting myself from pursuits which cannot but claim my whole time, and command my undivided attention."

The fever in Norfolk and Portsmouth has greatly abated, and it is expected that it will have entirely disappeared in a short time. A recent letter says:

The general appearance of things has considerably improved. Dwellings and stores are now being opened. Business is partially resumed, and more persons are seen upon the streets. The only apprehension is in regard to the return of those who are now absent from the city.

In the New York Supreme Court Patrick Gilmore has recovered $500 damages for injuries sustained on the Hudson River Railroad. The conductor had stopped the train to eject a passenger with whom he had a dispute about the amount of fare. While the train was thus delayed another train came along and pitched into the first, injuring Gilmore.

The Roman quarries seem to be inexhaustible. A letter from Rome mentions some fresh discoveries of antiquities, among which are said to be two columns, one of alabaster and the other of marble, both of admirable beauty, dug up in the Via della Scrofa, and a granite column, twenty feet long, with a well preserved Corinthian capital of marble.

The ship Fanculi Hull, from Baltimore, for Calcutta, was wrecked on the 5th of July near Ushis and became a total loss.

The schooner Marietta Burr, from Alexandria, for Boston, arrived recently at South Dennis in distress, all hands being sick of the yellow fever.

The Washington Union states that the steam frigate Minnesota, now building at the Washington Navy Yard, will be launched on the 24th of October. If any obstacle occurs, however, the vessel will not be launched until the 7th or 8th of November next.

On the evening of the 27th, the literary men of New York, Boston, etc., held a grand pow-wow in the former city, which they called the Publishers' Festival. Washington Irving, Wm. C. Bryant, N. P. Willis, and other celebrities of the book-making world were present.

A letter from Macon, Miss., gives the following account of a fatal accident which occurred at a public gathering in Bigbee Valley, on the 2d inst:

A patch of boys were amusing themselves and the crowd by running races, and among them was a son last of Mr Fraker's, about twelve years old. Young Fraker started to run with his knife open in his hand, and falling down, the knife pierced his heart. Before his father, who had taken his stand where the racers were to come out, could get to him, he was a corpse.

In the District Court of Philadelphia a suit has been commenced against Passmore Williamson for the value of Mr. Wheeler's abducted slaves.

The Boston Telegraph states that one of the assistant female teachers in the Cambridge grammar school has been left $70,000 worth of property by a Mr. S., at Para, Brazil. This bequest, so unexpected, comes from a disappointed suitor of the lady, who, in despair at his rejection some eight years ago, wandered away to South America, and made a fortune there.

Buffalo Chief, the head Sachem of the Chippewas, died lately in the lake Superior region, at the advanced age of one hundred years. He is said to have been noted for his rare integrity—wisdom in council, power as an orator, and magnanimity as a warrior. His funeral pageant was attended by a large concourse of Indians, and religious services were held in the Roman Catholic Church, of which he had received the baptismal rites.

A youth named Ray has been committed to jail by the Mayor of Wheeling, on a charge of attempting to kill his mother.

Capt. D. Davidson, of Stirling, Britain, has obtained a patent for applying to cannons, with a plain or telescopic sight, cross wires so that by means of these and a collimator the piece of ordnance may be brought into its proper position by day or night, after every discharge, without the necessity of observing the object aimed at, after the proper range and aim have been first obtained. For breaching walls this appears to be a good improvement.

Years ago it was claimed by the Welsh that one of their countrymen was the first discoverer of America. Their mode of proving it was in this wise: Said they, one of our seamen fitted out an expedition, and started on a voyage of discovery. He was never heard of afterwards, and if he didn't discover America, then what became of him?

Later from Texas

The steamship Perseverance arrived on Tuesday morning from Indianola and Galveston, bringing dates from the latter place to Saturday last, and files of papers from the interior. We find not much news. The Houston Telegraph of the 21st says:

Cotton continues to come into Houston freely, and much of the article is of excellent quality. There is plenty of cotton ready on the plantations to be forwarded to market, and although we cannot believe that we will have low rivers two years in succession, yet the planters will not rely upon them to the extent they did last year, but will avail themselves of wagon transportation as soon as possible.

The Telegraph also states that Mr Angesl Senachal, a young man of about twenty-one years of age, fell from the gallery of his father's residence, on the previous Saturday night, and was killed by the fall. His body was not discovered till next morning.

A. W. O'Connell, who killed John Vauzile, at Lavaca, about a year ago, has been tried and found guilty of murder in the first degree. O'Connel is an Irishman by birth, and was once pardoned out of the penitentiary, where he had been committed for a murderous assault.

The Indians continue their work of depredation and murder. The San Antonio Western Texan states that a man named Voutier was killed, a few nights since, near the San Francisco, in Medina county, six miles from Castroville, by Indians. He had gone out near his house to attend to his horses; and was shot through the body with two arrows. He fired two shots at the Indians and fell dead. The same paper gives the following account of another tragic affair:

Mr. R. N. Davis, a citizen of Medina county, had just returned to his home from Castroville, with his team, when his three daughters, one sixteen, another thirteen, and another eleven years old, left the house to go to the spring for water, some three hundred yards distant. A few moments after they had passed down the bluff where the spring is, Mr. Davis heard them scream, and he and his wife seized guns and rushed to their assistance.

Before they reached the spring their eldest daughter came running towards them, pursued by four Indians, shooting arrows and guns at her. The parents rushed between their daughter and the Indians, who were reaching to get hold of her, and succeeded in keeping them off. They immediately went to find the other two daughters, when one came running towards them; although she was much nearer to the Indians, and considered it almost impossible for her to escape, being shot by them, yet she did it. It was the youngest daughter, who, at the first sight of the savages had scorated herself under the bank, and thus saved her life. They found the second daughter, she had been shot through the body with an arrow, and, after running a few yards, fell dead.

Mrs Davis fortified his family in the house to the best advantage; but the whole family would have been killed, had not Messrs. Davidson and Stanford come to their assistance at this moment. The Indians that were seen hovering around the spot during the time were thirteen in number, and continued skulking about until next day.

The families in this neighborhood have collected together for safety. They would escape if they could, but the Indians have stolen all their horses, and they dare not undertake to go on foot. The citizens have sent a petition to General Smith and also to Gov Pease.

The San Antonio Ledger of the 29th ultimo says:

Capt. Wallace, (Big Foot,) Sam Lytle and a few neighbors started after some Indians, and yesterday, about noon, came on four about five miles from the Medina, when a fight commenced. One Indian was left dead on the field, and another mortally wounded left by the rest. They took the horses, rigging, etc. Some of the horses belonged on the Medina. Mr Tumlinson, one of the party, was wounded in the shoulder by an arrow during the conflict, but for his reward brought in the scalp of one of the Indians. Capt. Wallace believes they were the same Indians who killed the man on the San Francisco Perez last Monday.

THE TRICK THE BOYS DID NOT PLAY ON THE INDIANS.—About ten days ago some of the settlers of Hillsborough and adjacency were comparing notes. All hands were convinced the Indians were lurking about in the neighboring "mountains"—in small squads—awaiting an opportunity to steal animals. It was agreed to drive a large caballado—led by a gentle mare, with a big bell on—to a point near the hills—to secrete a guard in their proximity and let "Mr. John" come and steel them and "get his foot into it." The thing was accordingly done. All went well and promised success. Late in the evening the boys began to feel the want of something to strengthen the inner man and went to a house to get supper. They were gone but a little while and returned. On the way they heard the bell rattling away. No doubt some of them were engaged imaginatively in shooting the red rascals just as they were in the act of appropriating horses. These pleasant fancies were soon interrupted. On reaching the veteran leader of the caballado they found her alone—not a single animal with her. The Indians had, doubtless, been spectators of the whole affair and amused themselves at the idea of out-generaling the boys. The alarm was immediately given. Early the next morning twelve men started in pursuit. The Indians had succeeded in securing some sixty head of horses from that part of the Cibolo. At the latest accounts the party were still out. COMMERCIAL MATTERS.

New Orleans Money Market.

Thursday Evening, October 11, 1855. }

The letters by the steamer Pacific, from Liverpool, which have been expected as being of more than ordinary importance, were received to-day. Some of the Circulars from high sources do not read very flattering, and the private accounts are not of that gratifying nature which was anticipated from the success of the Allies in the Crimea, as important and favorable consequences have been presumed to be furnished in the capture of Sebastopol but we discover nothing in the least to support the favorable anticipations; in fact we have so many accounts—so many versions published, that it will puzzle a Philadelphia jurist to arrive at anything definite, what they all mean to convey. On account of the great political questions, and survey the commercial aspect of affairs, we cannot arrive at any other conclusion than that the bulls and bears in stocks and loans are striving for supremacy; that the jeremy diddlers in breadstuffs are saying one thing and looking at another; that the Manchester spinners and transient speculators in Cotton, in Liverpool, are in combination for effect to operate on the hearts of the water, all these influences are pretended in New York to create some considerable feeling, and be the means of a depression in Cotton, and in financial affairs generally. Though the effect on our market to-day was not marked with any greater degree of dullness than was expected after the heavy and brisk transactions in Cotton for the past few days. The purport of the advices for good or for evil, will all blow over in two or three days, and little breezes started here and there, be followed with a calm, and settle down with some degree of equanimity to be disturbed again by the stock jobbers and managers of the Bank of England when it suits their convenience and ideas to raise the rate of interest.

There was but little doing in paper to-day, the market is scantily supplied, and long dated is in demand at 8½ to 9 per cent for the general run of good make.

In Stocks we heard of no sales. Opelousas Railroad has an upward tendency, and is held on the street at 7½, while many holders will not sell below par, that is $25 per share for the same amount paid. This evinces confidence in the success of the road, which is now opened within fourteen miles of Berwick's Bay.

The Exchange Market to-day had all kinds and sorts of depressing influences to contend against. The sale of a large amount of sight in bank checks on New York at a late hour yesterday at 1 per cent. discount, rather unsettled the rate with some parties, and showed its action in the early part of the day; but when the operation was fully understood, the market assumed a steadiness which indicates something of permanency. One of the Banks sold on New York at ¼ per cent. discount, but advanced its rate to ½. The Bank of Louisiana, the Canal and Citizens' Bank were all firm at ¼ per cent. There was no change in time bills, with less offering. Sterling Exchange was heavy; the mail to-day settled its features for the present. Best class Sterling was sold at 7¾, which may be considered the extreme rate to sale. In bills of lading the market presented a very dull and inanimate appearance, with no disposition on the part of buyers to make an offer. The market in fact is very unsettled and will remain so for two or three days. In fact it appears to be in a drag, and as soon as that clears up operations will be resumed at rates lower than we have yet had to note. We quote the evening

The Danish Tribute.

From a long article in the Manchester (Eng.) Examiner upon this subject, we extract the following. We think it may be depended upon as representing the view taken of the affair by the thinking portion of the manufacturing classes of that country:

In the older treaties, the amount of duties leviable upon the various commodities then constituting the commerce with those regions was carefully defined; but the expansion of commerce in modern times has rendered the task of equitable assessment more difficult, and furnished opportunities for the perpetration of a great deal of injustice and annoyance. Exercising in this matter, according to its own belief, one of the inalienable rights of the crown, the Danish Government has not always shown a disposition to consult the interest and convenience of foreign merchants. This conduct has brought the right itself into serious dispute. Our own Government has always looked upon it with jealousy, but the United States, pertinaciously pushing its own interests while our eyes are up and down the world on behalf of other nations, boldly steps into the front of the fray, and refuses to recognize it any longer. The existing treaty by which the United States Government bound itself to respect the Sound dues is about to expire, and it is pretty well understood that after its expiration the American merchant will insist upon a free passage into the Baltic.

The latest document on the subject is a dispatch from Mr. Schenck, the Danish minister, in which Denmark hints resistance to such a claim. Left to fight its own battle with its redoubtable antagonist, Denmark would be compelled to yield the point, in which case it would be obliged to make a similar concession in favor of all other States, and thus abandon the Sound dues altogether. But Denmark has a commodity to dispose of in the shape of an alliance with the Western Powers against Russia, which may be turned to profitable account in the present emergency; and it is said that overtures have been made to France and England, promising us a new northern ally on condition that we will join in opposing the demands of the United States. Here, then, we are gravely brought to the edge of another quarrel. We are aware that the very idea of a contest with the United States in such a cause is mad enough, but till we have ascertained the limits which actually exist to the caprice and madness of our rulers, we cannot assure ourselves that all apprehension on this score is misplaced. Arguing from past freaks of the same nature, it is, at all events, not impossible that Lord Palmerston will ere long write some dispatch, in the Don Pacifico strain, to the authorities at Washington. By some transcendental process our patriotism may once have the cause of Denmark laid upon its shoulders, and a form of prayer composed for special use in all chapels and churches for the divine blessing upon a war in defence of the Danish Sound dues. It is therefore not too soon to warn the public of shoals ahead. Shall we or shall we not embark upon such a crusade? Now is the time to make up our minds, so as to be prepared with a prompt negative when the proper moment arrives.

The entire cessation of the Sound Dues would, no doubt, be a serious drawback upon the Danish revenue, but this consideration does not make those charges defensible on the ground of equity. The Sound is, practically, the only way into the Baltic, the only way by which the commerce of the world can reach the shores of Sweden, Mecklenburg, Prussia, and the principal Russian ports. If Denmark has a right to make any charges upon mercantile shipping passing through the Sound, over and above what may be required to keep lighthouses and harbors intended for the common benefit of mariners in a state of repairs, she has also a right to exclude it altogether. But pretensions of so monstrous a kind would be scouted the moment they were advanced. They suited well enough the ages when the tribes along the coast of the Baltic were almost unknown to the rest of the world, but they are simply ridiculous now that Denmark is far inferior in commercial importance and in political power to several of the Baltic States. Will Russia and Prussia acquiesce in the justice of claims which, if enforced, would shut them out from the commerce of the world, and if they were willing to forego their right, would the other maritime powers be willing to perform a similar act of abnegation? But if Denmark can make no pretension to exclude commercial vessels altogether from the passage of the Sound, she cannot rightfully charge them for a passage. The Sound Dues stand or fall with the right of exclusion; if the latter is indefensible, the former are equally so. Whatever it may be proper to pay for maritime conveniences along her coasts will be paid cheerfully, but the day has gone by when a petty state could arrogate the sovereignty of the ocean, and levy tribute of the waters, winds and tides which nature has made free to all. The United States may not have chosen the best time for urging their claim, but it is one which is founded in justice, and which deserves the moral support of every mercantile community.

The New York Journal of Commerce closes a recent article upon this subject with the following suggestions:

Perhaps the most serious question that can arise, in case the court of Copenhagen persists in the tone of the note of Mr. Schenck, is what measures are to be taken to coerce Denmark to abandon her present policy. If American vessels attempt to pass the Sound without paying dues, they will simply be fired at and sunk, and then war must ensue. An officer of our navy recently remarked, that with our contemptibly small and inadequate naval force, we should be unable to cope successfully with even such a power as Denmark. The whole of our navy sent to Copenhagen would not be able to compel her to succumb, and would be obliged to retire from before the fortress of Kronenburg, far more ingloriously than the Baltic fleets of the Allies have sailed away from Cronstadt. We can seize the Danish islands in the Gulf of Mexico, but it is more than probable that Denmark would be glad to get rid of them. We can also lay an embargo on Danish vessels, and sweep her commerce from the ocean; but even this would appear but a petty vengeance in the eyes of the civilized world, and might still fail to effect the object we have in view. The questions, therefore, what is to be done? and how is it to be done? are of no small importance, and call for a deep consideration at Washington, which we hope will be given to them during the coming winter.

Gloucester.—The Gloucester Telegraph says that the schooner Shooting Star, of that port, was taken upon the marine railway last week for the purpose of discovering a leak in her bottom. Upon examination, a place about one foot in length and eight inches in width, was discovered to be worn nearly to the thinness of a wafer. On taking off the plank two pebble stones, each a little larger than a hen's egg, were found, and their constant rolling, caused by the motion of the vessel, had worn the plank, which was upwards of two inches thick, nearly through. It is supposed they were dropped inside of the ceiling while the vessel was building, and there remained. Had the vessel gone to sea again without discovering this leak, she might suddenly have filled, and no cause could have been assigned for it.

French Railroad Accident.—A Paris paper received by the America says:

A lamentable accident took place at 8 o'clock on the night of the 11th, on the Versailles Railroad, left bank. The passenger train returning from Versailles came in collision with a luggage train close to the Paris station, which actually cut it in two. Several carriages were broken to atoms, and several lives have been lost; nine killed on the spot, and seventeen badly hurt, are admitted by the directors. It is supposed, however, that the number of killed is at least fifteen, and over thirty persons wounded. Two young girls, sisters, had their legs cut off, and among others, the body of a man was found with both legs cut off, and a child stifled by the death embrace in his arms.

Returns of Illinois.—The Springfield Journal publishes returns from four counties—these whose progress has not been very rapid since 1850—and the average at the same rate gives the States population of 1,160,000. This would be an increase of nearly half a million in five years. But the Journal thinks the returns will show a still larger population, and place Illinois the fifth State in the Union.

"Bull Smith Abroad" tells a great many very good stories. Here is one with a moral to it:

"'Ancient Jones' had accompanied his only son to Paris, to see that his medical education should be thoroughly completed, and under his paternal care. I did not learn that the youthful dones was disposed to break from the wise control of his careful father. But the old gentleman was full of fears—he heard of Paris as the city of evil, full of pitfalls and snares for youthful steps. One night, not long since, the quiet hopeful said that his dear and kind friend Brooks was very ill of the typhoid fever, and he wished to tender his services, and sit up the night by his friend. The father readily consented to this Christian conduct; and, as he permitted his boy to have no night-key, left the door of their hodroom unlocked.

"After his son's departure, however, he remembered that it was Saturday night—the night of the grand bal masque at the Italian Opera House, a thing he had heard much of, and had been solicited by his delicate boy to attend, merely to see for once. But his morality, his sense of duty recoiled; he sternly bade his son be silent on that vile subject.

But, to tell the truth, the old gentleman had a lurking curiosity, and on that evening it became frightfully strong. What could possess him? He attempted his usual French sindies, but Ollendorff seemed doubly stupid. One or two sentences in that valuable work took possession of his brain. 'Comter vous aller au balmasque ce soir?' (Do you intend to ge to the masque hall this evening?) 'Je comte y aller.' (I intend to go.) The opportunity was so favorable—he could go and return without his son's, without any one's knowledge.—His satanic majesty fairly took possession of the good old man, and he repaired to a neighboring store, where dresses were rented or sold, and selected the most appropriate—that of a friar in order grey, placed himself in a voiture, and in a few minutes was at his destination. He entered; the scene startled him beyond measure; the crushing roar of two hundred instruments; the dazzling light of chandeliers and jets, which seemed to go glittering up and up into a dizzy distance, lighting tier after tier, where thousands of eyes from behind black dominoes reflected back the rays as they looked down upon the myriads of fantastic forms which rolled and tossed under the sway of the deafening music, like a vexed sea by moonlight, made up a whole to dream of, not to see.

Mr. Jones was startled, then shocked a little, very little amused, and finally as I shall tell you, greatly alarmed. A strange fascination possessed him. After he had gratified his curiosity, he still lingered; he wandered on through the wild maze, and, as the hours wore on, the fun grew furious; monks and knights jumped higher and higher; devils twisted; gypsies, flower-girls, debardeurs, screamed as they fairly flew, while hideous beasts roared, howled and squealed. The musicians seemed possessed, and rolled out, without ceasing the wild strains that seemed to madden every one. Mr. Jones was bewildered; many times was he seized upon by some fearful creature, and whirled through dances which made him dizzy and sick.

At last, Mr. Jones was frightened—he was captured by a group that, in a mad fit, seemed determined to torture him to death. He could not get away; one of the number, a girl, scandalously habited, seemed the leader. Her dress was very improper—her conduct disgusting. She was evidently intoxicated—smelled dreadfully of bad cigars and brandy. She would not let go—called him, in excellent English, 'her ancient garcon'—'a regular brick'—while the others laughed, shouted and danced around him. At last he tore himself away, rushed home by daylight, tore off his gown, thrust it into the grate, and by its warmth, hastened to bed, fearing every moment the arrival of his son.

Wearied to death he soon fell into a heavy sleep. When he awoke he was conscious of some one being, not only on the bed, but partially on him. He aroused himself—he looked—could he believe his eyes? there, on his bed, in his room at home, was that infamous female, sound asleep, with a cotton umbrella under her arm—worse and worse, the mask was off, and this female was his own innocent boy!—He sprang from the bed, falling over and arousing some one in the guise of a devil, asleep on the floor; yet another on the table; they were all around him. Did he dream? Was he yet at that infamous ball? Neither. His son, awakened, stared stupidly at him, and the sleepers, starting up, burst into a roar, as one of them exclaimed, "Why, Harry, Jim, here's the annient gargon!" Mr. Jones happened to glance at the mirror—he had forgotten, in his haste, to remove his mask. These gentlemen had kindly brought his sou home, and being somewhat fatigued, had remained with him. The emotions of the elder and younger Jones, I leave to your imagination."

Affecting Scene.—On Thursday morning last, a touching and interesting scene was witnessed in one of the rooms of the public jail. Among the inmates of that establishment is one man named Wilson, a soldier under sentence of death for killing a fellow-soldier, but whose case has been called up to the Supreme Court on appeal. Wilson's family, consisting of his wife and two interesting children, (the oldest an interesting little girl about four years old) hired rooms convenient to the jail, so as to have an opportunity to visit him and render him such comforts as the nature of the circumstances would permit. This little girl was the pet of her father, and many nights since his confinement, she has shared his prison bed with him; she had attracted the attention of those who were in the habit of seeing her daily, and never passed them without receiving a kind word. Sickness visited the domicil, this child was marked as a victim, and early on Thursday morning her soul took its flight to him who gave it. The distressed father had not been able to watch over his darling child during her sickness—nor smooth down her pillow in her last moments, and receive her last affectionate glance, but he earnestly desired he would look upon her inanimate corpse ones before it was carried to its last abode. The sheriff being absent, the jailor would not take it upon himself to allow Wilson to go to his wife's domicil; but he caused the body to to be brought in the parlor of the jail, at the prison. The body was placed in the middle of the room, and looked interesting even in death. The father, accompanied by a fellow-prisoner, both in chains, approached the body, at which time a scene took place which it is impossible to describe: the affectionate mother, nearly heart-broken, moaning over the departed one—the father, losing his usual stern firmness, wept like a child; by his side stood, sympathising with the bereaved parents, a fellow-prisoner, whose every move brought dread reality to their mind, that they carried the load of guilt, while the innocent being whose death they mourned, was free, disenthralled, and having burst the bonds that bound her to the earth, was then triumphantly resting in the bosom of him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, etc." Two little girls looking mournfully over the body of their former playmate, completed the group.

An Artful Dodge.—When Senator Douglas made his speech in St. Louis, he expressed himself willing to answer any question which might be propounded.

"What do you think of the propriety of introducing slavery into Kansas?" asked one of his audience.

"When I move into Kansas to live, I will there be found advocating such institutions as suit me," replied the "little giant."

Again he was asked "if he considered the enactment of the Missouri Compromise constitutional."

He replied: go to the Supreme Court—that is the tribunal to decide constitutional questions."

Verily this soliciting questions merely to shew one's skill in evading answers to them, is a new dodge not hitherto practiced very extensively.

A Nebraska Election.—Purple, who is the "gentleman from Burt county" just at this time, gives the following account of the mode of electing members of the Legislature in Nebraska. He said: "Cummings, the Secretary, said to me one morning, 'Purple, we want a member from Burt county.' So I harnessed up and took nine fellows with me, and we started for the woods, and when we thought we had got about far enough for Burt county, we unpacked our ballot-box and held an election, canvassed the vote, and it was astonishing to observe how great was the unanimity at the first election ever held in Burt county. Purple had every vote! So Purple was declared duly elected, and here I am!"

Living Polyglot.

There are many remarkable examples of memory being carried to a perfection almost inconceivable. Thus Macaulay in an incredible short space of time has been known to memorize completely the multifarious and incongruous contents of a number of the London Times—and the English Lawyer, John W. Smith, could repeat fifteen hundred lines of poetry after one perusal.

Perhaps the mightiest memory ever possessed by any human being was that of Cardinal Mezzofanti, the Librarian of the Vatican at Rome. The following description of the accomplishments of this wonderful man is given by a German philologist who visited him:

The vastness of the range of language which he had mastered borders closely on the incredible; and, what appears hardly less marvellous, this enormous store has not only not produced any Babel-like confusion in his head, but on the contrary lies completely at his command, so that, without the least effort, and without any observable interval, he passes from one realm of language to another, as lightly as a bird hops from spray to spray. He is familiar with all the European languages; and by this we understand not merely the old classical tongues and the first class modern ones; that is to say, the Greek and Latin, the Italian, French, Spanish, Portuguese, German, and English; his knowledge embraces also the languages of the second class, viz: the Dutch, the Danish, and Swedish, the whole Sclavonic family, the Russian, Polish, Bohemian or Czechish and Servian, the Hungarian, and Turkish; and even those of the third and fourth class, the Irish, Welsh, Albanian, Wallachian, Bulgarian and Illyrian, are equally at his command. On my happening to mention that I had once dabbled a little in Basqito, he at once proposed that we should set about it together. Even the Romani of the Alps, and the Lettish, are not unfamiliar to him; nay, he has made himself acquainted with Lappish, the language of the wretched nomadic tribes of Lapland; although he told me he did not know whether it should be called Lappish or Lapiandish.

"Passing along to Asia, it is true that he does not claim acquaintance with all the dialects of this vast region, with its desolate steppes, and its fallen, degenerate, and fast decreasing population; but nevertheless, even here, there is hardly one of the more prominent languages, especially those which fall within the circle of European intercourse, that has escaped his grasp. Thus he is master of all the languages which are classed under the Indo-German family; the Sanscrit and Persian, the Koordish, the Armenian, the Georgian; he is familiar with all the members of the Semitic family, the Hebrew, Arabic, Syriac, Samaritan, Chaldee, the Sabaic, and even the Chinese, which he not only reads but speaks. As regards Africa, and its Hamatic races, the recent revival of intercourse with that country, and especially with Egypt and Abyssinia, have facilitated the extension of his acquaintance with its languages. He knows the Coptic, Ethiopic, Abyssinian, Amharic, and Angalese. I cannot from my own knowledge say whether he has acquired any of the native languages of America, except the Californian; but I have been told that even while he was in Bologna, he learned some of these from an ex-Jesuit who had sojourned as a missionary on that continent."

Imperial Rice.—A correspondent of the State Department furnishes the following extract from Mr. Hue's journey through the Chinese Empire, which was transmitted from that department to the United States Patent Office. The correspondent suggests that this rice could readily be obtained by government through its representative in China, and would be a most valuable acquisition, as it requires less irrigation than the common articles:

"The celebrated Emperor Khang-hi has thus rendered an important service to his country. We find in the curious memoirs written by that prince, the following passage: 'I was walking,' says the Emperor Khang-hi, 'on the first day of the sixth moon in some fields where rice was sown, which was not expected to yield its harvest till the ninth. I happened to notice a rice plant that had alrsady come into ear; it rose above all the rest, and was already ripe. I had it gathered and brought to me; the grain was very fine and full, and I was induced to keep it for an experiment, and see whether it would on the following year retain its precocity, and in fact it did. All the plants that preceded from it came into ear before the ordinary time, and yielded their harvest in the sixth moon. Every year has multiplied the produce of the preceding, and now for thirty years it has been the rice served on my table. The grain is long and of a reddish color, but of a sweet perfume, and very pleasant flavor. It has been named yami, or imperial rice, because it was in my garden that it was first cultivated. It is the only kind that can ripen north of the great wall, where the cold begins very early and ends very late; but in the provinces of the South, where the climate is milder, and the soil more fertile, it is easy to obtain two harvests a year from it, and it is a sweet consolation for me to have procured this advantage to my people,"

"The Emperor Khang-hi did render, in fact, an immense service to the population of Mantchuria, by encouraging the cultures of this new kind of rice, which thrives admirably in dry countries, and has no need, like the common sort, of perpetual irrigation. It would certainly prosper in France, and it is not the fault of the missionaries if it has not long since been acclimated there.

"While we were at the mission in the environs of Pekin, we several times made it our business to send some of it to the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, but we have never heard that any experiment was tried with it."

A Case of Modesty on the Police Docket.

Daniel Moredith, in a soiled coat that might have been claret colored once, was desired to plead to the charge of intoxication.

"Indeed, sir," said Daniel, "I am overwhelmed—struck all of a heap, as the saying is. You see this crimson suffusion on my countenance—(Mr. Moredith's countenance was suffused, but whether with ingenious shame or Old Holland we can't prstend to say)—that suffusion, sir, tells more plainly than words can speak, the distress and anguish of mind I feel at being arraigned for the low, sxecrable, detestable vice of drunkenness. Sir, my ears tingle with the word; I feel my cheeks scorched by the demnable consciousness of the offence.—Oh! in pity allow me to hide my face from this respectable assembly, and especially your honor, who, being a perfect model of sobriety yourself, cannot be supposed to have any sympathy for the weakness of others. My modesty, sir, is shocked beyond all healing remedies. Where shall I hide!" asked Mr. M., glancing wildly over the floor of the office, as if in search of an angerhols.

"I am glad to see you so sensible of your fault," said his honor, "and I have strong hopes that a man who experiences such a humiliating sense of his guilt, will not be likely to err again in the same manner. You are discharged, Mr Mseredith; go, and take better care of yourself."

"That was spoken like your honor. Yours is the most exalted kind of virtue, that can overlook the missteps of an erring, frail fellow-creature. Sir, there is one thing more, if I might dare to speak."

"Go on, Mr. Mseredith," said the Mayor kindly.

"Oh, what a model of goodness!" exclaimed Mr. M., with uplifted eyes and hands. "Your honor encourages me to beg the loan of a quarter." I'll pay it faithfully as soon as I am brought up again."

"This is modesty with a vengsance!" exclaimed the Mayor, with justifiable indignation. "Begone, you imposter, and take care that you are not brought up again, or your sham modesty shall not save you from the extreme penalty of the vagrant act."

"Heavens! who would have thought that asking for the loan of a quarter could make such an alteration!" said Daniel, meekly, as he retired from the tribunal.

Suspicious tailor to suspected customer: "Make you a coat, sir? Oh yes, sir, with this greatest pleasure! There, just stand in that position, please, and look right upon that sign, while I take your measure."

The sign read: "Terms, Cash."

The Sebastopol of the North.—The New York Herald thus sums up the remaining defences of the Crimean stronghold, and the work the Allies still have before them before its reduction is complete:

Fort Constantine	104 guns.
Telegraph Battery	17 "
Double Range Casamate Batteries	120 "

In addition to these, there is the Wasp Fort, various earthworks and the great Star Fort, capable itself of holding a garrison of ten thousand men, with an amount of artillary equal perhaps to two hundred additional guns, which would give an aggregate to the regular forts, batteries and earthworks, on the North side, of upwards of 500 guns. These have yet to be taken; but as they occupy a line of cliffs commanding the town, they cannot be taken by bombardment from the opposite side. The Russians (unless they shall have deemed it expedient to leave the Crimea) must be met on those heights before Sebastopol is completely in the occupation of the enemy. We must have the issue on the North side, before we can make up our summary of the losses of the Russians or the gains of the Allies.

A Keen Retort.—Some time ago Lewis Tappan, of Ohio, (a notorious abolitionist) had the assurance to address a letter to Gen. John H. Cocke, of Virginia, urging him and his in-law to emancipate, one thousand slaves, whom Tappan alleges these gentlemen hold in bondage. This letter wee published in the New York Tribune, and copied into many other papers.

To this impudent letter Mr Philip St George Cocke replies in the Richmond Whig. His reply is brief, but it is a crusher. After quoting Tappan's letter, he says:

"Now, sir, as it is well understood—at least in the community in which I live—that I am the person allnded to by yen, under the designation of the 'con-in-law' of Gen. Cocke, I shall take the liberty of expressing to you, through a channel equally public, the contempt I feel for the pharisaical, canting and ungentlemanly tone and toner of your whole letter, and of saying, sir, further to you, that when you, together with your whole fraternity of abolitionists, shall have clothed, housed, fed and otherwise cared for, and improved 'one thousand' of the wretched free negroes in your own midst, or shall have done the same thing for 'one thousand' of the white slaves and paupers among the tens of thousands of such who are allowed to experience every winter in your great cities all the miseries of an utter physical and moral destitution, and when you shall have placed your 'one thousand' free negroes, or white paupers, in circumstances of as much physical comfort, social and moral improvement, as are now enjoyed by Gen. Cocke's slaves and my own, you, sir, will have given to the world a better proof of your own 'consistency,' than you can ever hope to do, although you should spend a long life of impertinent and canting intermeddling with the affairs of Southern gentlemen.

"I remain, sir, with due respect,

"Philip St. Geo. Cocke."

White Indians.—I perceive an article is taking the rounds, headed "The White Indians," represented as residing between California and Santa Fe. The writer of this article has been in that section of the country, and heard of no such nation as that described as the Mawkees. The Nebaliecs, or Navigoes, he has been among, but must represent as far different from the description given. Their government is purely republican; the habits of the people pastoral and agricultural. They are (for Indians) far advanced in the arts, are more industrious, far more ingenious, etc., than their Mexican neighbors, and are much further advanced in the arts of civilized life; their mechanicism appears (sui generis) singular in its kind, and savors more of Chinese or Indian origin. Their blankets are highly prized by the Mexicans, and sell at a high price. They are very chivalrous, and are considered the perpetual enemy of the Mexican-Spaniard, whom they treat with the utmost contempt. They have 30,000 warriors living in valleys, surrounded by inaccessible mountains, with narrow passes. They long bid defiance to the combined power of Mexico, making frequent excursions, capturing many Mexicans, with their horses. Prisoners they make slaves of, and in return, the Mexicans make slaves of them, whoever taken captive. They are very ingenious and careful servants, but are very uncouth; the structure of their heads gives them a very homely appearance; they are but little, if any, lighter in complexion than any other Indians. Their mountain fastnesses were never penetrated by hostile feet until a few years past. The Government of Mexico sent General Visoairs, one of their bravest chieftains, against them; he penetrated to their strongest towns, and compelled them to sue for the first time for peace; still a predatory warfare is carried on between them and the Mexicans.

☞ We seldom recommend a manufactured medicine, believing that, in most cases, Nature herself performs a cure more rapidly and effectually than can be accomplished by the vegetables and minerals of medical science. But in the matter of dyspepsia, there are chronic features about it, which very often defy all the efforts of nature to create a healthy action of the digestive organs, and it not unfrequently happens that the sufferer for years, diseased both in body and in mind, from indigestion and its kindred ills. To such, HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, are truly a most valuable preparation. It is a tonic medicine, giving a healthy action to the stomach, and will be found highly serviceable at all seasons, but especially during the spring. Dyspepsia can only be cured by a patient perseverance in one course of treatment; and to all those suffering under this sad malady we would recommend an application to the Depot of Hoofland's German Bitters, 120 Arch street, Philadelphia. We invite the special attention of parents and guardians to the advantages here offered to young men desirous of a finished collegiate or business education. The location of the college, in a quiet valley, ten miles from a town—the freedom, consequently, from temptation to vice—the full and thorough course of study—the experience and ability of the Faculty—the wholesome discipline—the facilities for lectures afforded by ample apparatus, libraries and cabinets, and, withal, the cheapness of terms and healthfulness of position, cannot fail to secure to this college, as heretofore, a liberal patronage.

Centenary College of Louisiana.

Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 12 miles east of Bayou Sara. Its location is beautiful, railroad and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

As this section of the Southwest is but poorly provided with seminaries and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received for entering College proper.

The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.

THE MINISTER'S DANGER.

The following passage is from the Charge delivered by the Rev. John Farrar to the young preachers ordained at the recent session of the Wesleyan Conference in Leeds:

"Let it be with you an object of daily and deep solicitude to make progress in personal religion. Never merge that which is personal in your professional services and duties. Never allow the feelings and habits of the minister to induce remissness with regard to the feelings and limbits of the Christian. As you will have to appear hereafter in your personal and individual character at the judgment-seat of Christ, do not forget, in your individual as well as in your pastoral character, to appear habitually before the throne of grace: and be assured that a due consideration for the prosperity of your own soul will be the best preparative for successful efforts to promote the welfare and the salvation of the souls of others.

"It is scarcely needful for me to remind you that your danger springs out of your office; that one of your principal perils arises from your elevated position. You may break to others the bread of which you never eat yourselves. You may put to the lips of others the cup of the water of life, and never drink of it yourselves. You may become physicians, healing the maladies of all around you, and yet die of the very disease you are attempting to cure in others. You may pilot the vessel of the Church, and yet be a castaway. You may be nothing more than the scaffolding of the temple of the living God, important in the progress of the structure, but taken down, and thrown aside as useless when the building is completed.

"Allow me to remind you of the closing sentence of the inimitable allegory—'The Pilgrim's Progress.' The allegorist beheld in his dream a person called Ignorance, going and knocking at the gate of heaven, and asking for admission there. He is refused admission. And, as he leaves the gate, the allegorist finishes up his beautiful allegory with these remarkable words: 'Then I saw in my dream, that there is a way to hell from the gate of heaven, as well as from the city of destruction.'

"My young brethren, there is a way to perdition from the pulpit as well as from the pew. And, among the most fearful images which will torment, and haunt, and torture, the lost soul of an unfaithful minister, will be the sight of his pulpit, in which he has trifled with the immortal interests of dying men in the presence of those very sinners to whose perdition he has been necessary. Listen to the important caution of the Apostle Paul: 'I keep under my body, lest after having preached the Gospel to others, I myself should be a castaway.'—'Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.' Let him that is most confident of his security take heed. You have to deal daily with a deceitful heart. Presume not, therefore, on your distinguished and elevated position in the Church: depend not on your attainments in piety, nor on your experience of the things of God; but 'watch and pray always.'

"The most illustrious and eminent saints of God have fallen, and in circumstances in which there seemed to be every inducement and motive to their vigilance and stability. It was in the new-made garden of Eden, where every object reminded him of the glories of his Creator, and of his corresponding duties and obligations—where the tree of Life put forth its fruit—the sacramental sign and seal of immortality—that our first parent basely threw off his allegiance to his Maker. It was just after the deluge had swept away the inhabitants of the earth, and while the stillness of desolation and death yet pervaded the globe, that Noah fell from God. It was in sight of the smoking ashes of Sodom and Gomorrah, and of that monumental pillar which proclaimed the indignation of God against worldly-mindedness, that Lot sinned. It was immediately after he had received from the hand of his Master the sacramental elements, and had solemnly avowed, 'Though I should die with thee, yet will I not leave thee,' that Peter denied his Lord.

"Seek, my young friends, a close walk with God. Your safety lies in your humility. Guard against everything that would militate against your simplicity of spirit. Suppress everything unworthy and sinister in your motives. Be assured of this, that improvement in personal holiness is virtually improvement in everything bearing on your great work. It will impart fresh vigor, spirit, and tenderness to all your sermons, and to all your religious services."

LETTER FROM KANSAS.

LEAVENWORTH CITY, K. T.,
September 25, 1855.

REV. H. N. McTYEIRE,

Dear Sir: Presuming that anything from Kansas Territory may be of interest to your readers, I have thought proper to presume enough upon former acquaintance, to write you something in reference to this great and growing country. I say great and growing country—not that you would perceive it at once, or perhaps in weeks of observation, but after a fair examination of all its resources, its fertility, and its adaptation to grazing and agriculture—its fine climate and productions, and the immense amount of trade that is carried on from the Missouri River across the plains, to California, New Mexico, Salt Lake, and Santa Fe, all crossing this territory by military roads and highways, as good as any you see in the States—then you would conclude that Kansas Territory has peculiar advantages as a new territory. There is a vast amount of capital spent in the Territory for military and Indian purposes, besides the capital and labor coming in from the States.

Leavenworth City, the town at which I live, is only about ten months old, and has a thousand inhabitants and three hundred wooden buildings; a rapidity and growth almost unparalelled. A minute and accurate description of the country is very easily given to a person at all acquainted with any western prairie country. The northern half of the Territory is nearly all rolling prairie, except small portions on the Kansas River, and along the streams. The southern half is better timbered and better soil. The climate is somewhat milder, but more productive of chills and fever, a disease the most prevalent in the Territory. The western portion, in what is called Arapahoe county, a climate exists similar to that among mountains of the same latitude, varied only by the clear sweep which the wind has, on account of the open country. The consequence is, in that country the atmosphere is nearly always clear and bracing in the summer, and very cold in the winter.

The emigration here now is not as great as it was in the spring, though the population continues to increase. Wages are good for the daily laborer, and the people generally are of an industrious and working class. But little is made as yet at merchandising in the town, there being too small a population back to sustain it; the best trade being carried on with the Indians in the interior, who spend their annuities invariably at the nearest trading post. Immigrants here must come prepared to brave the hardships of a frontier life for one or two years, with no high expectations of ever making a large fortune, but to rear up their families to the minds and hardy constitutions of the North-west; a country which must, at some time, and in some way—I hardly know how—be the greatest and most flourishing part of this Union.

There is some excitement here in regard to slavery and the acts of the last legislature, which is now increased by the near approach of the election for delegate to Congress, on Monday next. And this excitement, which is injurious to the growth of the country at this time, is created by the abolitionists and free-soilers, who say that they will resist the laws of the legislature, and that too in the face of the Governor, (Shannon, of Ohio,) who says the laws of the last legislature must be obeyed until altered by the people. This course on the part of a class of people who have heretofore declared themselves order-loving and law-abiding, is so reprehensible and degrading, that I hate to mention it. The legislature of this Territory met at Pawnee, on the 2d of July last, and adjourned after a few days to Shawnee Manual Labor School, the residence of the venerable Methodist Minister, Hon. Thomas Johnson, and there being a large majority in favor of slavery in the Territory, laws were passed protecting it, and in accordance with a recommendation of Ex-Governor Reeder in his message. The legislature adjourned on the 30th August last, after a session of sixty days, the time limited in the Organic Act. Slavery existed here before Kansas was organized into a Territory, and has existed ever since; and now is recognized by the laws and officers of the Territory. Those that opposed it are mostly Eastern emigrants, many of whom are sent here to influence the political character of the country; and are placed in a most uncomfortable and awkward position, for they are entirely unacquainted with Western character; and for a minority knowing nothing of the habits and manners of pioneer life, and having no sympathy for it in fact, to try to thwart the views and purposes of those raised to border life, especially when the latter are sustained by the legal authorities of the country, is a dangerous undertaking. The South ought, and no doubt does, feel a lively interest in Kansas, but the North and East sends the most emigrants, they are active, while the South is giving no efficient aid. What is wanted here now is Southerners. While the Southerners here are active, they must have the numbers from the South to count against those of the opposition.

You will not complain of the suggestion I hope, when I say that here is a fine field for the good works of Southern Methodist preachers—not that any one would wish them to take an active part here, but while they propagate the doctrines of the Christian religion, let it be known that they also are true to the constitution under which they were born and raised. There are preachers here from the North and East, who pray for abolitionism, and preach for it openly and publicly; but no pro-slavery man wants to see his minister go outside of his calling for any such purpose. There are some Methodist preachers in the Territory, and some of other denominations, whose influence is sound and conservative, and it seems to me that this is a portion of the country to which the attention of the Southern Methodist Conferences ought to be particularly directed. Bishop Early, I understand, will be in the Territory in October, and make somewhat of a tour, I suppose, through the country. It is hoped he will give a good account to his numerous friends and acquaintances in the South, and urge upon his church the use and propriety of planting permanently Southern Methodism in Kansas.

As far off from the center as this, the mass of the people are taught to feel the dependence upon the General Government at Washington City, upon moral integrity between man and man, and withal a homage to Divine Providence, who controls and directs all things, as well here as elsewhere. Schools and churches are fast going up in the Territory, and so soon as the lands are surveyed and put into market, so that good titles can be obtained, a population will be here sufficiently large to admit Kansas as a State. Provision has been made by the legislature, so that it can be admitted in 1857, if the people desire it.

Very respectfully,

Your friend and ob't s'v't,

BENJAMIN F. SIMONS.

THE DOUAY BIBLE.

BY REV. JOSEPH HOLDICH, D. D.

As the Holy Scriptures were not given to us in our vernacular tongue, it becomes a very important question whether the version we now have adequately and correctly conveys to us the meaning of the original. It will be of little consequence to prove that the Scriptures were "given by inspiration of God," unless it can be also shown that they who rendered them into our own tongue faithfully did their duty as translators. At the giving of the Lively Oracles, "holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." No such claim is set up for the translators. Theirs was a human work, and is to be estimated accordingly—is to be weighed in the balances of human judgment. Perfection marks the work of God; it does not necessarily follow that work has been perfectly performed.

It is not our purpose at this time to examine minutely the fidelity of the English version of the Bible in common use among us. Our object is somewhat different. In certain portions of society another version is put forth, not only as a better translation, but as in fact, the only true and authentic Bible; while our version is decried, is denounced and villified as a most pernicious book—as the devil's Bible, and as such, has been again and again been committed to the flames, and treated otherwise with the utmost contempt and abuse. That for which such superior pretensions are put forth, and in comparison of which our version has been so stigmatised, is commonly known among us as the Douay Bible, and it is into the validity of these pretensions that we are about to inquire. Perhaps our remarks may lead to the conclusion that this subject has been imperfectly understood. We think that by many the difference between the two has been supposed greater, by others less than it really is; while few except theologians know in what the difference really consists.

But before proceeding further, I beg to be understood that while I differ on this subject from my fellow Christians of the Roman Catholic Church, I purpose not to treat them in any manner unsuited to a candid and honorable argument. I assume that they are honest in their preference of the Douay version. Let us then have a fair and honest comparison of the two.

But let us first look at the origin and history of the Douay version.

The 16th century is remarkable as the commencement of what we may term the Bible era. For many centuries prior to that, the circulation of the Holy Scriptures in any vernacular tongue was unknown. Both the Eastern and Western, or the Greek and Latin Churches had utterly neglected, if not obliterated the Sacred Writings, forbade their translation into the common language of the people, and quite repudiated the right of private judgment in matters of religion. Thus the Council of Toulouse, held in 1229, passed the following canon, among others, for the extirpation of heresy: "We do also forbid the laity to possess any of the books of the Old or New Testament, except, perhaps, the Psalter, or Breviary for the Divine offices, or the Hours of the Blessed Virgin, which some out of devotion wish to have; but having any of these books translated into the vulgar tongue we strictly forbid." The animus of the church of that day is sufficiently indicated in this enactment. In England, however, in spite of the restrictions of the Papacy, something was done towards rendering the Bible into the language of the people. Wickliffe, in 1380, amid great difficulty and opposition, finished the translation of the Scriptures. Amid still greater opposition and persecution, and through many wonderful providences, Tyndale pursued his glorious work, and in 1535 gave his improved translation to the English people. Soon he was followed in this blessed work by Miles Coverdale. Thus several translations of the Holy Scriptures were disseminated in Great Britain. But while in this more favored portion of Christendom, some rays of divine light began to shine, an overwhelming gloom pervaded the entire continent of Europe. Most of what was known of religion was through the offices and symbols of of the Church; something of sacred knowledge was kept alive by painting, sculpture and music; for the fine arts had as much to do in that day in teaching religion to the masses as the pulpit, and much more than the pen or the printing press. The Scriptures in the vernacular tongue of any people except the English were not known. When pope or bishops quoted the words of St Paul or St. Peter, it was done in Latin. And even in this language the Bible was by no means common, was, in fact, very rare, even among the clergy. Luther, who, with conscientious motives entered upon the priestly office, never met with a complete copy of the Bible until some time after his ordination. A blessed moment for humanity was that when the monk of Eisleben found a copy of the Bible, chained though it was to the wall of his convent at Erfurth! 1507. Thenceforth it became his great treasure, his constant study; and through him a translation was given to the tiermans that stands on a par with our noble English version. In 1511 Luther published a complete edition of the Bible, followed by a second in 1545. His translation, be it observed, was made from the original Hebrew texts, he having perfected his knowledge of those languages for this special object; yet it was not published without aid and revision by his learned friends and coadjutors.

Meantime, in Great Britain, from the year 1525 to 1603, commencing with the reign of Henry VIII, and ending with that of Elizabeth, not less than 245 editions of the various versions of the Holy Scriptures, including the Old Testament and the New, were published. These had become widely diffused. Under their instruction the people became, at least in some improved degree, wise in religious knowledge. The advantage of enjoying access to the Sacred Writings became too manifest to be concealed or denied, and it was in vain to attempt to hold them longer from the populace. To those who threw off their allegiance to the Church of Rome, the way was clear; but there was still a considerable number of adherents to the Papacy. The reformation in England was not an importation from Germany; nor was its adoption compulsory. On the contrary, it was an independent movement of the British mind, brought about by the free circulation and general perusal of the Sacred Scriptures. But while the larger part was thus going after the word of God, many preferred the old path. What provision shall be made for them? What shall be done to meet their demands, and yet save the credit of the Papal Church? The Douay Bible was intended to meet this necessity.

An account of its origin will be given in the next Number.

THAT HYMN.

Perhaps we have it—the identical stanzas which Christ and his disciples sang at the close of the first communion. Having sung a hymn or a psalm, for the participle employed does not decide which, as we distinguish those forms of praising God, they went out. It may be that this was a kind of extempore effusion adapted to the occasion, or rather some well known composition for worship, introduced to terminate this affecting scene, from its general harmony with what had just occupied their thoughts. The lifting up of the disciples' voices with one accord, as related in the fourth chapter of Acts, was a solemn chanting of some old Hebrew sentences, adapted in sentiment to their recent escape from violence, and suggested evidently at the moment by that escape. So at the supper Christ might have led off in a similar way a strain of song, for we think he did not need a "letter for a chorister," his own soul was full of music, and doubtless the valleys and hills of the "goodly land" had often echoed to his melodious voice, pouring forth such notes as angels love to utter.

But a more probable explanation is this. The passover rite had its prescribed ritual, and a part of it was a closing service of praise called the "Hallel Magnum" by the Jews. This comprised the one hundred and thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth Psalms. Bret-schneider construes the place in Matt. xxvi, 30, thus: Having sung the paschal Psalms, namely, the 113th, the 118th, and 136th Psalms. Christ and his apostles were Jews, thoroughly imbued with the love of their national worship, and strictly attached to the forms of its prescribed rendering. It is almost certain that they would not vary from these on this occasion; that before they left the scene of this last passover feast, now to merge into that of the new covenant, they would once more chant forth together the noble words which their ancient Church had reported, for fifteen hundred years around the "paschal lamb"—"Praise ye the Lord! Praise, O ye servants of the Lord, praise the name of the Lord. We will bless the Lord from this time forth and for evermore. Praise the Lord!"—Congregationalist.

RELIGION IS LITTLE THINGS.—Our religion is to be exemplified in little and common things. We are to sanctify the week, as well as to remember the Sabbath; and to walk with a perfect heart in our own dwellings, as well as to worship in the temple of God. All we have is the Lord's, and nothing is a blessing till he blesses it.—Jay.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

By the arrival of the Philadelphia we have received dates from San Francisco to the 20th ult., fifteen days later than previous advices. It will be seen that the American party has declared its supremacy in the Golden State in a most decided manner. The official returns from all parts of the State had not been received but, as far as heard from, Johnson's majority was 4181. From the San Francisco Evening News of the 20th, we extract the following:

Governor—J. NEELY JOHNSON, of Sacramento.

Lieutenant Governor—R M ANDERSON, of El Dorado.

Justices of Supreme Court—H C Murray of Solano, [full term.] D S Terry, of Stockton, for the unexpired term of Alex Wells, deceased.

State Comptroller—Geo W Whitman, of Tuolumne.

State Treasurer—Henry Bates, of Shasta.

Attorney General—W T Wallace, of Santa Clara.

Surveyor General—John A. Brewster, of Sonoma.

State Printer—James Allen, of Yuba.

State Prison Directors—F S McKenzie, of Trinity, Ezekiel Wilson, of San Francisco, Alexander Bell of Los Angeles.

Election day passed off without the usual rows and bloody fight, as well did Sam have everything arranged to prevent bloodshed. At Wisconsin Hall an Irishman was shot while obstructing the progress of an American to the polls, and at Iowa Hill a demonstration on the ballot-box was repelled by force. Nothing of material importance occurred, however. The vote on the Prohibitory Liquor Law is not yet announced, but the returns thus far show a majority against the proposition.

Dispatches the Indians who committed outrages on the whites on the Upper Klamath have gone unpunished, and the country in consequence, was in a perfect ferment at last accounts. On Albanie Creek, the Indians had robbed miners' cabins of provisions, etc. In Rogue River Valley, a party of whites in pursuit of the marauding savages, were fired upon and two killed. These facts, in connection with the supposed murder of Gov Stevens, of Washington Territory, by the Black Feet Indians, will probably exasperate the white population of Northern California and Oregon to such an extent that before the year is over a general war of extermination will be commenced.

Mining news is rather dull, although we continue to read in the local papers of strikes and rich diggings. In those sections where canals and ditches do not penetrate, all operations are at a stand-still waiting for water. The approach of the rainy season invariably causes a dearth of mining items. If the water is plenty, and easy of access, unheard of quantities of gold will doubtless be extracted from the earth during the coming season.

Grass Valley and Weaverville, two of the most flourishing villages in the State, have been destroyed by fire during the past fortnight—on the 7th inst. the flames were discovered in the Hall of the Sons of Temperance, in Weaverville, and shortly after nearly every building in the town was consumed. Both newspaper offices, the Times and the Democrat, were destroyed. Grass Valley suffered to the extent of $500,000. The ground burnt over covered a space of twenty five acres, and three hundred and fifty houses were consumed.

Several emigrant trains have arrived across the plains, and report difficulties with the Indians. The grasshopper scourge has extended along the plains, and all vegetation is destroyed. They lost considerable cattle. Most of these trains came in by the Beckwith Route and Carson Valley.

The Annual State Agricultural Fair will open in Sacramento on the 25th. The farmers and stock dealers are preparing to render the Fair interesting and productive of much good. A cattle show is to be held. And prizes are also offered to the best lady equestrian, best gentleman equestrian, best specimen of the use of the lasso, and other sports peculiarly Californian.

THE CITY.—On the 10th inst. the fifth anniversary of the admission of California into the Union, the military companies of the city and the Society of California Pioneers rendered the occasion one of rejoicing. A procession was formed, and cannon fired during the day, an oration delivered at the American Theater by George P. Johnson, Esq., besides other exercises. Business was generally suspended, and everything conducted with order and decorum.

Peter B Manchester, the Ohio banker and alleged forger, who left that State under suspicious circumstances, has been before Recorder Bigler, who decided that he should be sent back in charge of officer Brown. He was subsequently taken before the Supreme Court, on a writ of habeas corpus, but again remanded. The officer, leaving more legal processes, conveyed Manchester away secretly. In the meantime, Gov. Bigler having been promised additional testimony, consented to a rehearing, and Marshal North succeeded in finding Manchester concealed about forty miles back of Benicia. They came to this city, and on the rehearing it appears that Brown had acted in the matter principally to extort money from P B M., and offered Marshal North $1,000 if he would aid him in getting $8 000 from that individual. It is probable the quondam banker will remain in California unmolested.

During the upward trip of the steamer Uncle Sam, the cholera broke out among the passengers, and notwithstanding every exertion was made to avert the spread of the disease, the passengers became panic-stricken and drunk liquor, etc., which resulted in the death of 104 persons—93 adults and 6 children. Of these, only nine were cabin passengers, and the victims had nearly, in every instance, exposed themselves unnecessarily during the trip. Interested parties and friends of the deceased circulated exaggerated stories of its ravages on board, but we now positively state that the number reported were all that died on board. No sickness need be apprehended on the route, and, we doubt not, the Cortes will leave port with a full complement of passengers.

A few days back the weather was decidedly rainy, and the clouds which overspread the city indicated its approach. Heavy mists have visited us, and it is probable the next four weeks will produce the much to be desired rain. Miners and others await its coming with anxiety.

A base attempt to swindle, by a gang of Chinamen has been discovered. They have been in the habit of filing the edges of twenty dollar gold pieces, and exchanging them for small coin. Lucas, Turner & Co. suffered extensively, and were the means of causing the arrest of one of the parties.

The public are awaiting the disposition of the report made by the Board of Examiners of the Funded Debt with much interest. No bonds have been issued, and nearly a million and a quarter of warrants are declared illegal by this Board. It is not probable any relief will be had till the Legislature meets in January.

The horrible condition of the streets, particularly around the wharves, has led to the death of James C Calhoun, who fell in a hole on Clay street wharf, on the 12th inst., and was drowned. His body was recovered three days after.

A well known racing horse, Price Mallrath, fell dead while pacing on the Union Course, on the 15th. He had paced a mile in 2:23—seldom equalled in the Atlantic States.

On the new wing of the Patent Office at Washington, the mechanics are now completing the entablature—the length of the house is 275 feet—front pure white marble—and it must form one of the most splendid government edifices in the world.

LATE FROM JAPAN.

By the arrival of the schooner C. E. Foote at San Francisco, we have later dates from Japan and other points in the Northwest, she having sailed from Hakodadi on the 27th of June.

Petropolowski was evacuated on 19th April (21, when a channel was sawed through the ice to the harbor. The inhabitants embarked and put to sea. The following vessels composed the fleet that sailed as above: Aurora, (frigate,) one corvette, Twina, (armed transport,) a bark and a brig.

In May they were discovered by the enemy, lying in the bay of Castri, when a British steamer attached to the East India Squadron, ran close into the entrance of the bay, and her crew gave three cheers and fired a shot, which was returned by the fleet as with three times three, and a shell fired into the air from the frigate Aurora. The steamer Bracuda ran down to Hakodadi to communicate this intelligence to the balance of the fleet, and left two frigates to blockade Castri until her return, when they would be reinforced by the Allies. The fleet appeared off the port, when arrangements were made for decisive action, to be commenced as soon as the fog cleared off from the mount and bay. A steamer was sent in to reconnoitre, when, to the astonishment of all on board, the Russians could nowhere be found. They had seen the overwhelming force arrayed against them, and concluded to give the enemy the slip during the fog, and successfully eluded the vigilance of the allied fleet, which was for several days subsequent in hot pursuit of every fog bank visible on the horizon.

On entering the Bay a quantity of stores, part of a lady's wardrobe and a few daguerreotypes, which had been left by the Russians in their hurried departure, was taken possession of by the enemy.

The Pacific squadron appeared off Petropolowski and found the town deserted. A vessel was lying in the harbor, which was fired by her crew and abandoned. She was towed by the enemy, but too late to extinguish the fire. It was rumored at Hakodadi that a portion of the town of Petropolowski was fired by the enemy when the fleet came out.

The British steamers Styx and Tartar (in tow) from Castri, and Encounter from Petropolowski, arrived in Hakodadi on the 27th inst., before the Foote left, where they would probably await the arrival of their supply ships, we could; they were short of fuel, which compelled the Styx to take the Tartar in tow.

The French steam frigate Colbert was lost in the harbor of Nangasaki June 1st. When getting under weigh she struck on a reef which so badly injured her that she immediately filled and settled upon the reef, when she was abandoned.

The English treaty (ratified) with Japan, is still to be in the possession of Admiral Sir James Sterling, who will probably exchange ratifications before his squadron leaves those waters.

Admiral Sattunine, Minister Plenipotentiary, on the part of Russia, has just concluded a treaty with the Empire of Japan, which, it is said, does not differ much from the treaty of Kanagawa.

The French are now negotiating a treaty with Japan at Nangasaki.

The Imperial Governor of Simoda, has issued a proclamation which denies the right of Americans to live in Japan, except in cases of shipwreck or distress. None of the passengers of the Foote were permitted to land and live on shore at Hakodadi.

The U. S. Surveying Squadron, Vincennes, Fennimore Cooper and steamer Hatteras were at Simoda and Hakodadi in June, and sailed for Behring's Straits. This will probably reach San Francisco in November.

FROM CHINA.

The bark Yankee had arrived at San Francisco, bringing the "Friend of China," to the 11th of July. We extract the following from the Transcript:

The amount of bloodshed at Canton during the last month has been sickening. When Seaou-king, the second city of the province, was vanquished without fighting, a short time ago, a number of the inhabitants thought mercy would be shown them if they gave themselves up. With equal reason might forlorn rats have been expected from the hungry wolf. They were taken to Canton in droves of five hundred; as many as ten thousand, it is said, being confined in the city at one time. Kept without food for several days, when the hour of examination, so-called, arrived, eye witnesses tell of the utmost gallantness being exhibited; the condemned getting into the executive basket with even apparent satisfaction.

But with all these executions and their probable terrible consequences, there is no abatement of the rebellion—there is no instance of any of the leaders giving up the cause for promised rewards; in no case have insurgents retired, before, through want of food and ammunition, all reasonable prospect of successful opposition had apparently gone. From Seaou-king foo they marched northwest, with Hoe Alufa's hand in company, forty thousand strong. Our local contemporaries, no doubt, in their summaries of occurrences around us will endeavor to prop gain a belief that the neck of the rebellion-hero-snake is broken. Such assertions should be received with caution. It is not to the interest of journalists in the South to make matters appear worse than they are—and it is certainly improper to give such coloring to a tale as may best suit our wishes.

THE SANTHALS, who are in insurrection in Bengal, are thus spoken of by the Delhi (India) Gazette:

"They are a race little better than savages, who inhabit the lower slopes of the hills from Bangulpore to Brissa. They are for the most part destitute of fire-arms, but they, in a measure, make up for this disadvantage by their skill in the use of the bow, which they do not hesitate to render more deadly by the cruel device of poisoned arrows. Their religion is a simple and barbarous idolatry—the worship of stocks and stones, without any of those mystical refinements by which the idolatry of the Hindoos is overlaid. Their mythology, compared with that of the Hindoos, is almost a blank, and they have no notions of caste. Their food consists of almost anything that can be eaten, from roads and carrion, up to tigers and horned cattle, for the flesh of kine is not forbidden to them. As to their vices it is certain, from their recent (or accounts, that they combine cowardice with cruelty to a remarkable degree, for they war with women and children, as well as men; and, unlike the North American Indian, who prizes most a warrior's scalp, the head of a woman is to the Santhal the most acceptable trophy that he can take away from the village of an enemy. But with all this, it is remarkable that the Santhals are distinguished for a love of truth which exists nowhere else among the natives of India. Their numbers are said to amount to one hundred thousand fighting men; and if they are joined by the other tribes, the number of Vindhyan hill men capable of bearing arms against us would become formidable indeed. It is not supposed that any attempt will be made during the present season to do more than drive the enemy to the hills and keep him there. Next cold season will be the time for active operations; and most signal retribution for the damage done must be inflicted, if the shock which this affair has given to our prestige is to be recovered from."

On the 6th inst., the crew of the ship Arcole, of Boston, lying in the river at Richmond, Va., mutinied, and were arrested through the assistance of the U. S. authorities. They were armed with pistols.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1855.

Death of Rev. John Lane.

One of the fathers has fallen asleep! The Vicksburg Whig, Oct 11th says:

This venerable and much beloved man has been "gathered to his fathers." He died at his residence, near the city, on yesterday morning, of yellow fever, in the 67th year of his age.

He had been connected with the rise, growth and fortunes of Vicksburg and Warren county for nearly forty years, and no man possessed a larger share of public confidence and esteem, throughout the large circle of his acquaintances, which was very extensive. Thousands of hearts will be pained at the news of his death: but he had lived long enough—longer than his calendar years—had lived usefully, and usefulness is life's true measure.

Judge Lane was a Georgian by birth, and came to this State about forty years ago, in the capacity of a minister of the gospel. The country was then new, and needed men of energy and lofty moral courage to meet the demands of the newly forming state of society. Judge Lane was such a man. He possessed a sound and discriminating mind, was deliberate, calm and conscientious in the performance of every duty and possessed in a large degree that self-abandonment and devotion to the welfare of his fellow man, which is one of the leading characteristics of a true man and a true christian.

For forty-six years he fulfilled the duties of a most laborious preacher of the gospel; and for more than thirty years of that time, not only gratuitously, but giving liberally of his own means for the support of the church and ministry; and probably no man in the State has accomplished more good than he did, in his long and eventful life. In the early establishment of this county, he was elected Judge of the County Court, and while he presided over its deliberations, no man could have rendered greater satisfaction, while he ever impressed the people with his sterling qualities of candor, impartiality and right.

He had charge as a regular pastor of several churches in this county, and died as he had long desired, with the harness of a true soldier of Jesus on. He was a man of great kindness of heart, considerate of the poor, his house a synonyme for hospitality, warm in friendship and forgiving in temper. Take him all in all, we shall not soon look upon his like again.

Mrs. Read's Seminary.—This long established and popular institution commenced its session at Greenwell Springs, on the 3d inst., where it will be continued until such time as will be thought prudent to remove to its old location in "Seminary Hall," Baton Rouge, which we trust will be at an early day. Mrs. R.'s Seminary is inferior to none in the State, as its success abundantly shows.

Der Editor.—Rev. P. Moelling, Galveston, Texas, gave us pleasant greeting in our office Wednesday morning. The German Advocate, now in its third number, has 540 subscribers, and daily they come: which is more than this Advocate had, at that time of life.

Our Colored Churches.—The three colored churches of the M. E. Church, South, in New Orleans—worshipping in chapels called respectively, Wesley, Soule and Wiman—last week presented their local preachers (colored) with a suit out and out, including boots and hats! Their names are Henry Green, Anthony Ross and Scott Chinn; and this substantial compliment, we understand, was conferred for their "fidelity in filling their appointments on Sundays." It was "tastily" done, by a committee of themselves, at one of our best clothing stores, and the bill paid, amounting to $100.

The preachers, with most of the members, are slaves. One of them drives a dray on week days, another drives nails and shoves a plane, and the other is porter in a wholesale store. They can read, and though colored, preach a fair sermon.

These churches number about 1,200 communicants. They are in connection with the Louisiana Conference, which appoints them a white pastor, under whose supervision a wholesome discipline is maintained. He also preaches for them once on Sabbath, usually afternoon, and administers the sacraments.

The congregations meet thrice on Sabbath—at sunrise for prayer meeting, and at 11 and 3½, for preaching. Sabbath schools, on the oral system, are held at 9 A. M. The churches are large and orderly, and enjoy the good will and protection of the city authorities. They are spiritually prosperous, also, and do much good.

The Mails.—The mail due yesterday failed from beyond Mobile, nor did the mail due the day previous arrive. The constant irregularities, and for which no good causes can be assigned, have attracted the attention of our City Council. The two Boards, at the sitting on Tuesday evening last, appointed a joint committee, and, with the Mayor, to correspond with the authorities at Washington. Messrs Durell, Price and Pehre were selected on the part of the Board of Aldermen, and Messrs. Eager, Gibbs and Fabre on the part of the Board of Assistants. We are heartily glad with this movement of the city authorities. It was certainly high time some responsible body had taken action in the matter, and, if any good is to be realized, this committee, from the high standing of its members, will certainly attain it.

Ministerial Distribution.

The Methodist itinerancy, which by mutual consent and sacrifice of clergy and laity puts the pastors and the parishes at the disposal of a responsible Episcopacy, assisted by competent counsellors, has been much inveighed against, in certain quarters. True, the system, like everything in this disjointed world, has its imperfections. It grew up providentially and became fixed, as it now is, by experience of its goodness.

It is efficient for spreading the Gospel. The heart throws vital energy to the extremities. An amount of ministerial talent given, our system works it to best advantage. It is distributive and catholic in supply. The motto is "Laborers where they are wanted, and the right men for the right places."

The manner of this distribution presents the appearance of change; but it is change by rule and not caprice. The liabilities of ministerial demoralization are lessened. Biddings and bargainings, rivalry and intrigue, electioneering and jealousy—very worldly looking things, often in church matters—are avoided.

The Christian Witness and Church Advocate, Oct. 5, an Episcopal paper, uses this language:

"We have of late heard much of the want of ministers, and have been urged to offer up special prayer that the Lord would send forth more laborers into his vineyard. There can be no question that there are many churches vacant, and many inviting fields unoccupied. But is it a fact that the number of our clergy is insufficient to meet the present demand? Not, we are sorry to say, to the extent which many think. While so many churches are vacant, and so many fields remain unoccupied, there are very many clergymen unemployed, at least, so far as ministerial duties are concerned. We do not now speak of the aged and infirm, who are unable longer to labor, but we speak of men, who are perfectly able to endure all the toils and hardships of ministerial life. But where are these clergymen, and why is it that they are unemployed? By a reference to the published list of our clergy, it will be found that a very large number are located in a few of our principal cities. For instance, in New York, there are 80; in Brooklyn, 28; in Philadelphia, 66; in Boston, 22; in Baltimore, 24; in Charleston, 21; making a total of 241, in six cities. Of these, many are not engaged in the work of the ministry at all, and many more are but partially employed. Why is this? It is not that situations are wanting; it is not that there is not a disposition on the part of parishes to employ clergymen. Very far from it—situations are numerous, and the calls from vacant parishes are importunate. Our Bishops will testify to the unceasing demand upon them to supply ministers, and their utter inability to do it. Again we ask, why are so many clergymen unemployed? We will try to answer in part this question, and in doing so, we shall speak plainly, but we trust, not unkindly.

"And first, we are constrained to say, that we believe the clergy are most seriously at fault, in this matter. We believe that they have contributed very much to bring about this state of things. They profess to be ready and willing to work, but say they can find nothing to do—that no parishes will call them. Now, if the Lord calls a man to the ministry, is it to be supposed that He will leave him without anything to do? The question answers itself."

Discussing this serious subject, the Witness touches an abuse with an honest hand:

"We refer to the practice of inviting calls from vacant Churches. It may sound ungracious to use such language, but it is only expressing in plain English, what is constantly taking place. Let a Church become vacant, and at once every kind of influence is brought to bear to secure a call for this, that, or the other person. Friends are spoken to, letters are written, visits are made, in fine, everything is done to secure the desired end. Were this confined to the parishes alone, it would not be so bad; but the clergy allow themselves to be partice to these proceedings. They become candidates for the vacant post, and resort to many things calculated to lower the sacred office, and injure themselves in the estimation of the people. In all this they seem to forget that the Lord has anything to do in the matter; that his will has as much to be sought in a call to a parish, as in anything else. How can it be expected that his blessing will attend any such proceedings? Should we not rather look for his displeasure?"

After all, settled pastorates are the exception even with those holding to the theory. A comparative view will show changes in other churches as well as the Methodist, with this difference: Ours are according to theory, theirs against it. With us, they occur quietly, with others at the cost of much friction. Nature and grace will vary their demands. Your stereotype plans must yield. Our Presbyterian, and Congregational and Baptist exchanges abound with deprecations: Still, their pastorates change. The Puritan Recorder sharply rebukes ministers with one foot on the ground and the other in the stirrup, looking out for new calls. An Episcopal organ puts down, as the bane of the church, a floating body of place seekers, in gown and surplice.

A writer in the Southern Episcopalian, of October, stirs "church people" for the up country:

"Indeed, all the upper part of South Carolina, so far as we are concerned, as a Church, is missionary ground, as much so as Texas or Oregon: I need not say it is much more hopeful ground: other churches are at work upon it; they are doing their duty; but our church lingers, in her energy and grace, upon the sea board. It is time she should wake up, and establish herself, and do her duty, and by her ministry, preach the Gospel, in this growing part of the State."

Bishop Elliott, of Georgia, has had extensive opportunities for forming a judgment of the evils resulting from the want of a counter check to the capriciousness of both pastors and people; and his sentiments are worthy of serious attention.

With trifling exception he says: "Our clergy come and go as they please—leave fields of labor to which they are admirably adapted, to run to others in which complete failure awaits them."

In this complaint he is not alone: "There is no Bishop in the Church, who does not feel this to be a most serious evil, one ever which he is called constantly to lament, and for which he can find no remedy."

Association with Romanists, on the score of efficiency, we have no objection to, but take it "as a compliment rather. Speaking of the defects in the system of the Church," (Episcopal) Bishop E. remarks:

"Another difficulty which lies in the way of the advancement of the Church is the little control which the Bishop has over the movements of the clergy. In both the most efficient ecclesiastical bodies of the world, the Roman and the Methodist Churches, the control over the position and movement of the clergy is almost absolute. The ministry of those churches are placed and kept in fields of labor, not according to their own fancy or their own calculations, but according to the view which the eye of authority takes of their adaptedness to those fields."

CONSECRATED LOTTERIES.

The Roman Catholic Church in France still resorts to gambling for its maintenance, as may be seen by the following extract from a late letter to the Christian Advocate, by the Rev. Abel Stevens:

"The newspapers have been constantly crowded with advertisements of consecrated lottery programmes, and no little interest prevails here from the fact that to-morrow (16th of August) the lottery of St. Rook has its drawing. It has a capital of 1,200,000 francs, 25,000 of which will be distributed in prizes among 49 drawing numbers. One ticket, costing only 20 cents, can draw 140,000 francs, or in other words $28,000. This splendid gambling project has been formed for the purpose of erecting a new church at Montpelier to St. Rock, who was born there. It has the sanction of the Government, and will have its drawing under the auspices and with the responsibility of a State officer. But above all, it has received a special grace from his Holiness the Pope, which is duly announced in the advertisements as a bait to the faithful.

"Now, this is but an example of what is occurring incessantly, though on a less commanding scale, throughout France. Individual parishes get up these lotteries for local purposes; most generally the prizes are not money, but articles of taste, of dress, literature or art. St. Sulpice, of this city, has recently had one in the gardens of the Luxembourg. Some of the most valuable articles were contributed by the cabinet minister of "public worship and instruction," who, indeed, seems very much given to this sort of patronage. They were on exhibition for weeks, as a temptation to the purchase of tickets. But even with this scheme of gambling, the general mania of religious mendicity intermeddled. Ladies and old gentleman, with the usual little embroidered purse in hand, stood at the entrance beseeching "charite s'il vous plait," besides urging the purchase of a ticket. So universal and incessant has this moral nuisance become, that a reaction of course must follow, and it already begins to show itself in strong public utterances, which spare not the priests, but charge the mischief upon them. The Siecle, the most out-spoken and spirited journal that I have yet met in France, has lately read them some round and unsparing lectures. It began by attacking a "chanoine" of the name of Desouney, who had sent out printed circulars to ladies, begging contributions, if only a few sous in amount, for the repair of a chapel which belonged to a certain academy under his care. The evil of these appeals was the fact that, for certain amounts given, a certain number of prayers or masses were pledged, which would secure certain spiritual advantages to the donor, or rather donoresses, (for I believe his circulars were limited to females,) and which were to be offered at specified times, and with other very minutely specified conditions. These ladies were especially exhorted by the circular to apply to all their neighbors for contributions, and to hold out to them the advantages of the stipulated spiritual compensations, to gather up even the sous of the poor, and to transmit them to the reverend beggar. The Siecle exposed the whole scheme as a shameful abuse of the faith, and as rendering it shameful to infidels. The chanoine replied, evading the charges; he denied, too, some of the most important facts respecting these circulars, but in such a manner that the editor had only to obtain one, and, by quoting it, fix upon him clearest proof of downright falsehood. This bold onslaught gave courage to a literary gentleman to attack, from his neighboring country-seat, the religious mendicity with which the rural districts are overrun. Mendicity, he says, is interdicted in his village, and the interdict is affixed to the corners of the streets, along with the names of the latter. No poor woman or child dares lift a voice for bread there, but sisters of charity, nuns, &c., infest the neighborhood, and, under endorsement from priests go from house to house with their printed programmes of charity, draining the town of its currency. He calls for the interference of the municipal authorities, and brands the practice as a transgression of the law against mendicity."

These reflections are not unseasonable. The practical workings of the itinerant system are passing in review at Conference session. Look at a list of appointments, a score of which will, in the next few months, be published, and see how the whole country is covered: see how the ministry is scattered abroad, that is to scatter abroad the word. From mountain range to coast line they spread out: their business, to spread scriptural holiness over these lands. No congestion at metropolitan points: no lingering of the Church in her grace and energy, on the luxurious seaboard, while the interior, even of old States, is turned out to grass.

This grand Catholic distribution is effected at the cost of some concession of individual rights. Has there ever been found out a better plan? The evils others complain of, as without remedy under their ecclesiastical system, approve it. Its fruits approve it.

THE BEER-GARDEN CHURCH.

Good Meetings in the Old 3rd—Interruptions—Police Called in—Quiet—Enlargement—Need of Reformation—Help and Work.

Missionary reports and revival articles are at all times joyful intelligence to the Church of Christ; indeed, they are the soft zephyrs laden with fragrance, to make glad the city of God. Since my last report, it has pleased God to send us a reviving shower of grace and mercy, in the second German Mission, located in the lower part of the third district. For three weeks we had meetings for preaching every evening. Never before had we such crowded houses of attentive hearers than at this gracious time of this outpouring of the Spirit of God. As near as I can learn, about ten have found the pearl of great price.

Many others have become serious on the subject of experimental religion. We hardly ever invited mourners to the altar of prayer, they generally came of their own accord, before the sermon was ended. More than once have we been stopped in the midst of the sermon by the weeping of penitents, that hastened to the altar to be prayed for.

Whilst the Spirit of God was moving upon the waters, the old adversary of the work of God began to stir too. He gathered his host together, a promiscuous crowd of coffee house keepers and "lewd fellows of the baser sort," standing outside of our chapel, making all sorts of noise, to disturb us; in so much so, that we were obliged to call on the Recorder of this district for protection, by the police. A few watchmen stationed at the door of our house, put a stop at once to the most shameful cursing and profaning of sacred things, carried on by old and young, men and women. Quietness and peace prevail now at all our meetings. Still the interest is kept up among the people to hear the word of God; every meeting is well attended, and we hope and pray, that this revival may go on through the whole of the winter.

Allow me to inform those dear friends, who have so liberally responded to our call for help, that their donations came in good time. Our Beer Garden Sunday-school is still progressing finely, gaining in interest. On the wetest days, without any paved sidewalks for four blocks around our dancing saloon school-room, we have had from 70 to 80 children in attendance. On dry days, we have from 100 to 120 children.

But another necessity is now pressing upon us. The place is much too small and inconvenient to hold all the children, and as the saloon is an open building, the cold wind reminds us now to be looking out for another location. We cannot rent anything large enough to hold the school, in the shape of a house; so we are driven to the stern necessity of buying a lot, and build a small chapel upon it; and in doing so, we at once lay the foundation for a new mission field among the Germans at this part of the city. If others of the friends of Christ would imitate those who have set the example of investing in this cause, we would, in due time, be enabled to erect the house we need. We can buy a lot of ground large enough for $700, and for about $800, we can put up the house.

Come, dear friends, one and all, assist us in this work. These German people must be brought under the influence of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; their children must be instructed in the knowledge of the word of God. The Bible must take the place of the whisky, and the wine-bottle in the family circle, or else they sink down. I wish that I was able to portray, in glaring colors, the wickedness and abominations practised by a large portion of my poor benighted countrymen: the shameful desecration of the Lord's day, in keeping open the almost countless drinking-shops, beer-gardens, ball-rooms, and such like establishments of ill-fame. Here the young men and maidens congregate in these schools of the devil, and spend their hard-earned money in practicing the abominations of drunkenness and the pollution of soul and body.

But think of the wretched mothers, who are training up their fair and lovely daughters to become the harlots of some miserable wretch, that has already one or two wives, and then to live on the wages thus earned by their daughters, from the tender age of 13, up to their 18th year. Married women have sold themselves for this work of abomination, and are supporting their indolent drinking husbands with the money thus earned. Were it required, we could point you out the wretches that have come under our notice. O, then help us in our warfare against these crying sins! Send us your five, your ten, and your fifty's, to enable us to carry on the work of reformation.

JOHN M. HOFER.

New Orleans, Oct. 15.

Death of Ministers.—Among the latest victims of the fever at Norfolk, was the Rev. Wm. Jackson, Pastor of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Rev. B. H. Williams, Presbyterian, and Rev. M. Courjault, Roman Catholic minister, died lately in Vicksburg, of yellow fever.

GOD EVER READY.

That the progress of Christ's Kingdom upon earth has been marked by occasional extraordinary effusions of the Spirit, all Christians agree, though some regard those effusions only as contrasts with previous states of depression, while others look upon them as an established feature in the economy of grace. Those who take the former view, either look for revivals in the future to alternate with the seasons of dearth, or look forward to a time when the continued elevation of the Church in piety and in action, will supersede such periodical excitements; those who take the latter view, find in the laws of the human mind, and in the economy of the Spirit, a reason for expecting extraordinary effusions of the Holy Ghost until the end of time.

But whatever theory of revivals the people of God may entertain, all will agree that there is need of a higher tone of piety in the churches, a more earnest constant, soulful consecration of believers to the services of their Lord. All, too, will agree that, whether by the ordinary or extraordinary effusion of his Spirit, God is ever ready to bless his people, in answer to believing prayer. Christians agree in this theoretically, but do they believe it in heart? May we look for God's blessing upon the churches now? Can there be a revival in the "busy season," or in the harvest, or in the pleasure season? Thus we limit God by our times; and, by our want of faith and of co-operative endeavor, we postpone the blessing which we profess that we need, and profess, also, to believe him ready to bestow.

A fact, published in a late number of the Congregational Herald, affords such striking illustration of the readiness of God to bless his people, and of the possibility of a revival at a time not commonly thought propitious, that we give it here at once for reproof and for encouragement:

"A SPIRITUAL HARVEST.

"Can we have revivals in summer? I do not propose to argue the question, but to answer it by stating a fact which may serve as proof and encouragement to such as desire either.

"A few miles from Jacksonville is a meeting-house owned by a Presbyterian (N. S.) Society, and called Piegah. The region is settled almost wholly by farmers. Some time in June last a three days' meeting was held in connection with the communion seasons. At the first service, only about twenty-five persons were present; but on the Sabbath the house was filled—a large part of the audience being composed of youth. At the conclusion of the afternoon service, those desiring religious conversation were invited to come forward, when, to the astonishment of all, eleven individuals immediately complied with the invitation. Since that time no extra meetings have been held; but from Sabbath to Sabbath the interest has continued and increased, and every week has witnessed a number of new inquirers and hopeful converts. It was feared that the pressure of harvest work, the occurrence of the Fourth of July, and other causes incident to the season, would prove fatal to progress even at the outset; but God has displayed his sovereignty by continuing the gracious work in circumstances generally deemed adverse, and without the extra means usually deemed necessary. There have been absolutely no meetings during the week, but on each Lord's day the meetings for prayer, conversation and preaching have continued, with a brief intermission, from nine o'clock in the morning till five in the evening. Professor Sanders, of Illinois College, has been employed from the first in preaching the Word. Thus far upwards of fifty persons, embracing those of every age and shade of character, have been hopefully converted, and the interest, deep and silent as it has been through the whole period, still continues."

This narrative is full of encouragement and hope. If those farmers of Illinois amid the pressing labors of the harvest, denied all social meetings during the week, could yet maintain the spirit of prayer and the fervor of personal and household piety, why may we not at all times enjoy the influences of that Spirit which the Father is more ready to give us than we are to give bread to our children?—Independant.

Harvest Counted on.—The Freeman's Journal exulting over the perversion of Bishop Doane's son, says:

"Mr. Doane, instead of doing as too many have done before him—wasting his time with fooleries and unmeaning dodges of his conscience, and evasions of his reason—proceeded to act as a man, feeling his allegiance to truth and the duty he owed to God. He visited the Catholic Bishop, as the natural way of solving his remaining doubts, if, indeed, he had any of them left. He approached the fire, and the chill of the night air left him. He came to the light, and then he did not make believe that he was blind, or grope to see what he had grasped. We look upon Mr. Doane's conversion as the first fruits of an abundant harvest from the second generation of Pusoyite Episcopalians."

"Thoroughly Imbued."—A correspondent of the Southern Presbyterian, noticing the synodical school in Talledega, Alabama, and its principal, shows an honest hand:—"His religious influence in his school is more decided, uniform and effective than that of any man, lay or clerical, I have yet met with. His Sunday evening lectures are thoroughly imbued with the great truths of Calvinism, and are presented warm, fresh and glowing with Christ-like compassion. None but a theologian could write and talk with the discrimination he manifests."

EXTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

San Francisco, California,
September 4, 1855.

Last week I returned from a camp-meeting near Gilroy, (about 80 miles south-east of this place,) under the charge of Rev. bro. Bailey—bro. Gober, P. E. I suppose about seven hundred persons were present on Sabbath. The meeting began on Thursday and closed the following Wednesday. The Congregation was good, and attentive all the time; but as the meeting advanced there was evident an increasing solemnity, and, before the close, all seemed to feel and acknowledge that God was there. I suppose that about thirty were converted, twenty-six united with the Church at the meeting: others I think will yet join. It was truly a refreshing time to the Church. It was eminently so to me. About one hundred commemorated the Saviour's death together around the sacramental board. Several ministers of other denominations were present, and united with us like brethren. Surely this meeting will not soon be forgotten. Let God be praised for all His mercies. And let our brethren at home pray for us with confidence that God will make Southern Methodism His instrument of saving many souls in California. Amen and amen. O. Fisher.

P. S. Bro. R. R. Brookshire, of Georgetown Ct., writes to me, under date of July 31, that he has organized two societies, and has taken eleven into the Church. He has also organized two Bible classes, and expected to organize a Sabbath school the next Sabbath. He adds, "Morality and religion are prospering in my work. I see many omens of good. I hope the good Lord will abundantly bless us this year. We hear it said that the interest of the Church South is going down in the country. Not so. I receive members every round, while the Church North has not taken in a member in the bounds of my labor this year. I speak from personal knowledge, for I am intimate with their pastor and the classes."

Let us not understand bro. Brookshire as making any invidious comparison between us and our Northern brethren in the above remark, but as simply stating a fact, that God is mercifully blessing Southern Methodism in a free country, and thus showing to the world that Southern Methodism is needed here, and adapted to all countries and to all people, whether they be bond or free.

SUNDAY DINNERS.

We are not required wholly to abstain from food on the Lord's day, but it would contribute very much to our spiritual health to be more sparing in our diet than is common among those who possess ample means for self-indulgence. To make it a day of feasting the body, is one of the surest ways of starving the soul. But in the few remarks which I now offer, I shall confine myself to Sunday dinners. By more labor, variety and expense, than on other days of the week.

In the first place, I take it to be a plain violation of the fourth commandment. "In it, [the Sabbath] thou shalt not do any work; thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant." Now, a warm and inviting dinner cannot be prepared without labor. Somebody must stay at home to get it. The work will most naturally devolve chiefly upon the domestics, and it is not right to deprive them of the rest from the toils of the week which God has ordained for them as well as for their employers, and still less to deprive them of the privilege of attending public worship, by keeping them busy all the forenoon in the kitchen.

And then these hearty dinners unfit those who feast upon them for the religious services of the afternoon. If they go to church it is rather to pass away the hour and a half than to worship. With a great many, the hearty dinner creates a temptation to stay at home, too strong to be resisted; and this, in large and wealthy congregations especially, is one, if not the principal cause, why so many pews are vacant. The dinner is not over when the bell rings, or, if it is, the couch is so much nearer than the church, that the attraction cannot be overcome. There is no other way to resist it but by substituting some slight refreshment for these Sunday dinners; and it would be for the health of the body as well as of the soul to give them up.

While I venture to offer these admonitory remarks, which I am sure are called for in some influential quarters, I am happy to know that religious families in general, and I believe most others in the country, dispense with warm dinners on the Sabbath, leaving their domestics entirely at liberty to attend church both parts of the day, and thus keeping their own minds and hearts in a much better frame for religious profiting, than they would be after free indulgence at the dinner table.—N. Y. Observer.

Our City Churches.—We have not known larger congregations and more attentive, at any time in the history of New Orleans Methodism. The Poliority st. Church Rev. L. Parker, Pastor, held a series of week-night meetings last week. Carondelot, Rev. J. B. Walker, with organ and free family pews, gathers a multitude Sabbathly. Moreau, Rev. J. A. Ivey, is holding a little above the even tenor of its way.

The German brethren are doing well—being straitened in room and means. They have a work to do and are laboring.

New Publications.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

J. C. Morgan, adjoining the Post-office—that prince of bibliopolists—has laid on our table, Cora and the Doctor, The Missing Bride, The Deserted Wife—the last two volumes by Mrs. Southworth, published by Peterson. The first we have a mind to look through: the others not.

We are obliged to Morgan for Blackwood, (Sept.) and three of Boz's Stories.

The Harpers have hooked the Newcomes by Thackeray. It is more scoffing and scurrilous in its reflections upon morals and religion, than anything yet spit out by that snobbish author.

Religious Gambling.—After the article in another column on "Consecrated Lotteries," our readers may better appreciate a home item. From the Catholic organ of this city, of last Sunday morning, we clip this morceau:

TOWARDS BUILDING
THE NEW CHURCH IN LAFAYETTE.

"A very excellent Buggy with a set of Harness, (Gift of Judge McGeary,) will be disposed of by Lottery, on the 1st November, 1855, after Vespers, at the School House. Tickets $1 each.

"The above articles are almost new. The Buggy is built in the newest and most approved style, and is adapted to carry two or four persons. It can be seen every Sunday at the New Church."

Holiness.—Holiness is the true dignity of the soul, and sin its vilest degradation.—Jay.

Kentucky Anniversary.—We think if our Kentucky brethren would put some of their numerous and able workmen upon Louisiana territory, their labors would yield more. Dr. Sehon writes from the Conference: "This anniversary was held on Saturday night. The meeting was very large. The addresses were delivered by Dr. Linn and the Secretary. The collection amounted to $240; making the whole amount raised for missions, during the year, by the Conference, $2000. This sum falls some $300 below the amount raised the year previous. We had much feared a far greater falling off even than this.

Jackson, Miss.—The Mississippian, 10th inst., says: "Out of a very sparse population (a large majority of the residents having left on the first approach of the disease several weeks ago) there are not at this time less than one hundred and twenty cases of yellow fever within the corporate limits of the town. * * * *

Too much praise cannot be awarded to our efficient Mayor, W. H. Taylor, Esq., who has remained at his post visiting and nursing the sick, and performing all the duties pertaining to his station. He will be gratefully remembered. Among the ministers who have been assiduous in their attentions to the distressed are the Rev. Messrs. LeRoy, of the Catholic Church; Corbyn, of the Episcopal Church; and Godfrey, of the Methodist Church. Rev. Messrs. Corbyn and Godfrey have been sick, but are convalescing."

A Curious Mixture.—They sang a Te Deum at the Cathedral of Notre Dame, in Paris, in honor of the recent achievements of the Allied armies in the East. The flags of the Allies were intertwined, and in this Roman Catholic Cathedral the standards of Mahomedan Turkey and Protestant England were displayed side by side with the eagles of France—a nation which remains faithful to the Romish Church, for the present. Think of a social party made up of the Pope, Martin Luther, and Mahomet, and you can have some idea of the changes which a few years make in war, politics, creeds, and diplomacy.

The Troubles in Honduras.—A recent arrival at Boston from Truxillo brings the particulars of important occurrence in Honduras. We extract the following:

Business in Truxillo and Omoa was exceedingly dull on account of the revolution throughout the State of Honduras. The different Departments which had declared against the President, Cabanos, had all, however, yielded, except the departments of Olanche and York, which still held out; and General Alvarez, at the head of 600 Government troops, was marching against the rebels. On the 3d of September news arrived in Truxillo that a party of robbers under Alhiue Pena, numbering about sixty men, were marching on the town and intended to make a midnight attack. The commandant of Truxillo sent out a small party to reconnoitre, but they were surprised in the night by robbers, disarmed and allowed to return. On their arrival in Truxillo the alarm became general, and about three hundred citizens offered their services to the commandant. Arms and ammunition were distributed to the volunteers, and Truxillo presented quite a warlike appearance. The United States Consular Agent sent his family on board the Helen Jane, then lying in the port, and was followed by the families of the principal part of the inhabitants to the number of one hundred persons, with their movable property, where they remained three days.

On the 15th the news came of the near approach of the robbers, when a party of sixty men were sent to attack them. The two parties met on the following day, and the robbers were defeated with considerable loss. The leader, Pena, was taken prisoner and immediately shot, and afterward had his head and right hand cut off. The alarm was such in Truxillo that a number of the inhabitants sent their families and much of their property to the Isle of Ratepy. When the Helen Jane left the town was more quiet, but apprehension was felt of more difficulties.

The leader and head of the Revolutionists in Honduras had been killed in battle.

Capt. Nickerson states that a meeting of the American residents of Truxillo was held previous to his leaving, at which resolutions were passed soliciting the United States Government to have a man of war occasionally touch there for their protection.

Deaths.

Died—At the residence of her son, C. Bancroft, Esq., near the city of Mobile, Sept. 4, 1855, Mrs. Elizabeth Bancroft, in the 82d year of her age.

The deceased was born near Boston, Mass. For the last twenty years, or more, resided in this community, and was known to a large and numerous circle of friends and acquaintances, as a pious and consistent member of the M. E. Church, South.

The loss of one so well and favorably known, and with all so generally beloved, is deeply felt; but in this case we are called to mingle with our mourning emotions gratitude to God, for having spared her long, as a comfort to her friends, and a faithful exemplification of venerable piety. Sometimes old age, combined with infirmity of disease, appears unattractive, and notwithstanding their piety, evinces a degree of coldness and complaining, that seems almost unavoidable from pressure of pain that rests so heavily upon the time worn body of woe, however, with this sainted mother it was not. Though upwards of four score, and the last ten years of her life deprived of her eyesight; she nevertheless retained that brightness of spirit, for which she was always remarkable, with a degree of cheerfulness and patience that was truly attractive and edifying—thus not only robbed the "sear" and "yellow" of all uncomliness, but forcibly reminded us, that under the culture of Divine Grace, the fragrance may survive the freshness; and when the verdure and the bloom have passed away, the odor of life and love-liness will linger, to cheer the survivors who mourn with sadness around the withered form.

Having reached that period, of life, when as it is said our "strength is but labor and sorrow," and being of a slender and delicate constitution, and withal blind, she was for many years unable to attend the house of God. This, she often regretted, but never complained. And when she could no longer enjoy that privilege, she delighted to dwell upon the sermons she had heard, and would often speak of them, and the manner in which the sacred text was treated, and thus fed her soul upon the "fragments" she gathered when the multitudes were fed. But blessed God, a few months previous to her departure, so to revive her drooping strength, that she was enabled to attend the little sabbath church about a mile from her residence, and once more mingle in the public worship of God, when she remained to the class meeting held immediately after service. This served her not only as a matter of thankfulness, but as a theme of pleasing conversation to the day of her death.

The closing hours of mother Bancroft were such as might be expected. Worn out with years, she laid down upon her bed, without any specific disease, that she might the more easily endure the painful friction of the last sounds of the "weary wheels of life." With a clear mind, and partially restored vision, that she might look once more on the loved objects of life before she left them, conscious that her hour had come; she bade them all adieu, and after commending them to God, her happy spirit winged its way in triumph to her home in heaven.

Life's duty done, as sinks the clay,
Light from its load the spirit flies;
While heaven and earth combine to say,
How blest the righteous when she dies.

Christian Advocate and Journal will please copy.

Died—In the town of Bastrop, La., Oct. 3, 1855, William Henry, infant son of Rev. W. Evans, aged 2 months and 26 days.

Died—August 6, 1855, in Sparta, Bienville Parish, La., Sarah Love, wife of R. B. Love, in the 34th year of her age.

She joined the M. E. Church in 1846, and lived well beloved. To her surviving friends she left high testimony that all was well. She knew she was dying for several hours, all which time she was praising God and pleading with her friends. Gave her two children to the care of those she wanted to raise them, told where she would be buried, and chose the funeral preacher—then called all around her, and begged them not to doubt any more of the reality of religion, and not for to be jouring about denominations, Baptist and Methodist; but to serve God and all would be right at the last. When she could scarcely talk, her old class-leader came in. She got him by the hand and told him she had often here met him in class, but hereafter in heaven. Some who saw her die and heard her words, fled to God immediately. Several who had become cold, said they were determined by grace to fall back no more. She is long to be remembered, and this is not half.

Mrs. Ursula Jane Hughes was born in Lauderdale County, Alabama, Feb. 15, 1828, and professed religion and joined the M. E. Church at a camp-meeting held at Union Chapel, in Pickins County, Ala., in the fall of 1839. She was married to Mr. Steward B. Hughes in August, 1845. I have been long acquainted with the deceased, and can testify that she was pre-eminently possessed of a meek and quiet spirit, she was a steady, consistent Christian.

For some years before her death she was afflicted with consumption, and was often brought near the gates of death; but she bora her sufferings with patience; a few months before her own dissolution, she was called to mourn the loss of her husband, but she has now joined him in the realms of light, where their union shall never be dissolved. She departed this life on the 26th of July last, at the house of her brother, John W. Manning, in Choctaw County, Alabama.

George Shaeffer.

Died—At his residence, in Bastrop, La., Sept. 16, 1855, in the 45th year of his age, Jonathan S. Clower.

He has left a bereaved widow and large family to mourn his loss. But their loss is his eternal gain. He had from early life been a faithful member of the M. E. Church and gave evidence of true piety. He praised God for his bright prospect of a home in heaven. His family mourn not alone: the M. E. Church in Bastrop deeply feels the loss of one of her most useful and consistent members, and willing supporters—one who was ever at his post. Bold to take up, firm to sustain the consecrated Cross.

E.

Died—Near Forkland, Greene Co., Ala., Sept. 19, 1855, Mrs. Mary Ann Glover, the wife of Allen Glover, and eldest daughter of Dr. A. and Mrs. E. Clements, in the 22nd year of her age.

It is our mournful duty to record here as the sixth death in her father's family within the short space of five weeks.—Such mortality is almost unparalleled, and entitles the afflicted and bereaved ones to our kindliest sympathies and sincerest prayers.

The subject of this notice was converted to God, at Summerfield, Alabama, whilst at school, in 1852, just before graduating, and joined the M. E. Church, in which she lived a useful life till her death. The writer was with her in the beginning of her sickness—from first to last, she gave unusual evidence of her readiness "to depart and be with Christ." From early childhood she had been religiously trained, and taught to believe the doctrines of her church, which she much admired and greatly loved. In all our conversation, both in public and in private, during health and in sickness, she invariably gave incontestable proof of her acceptance with God; and on the day preceding her death, she warmly exhorted her friends to live for God, calling upon her pastor to pray for her husband, that he might meet her where parting would be no more. To witness such a scene of joy and rejoicing—of victory and triumph over death and the grave, was truly a privilege. But still our hearts are grieved over the untimely death of one so useful and lovely—of one, whose life was endeared to many, by acts of kindness and works of love; and yet, we submit, believing our loss is her gain; that the songs of heaven are sung by another angel-spirit, that notes of unending joy are sounding forth from the voice of her, whose soul now rests with Jesus.

T. Moody.

Died—Near Old Town, Miss., Sept. 10, Mrs. M. J. Eaves.

She was born in Pittsboro, N. C., reared in Marengo Co., Alabama, professed religion near her 18th year, and was a member of the M. E. Church till 1852, when she was married to a member of the Baptist Church, to which she also attached herself, to harmonize with her husband.

A short time before her death, she called her friends to her bedside, bade them adieu, and affectionately exhorted them to meet her in a better world. To her husband and two brothers that were present, she said, "weep Oh! weep not for me; you have nothing to do, but just to cross the swalling flood and I shall soon be there." She has left a kind husband, an aged father, who still preaches the unsearchable riches of Christ, two brothers, who are ministers, and others to mourn her loss.

Yellow Fever in West Baton Rouge.—We deeply regret the prevalence of the yellow fever in the parish of West Baton Rouge. An esteemed friend, writing to us under date of the 13th inst., says:

"We have a great deal of yellow fever with us. I have on my plantation twenty-five cases; Dr. L., fifty; J. L., sixty. Many deaths are daily occurring. God only knows where it will end."

The Fever.—But few cases of fever have occurred in town or in Pineville this week, but the causes of the disease, the doctors say, still exists. Two or three deaths have occurred.

The fever has spread into the country. R. R. Caldwell, a young member of the bar and a worthy man, the opposition candidate for clerk, died at Henderson's Vacherie on last Sunday. Mr. N. Villain has lost his daughter Virginia, a most interesting young lady, and Mrs. J. F. Flint her eldest son, a very promising lad. The cold weather seems to give virulence to the disease.—[Alexandria (La.) Republican, 13th.

The British government is just now seriously engaged with the question of a new national gallery. Many letters from the present mode of exhibiting the national pictures—at Windsor, Hampton Court, the British Museum, the National Gallery and Marlborough House—is eminently unsatisfactory. Plans are before them for consolidating these galleries.

Further Foreign News by the Canada.

The New York papers of the 10th and 11th contain telegraphic dispatches from Halifax of the Canada's advices more complete than those received in this city. We extract the following paragraphs:

Active operations have been resumed in the Crimea.

Gortschakoff reported on the 17th that the Allies had attempted nothing up to that date on the north side, but were concentrating their forces between Balaklava and the Tchernaya and constantly reconnoitering the left wing of the Russians from the Baidar Valley.

The Cossacks had taken twenty-five prisoners while foraging at Kerisch.

Letters from the camp mention that the Allies were actively preparing for a campaign.

From three to four hundred deserters, most of them Poles, had arrived at the Allied camp. They said that the demoralization of the Russian army was most complete, and that such was the confusion from the first moment of the attack, that the soldiers, exhausted with fatigue, remained for twenty-four hours without provisions.

The loss of the Russians is estimated at 18,000 men. The correspondent of the Paris Patrie, under date Sept. 26, says: "Ever since their retreat the Russians have continued to fortify it, and it would be a mistake to suppose that our armies in Sebastopol are beyond the range of the enemy's batteries on the northern shore and on the plateau. The balls from Fort Constantine reach beyond Streitzka Bay, and they can very easily throw their projectiles into the town. As to the batteries of the other forts, some of the guns in them are so powerful that they can carry shot right over the town and do execution in the advanced siege works, but although the Russian fire does not cease, it is not very active. The artillery and engineers in Sebastopol are every where at work. Fort St Nicholas, which was left almost intact, has been fortified and its cannon already replies to the enemy. Any attempt of the Russians to return to the place is wholly out of the question.

The Grand Duke Constantine arrived at Nicolaeff on the 20th, and it was said that the Czar himself would shortly visit that place in superintend the winter Crimean campaign.

A letter from Berlin, dated 23d, says: various circumstances at St. Petersburg seem to indicate that Prince Gortschakoff will soon evacuate the forts to the north of Sebastopol, those forts being only strategetic points, but great preparations are making by the Russians for a winter campaign.

The Russian treasury has received large sums of money through Berlin. English war material is constantly passing through Prussia for the army.

The Anglo-Turkish contingent would go to Trebizond, and be placed under Omar Pacha. It was also announced that considerable bodies of French troops had been sent to Eupatoria.

The War in Asia.

Vienna dispatches say that Kars was greatly straitened for provisions, and that the garrison was eating horse flesh.

Advices from Trebizond, dated the 6th of September, announce that the Russians had abandoned Erzeroum, and were at Malugulemia.

The Baltic.

Dantzic, Friday, Sept 28.—The steamer Bull Dog has arrived here with mails from the fleet. All the high pressure block ships had left for England. The weather here continues unsettled.

The Times' Paris correspondent writes on the 27th, that the Baltic fleet will winter at Kiel.

Greece.

Letters from Athens state that the news of the fall of Sebastopol had produced the greatest consternation among the partizans of Russia, who were always boasting of the impossibility of the Allies succeeding. The Ministers waited on the French and English Ambassadors to offer their warmest congratulations.

Denmark.

The Folksthing, now in session at Copenhagen, has definitely approved, by a vote of 54 to 41, of all the proposed constitutional changes.

Naples.

A circular had been given to the police authorities throughout the Kingdom of Naples, saying that although Mazza has retired from office, the policy of the Government will be the same, and no change is to take place in the conduct of the police towards politically suspected persons.

The Minister of War, Prince Ischebelli, who opposed the arbitrary proceedings of Mazza, had also been dismissed.

Austria.

The Austrian Government has caused the publication of the following announcement in its acknowledged official organ, the Austrian Correspondence:

"The new state of things may give occasion to a diplomatic contest or a sanguinary strife between Russia and the Western Powers, but it will in no way affect the mediatory attitude of Austria."

Liverpool, Boston Market, Halifax, Oct. 10, 1855.

The following is from McAlmont Brothers & Co's circular: Favorable accounts from the growing crops, together with the state of the money market, have combined in depress prices and cause much irregularity, and the market closes dull at 1/2d. to 3/4d. decline. We quote fair New Orleans at 6 7/8; Middling, 6 1/2; fair Mobile, at 6 3/4; Middling, 6 7/8; fair Uplands, 6 3/4; Middling, 6 5/8. The sales of the week are 35,960 bales, of which the trade have taken 30,310 bales. The stock on hand is estimated at 623,500 bales, against 703,780 at the same date last year.

Antiquities.—A correspondent of the Baton Rouge Comet, relates the following incident:

I observed in your last weekly issue, the notice of a marriage record in the Recorder's office, in which the bride, on account of her advanced age, was unable to write, and made her mark to the marriage ceremony. There are many acts and deeds of record in the office which appear curious to us now, for instance, the following sale passed 45 years ago:

Maurice Burnette, sold to Charles Duval, lot No. 1 Square No 4, Leonard town, Baton Rouge, (the property now owned by N. K. Knox) and a mulatto girl Kitty, 19 years old, for the consideration of two thousand dollars, payable as follows, viz: One thousand dollars in cash, and one thousand dollars payable two months after date in common sized Alligator skins, at five dollars a piece, and by an entry in the margin of the record the seller Burnette, acknowledges the receipt of two hundred Alligator skins, and fully discharges Duval from all further liability on account of the property.

Opelousas Railroad.—The special or accommodation train of the Opelousas railroad, which heretofore left New Orleans every Saturday evening at 4 o'clock, and returned on Monday morning by 10, has been discontinued. The hours of arrival at and departure from Tigerville, the present terminus of the road, have not yet been fixed. A steamboat is running in connection with the road at Tigerville, for all intermediate landings on Bayou Teche as far up as New-Iberia, and all the travel which, previous to the opening of the road to Tigerville, went via. the Lakes and Donaldsonville to New Orleans, has been transferred to the railroad, which, besides being shorter and more expeditious, is also attended with much less expense.—[Thibodaux Minerva, 13th.

Louisiana.—The Harrisonburg Independent, of Wednesday last, informs us that Wm. Hudson, accused of murder, escaped from the jail of that place a few nights since. A fellow named Quyn, confined for larceny, also escaped. The Independent has the following paragraph:

After a fall of rain on Thursday night and Friday last, the weather became cold and on the night of the 6th inst. we had frost that stripped vegetation precipitately in many places. The night of the 4th of March and the eighth moon of several flocks of brant were hailed with more than usual pleasure. A slight frost also occurred on the night of the 7th.

The Bayou Sara Chronicle, of Wednesday last, says:

We had a frost on Sunday morning last. The health of our town and parish has greatly improved of late. Those who are sick are fast recovering.

The Concordia Intelligencer, of Friday, says that two frosts had occurred at that place, but they did not appear to be heavy enough to cause any abatement of the fever.

From Jamaica, etc.—From the New York Herald of the 8th, we extract the following intelligence:

Captain Brevoot, of the schooner Brunies, has handed us files of Kingston (Jamaica) papers to the 17th of September. The Hon. Edward O'Reilly, for twenty-four years Attorney General of Jamaica, died on the 11th ultimo, and was much regretted. Israel Levi Lewis, a well known abolitionist, was also dead. The island press advocated a relaxation of the tariff. The Legislature was to meet on the 19th instant, when warm debates were expected in both branches. A satisfactory Baptist tea meeting had been held, and the Jewish annual feast was also observed. The Governor had gone on a country tour. Juvenile vagrancy was rife. Torrents of rain had fallen in Dominica, and the young sugar canes were slightly injured. The sugar crop had been nearly all shipped. In St. Lucia the weather had been succeeded by a heavy storm, which damaged many boats. A severe hurricane swept over St. Croix on August 24th, which occasioned great damage. Many lives were lost. On the south side of the island the French bark Content was wrecked, and all hands perished. She was bound to Marseilles. St. Croix was healthy. Small-pox had appeared at St. Thomas.

Our files of Bahama papers are from Nassau, N. P.) to Sept 19th. On the 17th ultimo a vessel had arrived at Rum Cay, with the information that, owing to a continuance of heavy rains, the salt crop for this season was completely destroyed. About 40,000 bushels remained on hand, and the latest price was sixteen cents (cash) per bushel. Athol Island has been purchased by the English government for a hospital site. News had been received at Nassau that the British schooner Lady Bannerman, laden with mahogany, had been captured near Yucatan, by boats from the Musquito shore, and the captain and crew taken prisoners. The schooner Galvanio was chased by a war steamer on the same place, and only barely escaped her.

From Bermuda we have advices to September 26. The weather was very fine, and invalids were much benefitted by its mildness. The farmers anticipated a most luxuriant crop. The legislature had voted £1000 in order to encourage immigration to the islands, and it was thought that many of the distressed inhabitants of Madeira would be invited to labor there. The Assembly had passed a law lowering the tolls on foreign steamers carrying mails, the following standard:—For every packet exceeding six hundred tons the sum of three pounds, and for every packet not exceeding six hundred tons the sum of one pound four shillings for each time of her arrival at the islands.

Hanging in Olden Times.—A correspondent of the Boston Transcript gives the following incidents: While John Hancock was Governor of the Commonwealth, Rachel Wall was hung in Boston for highway robbery. Her offence consisted in twitching from the head of another female a bonnet, worth perhaps seventy-five cents, and running off with it. The most urgent applications for her pardon were unsuccessful. I mention this not to the disparagement of the Governor. He doubtless acted from a sense of duty—thinking it best for the community that he laws of the land however frightfully severe, while they were laws—should be executed. A lad of 18 years of age was hung in Salem for arson, during the administration of Governor Strong, similar appeals in his favor being considered and over-ruled. Yet the intelligence and the humanity, alike of the Executive and of the Council, notwithstanding the result arrived at in both these instances, were unquestionable.

Within the same period, a gentleman of this city saw a girl of 17 hung in London for stealing a silver cream pitcher. Edward Vaile drown was hung in Boston for burglary committed in the house of Captain Osias Goodwin, in Courier street, and stealing therefrom sundry articles. I once owned a set of the Old Bailey Trials, (1775, 1825,) embraced in a series of perhaps 58 quarto volumes. The earliest of these volumes containing the details of the trial of the unfortunate Dr. Dodd, for forgery, whose touching appeal for mercy, here recorded, was fruitlessly enforced by the splendid eloquence of Johnson. In a later volume, long after the commencement of the present century, eight separate capital convictions are recorded as one day's job of a single tribunal, the culprits being all boys and girls between the ages of ten and sixteen, and their offences petty thefts.

One case I remember of peculiar judicial atrocity. A young girl of 17 was indicted for stealing a roll of ribbon worth three shillings. The prosecutor's testimony was to this effect: The prisoner came into my shop and bought some ribbon. I saw her secrete this piece also. I personally knew her, and was on the most friendly and sociable terms with her. When she left the shop I accompanied her, and offered her my arm, which she accepted. We chatted together. As we reached the corner of a street leading to the Bow street office, I turned toward it. She said she was going in another direction, and bade me good morning; I said to her, 'No! you are going with me!' I saw you steal a piece of my ribbon!' She immediately implored me for God's sake to overlook it, and restored to me the articles. I said to her that I had lost many things in this way, and was resolved to make her an example. that I was determined to have her life!' and he got it. I can never forget how my blood boiled as I read the testimony of this cold-hearted wretch. In view of the judgment of a merciful God, far rather, it seemed to me, would I have been in the place of that poor, frail, erring girl, even on the scaffold, than in the place of her heartless accuser.

I rose from the perusal of these volumes, horror-struck with the continuous record of unconceivable legal cruelty. It appears to me that the 70,000 hangings in the reign of Henry VIII. were matched by an equally long list of persons condemned to be hung in the reign of George III. Since this time, much has been done in England by Romilly, Brougham, Mackintosh and Sidney Smith, and as much—perhaps more—by kindred philanthropists on this side of the Atlantic.

A Curious Story.—The London correspondent of the New York Times relates the following bit of marvellous history:

The "Tichborne Dole" as it is called, is an annual act of charity—a "dole" of bread distributed to all who should apply for it on the Feast of the Annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary. The history of this is curious. The Tichborne date their possession of the present patrimony, the manor, so far back as 200 years before the conquest. The Lady Mabella, when aged and very infirm, and lying on her death-bed, besought her husband to grant her the means of leaving the charitable bequest, the "dole" of bread, as above stated. He granted it, and with a very liberal (?)—spirit considering her situation, promised the produce of as much land as she could go over in the vicinity of the park, while a certain brand or billet was burning. The venerable dame, however, ordered her attendants to convey her to the corner of the park, where, being deposited on the ground, she seemed to receive a renovation of strength, and, to the surprise of her anxious and wearing lord, who began to wonder where this pilgrimage might end, she crawled around some twenty-three rich and goodly acres! She was then conveyed back to her bed, which she had not previously left for some years, and the family having been assembled, she predicted that as long as the "dole" was continued they would prosper, but left her malediction on any of her descendants who should discontinue or divert it. When that should happen, she said, the old house would fall, and the family name would become extinct from the failure of heirs male; and that this would be foretold by a generation of seven sons being followed immediately after by a generation of seven daughters and no son. The custom was kept up for several centuries; but about the middle of the last century it began to be abused. All the vagabonds and gipseys assembled there about the time, pilfering throughout the neighborhood, until the gentry and magistrates complained, and the custom was discontinued in 1796, having been kept up from the reign of Henry II. Now comes the strange part of the story. The baronet of the day had seven sons; and when he was succeeded by the eldest son, he had seven daughters; and the prophecy has now been fulfilled by the change of the name of the family to that of Doughty, by the will of the last possessor.

Jackson, the "American Deer," beat Frost, the English "Stag," at a foot race near London recently. Jackson ran five miles in twenty-six minutes.

Translated from the Courrier des Etats Unis

A gentleman was seen making long visits in the palace of the Champs Elysees, but it was not in examining the productions of universal industry, nor in gather up the amusing incidents which are always taking place in the crowd. This eccentric person is well known by the frequenters of the Boulevard des Italiens, as a dandy of five and thirty, the inheritor of a properly producing an income of ten thousand francs, and who, having nothing to do, and possessing a sensitive heart made up his mind to marry. He was smitten with the idea, but he had his fears. Fooling the bills was what alarmed him. The enormous expense which women of the present day lavish upon their toilet, caused him a legitimate terror. Where should he find a young person modest in her tastes who would resist the ruinous temptations to dress? How should he discover this rare merit? How, judge of her sincerity through the flattering appearances that marriageable young ladies know so well how to assume when they are in the presence of a bachelor?

The exhibition of industry seemed to him to be a good occasion and an excellent field to make this trial. To the palace in the Champs Elysees he went there to make his observations, which he kept up day after day.

He was seen stationed beside the cases in which were exposed the wonders of the jeweller's art, or posted in the quarter where the cashmeres are exposed. Sometimes he was found near the rich laces, and sometimes in the gallery where the Lyons silks displayed their magnificence.

Young ladies who did not know they were watched, expressed frankly their impressions and their wishes before these wonderful and splendid articles. "Oh, what beautiful diamonds, and how fortunate one would be who could marry and have such," they cried. "Oh, what admirable cashmeres; I will have one like that in my corbeille, and one like that!" "But just look at this, aunt!" "Oh, magnificent, I will have that too!" "That makes three." "Ah, well, we have not got half through the list; a husband who knows how to live, could he do less than put six cashmeres into the corbeille?"

Thousands of young ladies expressing themselves thus, showing their covetousness, their vanity, their exaction, their coquetry, came before him, and every evening as he quitted his post, pensive and melancholy he said, with a sigh:

"They are all the same, I must still remain a bachelor." Every day the sad truth became more evident to him, which he bewailed in some thing like these words:

"At the present time in Paris a gallant man who has only ten thousand francs income is no rich enough to marry. He must elect between celibacy and ruin."

But he was wrong to be so absolute in his despair, and to include all the marriageable ladies in the circle of his reprobation. There are exceptions, at least there was one.

After three months distressing trial the despairing bachelor saw a young lady pass near the diamond case who only threw upon the jewelry a disdainful glance. He followed her to the cashmeres, she barely threw upon them a careless look. Laces stretched out like nets did not detain her a single minute. Rich silk stuffs found her indifferent, she did not honor them with a glance. But on the other hand this extraordinary young person stopped a long time before the household utensils; examined them carefully, and made, to her mother who accompanied her, very sensible observations upon the advantages of those various objects, and the economy which would arise from their use.

The bachelor, enchanted and ravished, followed this admirable young lady—he did not breathe freely until he learned she was unmarried. He asked her hand, offered her his ten thousand—was accepted, and will everlastingly bless the universal exhibition—at least he hopes to. [Romance of the Paris Exhibition.

The Passenger Ship Law.—Among its department news the Washington Union of the 9th publishes the following from the Attorney General's office:

The act of March 3, 1855, regulating the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels, and imposing penalties and punishment for contravention, is made applicable to ships abroad in sixty days in Europe, and six months in other parts of the world; and requires notice of the act to be given in all foreign ports through the Department of State.

Held: that when such notice had failed to be given in such foreign port, and the owner or master of a vessel had thus unconsciously offended, it was proper case for remission of forfeiture and for pardon of the master.

From Terrebonne.—The Thibodaux Minerva of Saturday last states that much sickness prevails in that portion of the parish of Terrebonne lying contiguous to Lafourche, but it had not been very fatal. The Minerva has also the following further account of the effects of the recent terrible storm in that region:

In our issue of Saturday last we referred briefly to a storm which passed over the parish of Terrebonne on Friday, the 5th inst., blowing down the sugar house of Mrs. Pierce, and the killing the child of Dr Jennings, and reports of others being wounded. We have since learned that Mr. Joseph Toups, living on Little Caillou, had his house blown down and three of his children instantly killed, and himself and wife severely wounded, Mrs. T. having since died. Mrs. Pierce, her eldest son, and a servant girl were also severely wounded, but we are happy to say are not dangerously so.

Mechanical Skill of Insects.—In a paragraph on insects, the other day, we alluded to the wonderful instinct and mechanical skill with which the insect tribes are endowed. Every book on entomology is full of illustrations of those; but the observant man and woman need not go to books for examples of the wonderful intelligence of insects and the curious adaptation of means to ends which they so often display. Every person who has a garden, a tree, even a shrub or two, may study entomology—may learn something of insect life and skill.

We have proof of this in a little twig which lies before us as we write this. It is a little insect's summer house, his rosewood summer house. Externally it resembles at knot or wart, and is of the size of a large chestnut. It formed the extremity of a small branch of a rosebush and was arranged for the accommodation and support of a family of ten or a dozen insect children, each of which was furnished with a separate apartment, where it was supplied with the sap of the branch.

This being accomplished, the surplus sap was suffered to pass through the house to nourish two twigs which grew out of the wart, and acted as drains to carry off the superfluous liquid. On cutting open this excrescence, a number of living white maggots were found, each occupying his separate apartment, all which apartments ran longitudinally from the branch from which they derived their support.

This little knot or wart was externally quite hard, as much so at least as the wood of the limb on which it grew, and formed the outward extremity of the limb, the twigs growing out of both turning backward towards the trunk of the bush.

On Friday, the 5th inst, an Englishman named John Wilson was executed in the Boston jail yard, for murder.

A Boston gentleman has patented an apparatus for generating gas from a new material. The material consists simply of zinc and hydro chloric acid, which is effected without the application of external heat, and by mere chemical action. It yields a gas of great purity and brilliancy, as compared with the coal gas, the same quantity yielding twice the illuminating power. The whole apparatus is contained in a cylinder three feet in height and sixteen inches in diameter. There are no weights to wind, and the pressure, which is always equal, is adjusted by itself. One of the main advantages is, that the gas can be made very cheaply.

The extraordinary expedition which has characterized the transmission of mail matter from the North-east for a few days past, is partly accounted for by the following paragraph from the Charleston Courier:

The mail between New York and Washington is now declared over night at Baltimore, thus making twenty-four hours for the transit of papers and correspondence between the cities. It is an extraordinary and inexplicable state of things, which, we cannot doubt, will at once be remedied.

The Fever.—In Vicksburg a slight frost has been experienced and the fever has almost entirely ceased. The Jackson Flag of the 10th inst. says:

It affords us great pleasure to say that out of from 10 to 20 cases that have been in our place there have only 11 deaths as yet. We notice on the streets quite a number that have recovered from the disease and are looking well, most of them only having very slight attacks.

The Vicksburg Whig says of the fever in Benton:

The disease has run its course—the sick are recovering and no new cases. We learn there have been 76 to 80 deaths, out of a population under 600.

The Female Orphan Asylum in Savannah, Georgia, was nearly destroyed by fire on the 7th inst.

A recent letter from Westport to the St Louis Republican states that the Shawnee and Miama Indians have refused to take their "half pay." It is the policy of the Government to send the Indians about half their stipulated pay in the fall and the rest in the spring. The treaty made between them and the United States Government, they say, requires all to be paid down at once. They grumbled last year at the policy of Uncle Sam—this year they refuse to take any, because they get all. The more intelligent of the Shawnees are telling the ignorant portion of them, that the Government has broken the bargain first, and that they can now take their land back.

The President has appointed James M. Love Judge of the U. S. District Court in Iowa, and Joshua Pierce, Jr., of Portland, Maine, Secretary of Legation at St. Petersburg.

The father of Tuckerman, the Boston defaulter, was well known as a genial man, with a smile and a pleasant word for every one. Since the news respecting his son's swindling transaction was made known, all joyful expression left his face, and stolid lastiness—his eye fixed on vacancy, and his ghastly, pallid color, all showed that deep grief had taken possession of him. Some ten days since, without any marked cause, he died from shame—the victim of his sin. There may have been no rupture of the cardiac organ, but the word of recognizes it as a broken heart. If the sin is unmarked by the thoughts of the orphans and widows he has wronged, will he be touched by the particular results of his wide wrong-doing.

The parents of Baron St. Andre, late French Consul at Philadelphia, who was killed in the Burlington disaster, have commenced a suit for damages against the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company, in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. Whether he himself, one of the injured in the same accident, has also commenced suit.

A French war steamer, the Grandeur, said to be one of the largest in the French Navy, arrived at Gallipoli from Guadeloupe, a few days ago.

On the 3d inst. a shocking affair occurred in Brooklyn. Mr John Lewis, a daguerreotypist, being sick with fever, became delirious, and jumping out of bed made for the window, when his wife, a small, delicate woman, seized hold of him and endeavored to hold him back; but he suddenly leaped through the sash, and both man and woman were dashed upon the pavement below a distance of about twenty-five feet. The woman struck her head against the door-step, and was instantly killed. The man was seriously injured.

A dispatch of the 4th inst. from Pottsville, Pa., says:

A most frightful explosion occurred near Minersville today in the mines of Gideon Bast, on Wolf creek. It is reported that five persons have been killed and many others wounded. The particulars have not yet been received.

Quite a number of distinguished individuals have visited Washington recently to ascertain what disposition is to be made of the three million dollars to be paid by our Government to Mexican and American capitalists, on ratification of the Gadsden treaty, which has been negotiated by Santa Anna. The Secretary of State, it is understood, has decided that the assignments of Santa Anna cannot be recognized, and that the three million must be paid to the existing government of Mexico.

The Democrats of Salem, Mass., met on the 3d inst. and appointed delegates to the State Convention and passed a resolution unanimously in favor of renominating President Pierce for the next term.

Another Railroad Accident.—On the morning of the 6th inst., a train on the Boston and Maine Railroad struck a cow near the city. The engine was thrown down an embankment and the cars thrown from the track. E. Abbott, of Andover, and Chas Richardson, of Gravelly Hill Express, were killed instantly; Reuben Gleason, of the Reading Express, was badly injured; the engineer escaped unhurt.

The increase of the free States of the West continues to be very large. There is not one of them which does not bid fair to become exceedingly populous. Illinois and Indiana have each over a million of inhabitants, while Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa have each over half a million. The soil in all these States is excellent and the influx of settlers rapid. In the last five years Wisconsin has added 270 000 in her population, and now has 575,000; Iowa has increased still more largely. Judging from present appearances, each of the States we have named seems likely to possess, not long hence, a population equal to that of Ohio.

We learn from a letter in the St. Peter's (Minnesota) Courier, that another desperate battle was fought on the 21st ult., between the Obijpewa and Sioux Indians, in which 77 Sioux were killed, and 17 wounded. Only 4 Chippewas were killed.

On the 8th instant, application was made in the United States District Court of Philadelphia, on the part of Jane Johnson, a former slave of Col. Wheeler, of North Carolina, asking that the writ of habeas corpus issued to Passmore Williamson to bring herself and children into court, may be quashed. John M'Read, for the petitioner, asked that the petition be filed, contending that a writ of habeas corpus must always be issued by or on behalf of the party whose liberty is restrained, and not for a party wishing to restrain another. Before the argument was completed, the court adjourned.

At the sale, the other day, of the government effects of the Memphis navy-yard, a Mr. Copeland purchased at a bargain a splendid fire proof safe. After obtaining possession of it he found that he could not find any key hole, and accordingly he advertises for instructions.

Dr. Worrell, late U. S. Consul at Montanzas, was in Washington on the 7th, seeking an interview with the State Department on the subject of the recent difficulties with the Cuban authorities, which caused him to strike his flag and leave his post. It will be remembered that the substance of dispute was whether the Consul or the Probate Tribunal of Cuba should administer upon the effects of a deceased American citizen, and that the alcalde of Matanzas, under instructions from the Captain General, removed the Consular seals which had been placed upon the property in question. No such pretensions are set up by the Cuban authorities when a citizen of France or England dies on the Island.

The New York Herald publishes the particulars of the interference by the French and English Consuls in Dominica, by which the Government of that republic was coerced into withdrawing from the treaty it had concluded with this country. A more flagrant interference with the rights of our own and a neighboring Government has never occurred in the Western Hemisphere. It offers a fine opportunity, if the statements and letters are correct, for the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine.

M. Nillus, a French mechanician, says that almost all vessels whether in wood or iron, have hitherto been constructed on a wrong principle. The greatest possible strength has been given in the sides and bottom, while the deck has been neglected. But a ship should be regarded as a great tube or box, capable of sustaining a load at its middle while supported at its ends, or conversely, of sustaining loads at each end while supported at its middle. To obtain this result with the least weight of materials, Mr Nillus says that the upper and lower parts of the vessel—otherwise the deck and the bottom—should be the strongest, instead of, as now, the slightest and weakest.

The schooner Cerro Gordo, which arrived at Philadelphia on the 4th, reported that on the 20th ult., at 3 P. M., off Doracoke, saw a large ship take for the south, and at half-past three o'clock, P. M., tacked again and stood for the northward, during a gale from the southward, and soon after struck off Hatteras Bar. She was a heavy ship, with all sail set, with white bulwarks inside and black outside, with a white streak. Three of her boats were observed to capsize, and all in them were drowned and during the night the vessel went to pieces.

A correspondent of the New York Post states that a French savant ascribes the unusual rains and atmospheric disturbances over a great part of Europe, to the prolonged and terrible cannonade in the Crimea. The same topic was recently discussed in a scientific

LATER FROM TEXAS.

BLOODY BATTLE IN MEXICO—THE MEXICANS AND INDIANS DEFEATED BY THE TEXAN RANGERS.

By the arrival on Tuesday of the steamship Louisiana, Capt Talbot, from Indianola via Galveston, we have later dates from Texas and important news from Mexico The Galveston News of Saturday last has the following paragraphs:

The health of our city continues good—no yellow fever The weather is fine, but cool, and a general quietude prevails In the retail trade there is some activity, consequent on the change of season, and the receipt of new goods, but the wholesale business is dull We are forced to believe that there is very little money in general circulation, and mechanics are looking to the arrival of country customers for brisker times

A despatch was received here on Thursday, stating that the Trinity had risen five feet at Cincinnati, and continued rising

The Houston Telegraph says the receipts of cotton at Houston this season have far exceeded the corresponding period of any previous year. The wagon transportation is totally inadequate, but the Galveston and Red River Railroad will be completed from that city to Cypress Creek, over the worst road between that place and every point tributary to it, by the first or middle of January, and thereby diminish the difficulties of transportation fully one fifth to the aggregate of the business of the place.

In an extract of the Galveston Civilian we find a letter from Capt. Callahan, in command of the expedition against the Indians, addressed to the people of Texas The letter is dated Eagle Pass, Oct 4 He narrates his movements from the time he set out up to one day after he had, in a sharp engagement on Mexican territory, defeated a large force of Indians and Mexicans Captain Callahan's force consisted of 113 men—volunteers and rangers He determined to push directly into the Mexican country and destroy the Lipan encampment, and accordingly he crossed the Rio Grande at Eagle Pass and marched directly towards the town of San Fernando, about thirty-five miles west of the river. At noon on the 8d they encamped on a small stream about ten miles from the Rio Grande, and up to this time the Mexican authorities and citizens had shown them much kindness and pretended to favor the expedition many had even offered to enlist, but fortunately were not received. The Captain thus describes the battle:

After nooning it an hour or two, we marched on toward San Fernando, beyond which were the Indian camps Having proceeded some ten miles along the highway to the city, over a widely-extended prairie, about three o'clock in the afternoon, while marching leisurely along, we descried three horsemen approaching us from a mott of timber about a mile to the northward. At first these men were not noticed, we supposing them to be Mexican herdsmen—but on their approaching within two hundred yards of us we discovered them to be Indian chieftains, ready dressed and painted for battle; and they were evidently striving to decoy us from our position Forming my men in a line along the road, I waited for the enemy to begin the battle—for by this time large numbers of them had emerged from the timber, seemingly with the intention of attacking us; they soon spread out in front of us, and to our right and left, to the amount of several hundred horsemen, and commenced to fire on us About this time one of my men fired on a chief, about two hundred yards distant, and broke a leg of his horse. Perceiving that the enemy, composed of both Indians and Mexicans, were trying to outflank us, I ordered my men to charge, which was executed in fine style, and thirty of the enemy were slain.

While making our charge the left flank of the enemy which extended for near a half mile, came in on our rear and opened on us a very severe fire, during which four of our gallant men were killed The front and right flank on which we charged, after a galling fire fled before us, leaving us in possession of the position which it was our object and determination to gain. Then we discovered that our enemy numbered some six or seven hundred, as all their footmen were concealed in the timber and had not advanced in view on the prairie My men formed in a strong position beneath the bank of a small creek, on which the enemy had been encamped, and their whole force coming up against us, we continued the battle for about three hours, when they fled in the direction of San Fernando, leaving as we heard this evening, some eighty-five killed and with the loss of one hundred wounded. This we learn from some Mexicans who were engaged in the battle, and from other sources since my report to his Excellency, the Hon E M Pease The same Mexicans have also informed me that the actual number of our enemy was seven hundred and fifty men. After retreat of the enemy, which was about dark, we supposing that they would come on us again before day, with large reinforcements we fell back to the Rio Grande, where we would be safe from any number of men and any quantity of artillery they might bring against us.

Approaching the town of Piedras Negras about sunrise, we took possession of it, and now occupy a position opposite Eagle Pass, on the west bank of the Rio Grande.

The men who were killed of my command, are W. H. Clipton and August Smith of my company Rangers. Willis Jones, of Capt Henry's company, and H R. Holland, of Capt Benton's company of Volunteers. The men wounded are John Gregory (dangerously,) of Capt. Henry's company, Capt Nat Benton, slightly, and 1st Lieut Henry B King, slightly Patton slightly, and Eustace Benton mortally, of my company.

My men rangers and volunteers, conducted themselves with commendable bravery during the entire action, with two exceptions, who ingloriously fled from the battle field and crossed the Rio Grande before they stopped.

I am now occupying the town of Piedras Negras, opposite Eagle Pass, and intend to hold the position until reinforced from the settlements The Mexicans have basely betrayed us, by pretending to favor our expedition against the Lipans and attempting to draw us into a snare at our late battle ground, which would have succeeded but for the bravery of my men against overwhelming odds

I informed the prominent men of this place this morning, that we did not come here to fight the Mexicans, but to wipe up and exterminate the Indians, and that we do not desire to fight them, although they have killed and wounded several of our best men I have told them that they must deliver up to us the Indians, otherwise the Texians will make THEM responsible for the murder of their wives and children and the depredations upon their property It is now clear that they combine with and protect the Indians. I have tried to explain to them the injustice of their course, and have advised them that we will invade their country and burn the last of their towns, if they continued to protect and fraternize with this band of outlaws, whose hands are still reeking in the blood of innocent women and children, who have recently fallen on the soil of Texas, beneath the tomahawks of relentless savages. We molested none of their property until we found them fighting side by side with the Indians, whose demoniac hands are still wet with the blood of Texian women and children. And we have since trembled nothing save what was necessary for our own support and safety. Had we supposed the Mexicans would have united with the Indians against us, we would never have crossed into their country with our number of men—but we are now here, and intend to hold a footing until something is accomplished.

The Captain makes a stirring appeal to his countrymen for assistance, and says:

We are well fortified here, with cannon for our protection, and have supplies on hand sufficient to shield us from destruction till we receive reinforcements. We have brought all our wounded with us, and they are well cared for at the hospital at Eagle Pass. Our dead shall be brought in, and receive decent interment on American soil. We are in hourly expectation of an attack from a thousand Mexicans and Indians, but we can whip them. Again, I call on you for assistance for the sake of your individual protection and that of your common country. The Indians say they are determined to kill as they go, and they cross the Rio Grande and lay our settlements in ashes almost weekly If they are not exterminated, any man may say the word, kind of stone of your kindred and friends

There will be no safety for your frontier settlements hereafter The Seminoles, Muscalegees and Lipans are all determined to scourge Texas with blood and outrage so long as they remain unchastised. We fought all these tribes yesterday, and, as we learn, the celebrated Seminole chieftain Wild Cat—

Men of the frontier come then and help us Let none come but those who will and can fight If you come, come quickly, and come well prepared

The Civilian states that Capt. Henry E. McCulloch and others are raising volunteers to join Callahan.

The Eustace Benton, spoken of above as mortally wounded, was a son of Capt Nat Benton, nephew of the Hon T H Benton.

The steamship Mexico, Capt. Lawless, arrived from Galveston on Saturday afternoon The Galveston News of Thursday last, has the following paragraphs:

We have a letter from Camp Leon, dated the 4th ult, which states that a party of twenty-one men en route for El Paso, from Red River, when encamped in a little ravine on the head of the Pecos, were attacked by a band of Comanches, on the 26th of August, and six of their number killed. The remaining fifteen escaped, some of them pretty severely wounded by arrows they having secured ten horses

The names of the killed are: Hill, of Mississippi; Larkin, of Illinois; Bayley, do; Hartwell, of Miss; Houston, of Arkansas; and Morgan, St Francis county, Ark.

We learn by letters from Huntsville that a political row occurred in that town almost three weeks ago, in which three Democrats got badly beaten by one of the opposite party One of the three, an old man named Chance, had his finger bitten by his antagonist, and mortification ensuing, he died on the 3d inst The other two have not recovered from their wounds and bruises. The melancholy incident is made a matter of amusement by some of our Democratic friends, who adduce the fatality of the bite as proof that their opponents are "rabid."

We learn that three companies of mounted riflemen are expected in our city every day. These companies will probably be stationed at Sanders Fort and on the Medina In addition to the above, we are informed that a large number of dragoons, under command of Col Johnson are on their way here, We are certainly rejoiced to be able to give the public this assurance for their future security.

A destructive rain storm occurred in Gonzales county on the 28th ult. The Inquirer, of the 6th inst, says:

Some idea of the vast quantity of water that fell may be formed from the fact that Peach Creek, ten miles below here, overflowed its banks several feet higher than ever known before The effect of this rain has been terrible on many portions of the country, particularly on Peach Creek Besides a large amount of fencing and cotton that was swept away, about sixty feet of the new bridge, which was above high-water mark, was carried off Judge Goss, near town, lost about 150,000 brick, and Capt Allen about 5,000

It is impossible to calculate the injury done the cotton crop by this rain It must be very great. Aside from what has been washed out, and the damage now being sustained from the rot, rust, etc., we hear complaints from every quarter of the ravages of the worm. Of course, so many ills following each other in such rapid succession, must necessarily cut the crop very short.

The Austin State Times says:

A number of citizens in this county have been bitten, within the last few weeks, by the copper-head, a venomous reptile which infest the mountains. A son of Capt Grumbles was severely bitten last week, and another man by the name of Thomas was for several days in imminent danger from the same cause. It is said by those familiar with snakeology, that these vipers have been driven from the prairies and the mountains, in consequence of the dryness of the season, and that they seek the river banks in search of water. It is plausible Certainly they have never been seen here in such abundance before.

The San Antonio Texan states that Major Neighbors, the Indian agent, has sent an express to the effect that there is a great want of protection from the Indians in the upper country. The Texan says:

We are informed, that with probably one exception at Fort Davis, there are no mounted soldiers on our frontier from the Red River to the Rio Grande, a distance of about one thousand miles! At Fort Chadbourn there are only soldiers enough to act as guard for obtaining water, forage, etc.

Gov Pease and Gen Smith are both in our city and several petitions are in circulation for the selection of captains for ranging companies, and we hope soon to hear of several being formed.

WHY WE ARE FRIENDLY TO THE CZAR.—The Loudon Times accounts for American sympathy with the Russian cause in the following manner:

Putting aside the old feeling towards England, the positive sympathy for Russia rests only on some supposed analogies between her position and their own. Russia is a new country; she is a great one, and will be a greater; she has an immense territory, which she is peopling, while population in Western Europe is stationary or actually decreases. She has a decaying State on her Southern boundary, of which she has taken much and wants more. A few years ago the Americans seized a province of their weak neighbor, an alliance of France and England was projected, which, it carried out, would have involved the Union in a long and dangerous struggle The Russians occupied a similarly situated territory; the alliance was completed, is most powerful, and may last to interfere in the affairs of trans-Atlantic Turkey We believe such ideas as these influence a large class of American politicians, but they are obviously too imaginary to be the cause of more than pamphlets and orations Russia may be sure that we have not a Polish ally on our side, for an earnest enemy in the great community we have founded

The Times might also have informed its readers that Americans could not be expected to regard with favor an alliance whose first fruits had been interference in their concerns, and a direct threat of enforcing the balance of power principle in the Western hemisphere.

The Bobdi gardens behind the Pitti Palace are nearly an earthly paradise. They extend up the steep hill quite to the walls of the city, and are laid out in terraces green level spaces winding walks and broad alleys, set with cypress, ilex, laurustine and laurel, and everywhere statues line or terminate the avenues and grottoes through the shade Impenetrable walls of verdure at least twenty feet high, correctly clipped, give the avenues a delightfully cool and sequestered character Overhead the branches of the trees are interlaced into a continuous bower, under which one may walk half a mile without exposure to the sun Twice a week the Florentines are allowed to visit these grounds for recreation. Children climb the green declivities or gambol upon the grass under the windows of the palace without fear of the plumed and bolted knights appointed to guard the place Often I plunge into the thickets of Bobdi, and always with new refreshment and delight. Of such enjoyment one never grows weary When shall we have in America such places? Florence, in the Vascine and Boboli gardens, has not less than a thousand acres of public recreation Some of our American cities, with twice the population, have hardly a single acre. Around our cities are fine broad spaces reserved for speculation, but not for embellishment They are cut up and put into the pocket Such facts justify the charge commonly made abroad that the dollar is the thing we value most This of course is not true, and we suffer unjustly, for the Americans do not love the dollar for itself a bit more than any other people the fault is only in a too complete absorption in its pursuit [Providence Journal; Florence Correspondence.

A German lady named Busson, the mother of a small child, committed suicide in St Louis, a few days ago, by taking arsenic. She repented her rashness when too late. Cause attributed to domestic difficulties

GEN ALVAREZ, PRESIDENT

The steamship Orizaba, Capt Forbes, arrived from Vera Cruz yesterday afternoon, having been detained in that port until the 9th by a norther, which prevailed during the passage with some violence.

The American bark Wildfire, Capt. Campbell, was in port to sail for New York.

By this arrival we have received dates from Vera Cruz to the 7th and from the city of Mexico to the 4th

The most important item of news is the elevation of General Juan Alvarez, Provisional President of the Republic, which occurred at Cuernavaca on the 11th inst. The election was made by the representatives of the States, in accordance with previous arrangements The following is the despatch received by the Governor of the Department of Vera Cruz announcing the election:

Mexico, October 5, 1855.—Gen. Alvarez has been elected President by sixteen votes, against three for Ocampo, three for Comonfort and one for Vidaurri. Ocampo is named Chief of the Cabinet.

Alvarez reached Cuernavaca on the 30th ult, accompanied by his two sons, Diego and Encarnacion, and about 5000 troops of his army The streets of the town were adorned with flowers and arches, and the most joyous festivities celebrated his arrival A letter states that his march for eight days had been a continual ovation

A difficulty had occurred between Gen Minon, provisional Governor of the District of Mexico, and Gen La Vega, commander of the forces of that department In virtue of his office the former had busied himself with the formation and organization of the militia, or National Guard, but was opposed in his labors by La Vega, who finally resigned his office of General in Chief, placing it in the hands of Gen. Jarero Being pressed by solicitations from every quarter, however, he resumed the command, naming Don E Lopez Secretary of the District Gen. Minon then separated himself from the Government of the District, and on the 30th ult., set out for Cuernavaca. The affair caused much excitement.

Rumors had been propagated that negotiations were going on for the establishment of an American protectorate over Mexico They were indignantly contradicted by the chiefs of the revolution, including Vidaurri, who, in his denial, alluded to the frequent offers of aid which had been made him by Americans, and which he invariably refused. Our Minister, Mr Gadsden, had also published a letter in El Siglo, solemnly denying that any propositions bearing the character of an alliance or protectorate, had been made or meditated by the United States, and stating that the diplomatic relations of his government with that of Santa Anna were suspended when that personage retired, and no occasion had yet arisen to have them renewed.

Ex Minister Olasagarre had been apprehended, by order of Alvarez, and conducted to Cuernavaca. El Heraldo says that this gentleman, and Senor Cansero, were the only two Ministers who did not flee or hide themselves upon the fall of Santa Anna. He visited the capital purposely, to reply to whatever charges might be made against him. With the people, Olasagarre appears to have been popular, for when the wrath of the people turned against the officials of Santa Anna's government, the house in which he resided was spared, while those of the others were destroyed.

The difficulties in San Luis Potosi had terminated. On the 20th ult, Senor Haro, although holding, in conformity with the plan of San Luis, the faculty of naming the Governor of the Department, renounced that attribute, devolving it upon the people, and issued a decree providing for an election by the popular voice. The election took place, and of seven candidates Senor Joaquin Lopez Hermosa was chosen by a large majority over all the others.

A company had been formed for the establishment of a new line of diligences between Vera Cruz and the City of Mexico.

The papers have accounts of many depredations recently committed by the Apache Indians in Sonora.

INGENIOUS THEFT FROM LETTERS.—Robberies of bank notes and securities contained in letters have long been frequent in the post office of Prussia, but it was always easy to see, by the state of the seal or by rents in the paper, that the letters had been opened. Recently, however, several merchants of Berlin received letters which had contained treasury bills, but which bills had been extracted with such skill as to leave not the slightest trace on the letters capable of being detected by the most practised eye The police, having unlike investigations, arrested, a few days ago a letter-carrier to whom suspicion pointed, and they found on him a large sum of treasury bills, for the possession of which he could not account. He at last confessed that he had taken them from letters; but for a long time he would not say how he had contrived to do so without leaving the slightest trace behind At length he stated that he had done it by means of a long needle, which he introduced into the letter and stuck into the folds of the thin paper inside He then turned the needle round and round, carrying the paper, with it, until he had brought the whole into the form of a small roll, and then he had no great difficulty in extricating the paper from the letter on the needle. He had been committed for trial. [Galignani.

CORRUPTION.—We yesterday witnessed the effect of corruption upon plates of iron, producing results that should be widely known. It was at the War Department. A plate, three inches long and four broad, so thin that, supported only at its ends, it would bend of its own weight, corrugated; sustain a weight of six hundred pounds; as was proved by testing by its side a corrugated plate of precisely similar weight and dimensions attached to it by a string The Quartermaster's department are extensively adopting corrugated iron for camp utensils, etc., instead of wood, iron, or other metals, prepared (shaped) in any other way. Thus, a camp bedstead has been adopted which is sufficiently strong and firm for all army purposes, though not weighing more than fifty pounds—quite as strong and firm as the army bedsteads now being sent from London to the Crimea, which weigh one hundred and fifty pounds each.

A corrugated iron water-tight wagon body, that floats from two thousand to two thousand five hundred pounds of freight, besides the running gear, and weighs less than a wooden wagon body to carry the same freight, has also been adopted into the service of the United States, besides other articles of the same material. These facts show that, living in an age of progress, those entrusted with the Quartermaster's department of the army of the United States are making the most for their charge, of the steady advance of their countrymen in improvements in the useful arts.—[Washington Star

THE FEVER AT NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH. The Washington Union, of Tuesday last, says:

Dr McFarlane, of New Orleans, who has rendered such efficient and faithful service at Norfolk, arrived in this city on Sunday morning last He brings the gratifying intelligence that the yellow fever has ceased to exist as an epidemic both in Norfolk and Portsmouth, and that the physicians from abroad who have rendered such heroic service during the pestilence had been notified that their aid could happily be dispensed with after the 1st of October Dr McFarlane informs us that more cases of black vomit fell under his observation in Norfolk than he witnessed during the whole of his long practice in New Orleans. Making the necessary allowance for the difference in population, he is of opinion that the yellow fever destroyed in Norfolk were much larger than was ever known during the most fatal year in New Orleans The mortality of its type is without a parallel in this country

THE FEVER IN VICKSBURG.—The Whig, of Thursday last says:

[illegible] the week ending on yesterday at 6 o'clock, p m, [illegible] in the county of Carroll compared with the report of the week preceding, the number of deaths for last week being only twenty-three in all, chiefly from the fever, the remaining nineteen of which were of yellow fever and four of other diseases From the City Hospital there were only three burials during last week two from yellow fever In all he recollected that for the previous week ending at noon the 1st of October the Sexton's report showed twenty-six burials from city and county and three from City Hospital

Honor to an American Officer.

We learn that the Russian Minister yesterday visited on Lieutenant MAURY, at the National Observatory, to deliver, by command of his Government, an autograph letter from the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE, who, it will be remembered, is the Commander-in-Chief of the Russian Navy This letter is written in French, but, under the belief that many of our readers will derive as much pleasure from its perusal as we have done, we give publicity to a translation of it:

St Petersburg, December 10, (22,) 1854.

To Lieutenant MAURY:

Sir—It is now a long time since the eminent scientific works for which navigators of every nation are indebted to your zeal and your talents, attracted my attention. Recently again the Imperial ships sent to the Brussels Conference have rendered me a complete report in which I have taken the most lively interest I should rejoice to present you with a testimonial of my esteem; but knowing the laws of your country which do not permit you to accept any thing from foreign princes, I must confine myself to the expression of my sentiments. Happy are we realized as you are worthy; and in my particularity I may say to you that you do honor to the profession to which you belong as well as to the great nation which you have the honor to serve

Receive, sir, the assurances of my good will and esteem, CONSTANTINE.

This is a high but deserved compliment to Lieut. MAURY, who, we feel well convinced, has been relieved from active duty in the Navy, that he may be permanently retained in his present exalted and responsible position as Chief of the National Observatory, where his services in the cause of science and nautical improvement will be much more important and valuable to his country and the world than they would probably prove, however eminent they might be, in any other position [National Intelligencer.

BARGAINING ON SUNDAY.—A Scotch paper has the following account of the mode by which business may be transacted on Sundry, and no harm done:

Long before there was any word of disruption, and when the Church of Scotland was deemed by those who have since seceded from her communion as the glory of the whole earth, the following conversation ensued between his reverence and one of the hearers in the rural parish, on a Sunday forenoon, immediately after divine service:

"Weel John, there's a fine day."

"It is that, sir," was the reply.

"That's a fine pony you have got, John"

"No caunier or better behaved creature in the parish, savin' yerself," replied Hodge.

"If it had not been Sunday," said the man of Scripture, "I would have been inquiring the price of it."

"Deed, sir," replied the owner of the beast, "if it hadna been Sunday, as ye say, I would hae said 'eight poonds.'"

"Very weel, sir. That's a bonny stack o' hay ye hae i' yard—I wouldna be na wanr o' a puckle o' it; and it hadna been the day it is I would have speered the price of it, too"

"I think the more of you for that, John, as it is just the way with myself, for had it not been this hallowed day, I would have said nine pence per stone I might likewise have asked a number of questions—such as how the market went yesterday in Aribroath, and what are you asking for your Ayreshire bull calf, and so on."

"Deed ay, sir; but as we canna be tellin' that wheat raised a shillin', and nits fifteen pence the quarter, on sic a day as this, an' it would be just us ill sayin' that the bit cauffo's with thirty shillins till anybody."

"Guid day, John."

"Guid day, sir," was then passed, and thus ended the above equivocal reverence for the Sabbath, although the conversation ended to the mutual worldly satisfaction of both parties

The census of the State of New York, recently taken, exhibits an aggregate population of 3,382,140, being an increase of 215,105 over the census of 1850 A majority of the cities, especially New York, Brooklyn, Buffalo, Albany, Rochester and Utica, show a very fair increase of population. In two only is there a decrease, viz: In the small towns of Auburn and Schenectady.

☞ We seldom recommend a manufactured medicine, believing that, in most cases, Nature herself perfects a cure more rapidly and effectually than can be accomplished by the vegetables and minerals of medical science. But on the matter of dyspepsia, there are common ailments around us, which very often defy all the efforts of nature to create a healthy action of the digestive organs, and it not unfrequently happens that even those suffer for years, diseased both in body and mind, from indigestion and its kindred ills. To such, HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, prepared by Dr C M Jackson, is truly a most valuable preparation. It contains no alcohol, giving a healthy action to the stomach, and will be found highly serviceable at all seasons, but especially during the spring. Dyspeptics can only be cured by a patient persevering course of treatment, and to such we would recommend an application to the Depot of Hoofland's German Bitters, 120 Arch street, Philadelphia. We invite the special attention of parents and guardians to the advantages here offered to young men desirous of a finished collegiate or business education. The location of the college, in a quiet valley, ten miles from a town—the freedom, consequently, from temptation to vice—the full and thorough course of study—the experience and ability of the Faculty—the wholesome disciplines—the facilities for lectures all ored by ample apparatus, libraries and cabinets, and, withal, the cheapness of terms and healthiness of position, cannot fail to secure to this college, as heretofore, a liberal patronage.

Ministerial Distribution.

The Methodist itinerancy, which by mutual consent and sacrifice of clergy and laity puts the pastors and the parishes at the disposal of a responsible Episcopacy, assisted by competent counsellors, has been much inveighed against, in certain quarters. True, the system, like everything in this disjointed world, has its imperfections. It grew up providentially and became fixed, as it now is, by experience of its goodness.

It is efficient for spreading the Gospel. The heart throws vital energy to the extremities. Its amount of ministerial talent given, our system works it to best advantage. It is distributive and catholic in supply. The motto is "Laborers where they are wanted, and the right men for the right places."

The manner of this distribution presents the appearance of change; but it is change by rule and not caprice. The liabilities of ministerial demoralization are lessened. Biddings and bargainings, rivalry and intrigue, electioneering and jealousy—very worldly looking things, even in church matters—are avoided.

The Christian Witness and Church Advocate, Oct. 5, an Episcopal paper, uses this language:

"We have of late heard much of the want of ministers, and have been urged to offer up special prayer that the Lord would send forth more laborers into his vineyard. There can be no question that there are many churches vacant, and many inviting fields unoccupied. But is it a fact that the number of our clergy is insufficient to meet the present demand? Not, we are sorry to say, to the extent which many think. While so many churches are vacant, and so many fields remain unoccupied, there are very many clergymen unemployed, at least, so far as ministerial duties are concerned. We do not now speak of the aged and infirm, who are unable longer to labor, but we speak of men, who are perfectly able to endure all the toils and hardships of ministerial life. But where are the clergymen, and why is it that they are unemployed? By a reference to the published list of our clergy, it will be found that a very large number are located in a few of our principal cities. For instance, in New York, there are 80; in Brooklyn, 28; in Philadelphia, 60; in Boston, 22; in Baltimore, 24; in Charleston, 21; making a total of 241, in six cities. Of these, many are not engaged in the work of the ministry at all, and many more are but partially employed. Why is this? It is not that situations are wanting; it is not that there is not a disposition on the part of parishes to employ clergymen. Very far from it—situations are numerous, and the calls from vacant parishes are importunate. Our Bishops will testify to the unceasing demand upon them to supply ministers, and their utter inability to do it. Again we ask, why are so many clergymen unemployed? We will try to answer in part this question, and in doing so, we shall speak plainly, but we trust, not unkindly.

"And first, we are constrained to say, that we believe the clergy are most seriously at fault, in this matter. We believe that they have contributed very much to bring about this state of things. They profess to be ready and willing to work, but say they can find nothing to do—that no parishes will call them. Now, if the Lord calls a man to the ministry, is it to be supposed that He will leave him without anything to do? The question answers itself."

Discussing this serious subject, the Witness touches an abuse with an honest hand:

"We refer to the practice of inviting calls from vacant Churches. It may sound ungracious to use such languages, but it is only expressing, in plain English, what is constantly taking place. Let a Church become vacant, and at once every kind of influence is brought to bear to secure a call for this, that, or the other person. Friends are spoken to, letters are written, visits are made, in fine, everything is done to secure the desired end. Were this confined to the parishes alone, it would not be so bad; but the clergy allow themselves to be parties to these proceedings. They become candidates for the vacant post, and resort to many things calculated to lower the sacred office, and injure themselves in the estimation of the people. In all this they seem to forget that the Lord has anything to do in the matter; that his will has as much to be sought in a call to a parish, as in anything else. How can it be expected that his blessing will attend any such proceedings? Should we not rather look for his displeasure?"

After all, settled pastorates are the exception even with those holding to the theory. A comparative view will show a change in other churches as well as the Methodist, with this difference: Ours are according to theory, theirs against it. With us, they occur quietly, with other than the cost of much friction. Nature and grace will vary their demands. Your stereotype plan must yield. Our Presbyterian, and Congregational and Baptist exchanges abound with deprecations: Still, their pastorates change. The Puritan Recorder sharply rebukes ministers with one foot on the ground and the other in the stirrup, looking out for new calls. An Episcopal organ puts down, as the bane of the church, a floating body of place seekers, in gown and surplice.

A writer in the Southern Episcopalian, of October, cries "church people" for the up country:

"Indeed, all the upper part of South Carolina, so far as we are concerned, as a Church, is missionary ground, as much so as Texas or Oregon: I need not say it is much more hopeful ground: other churches are at work upon it: they are doing their duty; but our church lingers, in her energy and grace, upon the sea-board. It is time she should wake up, and establish herself, and do her duty, and by her ministry, preach the Gospel, in this growing part of the State."

Bishop Elliott, of Georgia, has had extensive opportunities for forming a judgment of the evils resulting from the want of a counter check to the capriciousness of both pastors and people; and his sentiments are worthy of serious attention.

With trifling exception he says: "Our clergy come and go as they please—leave fields of labor to which they are admirably adapted, to run to others in which complete failure awaits them."

In this complaint he is not alone: "There is no Bishop in the Church, who does not feel this to be a most serious evil, one over which he is called constantly to lament, and for which he can find no remedy."

Association with Romanists, on the score of efficiency, we have no objection to, but take it as a compliment rather. Speaking of the "defects in the system of the Church," (Episcopal) Bishop E. remarks:

"Another difficulty which lies in the way of the advancement of the Church is the little control which the Bishop has over the movements of the clergy. In both the most efficient ecclesiastical bodies of the world, the Roman and the Methodist Churches, the control over the position and movement of the clergy is almost absolute. The ministry of those churches are placed and kept in fields of labor, not according to their own fancy or their own calculations, but according to the view which the eye of authority takes of their adaptedness to those fields."

These reflections are not unseasonable. The practical workings of the itinerant system are passing in review at Conference sessions. Look at a list of appointments, a score of which will, in the next few months, be published, and see how the whole country is covered: see how the ministry is scattered abroad, that is to scatter abroad the word. From mountain range to coast line they spread out: their business, to spread scriptural holiness over these lands. No congestion at metropolitan points: no lingering of the Church in her grace and energy, on the luxurious seaboard, while the interior, even of old States, is turned out to grass.

This grand Catholic distribution is effected at the cost of some concession of individual rights. Has there ever been found out a better plan? The evils others complain of, as without remedy under their ecclesiastical system, approve it. Its fruits approve it.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE ALABAMA COLLEGE, OR COLLEGES?

Mr. Editor—The question itself is of more or less importance, as it relates to a higher or lower standard of educational ideas. If it should be judged better to multiply the number of second rate institutions and so diffuse more widely the means of common education, than to build up one Methodist College of superiour character—we ought by all means to establish two Colleges. If, however, it should be thought that our supply of second rate institutions is quite equal to the demands of the church and country for that sort of education which they impart, and that beyond their power of supply, there has arisen a demand, important and urgent for a higher grade of scholarship than has hitherto been contemplated by our scheme, then it will be wisdom for us to unite, and move forward with a high purpose to establish and endow a COLLEGE with facilities equal to any in the world. Some glimmerings of this idea have shone upon the history of our connexion. Transylvania shot across our horizon like a comet and disappeared. It has all along been the animus of the church to elevate and lead forward the popular mind to the hights of this sublime achievement. Evidently we are nearing the coast of this continental enterprise. The drift-wood is all setting in to this one idea. A first class College we are soon destined to have. Southern Methodism is gathering up her energies for an effort which is destined to carry the church forward centuries in advance of our former ideas of education.

It is another question whether any one Conference shall adventure upon this scheme? and still another whether if any one, Alabama is that one? Virginia may already be in advance of all others, in this noble purpose. The writer of this communication has reason to believe that the great hearted and far seeing President of Randolph Macon College is now considering a plan by which that institution shall be expanded into this first rate College. It will probably require a million of dollars—and make its appeal to all the Conferences and to the rich men of the church to erect one monument of liberality in this age—which shall evince its appreciation of the superior claims of religious education. "A million of dollars!" Certainly and why not? It would be about one hundred thousand dollars to Alabama—only one hundred thousand. A contribution of one thousand each, by one hundred men, would raise her proportion for this great work. I throw out this suggestion for the statesmen of the church. The next General Conference ought to be able to act definitely upon the subject.

It seems to me that Alabama would do well to consider whether a contribution of one or two hundred thousand dollars to such an Institution would not be worth more to the common cause than so much appropriated to building up inferior Colleges. As she has no College and is central what hinders that she should go before the next General Conference two hundred thousand dollars in hand, and ask that The College be located in her borders? And even if the location should be in a different State, would not one such College as I have indicated equal to the best University in Europe, be worth more to the Church now, than twenty inferior institutions?

This ought to be an offering to Christ without spot or blemish. Let no selfishness or sectionalism mar this work. Let the different Conferences in the fear of God, as one man, make these offerings and leave the question of location to the General Conference, or leave it to a committee of the Bishops, who "watch for our souls," and who would decide it without partiality, and with reference alone to the interests of the Kingdom of Christ.

I may be over sanguine—I read over the history of the past—but I have faith that God will put it into the hearts of his people to achieve this sublime work and that contributions will not have to be pumped up from the bottom of the sea, but will roll in upon it fixing the location of our college at Greensboro' was in perfect conformity with the instructions received from us as a Conference. We should lay aside all personal and local predilections, and influenced by an aim nobler than such as may link itself with localities, unite our hearts and purses in building up a college that will shed renown on its projectors, and transmit its blessings to posterity—in establishing one college and one college only.

Indeed, I am unable to see how we can, as a Conference, in connection with the present college movement, the basis of which is the resolutions we adopted at Talladega, even entertain a motion to establish two colleges without making ourselves vulnerable to the charge of duplicity, while to resolve on establishing two, would in all probability result in endless litigation with the subscribers to the one already determined by the Board of Commission.

Let me beg you to take a summary glance at the attitude we, as a Conference, sustain to the party subscribing for the erection of a male college in the bounds of the Alabama Conference:

As a Conference, we say that there should be such a college, not such colleges. We then say that any place wishing the location of this college must "secure in good subscriptions the sum of one hundred thousand dollars."

We next appoint a Board of Commission to "receive propositions to fix the location." Two places go to work to secure the location. Subscriptions are made on the basis of the Conference resolutions, which hold out the idea of only one college. Large amounts are subscribed, which it is presumed the donors gave under the belief that the Conference intended to concentrate its sympathy and patronage on the place that would be selected for the college. They had a right to expect this; they did expect it; and upon that expectation gave thousands, where many of them, on the principle of two colleges, would only have given hundreds. The Board of Commission met, and fixed the location of the Conference College at Greensboro.

Whether they selected the best place, is not the question. They were authorized to fix the location, provided they received a proposition which their charter of instructions would regard as eligible. But two places, Auburn and Greensboro', were eligible; one must be received, the other rejected. They determined on Greensboro'. The $110,000 pledged by the people of that place was obtained under the conviction that the Alabama Conference was aiming to build up one great college, and but one, which conviction was legitimately produced by the wording of the Report on Education; and now, whatever may be our sectional partialities and our admiration of the benevolent spirit of the noble hearted citizens of the rejected place, and our large sympathy for them, in their disappointment, for us to go beyond what we, as one of the contracting parties proposed, and bound ourselves at Talladega to do, will be to act in bad faith with the other contracting party, and virtually make null and void all that has been done.

I see the delicate position of the Conference, and deplore the sectional feelings that have been excited; but to my mind there is but one course for us to pursue, and that is to carry out our published proposals in good faith with the party which we, as a Conference, through our Board of Commission, are in acknowledged negotiation with.

Secondly, as to whether the educational interests of the people of Alabama will be best promoted by carrying out the primitive resolutions of the Conference, which is your second question, I have no time at present to do more than simply indicate my opinion—an opinion formed from the history of our colleges.

As a people, our denomination have it in their power to do something on a scale of surpassing magnificence, in the way of education. We have done much; yet how little compared with what might have been achieved by concentration!

Our colleges are all in a sickly condition; our faculties constantly engaging, to escape starvation, the patience of our people exhausted by unceasing applications for means by which to prolong the existence of our puny institutions.

With these facts before me, I cannot but regard it as suicidal for us to think of having two colleges in the bounds of the Alabama Conference.

There never was a more auspicious time to do something worthy of our denomination and elevating to our country, and ennobling to our estranged humanity, than the present. The people are willing, as well as able, if we but prove to them that our purpose is to found one institution, and to unite all our energies on that one, with a determination to make it our literary Mecca, to which our sons, and the sons of coming generations may throng by hundreds, with a confidence that there the highest order of talent and piety will welcome them to a sanctified instruction.

If we suffer this opportunity to pass unimproved, or what is worse, if we diminish public confidence, and defeat public expectation, by pursuing the fatal policy against which we have had and still have so many warnings, we will put our educational interests in Alabama back at least a quarter of a century, perhaps longer. I cannot believe that our Conference will close their eyes to what is alike the dictates of justice and interest. Very truly yours, &c.,

PHIL. F. NEELY.

THE DOUAY BIBLE.

NO. II.

BY REV. JOSEPH HOLDICH, D. D.

We promised to give, in the present number, some account of the origin of the Douay Bible. We proceed to this portion of our undertaking.

During the reign of Elizabeth of England, many of the Roman Catholics, for reasons which are alleged in the history of that period, but which we do not desire to enumerate here, fled the kingdom, and took refuge in foreign lands. They settled chiefly in the Netherlands, and in various parts of France, and among other places at Rhelms and Douay, the latter of which places was ceded to France at the treaty of Utrecht. In the history of England it is stated that "When the ancient worship was suppressed, and the Reformation introduced into the Universities of England, the King of Spain reflected that, as some species of literators was necessary for supporting those doctrines and controversies, the Romish communion must decay in England if no means were found to give erudition to the ecclesiastics; and for this reason he founded a seminary at Douay, whither the Catholics sent their children, chiefly such as were intended for the priesthood, in order to receive the rudiments of their education." The Cardinal of Lorraine imitated this example by erecting a like seminary at Rhoims.

When it was found in England that the Scriptures could no longer be kept from the common people, Rome yielded to the necessity, and caused the New Testament to be translated into English at the Seminary at Rheims, where also it was printed.* For this reason this version was designated as the Rhemish Testament. This was in the year 1582. Following this commendable example, a few years later, namely in the year 1609-10, the Old Testament was translated at the college of Douay, the translators being, as it is understood, William, afterwards Cardinal Allen, Gregory Martin, and Richard Bristow. The Old Testament and the New, thus translated and printed, being bound together, constitute what is known among us as the Douay Bible. It will be seen that this version was published about the same time with that of king James, our common version, the latter having been published in 1611. But it must be remembered that the several versions by Wickliffe, Tyndale, and Coverdale, had been issued in whole, or in part, as mentioned in the preceding number, 245 times during the reigns of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth.

Having given this brief account of the origin of what is called the Douay Bible, we shall proceed to show some of its merits and defects. We will concede to its advocates that it has the former; perhaps the candid and intelligent among them will not altogether deny that it has the latter. It suits our present purpose to speak of the defects first, after which we will look at what is commendable.

1. It must be regarded as a defect in this version that it was not made from the original Greek and Hebrew, but from the Latin Vulgate. Some knowledge of the Vulgate is necessary to obtain a true conception of the value of the Douay Bible. The learned well know that at the commencement of the Christian era the Latin language was fast supplanting the Greek. Hence it became necessary to translate the Scriptures into this now generally spoken tongue. Many translations were therefore made during the first century from the original Greek of the New Testament, and from the Greek Septuagint of the Old into Latin. But as these were often made by incompetent persons, many errors were the consequence, and in addition many alterations and errors, either designed or accidental, were introduced by transcribers and copyists. Hence, towards the end of the fourth century, Jerome undertook a complete revision of the old Italic Bible, as it was called, comparing it not with the original Hebrew, for this language was but little cultivated in that age, but with the Greek Septuagint as revised by Origen.

Now, it is very obvious and universally acknowledged that as each translation will vary a little from the original, so the more steps there between any translation and the primitive language, the further you are likely to be from accuracy. But the Vulgate is at least two paces from the original, the course being from Hebrew to Greek, from Greek to Latin. There is, therefore, all this probability against an accurate translation, even in the Vulgate. Yet this translation has been recognized by the Church of Rome as their authorized version, and for this reason was denominated the Vulgate or common version. Thus at the celebrated Council of Trent, held in 1545, it was solemnly decreed: "Whosoever shall not receive as sacred and canonical all these books, and every part of them, as they are commonly read in the Catholic Church, and are contained in the old Vulgate Latin edition, or shall knowingly and deliberately despise the aforesaid traditions, let him be accursed." And again: "The same most holy council, considering that no small advantage will accrue to the Church of God, if, of all the Latin editions of the Sacred Book which are in circulation, some one shall be distinguished as that which ought to be regarded authentic, doth ordain and declare that the same old and vulgate edition, which has been approved by its use in the Church for so many ages, shall be held as authentic in all public lectures, disputations, sermons and expositions; and that no one shall dare or presume to reject it, under any pretense whatever." So much for the translation of which the Douay Bible is a translation. The reader will bear in mind, that, as the Douay is a translation from the Vulgate, it has the increased disadvantage of being one step further from the original.

As to the use and value of the Vulgate Bible, or of the Septuagint, it is not our purpose to inquire, nor is the inquiry any way pertinent to our object. We simply say that the Douay Bible, being a translation of a translation, instead of a translation from the original, loses thereby much of accuracy and reliability. And here we cannot forbear mentioning one fact which tends to show how following the Vulgate has, at least in some points, influenced the Romish mind. Travelers have frequently noticed in one of the magnificent churches of the Holy City, (so called,) a statue of Moses by Michael Angelo. In this statue the hair is so disposed as to resemble horns rising from the top of the forehead. This is a common representation of Moses in works of medieval art. It grew out of an erroneous translation in the Vulgate Bible of the 29th verse of the 34th chapter of Exodus. In the Vulgate it reads: "Ignorabat quod cornuta esset facies sua." "He knew not that his face was horned." Our version reads: "He wist not that the skin of his face shone." The error manifestly arose from confounding the Hebrew karen, to shine, with karen, a horn, the letters in both words being the same, the difference being in the vowel points. The reader may see this statement in Hillard's six months in Italy, also in Sir Thomas Browne's Inquiry into Vulgar and Common Errors. A copy of the first edition (1610) of the Douay Bible is now before me, in which we read, (Ex. 34: 29,) "And he knew not that his face was horned by the conversation of the talk of our Lord." In later editions, as that of 1836, (New York,) it is somewhat improved, but the word horned is retained, thus: "He knew not that his face was horned, from the conversation of the Lord."

* We have seen it asserted that Dr. Cotton, Archdeacon of Cashel, in his "History of the Douay Bible," states that that translation was not authorized by the Church of Rome; that it is the fruit of "private judgment," and that the notes have nothing to rest on but the private judgment of their authors, the names of whom are often unknown. We do not know exactly the import of the phrase "authorized by the Church of Rome." We believe that the members of that Church are very chary of printing or publishing what is not duly authorized, and as this was confessedly translated and published at Catholic colleges, there is strong presumption in favor of such authority having been obtained. At any rate the later editions have been officially recognized; for instance, the one now before me, was "published with the approbation of the Right Rev. John Dubois, Catholic Bishop of N. Y.," and so of other editions that we have seen.

FROM YUCATAN.—By the arrival of the brig John S. Gittings we have received dates to the 17th ult from Merida, the capital of the department of Yucatan. We find no news of importance. The citizens and authorities of the peninsula had generally signified their approval of the success of the revolution and their concurrence in the plan of Ayutla. We find no notice of recent difficulties with the Indians except in a letter from the Prefect of the district of Tecax, which states that they had assassinated several persons along the road to Bacalar, and committed sundry depredations.

MARION, ALA., Oct 11, 1855.

L. Q. C. DeYampert—Dear Brother, I am just in receipt of your letter of the 10th inst., propounding certain inquiries with regard to the contemplated Alabama Conference College, and take pleasure in replying at this my earliest convenience.

1. To your first question, "Do you consider that the committee in proposing, or the Conference in accepting said resolutions, (see resolutions of Conference below,) placed themselves under obligation to establish one college, and one only," I can only answer as an integral of that committee and that Conference.

Without claiming to be an exponent of the opinion of others who acted in the premises, with me, I reply unhesitatingly in the affirmative, and will go so far as to give it as my belief that no member of the committee that drafted, or of the Conference that adopted, the resolutions, entertained the remotest expectation that our action, as a body would lead to the location of more than one college in our limits, under the charter by which we then agreed to be governed.

Our object was to unite all our strength and build up and endow an institution of learning that would be above the mutations to which our Methodist colleges have unfortunately been incident, and by which their usefulness has been restricted. This desire long existed among the ministry and membership of our Conference, and had long been regarded as practicable by yourself, as I well remember, but in view of our relation to LaGrange, the money we had invested in that institution, and the ties by which many of our preachers, and not a few of our laity, were bound to the old mountain, action had been postponed from year to year.

Information was formally laid before our Conference, at Talladega, that LaGrange College had been transferred from its old mountain fastness to Florence. To this transfer the Tennessee and Memphis Conferences had consented. The acquiescence of our Conference was asked and agreed to, with the proviso that we be permitted to withdraw our part of the premises' fund, as individuals, and that we be exempt from all moneyed liabilities created by the transfer.

This was a virtual withdrawal from LaGrange, and opened the way, as some of us thought, to prepare for having a college of our own. Simultaneously with this, and as if in proof that Providence summoned us to immediate action, a memorial from the citizens of Auburn and its vicinity, praying the location of the college in that place, and offering as a bonus, several dollars, was received by the Conference and referred to the Committee on Education. This of course brought the subject of a college fully before us, and after much anxious consideration the committee offered and the Conference adopted the following resolutions:

"1. Resolved, That there should be a male college in the bounds of the Alabama Conference.

2. That to place such college on a firm basis it will be necessary to secure in good subscriptions the sum of one hundred thousand dollars.

3. That the Conference appoint a commission consisting of lay and clerical members from each presiding elder's district, who shall receive propositions for the location of a college within our bounds until the fourth day of July next, when they shall meet at Summerfield, and fix the location of said institution."

This commission was filled by the appointment of the clerical and two lay members from each presiding elder's district.

From these resolutions it is plain that the committee recommended, and the Conference endorsed the recommendation—the establishment of one college, and one only. In order that other places from which applications might come and pledges be offered should not be forestalled by a premature acceptance of the liberal proposition made by the citizens of Auburn, a Board of Commissioners was appointed, having full power to receive propositions from any and every part of the Conference, until the fourth day of July, when they were to meet at Summerfield and fix the location of said institution. The Report on education was the charter of instruction by which the Board had to negotiate with the place or places that might apply for the location of the college. That charter required—first, that the place making application should secure "one hundred thousand dollars in good subscriptions" before it could be negotiated with by the Board of Commission; and, second, that from among such places as might make propositions in conformity with this requisition the Board choose one, and then "fix the location of the college."

On the basis of this charter of instruction the people of Auburn and of Greensboro' began to devise liberal things, with a munificence unparalleled in the history of educational movements in our State. The rivalry was conducted in a spirit so noble and generous that many of us had hope that when the hour of decision would come the vanquished would not only yield gracefully to the victor, but being honorably defeated, would apply for annexation. We could not believe that any would fail to see that to establish two institutions within our conference territory would be to defeat the end we all had in view—viz, the planting and rearing of a temple of learning that would be monumental of the enlightened munificence of Alabama Methodism, and possessed of facilities equal to any in the Union.

The Board of Commission met at Summerfield, and fixed the location of said institution at Greensboro'. From the action of that Board there can be no appeal.

Whatever may be our individual partialities for particular places, or our sectional preferences, we are compelled to abide their location. Our obvious duty now, as a Conference, is to acquiesce in a measure originating with us, and determined upon by a commission whom we had clothed with full authority to act, and whose action in like manner as mountain torrents, fed by perpetual snows and melted by descending rains.

Mr. Editor—In God's providence, I have been broken on the wheel. For long years I have been unable to stand up—the tide of affliction has sometimes overwhelmed me—but I love the Church—I would gladly pour my heart out a libation on its altars. I write this in full view of my mortality, at the bed side of a dying little son. Most willingly, gladly, joyfully, triumphantly will I go to my grave, if I may be permitted to plead this great cause successfully before the Church.

Let us not jostle each other. In God's name let us purify ourselves for this work and erect a temple of sanctified learning and put the Bible in its heart, whose dome shall reflect the lights of ages and whose foundations shall resist the torrent years of coming generations. Our fathers are passing away—they did a great work—their sons have more ample means, and God calls them to the high stewardship of conserving and advancing their triumphs. WM. T. SAMFORD.

"PARSONAGE IN PLAQUEMINE," LA.

BY THE PREACHER'S WIFE.

As this parsonage is of quite recent erection, a short notice of it through your paper may not be uninteresting. It is situated on a spacious lot, in the rear of the Methodist Church, a garden intervening. The house contains six comfortable rooms, and a front and back gallery, convenient out-houses, and a large cistern: all of which were built, furnished, and paid for in the short space of two months. Its speedy completion was mainly owing to the generosity and active energy of Mrs. Gay and Mrs. Reames; Mrs. Dodd also made a liberal donation. The whole amount of cost was between 2,500 and 3,000 dollars cash.

We had boarded nine years, and never before occupied a parsonage, and must confess to rather a gloomy foreboding as to parsonage housekeeping. The dark scenes of "Shady Side" were vividly presented to our imaginations, and we had a vague, indefinite horror of an undeveloped future. Our day dreams of parsonage life were haunted by the picture of empty store-rooms, "no help," no wood, ovens without lids, lamps without oil, rickety chairs, cups whose mate saucers had long been strangers to each other, and many such annoyances which the good Methodists of Plaquemine determined we should not experience.

This parsonage is furnished not only with the comforts of life, but some of the elegancies and from our sojourn here will date some of our happiest hours. Ah! there is a magic in the word HOME that none can more fully appreciate than the family of an itinerant Methodist Minister; especially when that family has moved eight times in nine years.

True, it may be home, but for a short time—perhaps only a year, but while we are here it is our home, and when we are gone, it will be the home of another, whose life is devoted to the same work. The roses we plant here may not bloom for our pleasure, but they will not be crushed by the step of strangers, they will shed their fragrance, and display their beauty to cheer the heart of those who are often weary and sad, and oppressed by the burden of many cares. The chamber here sanctified by prayer and praise is not to be polluted by profanity; for this is emphatically the preacher's home.

We present the parsonage in Plaquemine as a model to the Louisiana Conference, and hope other stations will imitate their good example, in providing like homes, and sustaining them in like manner. KATE.

TWO COLLEGES OR ONE IN ALABAMA CONFERENCE?

MONTEBELLA, Oct. 12, 1855.

BROTHER McTYEIRE:—I enclose for publication, interrogatories to Rev. P. F. Neely, on the subject of the contemplated College in Ala., and his answer. Please give my questions and his answer insertion.

Yours, &c.,

L. Q. C. DE VAMPERT.

MONTEBELLA, Ala., Oct. 6, 1855.

REV. P. F. NEELY:

Dear Brother—I have been informed that you were Chairman of the Educational Committee of the Alabama Conference of 1854, held at Talladega. Resolutions to build a College on certain conditions were proposed and adopted. Permit me to ask:

First—Do you consider that the Committee in proposing, or the Conference in adopting said resolutions, placed themselves under obligations to establish one College and one only?

2d. If so, will not the Educational interests of the people of Alabama, be best promoted by the carrying out of the primitive resolutions? Hoping to hear from you before you leave for Mobile,

I am, very respectfully,

L. Q. C. DE VAMPERT.

The College Question—Apologetic.

The absence of our usual compositor and foreman threw the first page of the present number into a form hardly less than pi. Two important articles—those on the College question soon to come before the Alabama Conference for decision—were mutilated thereby. We therefore give them place inside—in their integrity.

The error was not discovered until too late for other remedy. As it is, the very blunder of the types may draw the more attention to the authors. Their suggestions are weighty and timely. Without concert, they reached us by the same mail—one from each of the places concerned.

Death of Rev. W. H. Millsaps.

Few young men of more promise have been admitted into the itinerancy. A year ago he joined the Mississippi Conference, on trial. On Saturday morning, Oct. 3, he died.

Rev. J. J. Wheat writes:

CLINTON, La., Oct. 17.

I have just time to say to you that our dear Brother Millsaps is dead. We were on our way to the Choctaw camp-ground when he was taken. I returned with him to Mrs. McCay's where we stayed the night before and attended him till his death, except two days. He had been exposed to the fever in Jackson, where he caught the disease. It is a sad loss to the church—he was greatly beloved wherever he was known and was full of promise. But God never injures his own work, nor does he ever smite his shepherds or flock in anger. God saw that it was just what ought to be or he would not have permitted it. It is the Lord, let Him do whatever seemeth good.

MONUMENT TO FOSTER.—The generous Methodists and friends of Macon, Miss., held a meeting 26th Sept., in which a series of resolutions were passed on the death of their late pastor, Rev. T. H. Foster—among others,

"On motion of Dr. Lyles, the thanks of this meeting were tendered to the Episcopal Minister at Baton Rouge, for his kind attention to Brother Foster in his late illness.

"On motion of J. J. Beauchamp, a Committee of three was appointed to correspond with Brother Foster's late charges at Lowndsboro', Eutaw, and Demopolis, Ala., and Baton Rouge, La.; also, the Secretary of the Louisiana Conference, and request them to unite with us in having a suitable monument erected to his memory. J. J. Beauchamp, W. D. Lyles and John M. Smith, appointed on said Committee."

TUSCUMBIA, ALA.—Rev. E. J. Hamill writes: "Our college-building, the finest I have seen in the country, will be completed shortly, and go into operation. Rev. Dr. Lipscomb has been elected President, and Rev. M. S. Andrews, who has been an efficient agent, will take a professorship. The brethren completed a handsome parsonage in July, and have also liberally contributed to other objects: to the Tract Society $116, and, on last Sunday, the 14th inst., $261 to the missionary cause."

BRANDON, MISS.—Rev J. M. Turner writes, 18th inst: "The Lord is doing a work here. Our fourth quarterly meeting has just closed with about twenty conversions—the week before, fifteen. Within the last six weeks there have been one hundred conversions of souls, and added to the church in the circuit."

DR. JOS. A. MOSES.—This gentleman died 20th Sept., of yellow fever, at the residence of Dr. Reynolds, Bolton's Depot, Hinds county, Miss. This year's pestilence has not deprived the church and community of a better man. The citizens of Greensboro, Ala., where he long resided—leading a quiet and peaceable life in godliness and sincerity—and citizens of other places favored by his residence, will unite with us in this testimony. May he rest in peace!

TE DEUM.—On Thursday evening the St. Louis Cathedral was packed with Frenchmen and French sympathisers and lookers-on. "Te deum laudamus" was given in honor of the taking of Sebastopol. Father Perché delivered an address in French, vindicating the Allies' cause, and often using la gloire in reference to their exploits. The Turkish, English, French and Sardinian flags mingled their folds beneath the altar! Crescent closest to the cross! Priests paraded in finest millinery, and catered well for the occasion.

CONFERENCE STATISTICS.—The S. C. Advocate gives a plan under this head, to which we invite the attention of all concerned. Our P. E. was working out one of his own, to save that half day "calling for members in society," and to provide for complete, uniform, connectional returns. But his task is well superceded by our Charleston cotemporary. We hope the Publishing House will take the suggestion of furnishing the blanks.

Christian Children.

A very esteemed and judicious friend, who is the head of a Christian family, writes

* * * * * My family have been greatly blessed since we last met. My four eldest children have grown up, and have all become members of the church, and are very much interested in the salvation of their souls. Our daily conversation is upon religious topics and the relative duties of Christians, and their obligations to each other and the world. You may, perhaps, recollect that I once told you that I had come to the conclusion that to make consistent and useful Christians, parents should begin in the nursery, and that I was acting upon that conviction. We are now realising the fruits of our labor. The seed that we sowed in their infant minds are now springing up, and I trust ripening for heaven. They have been well instructed in matters of faith and duty, and I sincerely pray that they may receive that divine aid which will enable them well and wisely to discharge their mission upon earth."

That looks refreshingly like an actual benefit and fulfillment of the Covenant of God toward the parents and their children. These are not thrown upon the Church or Sabbath School solely for instruction. At home their duties and privileges as members of the Church are taught and entered upon. In the light of the Gospel dispensation—in the light of that dimmer one which included the "father of the faithful"—ought such a household be regarded as a strange thing? We are authorized to look for them as the rule, and not, alas, as they too much are, the exception. From scenes like these arises the true glory of the Church.

Another family we wot of, where the little ones answer such questions as these—besides "Who made you?" etc.

Do you belong to the Church?

Who baptized you? etc.

Each one was baptized by a different minister, but knows and lisps the name of the administrator of that divine sacrament in which they are so deeply concerned. Thus arises a distinct and impressive view of baptism and its covenant duties and privileges. Their parents do not propose to bind them out as apprentices to the evil one, under indentures, till they become of age when they may assert their liberty and choose for themselves what sort of Christians they will be, if any. Some people are so careful to let the world, the flesh and the devil have a fair chance at their offspring, they give these infernal allies twenty years the start. They are so mindful of the adversary's rights (!) as to forget their own covenant rights and the crown rights of Jesus.

Looking into the face of the unweaned innocent your fair play and equal rights parent says—"Let him grow up so; by and by, please God, when he get old enough to be converted he may fall upon a camp meeting or revival; then he can exercise his unbiassed judgment in selecting his creed and church affinities." But he will not grow up so; reason and experience tell that. Sad sight, to see a parent turn devil's advocate against his own child.

A gem of a book, lately issued from one Publishing House—"GATHERED FLOWRETS"—puts to record many touching instances of family religion. Among the obituaries of Christian children gathered here, is one of a little girl who died before her seventh year was full. Her father says: "She had clearer views of the plan of redemption than one would suppose a child could entertain; and she never dreamed that she was not, in good faith, a member of the church into whose communion she had been received by baptism."

The Three Agreeing.

Disciplinary disagreements do not, need not hinder salvation's work. It is beautiful to see churches agreeing on the substantial point. The Father owns all his children, though they may fall out, among themselves, by the way.

It is generally thought that sects of the same patronymic and nearest in doctrine, are farthest apart in communion. Here is an instance to the contrary. The Alexandria (Va.) Sentinel, 10th inst., says:

"The interesting revival of religion heretofore noticed as in progress among the various branches of the Methodists in this city has not yet closed. In the Methodist Protestant Church there have been fifty-one accessions to the membership as the fruit of the revival; services are now suspended there. In the Methodist Episcopal Church South there have been sixty-three conversions and a large accession to the membership. In the Methodist Episcopal Church attached to the Baltimore conference there have been fifty-five conversions, and upwards of forty accessions. In both of the last named churches the services are still continued."

REV. J. B. COTTRELL, has received the appointment of Chaplain, in the army, at the military post near Pensacola, Fla. A post he will be very useful in, and which is by no means a sinecure. The Government has made a good appointment and doubtless the Conference will ratify it.

REV. H. S. PORTER, D. D., a distinguished minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, died in Memphis, of yellow fever, 5th October.

The Amen Liturgy.

A friend, upon reading the article of the Advocate on Liturgical changes in other churches, said he liked it well enough, but wanted to say one thing—"the old Methodists had the greatest liturgy in the world, short and scriptural and mighty powerful."

What was it?

"AMEN."

His position was so well backed by the Old and New Testament, and the Fathers, and the best usage, that we agreed. It was used in Moses' day with thundering emphasis. What a response to God's minister when all the people said amen!

St. Paul charged the clergy to use such language in the church that the laics might be able intelligently and heartily to say amen.

AMEN suits those who occupy the place of the unlearned as well as the learned. No finding of the place is needed; no acquaintance with conventionalism. The white, red and black man can join in this responsive service. It is far removed from formality. It is soul-prompted.

St. John heard a concerted Amen in heaven—and it came from near the throne and was just such a responsive sentiment as saints on earth would have given. It was a heavenly period to a heavenly sentence.

Few words are so common to many languages as Amen—meaning always truly, verily, so may it be.

Amen, scattered here and there. Indifferently, put in the middle of a sentence or at the beginning, is against sense and order. The promiscuous, unmeaning use of this terse and noble liturgy degrades it. But in the right place, the nail is made fast. Nay, more, it helps to drive the nail.

How cheering to the preacher to be assured that his congregation is not only listening to him but worshipping with him! If he leads them in prayer, instead of in charnel-house stillness, that makes him feel like he had gone alone to the throne of grace, a well put AMEN—"so mote it be, Lord"—assures him of the communion of saints in the solemn hour, and that at least two or three are agreed touching the things asked for.

We have often deplored the lack of beauty and power in our baptismal and communion services, because of the congregation not replying amen as directed.

Be not ashamed, Methodist people, of amen. Would that the amen-corner of every church extended to the door. And let all the people say—amen.

NORTH CAROLINA CORRESPONDENCE.

GOLDSBORO, N. C., Oct. 15, 1855.

Dear Bro. McTyeire—Your polite invitation to become your North Carolina correspondent would have drawn me out long ago, if sickness had not left me less time for my pastoral duties than was sufficient to meet the demands of my people. Besides, you wanted something "newsy and breezy," and I was sick a-bed, overwrought at a revival among the swamps, and did not feel particularly in the vein indicated. As to the breezy part of your request, I should think anything in that line would be superfluous after the great blow you recently fell upon.

Somehow in my western and southern tours I have felt as if your people regarded North Carolina as a sleepy old State; and upon reflection, I have suspected that something of the kind was really true. Why should not North Carolina sleep? It is better to be sleeping than in mischief. She has slept, without so much as snoring. But her sleep has been filled with dreams. She believed that she saw on her coast a harbor that is not surpassed from New York to Galveston, and that from there to this little magical place, Goldsboro, nature had graded a road and timbered it, in fact had done all but lay the rails and clamp the iron of a railroad. She saw in her visions a bed of coal lying on Deep river, surpassing the coal-wealth of Pennsylvania, and she saw that river made navigable to the seat of this immense mineral wealth. She saw lime, copper, iron and gold at convenient distances and in convenient quantities. She saw plank-roads and rail-roads connecting these points of interest. She saw the road of which I first spoke, coming from Beaufort on the coast to Goldsboro, on the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad, and crossing at this point, pass through her capital, and through Hillsboro, that old seat of refinement and hospitality, and through Guilford, within gun-hearing of the ground where the most decisive conflict of the Revolution occurred, and through old Salisbury to Charlotte, the "Hornets' Nest" of Revolutionary times, the spot where our forefathers concocted that Declaration of Independence, which was the basis of Thomas Jefferson's immortal paper bearing that immortal name. And she saw the line of iron stretch over her blue mountains to Tennessee, and hook on to the great thoroughfare of her thrifty daughter. And beyond that, there was an indistinct appearance in her dreams as if this wood-and-metal worm felt its way onward until its glittering terminus reflected the sheen of the Pacific Ocean. And then it worked itself as a snake does when its transmits its undulations without changing its position. And this wave at last seemed to our dreaming State to be a long line of cars, filled with people and what people want, coming from the Pacific coast to Memphis, from Memphis forward to Western Carolina, and emptying themselves at our new city, which grew and grew and grew, as cities grow only in dreams and in America.

"Pshaw!" say some of your practical Gridgrad readers, who expect to have the Pacific Railroad on some other route, "pshaw! that's ridiculously visionary." Well, it may be visionary; it may be the embroidery of the writer's after-dinner snooze; but my dear Mr. Practical, it is nearly all here now, except the Pacific part of it. I have seen the harbor, and long before a blow was struck predicted that in seventy-five years there would be a city on the spot which would rival the present size of Philadelphia. Any ship that goes from New York to Liverpool can come up to the docks of Carolina City, and a railroad is actually located terminating at that very harbor, and hundreds of hands are building the road this moment while I write. On the road from Goldsboro to Charlotte we have only 40 miles to finish, which will soon be done; and, coming from the South to take your next New Year's dinner with me in Goldsboro, you may pass over the whole length. And very recently a company has been formed to make the line westwardly towards Tennessee.

North Carolina dreamed a long dream—she roused herself, and began to verify her visions.

Yours truly, D.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE ALABAMA COLLEGE, OR COLLEGES?

Mr. Editor—The question itself is of more or less importance, as it relates to a higher or lower standard of educational ideas. If it should be judged better to multiply the number of second-rate institutions and so diffuse more widely the means of common education, than to build up one Methodist College of superiour character—we ought by all means to establish two Colleges. If, however, it should be thought that our supply of second rate institutions is quite equal to the demands of the church and country for that sort of education which they impart, and that beyond their power of supply, there has arisen a demand, important and urgent for a higher grade of scholarship than has hitherto been contemplated by our scheme, then it will be wisdom for us to unite, and move forward with a high purpose to establish and endow a COLLEGE with facilities equal to any in the world. Some glimmerings of this idea have shone upon the history of our connexion. Transylvania shot across our horizon like a comet and disappeared. It has all along been the animus of the church to elevate and lead forward the popular mind to the hights of this sublime achievement. Evidently we are nearing the coast of this continental enterprise. The drift-wood is all setting in to this one idea. A first class College we are soon destined to have. Southern Methodism is gathering up her energies for an effort which is destined to carry the church forward centuries in advance of our former ideas of education.

It is another question whether any one Conference shall adventure upon this scheme? and still another whether if any one, Alabama is that one? Virginia may already be in advance of all others, in this noble purpose. The writer of this communication has reason to believe that the great hearted and far seeing President of Randolph Macon College is now considering a plan by which that institution shall be expanded into this first rate College. It will probably require a million of dollars—and make its appeal to all the Conferences and to the rich men of the church to erect one monument of liberality in this age—which shall evince its appreciation of the superior claims of religious education. "A million of dollars!"—Certainly and why not? It would be about one hundred thousand dollars to Alabama—only one hundred thousand. A contribution of one thousand each, by one hundred men, would raise her proportion for this great work. I throw out this suggestion for the statesmen of the church. The next General Conference ought to be able to act definitely upon the subject.

It seems to me that Alabama would do well to consider whether a contribution of one or two hundred thousand dollars to such an institution would not be worth more to the common cause than so much appropriated to building up inferior Colleges. As she has no College and is central what hinders that she should go before the next General Conference two hundred thousand dollars in hand, and ask that The College be located in her borders? And even if the location should be in a different State, would not one such College as I have indicated equal to the best University in Europe, be worth more to the Church now, than twenty inferior institutions?

This ought to be an offering to Christ without spot or blemish. Let no selfishness or sectionalism mar this work. Let the different Conferences in the fear of God, as one man, make these offerings and leave the question of location to the General Conference, or leave it to a committee of the Bishops, who "watch for our souls," and who would decide it without partiality, and with reference alone to the interests of the Kingdom of Christ.

I may be over sanguine—I read over the history of the past—but I have faith that God will put it into the hearts of his people to achieve this sublime work and that contributions will not have to be pumped up from the bottom of the sea, but will roll in upon it like mountain torrents led by perpetual snows and melted by descending rains.

Mr. Editor—In God's providence, I have been broken on the wheel. For long years I have been unable to stand up—the tide of affliction has sometimes overwhelmed me—but I love the Church—I would gladly pour my heart out a libation on its altars. I write this in full view of my mortality, at the bed side of a dying little son. Most willingly, gladly, joyfully, triumphantly will I go to my grave, if I may be permitted to plead this great cause successfully before the Church.

Let us not jostle each other. In God's name let us purify ourselves for this work and erect a temple of sanctified learning and put the Bible in its heart, whose dome shall reflect the lights of ages and whose foundations shall resist the torrent years of coming generations. Our fathers are passing away—they did a great work—their sons have more ample means, and God calls them to the high stewardship of conserving and advancing their triumphs.

TWO COLLEGES OR ONE IN ALABAMA CONFERENCE?

MANTBELLA, Oct. 12, 1855.

BROTHER MCTYEIRE:—I enclose for publication, interrogatories to Rev. P. P. Neely, on the subject of the contemplated College in Ala, and his answer. Please give my questions and his answer insertion.

Yours, &c.,

L. Q. C. DE YAMPERT.

MONTBELLA, Ala., Oct. 6, 1855.

REV. P. P. NEELY:

Dear Brother—I have been informed that you were Chairman of the Educational Committee of the Alabama Conference of 1854, held at Talladega. Resolutions to build a College on certain conditions were proposed and adopted. Permit me to ask:

First—Do you consider that the Committee in proposing, or the Conference in adopting said resolutions, placed themselves under obligations to establish one College and one only? 2d. If so, will not the Educational interests of the people of Alabama, be best promoted by the carrying out of the primitive resolutions? Hoping to hear from you before you leave for Mobile,

I am, very respectfully,

L. Q. C. DE YAMPERT.

MARION, ALA., Oct. 11, 1855.

L. Q. C. DeYampert—Dear Brother, I am just in receipt of your letter of the 10th inst., propounding certain inquiries with regard to the contemplated Alabama Conference College, and take pleasure in replying at this my earliest convenience.

1. To your first question, "Do you consider that the committee in proposing, or the Conference in accepting said resolutions, (see resolutions of Conference below,) placed themselves under obligation to establish one college, and one only," I can only answer as an integral of that committee and that Conference.

Without claiming to be an exponent of the opinion of others who acted in the premises, with me, I reply unhesitatingly in the affirmative, and will go so far as to give it as my belief that no member of the committee that drafted, or of the Conference that adopted, the resolutions, entertained the remotest expectation that our action, as a body would lead to the location of more than one college in our limits, under the charter by which we then agreed to be governed.

Our object was to unite all our strength and build up and endow an institution of learning that would be above the mutations to which our Methodist colleges have unfortunately been incident, and by which their usefulness has been restricted. This desire long existed among the ministry and membership of our Conference, and had long been regarded as practicable by yourself, as I well remember; but in view of our relation to LaGrange, the money we had invested in that institution, and the ties by which many of our preachers, and not a few of our laity, were bound to the old mountain, action had been postponed from year to year.

Information was formally laid before our Conference, at Talladega, that LaGrange College had been transferred from its old mountain fastness to Florence. To this transfer the Tennessee and Memphis Conferences had consented. The acquiescence of our Conference was asked and agreed to, with the proviso that we be permitted to withdraw our part of the preachers' fund, as individuals, and that we be exempt from all moneyed liabilities created by the transfer.

This was a virtual withdrawal from LaGrange, and opened the way, as some of us thought, to prepare for having a college of our own. Simultaneously with this, and as if in proof that Providence summoned us to immediate action, a memorial from the citizens of Auburn and its vicinity, praying the location of the college in that place, and offering as a bonus, several thousand dollars, was received by the Conference and referred to the Committee on Education. This of course brought the subject of a college fully before us, and after much anxious consideration the committee offered and the Conference adopted the following resolutions:

"1. Resolved, That there should be a male college in the bounds of the Alabama Conference.

2. That to place such college on a firm basis it will be necessary to secure in good subscriptions the sum of one hundred thousand dollars.

3. That the Conference appoint a commission consisting of lay and clerical members from each presiding elder's district, who shall receive propositions for the location of a college within our bounds until the fourth day of July next, when they shall meet at Summerfield, and fix the location of said institution."

This commission was filled by the appointment of one clerical and two lay members from each presiding elder's district.

From these resolutions it is plain that the committee recommended, and the Conference endorsed the recommendation—the establishment of one college, and one only. In order that other places from which applications might come and pledges be offered should not be forestalled by a premature acceptance of the liberal proposition made by the citizens of Auburn, a Board of Commissioners was appointed, having full power to receive propositions from any and every part of the Conference, until the fourth day of July, when they were to meet at Summerfield and fix the location of said institution. The Report on education was the charter of instruction by which the Board had to negotiate with the place or places that might apply for the location of the college. That charter required—first, that the place making application should secure "one hundred thousand dollars in good subscriptions" before it could be negotiated with by the Board of Commission; and, second, that from among such places as might make propositions in conformity with this requisition the Board choose one, and then "fix the location of the college."

On the basis of this charter of instruction the people of Auburn and of Greensboro' began to devise liberal things, with a munificence unparalleled in the history of educational movements in our State. The rivalry was conducted in a spirit so noble and generous that many of us had hope that when the hour of decision would come the vanquished would not only yield gracefully to the victor, but being honorably defeated, would apply for annexation. We could not believe that any would fail to see that to establish two institutions within our conference territory would be to defeat the end we all had in view—viz. the planting and rearing of a temple of learning that would be monumental of the enlightened munificence of Alabama Methodism, and possessed of facilities equal to any in the Union.

The Board of Commission met at Summerfield, and fixed the location of said institution at Greensboro'. From the action of that Board there can be no appeal.

Whatever may be our individual partialities for particular places, or our sectional preference, we are compelled to abide their location. Our obvious duty now, as a Conference, is to acquiesce in a measure originating with us, and determined upon by a commission whom we had clothed with full authority to act, and whose action in fixing the location of our college at Greensboro' was in perfect conformity with the instructions received from us as a Conference. We should lay aside all personal and local predilections, and influenced by an aim nobler than such as may link itself with localities, unite our hearts and purses in building up a college that will shed renown on its projectors, and transmit its blessings to posterity—in establishing one college and one college only.

Indeed, I am unable to see how we can, as a Conference, in connection with the present college movement, the basis of which is the resolutions we adopted at Talladega, even entertain a motion to establish two colleges without making ourselves vulnerable to the charge of duplicity, while to resolve on establishing two, would in all probability result in endless litigation with the subscribers to the one already determined by the Board of Commission.

Let me beg you to take a summary glance at the attitude we, as a Conference, sustain to the party subscribing for the erection of a male college in the bounds of the Alabama Conference.

As a Conference, we say that there should be such a college, not such colleges. We then say that any place wishing the location of this college must "secure in good subscriptions the sum of one hundred thousand dollars."

We next appoint a Board of Commission to "resolve propositions to fix the location." Two places go to work to secure the location. Subscriptions are made on the basis of the Conference resolutions, which hold out the idea of only one college. Large amounts are subscribed, which it is presumed the donors gave under the belief that the Conference intended to concentrate its sympathy and patronage on the place that would be selected for the college. They had a right to expect this; they did expect it; and upon that expectation gave thousands, where many of them, on the principle of two colleges, would only have given hundreds. The Board of Commission met, and fixed the location of the Conference College at Greensboro.

Whether they selected the best place, is not the question. They were authorized to fix the location, provided they received a proposition which their charter of instructions would regard as eligible. But two places, Auburn and Greensboro', were eligible; one must be received, the other rejected. They determined on Greensboro'. The $110,000 pledged by the people of that place was obtained under the conviction that the Alabama Conference was aiming to build up one great college, and but one, which conviction was legitimately produced by the wording of the Report on Education; and now, whatever may be our sectional partialities and our admiration of the benevalent spirit of the noble hearted citizens of the rejected place, and our large sympathy for them, in their disappointment, for us to go beyond what we, as one of the contracting parties proposed, and bound ourselves at Talladega to do, will be to act in bad faith with the other contracting party, and virtually make null and void all that has been done.

I see the delicate position of the Conference, and deplore the sectional feelings that have been excited; but to my mind there is but one course for us to pursue, and that is to carry out our published proposals in good faith with the party which we, as a Conference, through our Board of Commission, are in acknowledged negotiation with.

Secondly, as to whether the educational interests of the people of Alabama will be best promoted by carrying out the primitive resolutions of the Conference, which is your second question, I have no time at present to do more than simply indicate my opinion—an opinion formed from the history of our colleges.

As a people, our denomination have it in their power to do something on a scale of surpassing magnificence, in the way of education. We have done much; yet how little compared with what might have been achieved by concentration!

Our colleges are all in a sickly condition, our faculties constantly changing, to escape starvation, the patience of our people exhausted by unceasing applications for means by which to prolong the existence of our puny institutions.

With these facts before me, I cannot but regard it as suicidal for us to think of having two colleges in the bounds of the Alabama Conference.

There never was a more auspicious time to do something worthy of our denomination and elevating to our country, and something to our estranged humanity, than the present. The people are willing, ne well as able, if we but prove to them that our purpose is to found one institution, and to unite all our energies on that one, with a determination to make it our literary Mecca, to which our sons, and the sons of coming generations may throng by hundreds, with a confidence that there the highest order of talent and piety will welcome them to a sanctified instruction.

If we suffer this opportunity to pass unimproved, or what is worse, if we diminish public confidence and defeat public expectation, by pursuing the fatal policy against which we have had and still have so many warnings, we will put our educational interests in Alabama back at least a quarter of a century, perhaps longer. I cannot believe that our Conference will close their eyes to what is alike the dictates of justice and interest. Very truly yours, &c.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE REV. JOSEPH TRAVIS, A. M., a Member of the Memphis Annual Conference. Embracing a succinct history of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; particularly in part of Western Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi. With short Memoirs of several Local Preachers, and an Address to his Friends. Edited by Thomas O. Summers. Price 65 cents.

This is a 12mo of 238 pages; and, as its title indicates, is a most interesting volume. Thousands who are acquainted with the venerable author, or who have heard of him as one of the noble pioneers of Methodism in the Southern States, will peruse his pages with delight and profit. It is written in a colloquial style, suited to the character of the work. An excellent engraved likeness of the author adorns the volume.

THE FIELD AND THE FOLD; or a Popular Exposition of the Science of Agriculture. By the Rev. Edwin Sydney, author of "Life of the Wheat," etc. Edited by Thomas O. Summers. Pp. 191, price 30 cents.

The Field and the Fold furnished the first vocations for man—they will furnish also the last. They are in the foremost ranks of useful and honorable employments. The application of the principles of modern science to agricultural and pastoral pursuits is of immense importance. He who shows how two blades of grass can be made to grow with the same labor as the farmer has been accustomed to expend for the production of a single blade, is a benefactor to his race. Such a service has been rendered by the author of this little work on rural science, which we therefore particularly commend to the careful study of all whose employments are identified with the field and the fold. The general reader will find in it a mass of valuable and interesting information, which will amply repay perusal.

THE ART OF PRINTING. Edited by Thomas O. Summers. Pp. 181; price 30 cents.

This volume traces the progress of the art preservative of all art, from the impressions of the cylinders of ancient Babylon, to the beautiful pages produced by the stereotype plate and steam-power presses of our own age. It contains a great deal of curious and valuable information, which will scarcely fail to be interesting to the reader, whether young or old. It has been carefully revised, and a few slight additions have been made by the editor. It is illustrated with some good engravings, representing the presses and engine used in the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It contains, also, directions for proof-reading, with a specimen of corrected proof-sheet, which will be of use to those who write for the press.

PARIS: Ancient and Modern. Revised by Thomas O. Summers. Pp. 188: price 30 cents.

It is frequently said, He who has seen Paris has seen all France. This is, of course, a great exaggeration. It is, however, true, that perhaps no other nation has proportionally so great a concentration of genius, talent, science, art, literature, fashion and vice, in its metropolis, as France has in Paris. It is truly a wonderful city: its history is full of interest. A reliable and satisfactory description of the city capital is contained in the present volume.

THE VILLAGE SUNDAY-SCHOOL; with Brief Sketches of Three of its Scholars. By John C. Symons. Revised by Thos. O. Summers. Pp. 84: price 25 cents.

A nice little book, illustrative of the value of the Sunday School—that most important institution of the Church.

OUTLINES OF SUNDAY SCHOOL LECTURES; with References to hymns in the Sunday-School Hymn Book of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and an Introductory Essay on Composition and Delivery. Revised by Thomas O. Summers. Pp. 120; price 30 cents.

In revising this little work, the editor has taken the liberty to correct the style in a few places, and occasionally to add a line or two where he thought it necessary to do so. He has also appended to each "Outline" the first line of three or four of the "Hymns for Schools and Families," recently published for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. They are to be sung before and after the Lecture, as circumstances may suggest. Superintendents and others who may use this book, would do well to peruse carefully the Introductory Essay on the composition and delivery of a Sunday-school lecture. Some hints on this subject may also be found in our little book, entitled, "The Sunday-School Teacher; or the Catechetical Office," which ought to accompany the present volume.

The Vicksburg Sentinel of the 20th inst. says: "We have to announce the death of the Rev. A. D. Corbyn, Rector of St. Andrew's Church, at Jackson, (Episcopal.) This good man has followed the noble example of Patterson, Cleaver, and Chadburne, and, like a good shepherd, has given his life to his flock. He leaves a widow and six children."

BUSINESS AND LARGE RECEIPTS OF COTTON.—Our levee at this time presents a most lively and animating scene, particularly in the vicinity of the steamboat landing. The landings above, occupied by vessels as high as the Fourth District, and below towards the lower limits of the Third District, embracing a space of nearly four miles, is all bustle, life and activity.

We have also to note the arrival of some of the largest cargoes of cotton of the season, being the steamboats John Simonds, from Memphis, with 4,046 bales; the great Princess, from Vicksburg, with 4,050 bales; the Magnolia, from Vicksburg, with 3,282 bales; Kimball, from Fort Adams, with 946 bales; Music, from Port Hudson, with 444 bales; C. D., Jr., from Waterloo, with 139 bales; Fulton, from Onachita, with 849 bales; Hope, from Alexandria, 615 bales; Lone Star, from Alexandria, 195 bales; Latona, from Waterloo, 58. Total, up to 9 o'clock last evening, for the forty-eight hours, 15,175 bales.

Deaths.

DIED—In Macon, Miss., on the 11th inst., Miss ANNIE HORTENTIA HOPKINS, wife of T. A. Hopkins, Esq., of that place, and daughter of Mrs. Eliza Purnell, formerly of Green county, Ala., aged 18 years.

In recording the death of this lovely and interesting lady, our feelings are divided between sympathising sorrow for the bereavement of those to whom her presence was as the light of life, and the consolatory assurance, supplied by Christian faith that she has passed away from the chequered scenes of earth to the inexpressible happiness of a blissful eternity. We know not the circumstances of her transition to the spirit-world; we only know that while she lingered here she fulfilled woman's mission, as priestess of the domestic altar; and now, that she is gone darkness and bitter grief brood over and invade that home where her cheerful spirit and kindly offices had so uniformly dispensed sunshine and joyousness.

Endowed with quick perceptions, delicate sensibilities and refined tastes, which had been trained and strengthened by mental culture, she had ascertained, young as she was, that these alone could not satisfy the demands of an immortal soul. She felt that only Religion enlarges every perception of happiness and gives a higher zest to every rational enjoyment, while it elevates sanctifies and perfects the character for Heaven. Influenced by these convictions, she had in her early years consecrated her heart to God; and the subsequent tenor of her young life was as beautiful as it was brief; endearing all by its gentleness and social graces to all who knew her. She had been married but a short month. Trustful, guileless and happy, to her vision, no cloud overhung her present or threw its shadow across her future. But the "Messenger" came! and while we might not that in humble faith she yielded her pure spirit to Him who gave it, we can but pay the tribute of human sympathy to the bereaved and stricken-hearted—whose love and hopes had been garlanded by her love. To them we would say:

> Each hope, each fear
> That lights the eye or clouds the brow
> Proclaims there is a happier sphere
> Than this bleak world that holds us now.
> There is a voice which sorrow hears,
> When heaviest weighs life's galling chain:
> 'Tis Heaven that whispers—"dry your tears,
> The pure in heart shall meet again."

Holmes, Miss. A. R. C.

DIED—Near Vicksburg, Miss., on the 13th inst. JOHN MASSILON LANE, of yellow fever, in the 24th year of his age.

This most excellent young man fell a martyr to his own deep affections for his beloved friends. When the terrible scourge entered the homestead, it was evidently brought by servants who had been to the city, and several of them suffered severely. To them he ministered day and night, till nearly worn out. Then his father was suddenly and violently seized with the fever, and he turned all attentions to him, and never left him night and day for many days, till forced at last by the same disease to resign. But this he did not would not do till the disease had preyed upon his system for near two days. After he left his bed he tried to persuade himself he had not the yellow fever, but was only worn out with toil, and in an unguarded moment ate from his bed and went to see his father, but fear he might miss him, and think he was ill, and so from parental solicitude experience the advantage. Thus he laid the foundation for his own desolation, in the warmth of his truly affectionate and devoted heart. But it seems almost an abuse of thought and language to call this departure a death.

It was a scene of surpassing sublimity. When told he must die, he said he knew it, and only wished to live for the sake of his dear mother. And then for more than an hour he spoke of death—of Heaven—of the atonement of Christ—of his trust in the Redeemer, and in a manner that seemed more like inspiration than anything we had ever heard before. His physicians were present, whom he addressed his grateful words, as did with others stood amazed at the beauty of his thoughts and the perfect resignation of his spirit. The servants were called, to whom he individually addressed suitable remarks, then sent kind words and loving messages to all his kindred and friends. Several times he sung some of the sweet hymns that had been his father's favorites, and spoke of the joyful meeting he would soon experience at a meeting his father in Heaven. If any one could picture to himself a scene of transcendent power and beauty, let him imagine it as seen such a youth—so loved, so honored—so full of promise—dying as calmly, as rationally as man ever died, and repenting that marvelously hymn—

> "Going to me of Heaven,
> When I am called to die," and he will have a picture before him that no angel might feel ambitious to behold. It was this that—

> "Like one who draws the drapery of his couch
> About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams," bade us all farewell, with a sure hope that we should all meet him again in Heaven.

CYPRESS.

Dear Bro. McTyeire—Our dearly beloved sister ELIZABETH ANN TURNER is gone. In the ordinary walks of life she was a meet worthy pattern. In conflicting interests or opinion she was a successful mediator. Among the poor in their afflictions she distributed her wealth like a good Samaritan.

She was the wife of E. H. Turner, born in Jefferson county, Mississippi, on the 19th September, A. D. 1812, and born again at Methodistic Camp Meeting in Natchitoches Parish, La., 1844, having four years previously united with the M. E. Church, and was a consistent mourner and seeker until her conversion; and since a worthy christian patron. She died on the 26th August, 1855, after a short illness. Her greatly afflicted companion communicated the probable issue of her death. She replied with emphasis, "I know it," and calmly added, "my trust is in Jesus." Then called and prudently addressed each one of her eight children, giving expressions of assurance never to be forgotten by them. That all is well, she sealed her words with a farewell kiss.

With great effort she performed this duty. After a short rest she gave direction for her funeral to be preached by the writer. Also many tokens of religious victory, while steady decline marked her passing away from temporal sufferings to Eternal Glory. May each member of the bereft family follow her as she followed Christ—Amen.

CONFERENCE STATISTICS.

It is of great importance that the Statistics returned by the preachers to Conference should be as accurate as they can be made. They are spread upon the Journals, enter into the General Minutes, and are published to the world as true. There is a moral obligation upon the church, as well as upon individuals—that she tell the truth. But the church derives her information from the preachers, and they must first give a true statement. Sound ethics will not allow guess-work or resort to prior numbers. The preacher should know what he reports to be true. He must, therefore, begin with his church records—eliminate all names not properly belonging to these, add all that do, and keep a clean record. To this end, he should have it always in his possession, and whenever he returns from his appointments make such entries as facts call for—receiving also and entering the reports of the junior preacher. This record he should leave to his successor to be used in like manner. In this case he will not be dependant upon his "last round," or the presence or absence of the "class book" for the numbers in each society. He has them at home—or, if provided with a pocket memorandum book, (as every preacher should be,) he can, by setting down the original sum at the beginning of the year, and from time to time making the requisite additions and subtractions, always have the statement in his pocket. This will not, however, dispense with the record.

We make a suggestion for an improvement in the method of reporting. Instead of devoting two or three hours in open Conference to the "call for numbers," why may not the requite information be conveyed privately to the Secretary, and after he has made his entries and has prepared the Report, let it be read in Conference in the hearing of all? It will save time, confusion and mistake. To facilitate this we would have blank reports furnished to the preachers, which they may fill up and hand to the Secretary early in the Conference. So also for the Stewards, the Sunday School and Missionary and tract Boards. The Secretary can get from them those aggregates which he must enter on his records, for their reports are as authentic as is his of the numbers. These blanks might be published at Nashville, and procured by all the Secretaries at the expense of the Conferences; and if this is done there would be uniformity among the Conferences in this respect.

We append for their information and to be corrected or added to, if need be, as well as to give the preachers a knowledge of the items to be reported, a form as near like that we would like propose as we can make a column of a newspaper, resembling a sheet of foolscap. We should put all the blank reports on one sheet—and they could be separated by the preachers, and handed to the officers for whom they are respectively intended.

THE LATE REV. JOHN LANE.

The notice of last week published him a native Georgian. He was a Virginian by birth.

He was a man of great kindness of heart—gentle and forbearing in deportment. His reminiscences of past times, labors and men were rich and hallowing. Age was borne with beautiful grace. Of the poor he was tenderly considerate, and none was more liberal towards them of the means he controlled.

A friend furnishes these additional and interesting particulars of death-bed scenes:

Our time is too much occupied with the sick and dying to extend these remarks to a proper length. But until a more extended notice can be prepared, we will briefly state that the sickness and death of Brother Lane were in perfect harmony with his life—calm, unruffled, peaceful and resigned. The power of the disease had made terrible progress upon him, and prevented the easy utterance of his thoughts at the time when it was seen he must succumb and die. But the Gospel he had so long and faithfully preached to others was his own solace and support in the trying hour. "I have," said he, "endeavored to be an upright and humble Christian, and I die clinging to the cross—the blood stained cross of the Lord Jesus Christ. I have loved God and the Church, and many and great are the sacrifices I have made to keep in the itineracy and preach the Gospel. Tell my brethren I hope they will carry out the great work of preaching Christ as the only Saviour."

Many other observations of a similar kind were also made. His afflicted wife was lying sick in an adjoining room, and was carried to his couch to take leave of him, and oh! may our Heavenly Father give grace to heal the sorrows of that parting hour! In two other rooms, two sons lay in the clutches of the terrible foe, and one of them, the youngest son, has since joyfully gone to meet his father and his father's God. A large concourse followed the remains of the venerable man to his quiet grave, and wept that they should see his face no more.

Few men have lived to nobler or better purpose, and if they who "turn many to righteousness shall shine as stars forever," then surely, surely, his light shall be bright indeed upon the horizon of his new and eternal home. C. K. M.

Vicksburg, Oct. 11, 1855.

CLOSING OF COFFEE-HOUSES, ETC.

On Saturday we spoke of the Mayor's proclamation requesting coffee-house keepers to close their establishments on the day of election, in appropriate terms of commendation. We think the recommendation a decidedly wise and prudent one, and trust that all coffee-house keepers in the city will carry it out, by closing their places of business, although there is no law to compel them to do so. As stimulating beverages are not at all calculated to make men peaceable—as there is already a deep excitement prevailing to which the passage of such day adds intensity—we think that the persons referred to might well afford to comply with the request of the chief executive magistrate of the city, and thus contribute their proportion towards the maintenance of law and order.

But, while we cordially commend the spirit of the proclamation of Mayor Lewis, we are inclined to think that it is not sufficiently comprehensive in its scope. It provides, or seeks to provide, for the day, but it leaves unguarded the previous night! For our part, we have some knowledge of elections in this city, and so far as evils arising from liquor-drinking are concerned, we feel entirely persuaded that more rows and disturbances flow from liquor drank on the night before the election than that which is imbibed on the day of election! At all events, such has been the result of our experience.

Now, while we would like to see the coffee-houses closed, in accordance with the request of the Mayor, on the day of election, still we would prefer that they should be open on that day, provided they were closed the preceding night. We believe more good would be accomplished by the pursuit of the one course than by the pursuit of the other. But, if both could be accomplished, we feel quite sure that the best results—results that would gladden the hearts of law-abiding citizens and patriots—would follow; that all danger of rioting would be obviated; and that good order, peace and quiet, would reign supreme. FEVER IN MISSISSIPPI.—Up to latest accounts no new cases of fever had appeared in Jackson. The Vicksburg Whig of Saturday says of the health of that place:

We are gratified in being able to report a continued improvement in the health of Vicksburg. We hear of only two or three new cases. The weather continues unusually warm for the season, which forbids a hope of a frost for some days yet, and certainly not until after a rain.

The Port Gibson Herald of Friday says:

The fever is still prevailing to some considerable extent in this town. There have been about a dozen new cases within the last week, but no deaths. There has been quite a number of new cases in the adjoining country. There are some who are very sick, though none that are dangerously so. It is not at all likely that the epidemic will entirely subside, until a severe frost, and when that will occur is uncertain.

There have been a few new cases at Grand Gulf, and one death—a Mr. Abbot.

The manual dexterity of the Russian mechanics is said to be almost marvelous. The favorite implement of all workers in wood is an axe with a broad blade and short handle. The workman wields it with one hand, and he will smooth a board with it as well as with a plane, or make a joint that defies the closest scrutiny to detect it. Though as yet no great work of art, no wonderful creation of genius, no striking discovery in science or invention in mechanics, has been produced by a Russian, yet in everything that requires accuracy of eye, delicacy of touch, and minute imitation, he is unsurpassed.

The bridge over the Mississippi at Rock Island, Illinois, is rapidly progressing. Four of the piers are built, and the fifth and last will be ready for the superstructure in all this month. It is thought that trains will cross in January or February.

The publication of the Norfolk Herald has been resumed, but for the present is only issued tri-weekly. We learn from the number of the 15th that an attempt was made, on the previous Thursday, to fire the Howard Infirmary in that town. The fire was discovered and extinguished, however, before any damage was done.

The Kane Expedition.

Highly Interesting Account of the Expedition, as Related by Dr Kane to Mr Henry Grinnell.

We have already learned by Telegraph the fact that the Harstein Expedition sent in search of that of Dr. Kane returned to New York on the 11th, bringing the gallant Doctor and his brave company.

The Kane Expedition left New York in the brig Advance on the 31st of May, 1853, under the command of Dr Kane, U. S. N., in search of Sir John Franklin.

The Hartstein Expedition, in search of Dr. Kane, left New York on the 4th of June, 1855, under the command of Lieut H. J. Hartstein U. S. N. This expedition consisted of the propeller Arctic and bark Release. The following highly interesting account of its voyage and conspicuous results, is taken from the Journal of one of its officers:

INCIDENTS OF THE VOYAGE OF THE HARTSTEIN EXPEDITION.

On the 4th of June we got under way at 5 A. M. On the 6th the Release passed the Arctic for several days and cleared the banks of Newfoundland on the 14th. On the 16th made the first iceberg, a very large fellow, about 5 o'clock in the morning. June 17, at the Equinox, passed through a good deal of bergs ice. From the large quantities of ice that we met with, the season must have been a very severe one.

Nothing more of note occurred till June 22 when we had no occasion for a light in the cabin; the sun setting at 11 o'clock and rising a little after 12 o'clock midnight. That is, at the 21st of June, the sun is in a constant the same latitude in each 24 hours. Strange is this phenomenon. June 23 very little ice is now only one berg; at 12 o'clock we could it was all as dark as an hour after sunset at home; the varied light land in the morning warning us of the approach of day.

At noon on the 24th made Greenland, one hundred and fifty miles ahead of Cape Farewell, the old Arctic mariners aiming to observe this first object was a great deal more so we here than they were as before.

July 2, the sun descended to within its disk above the horizon, and then rose again daily 5, afternoon, made the Knox Prince Islands; Disco Island in sight; one sailors and nine all well; anchored at 6:30 in the harbor of Godsby, the royal Danish inspector, Mr. Olrik, came off to us and tendered us the hospitalities of all North Greenland.

Godsby is a town of one hundred, and fifty inhabitants composed of from twelve Danes and the rest half-breed Danes, and full-blooded Esquimaux; one of the officers was old Arctic cruiser, and for his friends, and two of them daughters of Hedeby Sophie and Marie, came on board and staid one night, and dined with us. We invited them to tea, and after spending the evening in social conversation, they were escorted home by the officers. Every night, Sundays excepted, while we remained there, we had balls and parties and passed the time very pleasantly. Imagine a ball-room full of Greenland belles, dressed in sealskins moccasins and breeches ornamented with gay-colored beads, and dancing to the music of melodeons and violins. On the squadron left Godsby, and stood in for Waigat Straits for Leivly; saw a whale while dead on the beach; suppose she had come up the river to give birth to the calf, and was lost by the receding tide. For two days there was a heavy fog; saw many bergs, and kept firing guns for the Arctic to keep with us.

The Release made Haron Island on the 24th of July; saw a boat, which we imagined contained Dr. Kane and his party. Cleared on the 15th, and spoke a couple of whalers, who told us that they had tried to get through Melville Bay, but had to give up the attempt on account of the ice, and they thought it almost hopeless for us to try it.

After taking in coal in the Waigatt, we advanced to Upernavik, the most northern Danish settlement. This place consists of some half-dozen rude frame houses, and some twenty or thirty white inhabitants, and about one hundred Esquimaux, who live in winter in stone huts and in summer in skin tents.

The sun resembles in Upernavik the highest summit of civilization on the American continent. A few hours after they made it, and pressed on in the north. They met the ice about thirty miles north of Upernavik, and were working their way through for four weeks by a constant watchfulness and untiring labor.

About the 12th of August they made open water north of Cape York. The ice had undergone several severe nips, the last one on the 20th, which nearly proved fatal. The bark and steamer then made their way north, stopping at Jakslyut Island, and attempting without success to get into Barden's bay, until they reached Cape Alexander. Here no traces being found of the missing party, the steamer, with Captain Hartstein on board went on ahead until they reached Littleton Island in about 78 deg. The last northern point they reached was about 78 deg. 82 min. Here, to the north of the Littleton about ten miles, they discovered a cairn containing a bottle in which Dr Kane's name was written. But in entering the channel between Littleton Island and the main land, which is about one-third of a mile wide, they were nipped by Esquimaux. A boat was sent and the savages saluted the ears of the party with Dr. Kane's name. There were about twenty or thirty savages, men, women and children. They signified very earnestly that Dr. Kane's party had left the vessel, which they made signs had been crushed between two pieces of ice, and that Dr Kane had gone south in two boats. They attempted to wed "Upernavik."

The expedition being again met by ice, further progress to the north was out of the question. We turned back and crossed the Sound and returned along the west coast, but were unable to enter Lancaster sound, the passage being barred by impassable ice. Thus we, unfortunately, were unable to erect Lady Franklin's monument to her lamented husband and his brave comrades on Beachy Island as the deed was. This monument was subsequently placed in charge of Mr. Orlick, royal inspector of North Greenland, at Leivly.

The coast was carefully scanned on the west side, in case Dr. Kane should have pushed for the provision depots which are known to exist at Beachy Island and the expedition navigated Pond's bay, the cruising ground of the whalers, and met Esquimaux, from whom they obtained some dogs as specimens. The vessels now proceeded to return to Upernavik—which they began on, in the event of meeting no ships, of returning and wintering at some eligible point north of Melville Bay.

In the middle of Baffin's bay and opposite Upernavik, they got into the ice pack with a heavy sea to boot. The bark, which was out of signal distance of the steamer, got between a couple of bergs, and such was the noise made by the grinding of the ice in the swell, that they fired several guns at the peril of bringing the iceberg down upon them by the concussion. The steamer did not hear the signal, and the bark, after being roughly used and sustaining much damage—losing jibboom, starting the bowsprit and carrying away her false keel—emerged and got out of the pack and joined the steamer opposite Leivly. The vessels then made for Leivly. Outside of the harbor they were met by Dr Kane and his party in two boats, who were thus, by Divine Providence, permitted to return to the society of their gallant countrymen and to enjoy the kind hospitality which their country had sent to their succor. It would be needless to describe the joy of all parties at this meeting; suffice it to say that after remaining about a week at Leivly, taking on board water, &c., the anchor was weighed for home."

From the Herald we extract the following account of the adventures and discoveries of Dr. Kane and his companions during their long absence:

New York was thrown into a state of considerable excitement in the afternoon by the safe return of Captain Hartstein, Dr. Kane, and their gallant comrades. The whole town, indeed, were delighted.

As soon as the vessels came to anchor off the Battery, Dr Kane hurried ashore, and proceeded at once to the Astor House, where he was warmly welcomed by a host of friends and acquaintances. Every one crowded to see him, and for a few minutes he was so completely surrounded and beset by eager inquiries that it was with the greatest difficulty he could make his escape. When he at last succeeded in gaining the street, he, in company with a friend, got into a carriage and drove up to the residence of Mr. Henry Grinnell, in Bond street. His arrival had been expected by Mr. Grinnell, who received him with such a welcome as only comes from the very depths of the heart.

"I have no Advance with me," said Dr. Kane, alluding to the loss of the vessel, which, as we have stated, he was obliged to abandon in the ice.

"Never mind that," replied Mr. Grinnell; "so long as you are safe, that is all we care about. Come into the parlor," he added, "and let us hear the whole story."

And Dr Kane proceeded at once to relate the story of his second voyage to the Arctic regions, the perils and dangers to which he was exposed, his wonderful adventures, and still more wonderful escape. We give it as nearly in his own words as possible, stating, however, at his request, that his official account will be published as early as practicable, and that any errors or inaccuracies will be corrected in it. He was obliged, he said, to abandon the Advance in latitude 78 45, after having penetrated as far as 82 30, which was further than any other navigator had gone with the exception of Captain Parry, who reached the latitude of 82 45. While here he saw the Polynya or open sea, stretching away off to the north farther than the eye could reach. This point he had reached after traveling eighty or ninety miles over the ice in sledges, but as an immense zone of interrested between him and his vessel, it was impossible for him to prosecute his investigation farther northward. For two winters the Advance was completely hemmed in; and as it became evident to him from the condition of his men, that they could not survive another winter, he determined to leave her and make the best of his way to the nearest settlement. He discovered about eighty new capes and twenty bays, and found land up as far as he was enabled to penetrate. The extreme northern boundary of this he named Grinnell's Land, in honor of Mr. Henry Grinnell. The hardships they endured were of a fearful character, and at one time six out of their party of nineteen were so low that it was thought they could not survive. Of these three died, and the rest were saved, after the most unremitting care and attention. One of these was Mr Alston, the carpenter who died, while crossing over the ice, of beriberi, superinduced by the intense cold. The other two were Irish sailors. The doctor saw, he said, was very prevalent.

The party, after making their way over thirteen hundred miles of ice, arrived at Leivly or Godhaven, and had taken passage in a Danish brig named the Marie when the Release made her appearance. Their joy at meeting their countrymen her can better be imagined than described.

They lost no time, it is almost needless to state, in taking their departure, and after a favorable voyage arrived within sight of land, where they were hailed by the steamship Union about sixty miles east of Sandy Hook.

A minute statement of his trials, &c.—the expedition succeeded in crossing Melville Bay and reaching the headlands of Smith Sound as early as the 5th of August, 1853. Finding the ice to the north completely impenetrable, they were forced to attempt a temporary passage along the coast, where the rapid tides—running at the rate of four knots an hour with a rise and fall of thirteen feet—had worn a temporary opening. Perilous to taking this step, which involved great responsibility, and which was in fact, equivalent to sacrificing the vessel, a Russian naturalist had with a canoe of provisions, was concealed as a means of retreat.

The penetration of the pack ice was attended by many obstacles. The vessel grounded with every tide, and but for her extreme strength, would not have been able to sustain the shocks of the ice. She was twice on her beam ends, and once on fire from the upsetting of the stoves. Some idea of the navigation may be formed from the fact of her losing her jibboom, boat, her anchors, and bulwarks, besides about six hundred fathoms of warping line. They were chased, however by a small daily progress, and by the 19th September 1853, had succeeded in gaining the northern face of Greenland, at a point never reached before. Here the young ice froze around the vessel and compelled them to seek a winter asylum.

The winter gave them a degree of cold much below any Progress of the Walker Expedition.

We extract the following from an interesting letter to the New York Herald, by a person connected with Col Walker's command. It is dated at Walker's headquarters, San Juan, October 3:

Now as to our battle at Rivas, on the 29th of June we entered the city at 12 o'clock, and being described by our native troops, excepting a few noncommissioned officers, we longed them three hundred and a half and then defeated. Our party were fifty-three strong, contending against over five hundred disciplined troops. We emerged from four times and ran them off. We had ten men killed and nine wounded. The killed were as follows: Lieut. Colonel Reeves, Major Crocker, Sergeant Melndez, William Cole, Counsellor Frank Doe, Quartermaster's sergeant, Gorman, Easterbrook, Wisham Bailey, William Jones, William Wilson. Our wounded have all recovered. I saw my own name in your paper among the killed.

The enemy have admitted that they had one hundred and fifty of their rank and file killed and fifteen officers in that no one could show himself on horseback without being killed by some of our men.

Our force in the engagement have fought with us but for the orders of their commanding officer, who showed himself a poltroon. The enemy have also admitted that their native force had assisted us, as our own force had been one hundred instead of fifty men. Our wounded have taken the place.

We returned to Benijo, where we stayed one or two months, and returned again to this part of the country. We brought with us over 100 native troops, under the command of one of the best and bravest officers in the country, Gen. Chilion. He is assisted by Col. Mendez, Col Lun-arraga, and other brave and gallant officers. After remaining some days in this place we went to Virgin Bay the night of the 24 of September. We had forty-seven rifles and a hundred and twenty native muskets.—We arrived at Virgin Bay about sunrise, and were attacked by the enemy shortly after breakfast. They were five hundred and forty strong, under the command of Guardiola. After a fight of one hour and two hours we dispersed and entirely routed them, taking all their ammunition, an ox cart load—all the private papers of Guardiola, a lot of liquors, etc., etc. We had not one man killed. Two of our boys, Lieut. Ben. Williamson and James Small, were badly wounded, but are recovering. We also had seven natives wounded, two badly. They are all recovering. The enemy had eighty-six killed and many wounded. Out of five hundred and forty only one hundred got back to Rivas, some of whom have since died of their wounds. We entirely lost four hundred muskets, and, at the lowest calculation, three hundred men is killed and deserters.—We took over one hundred muskets, the others being thrown away in the woods and mountains.

We have been recruiting every day. Our native force is now over two hundred, and our party over one hundred strong. The Cortez got in this morning, bringing us forty men, thirty-seven rifles, twenty or thirty muskets, and a lot of ammunition. Our new recruits say that the next steamer from San Francisco will bring us one hundred more recruits, well armed and equipped. The enemy have five hundred troops in Rivas; three hundred of the number have to be guarded by the other two hundred to keep them from deserting. Their cause and party are unpopular with the mass, and Guardiola, from his brutality, is very unpopular with his own troops. He made his men cease their pillaging, and gave them whisky and powder to drink before he attacked us at Virgin Bay.

He attacked sixty-seven dead after the fight at Virgin Bay, over half of whom were shot through the head, which shows how our boys handle their rifles. The enemy were so concealed in the timber and bushes, that our boys only had heads to shoot at most of the time.

By the arrival on Saturday of the steamship Chas. Morgan, Capt. Place, we have received later dates from Galveston and interior Texas.

Mr. Edward Peck has been elected Mayor of Austin, by a majority of seven votes. He was the candidate of the American party.

A letter from Richmond says the cotton picking has been going on actively for three weeks. The worm is not general, but is confined to a few localities, where it is very destructive.

The Houston Bulletin says the telegraph line from that city to Shreveport La., is now in good working order.

The second Regiment of cavalry, now at Jefferson Barracks, has been ordered to proceed by easy marches across the country to Fort Belknap, Texas. Gen. Smith will then station the companies as circumstances may require.

The Austin State Times of the 13th publishes the following as the very latest from Capt. Callahan's command on the Rio Grande.

Hon. U. S. West arrived from San Antonio per Friday's stage. A dispatch had been received at that place from Capt. Callahan's command, dated on the 10th inst., stating that the Mexicans and Indians had had another fight during which the town of Piedras Negras was burnt to the ground. Capt Callahan has crossed over to this side and is fortified. Considerable excitement exists at San Antonio, and men are being raised there and elsewhere to go to his aid.

A letter from Capt. Callahan, through dated the same day with the above news, is still later and contains more minute information of the fight.

The Mexicans and Indians numbered seven hundred and fifty. Their loss was eighty-five killed and one hundred wounded. These particulars were ascertained from the Mexicans. Lieut Tom, who brought in the letter, says there is no doubt of Capt Callahan having received permission to cross the Rio Grande, from the Mexican authorities. He has been advised to join it with the officer in command at Fort Duncan.

The Galveston Newsstates that a letter dated the 14th had been received from San Antonio stating that Capt. Callahan and his troops came in on the previous day for the purpose of recruiting. The News says:

There were various rumors all out of large bodies of Indians and Mexicans having crossed the Rio Grande, with hostile intentions. The consequence was a great deal of excitement. A large meeting of the citizens of San Antonio was held on the night of the 13th, and resolutions passed urging the necessity of an immediate organization of 1000 mounted men for immediate service.

A letter from Col Ford says:

An attempt will be made to send aid to Capt. Callahan. It is proposed to form a camp near San Antonio and move from it on the 17th inst. (next Wednesday week.) There is a very great importance attached to the matter if the force now on the Rio Grande is compelled to fall back for want of aid from the interior, the frontier will be immediately visited by a motley set of savage outlaws.

Gen. Smith is said to be very indignant at the idea of their crossing the Rio Grande, in pursuit of barbarians, who have perpetrated so many atrocities upon the Texans. He is reported to have said if he was well they made a good fight, else they would all have been caught and hung as they deserved; also, to have used the word "pilate" in relation to them.

The Rondout, (N. Y.,) tells of a young man in that place, a spiritual medium who was suddenly raised while in church with blindness, and soon after with utter loss of speech—calamities which he still endures. He dwells in a condition of anger, but without any physical disease. The active agents of this melancholy affliction are still unknown, and of the particular character of the influence they exert to work up on the young man. They assert that the miserable state in which he lies is a most glorious condition; that his physical senses are suspended only to make the interior illumination more brilliant, and that when he returns to the world-life again he will know infinitely more than he was ever before aware of.

We learn from the Vincennes (Ia.) Gazette that Rev E B. McCormick has been suspended by the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Indiana, for "unchristian conduct"—the first specification being "for associating himself with the Underground Railroad," and the second "for actually engaging in the business of assisting slaves in making their escape from slave to free territory, which is contrary to the laws of the State of Indiana." The Gazette would do well not to venture south of Indiana, for should he do so, he might be "suspended" in an altogether different manner.

On the 15th, Mayor Wood, of New York, sent back but forty-six immigrants who had been brought to that port by a vessel from Hamburg.

Liverpool Cotton Market

According to the circular of Messrs Brown, Shipley & Co., the Liverpool Cotton market had experienced a considerable decline since the departure of the Pacific. Fair Orleans and Uplands, and the lower descriptions generally had declined most. Prices of all descriptions are quoted ¼ to ⅜ of a penny per pound lower, as will be seen by the following figures:

Fair Orleans 6¾d, Middling Orleans 6¼d. Fair Mobiles 6¾d, Middling Mobiles 5 7-16d, Fair Uplands 6¼, and Middling Uplands 5⅝d per pound.

The sales of the week were 41,000 bales, of which 5,000 were for export. The sales of Tuesday were 11,000 bales, the market closing steady at the above figures.

Breadstuffs.

In the Liverpool market Flour had advanced 1s per bbl. Wheat had advanced 3d per bushel.

Corn was in active demand at unchanged prices.

The following are the quotations: Western Canal Flour 41s per bbl; Philadelphia and Baltimore 42s 6d, and Ohio 44s 6d per bbl; White Corn 35s, and Yellow and Mixed Corn 34s 6d per quarter; White Wheat 12s 8d, and Red Wheat 12s per bushel.

The Liverpool provision market had improved slightly. Pork was firm; Beef was dull of sale.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 24th.—Sales of Flour to-day at $7.50 per bbl. Whisky is without change and active. Sales of New Orleans Sugar at 7c and 7¾c per lb, and molasses at 38c per gallon. Sales of Rio Coffee at 11¾c per lb.

Steamers Due.

The steamship Hermann sailed from Southampton for New York on the 10th inst., and is now fully due at the latter port.

The steamship Ariel was to leave Havre on the 18th and is also about due at New York.

SEVENTY LIVES LOST AT SEA.—Information reached Lloyd's on the 23d, confirming the loss of the Norwegian steamship Norge, with seventy of the passengers and crew, by a collision with the steamer Bergen, on the night of the 11th, about one mile and a half from Christiansand, near Oxheo Lighthouse. The weather was at the time hazy, and the Bergen struck the Norge with such force as to cut her nearly in two amid-ships, and she foundered in deep water immediately. About thirty passengers and crew saved themselves by scrambling on board the other steamer. Another collision was reported on Saturday by telegraph from Marseilles, between the steamer Montebello and the barque Santa Annunziata, near Heyras Islands. The latter sank instantly. The crew were saved, but two passengers who were asleep in the cabin perished.

At the commencement of recruiting troops in this country for the Crimea, Mr. Crampton received an intimation that he and certain consuls were violating our neutrality laws. This aggravates the case, and our government will refuse to recognize him longer, officially. If the British government does not recall him after additional representations through Mr. Buchanan.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—The mortuary report for the last week shows a continued improvement in the health of the city—the yellow fever, which has "clustered in the socket" for a week or two past, being now reduced to a "blue glimmer." The present week, we think, will witness its final extinction.

THURSDAY EVENING, Oct. 25, 1855.

The Money Market coincides with the weather. The late change in the weather, from ordinary warmth to the bracing temperature of the arctic regions, is very sensibly felt by our resident population, coming so soon after reading the exciting accounts of the Kane expedition, would lead to the belief that the sunny South had advanced towards the north pole, for it is many years since winter weather introduced itself at so early a period. Nevertheless the effect on business is of a favorable nature, and on the agricultural pursuits of our State it will also be of essential benefit.

Our community has to day been under considerable excitement at the purport of the dispatches by telegraph from Halifax, advising of the arrival at that port of the steamer Africa, from Liverpool, with dates to the 13th inst. The commercial and financial advices, as published in our issue this morning are confirmed by private dispatches, and are as much at variance with what was expected, that the distinguished individual who is always so well posted up, and whose standing remark is "I told you so," has not been seen to-day on Obenge. It is unnecessary for us to state that under these accounts there has been very little doing to-day, the most important item is a knock-down of one of half to three quarters of a cent on Cotton; the stiffening aspect of freights, however, aids the prospects decline. Fortunately, however, the intelligence comes at a moment when our Cotton factors are from the easy position of our money market, capable of holding on until the squall passes over, though the general opinion is that the worst has to be received. It that as it may, if Cotton is to be the main object of attack, it is consoling to the country at large that Breadstuffs are to maintain the present remunerating rates. Whether there is

A Dandy Among Cows.

Adolphus Spriggins, of the Fifth avenue and Water street, prided himself considerably on his acquaintance with the ways of the town, but his knowledge of country matters was limited. Mr. Spriggins, having rather outrun the constable, found himself one summer not in a situation to undertake his usual jaunt to Saratoga or Newport, and bethought himself on an invitation which he had formerly received from his uncle, Van Brummel, the hearty old farmer, to pay him a visit at Pumpkindale. To Pumpkindale Mr. Spriggins repaired, with the express resolution of astonishing the natives.—This, with the aid of his yellow kids, embroidered waistcoats, brilliant neck ties, patent leather, French phrases and fashionable air, he certainly succeeded in doing. He even made some impression by attractions, on the feelings of Miss Rappleway, a young lady visitor, who had previously been on amicable terms with Gert Van Brommel, the farmer's oldest son. Gert sulked and swore in private, but fear of his father kept him from publicly showing his resentment.—One day, however, an idea occurred to him, which he trusted to account for getting rid of his rival. Gert invited his cousin to go out with him pigeon shooting, and Adolphus, though his taste did not lie much in that way, consented to go as a means of killing time. They set out accordingly with arms, ammunition and provisions for the day, which last were carried by Gert in a small tin pail. About two miles from the house, they came to a pasture field, bordered by extensive woods. A score of cows—Van Brummel was a noted cattle breeder—were feeding at one side of the pasture.

"There, Dolph," said Gert, "the pigeons are in the woods yonder. Now, if you will just stand astride on that flat corner of the field so that I shall know where you are, I will go into the woods and drive the pigeons over to you, and you can pop them as they come out. You keep the pail, too, and we'll have dinner there by and bye."

Spriggins agreed to these terms, which exactly suited his easy notions of sport, and while Gert plunged into the woods he started for the flat rock which had been pointed out to him.

No sooner had he placed himself upon it than, to his consternation, all the cows in the pasture rushed frantically towards him, lowing loudly, kicking up their heels, pushing one another, and behaving as though they had been suddenly smitten with insanity. Adolphus stood paralyzed, expecting to be gored to death, or trampled under foot. But instead of that, the cows merely formed a circle round him, stamping, bellowing, shaking their horns, and glaring at him with their great eyes, in an unaccountable manner. He shouted in terror to Gert, but received no answer. He dared not leave the rock, or even fire his gun to attract his cousin's attention, for, at the slightest movement that he made, there was a general stir among the cows, a shaking of a formidable array of horns, and an impatient stamp and murmur, as if preparatory to a rush. Spriggins was utterly bewildered. To do him justice, he would very likely have fired a loaded pistol ten paces without flinching. But this novel danger was of such a strange and frightful character that he was totally unnerved. He stood motionless, waiting for his cousin or somebody else to come him, and the cows with equal patience, kept up the siege until their wretched prisoner was ready to drop with terror and exhaustion.

At last, late in the afternoon, the burly form of old Van Brummel presented itself to the delighted eyes of Adolphus. His uncle came slowly through the field with a tin pail on his arm, and no sooner did the cows get a glimpse of him than they deserted and tore furiously towards his uncle, who shouldered his way through them with the utmost unconcern.

"Goodness gracious, uncle," gasped poor Spriggins, "what's the meaning of this extraordinary conduct of these dreadful animals?"

And he related with considerable agitation the history of his captivity among them. His uncle roared and shook his sides with laughter.

"Haw! haw! haw! do tell now! You've been standing on that ere stone all day, frightened by the keows. Ho! ho! ho! bless your soul, Dolph, the keows are good critters. They wouldn't hut a baby. Thought you were coming to salt 'em. Haw! haw! haw! Well now, I that 'ant the best joke I've heard on." And again the stout old farmer laughed until the tears poured down his cheeks.

"Bolt them!" exclaimed the mortified Spriggins. "You don't mean to say that you salt your beasts alive?"

"Yes, I do, Dolph," replied his uncle. "Look here, and you'll see."

So saying, he dumped the salt out of his pail in small parcels over the rock. There was a general stamp and bellow, and a simultaneous rush towards the savory condiment, which really tongues were too busily engaged in licking.

"There, Dolph, you know how keows are salted alive now," said old Van Brummel. "You'd never ha learned that in Wall street. Ho! ho! ho!"

Spriggins returned to the house much crestfallen. The story of his adventure was soon about, and there was great joking and sniggering at the supper-table, the fair Rosalia herself not being able to refrain from joining in the fun. The next morning Spriggins discovered that he had urgent business in the city, and he has never since been seen in Pumpkindale, though his cousin Gert cordially invited him to his wedding that fall. Spriggins now is wont to speak of country life as "extremely vulgar," and on one occasion, when the sport of pigeon shooting had been casually alluded to, he went so far as to pronounce it "an atrocious humbug."

EMERALD BIRD OF PARADISE.—This most gorgeous and elegant bird, says Wood's "Natural History," was once the subject of much discussion among naturalists. The natives of New Guinea were accustomed to dry them, having first cut off their legs, and then offer them for sale. In this footless state they reached Europe, where it was immediately stated that the bird lived always in the air, buoyed up by the lightness of its feathery covering; that the shoulders were used as its nest; that the only rest it took was by suspending itself from a branch by the filamentary feathers of the tail; that its food was the morning dew; together with many other conjectures not less ingenious than amusing.

The bird appears about the size of a jay. Its body, breast and lower parts are of a deep rich brown; the front set close with black feathers shot with green; the throat is of a rich golden green; the head yellow, the sides of the tail are clothed with splendid plume of long downy feathers of a soft yellow color. By these are placed two long filamentous shafts, which extend nearly two feet in length.

Of these beautiful feathers the bird is so proud that it will not suffer the least speck of dirt to remain upon them, and it is constantly examining its plume to see that there are no spots on it. When in its wild state it always flies and sits with its face to the wind, lest its elegant plume should be disarranged.

Far from living exclusively on dew, it eats no small amount of insects, such as grasshoppers, which it will not touch if dead, and commences its repast by stripping off the legs and wings. When in confinement, it also eats boiled rice, plantains, etc., but in the wild state it seems to feed mostly on seeds of the teak-tree, and a kind of fig.

There are several species of Paradise birds known, but the one described above is the most common, and is the one of which the above mentioned fables were told.

ERRORS OF THE PRESS.—Some little experience in the settlement of proof-reading, both prose and verse, enables us to vouch for Miss Biddy Fudge's miseries as drawn to the life. There is quite as much truth as poetry in what she says. We could parallel Miss Biddy's vexations by others, almost as ludicrous, and not less provoking, in our own experience. In the History of the Hedges in England, recounting the miseries of authors, she says that,

"Though an angel should write, 'tis devils must print;" and gives the following instance of the havoc made by the printers in one of her effusions:

"But a week or two since, in my Ode upon Spring,
Which I meant to have made a most beautiful thing,
Where I talked of the "dew-drops from freshly-blown rose,"
The nasty things made it "from freshly-blown noses."

An alderman of London requested an author to write a speech for him to speak at Guildhall. "I must first dine with you," was the reply, "to see how you open your mouth, that I may know what words will fill it."

Mdme. Lagrange and the Poisoned Bouquet.

The Courrier des Etats Unis states that Mdme. Lagrange was present at the last representation of Adrienne Lecouvreur, and in the scene, where Adrienne receives the poisoned bouquet, she was so overcome by her feelings as almost to faint. The emotion, it is said, was occasioned by a terrible recollection of a similar situation in which she was once placed, during the early part of her professional career. It appears, that after achieving great success in the musical salons of Europe, she made a brilliant debut at the theatre. Her second engagement was at Pavia, where her youthful talent entirely eclipsed that of a rival Cantatrice. Each representation was for her a new triumph, and each triumph a defeat for the previous Prima Donna. This circumstance created in the breast of the other a deadly jealousy, and she determined to be avenged, no matter at what cost, or by what means. She was an Italian, with strong passions, and was not therefore to be disappointed of her revenge. She was one of those dangerous Syrens, whose charms are sure to fascinate youth; and Pavia being a university town, it was not difficult to find an instrument for her purpose among the students. She fixed upon a young Venetian, of noble birth and of large fortune. By her blandishments she fairly bewitched this young man, and having obtained an unbounded influence over him, he agreed to carry out her design.

At every representation, Mdlle. Lagrange received numerous bouquets, wreaths, etc.; and among the bouquets which fell at her feet, was invariably one of small dimensions composed of roses only, the perfume of which was delicious. This homage was always paid after the andante of the grand cavatina in Nabucco, an opera then highly popular. Mdlle. Lagrange always placed this small bouquet in her girdle after smelling the perfume, and proceeded with renewed encouragement to the completion of the song.

On one evening the bouquet was larger than usual, and the size preventing her from placing it in her girdle, she handed it to a figurante who stood near her, to carry to her dressing room. At the end of the act she quitted the stage, and was surprised at seeing her dressing maid at the wing, and on opening the door of her room, started back with affright on perceiving her lying on the floor, apparently lifeless! Her cry speedily brought a large number of persons, and the utmost astonishment was expressed as to the cause of this dreadful affair. After endeavoring for five or six minutes to restore the girl from her death-like state, a voice was heard, almost suffocated by emotion, exclaiming, "The bouquet, the bouquet," and on recognising Dr. Marozzi, the physician of Mlle. Lagrange, there was a general enquiry what he meant. He, however, gave no explanation, but continued to repeat, "The bouquet, the bouquet." This mysterious exclamation served to direct attention to a bouquet which had fallen from the girl's hand, and it was eagerly seized.

"What great value do you attach to the bouquet?" demanded Mlle. Lagrange.

"That bouquet, unhappy! it is poisoned!" said the doctor.

A thrill of horror ran through the company, and the cantatrice escaped thus as by a miracle the death which had been designed for her, had scarcely time to recover from the shock, when the signal was given for raising the curtain. She re-appeared, pale, even under the rouge, and with a heart wrung with inexpressible anguish. She sang, however, and played as though filled by inspiration, and the audience were frantic with excitement—never had she received such an ovation.

The doctor, who, it seems, had been in front of the house during the evening, perceived in a very private box the young Venetian, and remarked that his countenance wore a strange expression. The vanquished rival of Lagrange had partly opened the door, and the doctor as he passed heard the young man say—

"It is done—she is dead."

"The bouquet?" said the Italian; the young man made an affirmative sign, and hastily quitted the theatre.

The doctor's suspicions were immediately aroused, and he hastened behind the scenes, where he found that some one had been poisoned by a bouquet, but it was not Mdlle. Lagrange. The guilty party was arrested, but being related to the nobility and the high dignitaries of the Church, he was released after a brief imprisonment; she who had conceived and inspired the crime, was never even arrested.

It was no wonder, therefore, that Mdlle. Lagrange nearly fainted the other evening on seeing Adrienne Lecouvreur inhaling death from a bouquet. She had forgotten the circumstance at the time, but the power of Rachel had brought before her that dreadful scene, with all the force of reality.

HON. MIKE WALSH ON HIS TRAVELS.—Hon. Mike Walsh, a member of the last Congress, and now on a tour through England, is writing home some characteristic letters, which are published in the New York Herald. He thus describes a visit to a political club or society in Liverpool:

"From a little printed bill which was handed me I learned that among the questions to be discussed by the society were the following:

"'Does the human race spring from one pair?'

"'Would the spread of education tend to diminish crime?'

"'Is the faculty of reason confined to man?'

"'Are the people politically prepared for an extension of the suffrage?'

"The latter was the one then under consideration, and my sturdy-lunged friend who had just sat down had been sustaining the affirmative side of the question in reply, as I learned, to a tall Scotch tailor, who was smoking a pipe on the left of the chairman. A little shrivelled fellow with a keen eye, and armed with a most formidable pile of documents and elaborate notes, next entered, in opposition to the extension. He had evidently read a good deal but did not seem to understand his subject. Nearly all his illustrations though seemingly conclusive, were easily turned against himself; and after a very tedious discourse in which he made the most sweeping misstatements against our people and government, he closed by saying that, although fully conscious that his positions were unassailable, he should have no objection to hearing his strange friend (referring to me) make the attempt. Accepting the invitation, I arose and was greeted quite warmly by the almost despairing friends of the suffrage, and believe me, if ever I came down on any one with deserved and withering severity, I did so on this occasion. As I proceeded, our side became gradually flushed with exultation. Scouts were sent out to bring in the faithful, and ere I had got through, the whole hall, stair-way and lane in front were filled with attentive and enthusiastic listeners, and as I closed, such a shout—so long and so deafening—was never before heard in the region of limekiln lane. Even the old windmills re-echoed the prolonged cheer of triumph that rent the air. Finding all excuses utterly useless, I accompanied a large detachment of my delighted adherents into a tavern close by, and much against my will, emptied some half dozen pots of the worst beer I have tasted in England before I could get away."

A "MIDDY" ENTHUSED.—A "middy" has been visiting Niagara. Inspired by the sublimity of that great demonstration, he seizes his pen and dashes off the following for the Home Journal:

Next came the horrid desire to write something—something eloquently touching and sentimental—and in a moment of thoughtlessness I gave way to it, regardless of consequences. "I took my pen in hand," poetically speaking, but truthfully my pencil, and in the next instant the following simple but beautiful lines were gazing at me from the paper:

Niagara! Niagara! Grandmuch of Mother Earth,
And much of Father Ocean, I have stumped it from my birth;
But never have I witnessed, from old Gotham to Peru,
A creature play the "drop game" as completely as you do.

A dispatch of the 10th from Bangor, Me., says:

The celebration of the one hundredth birthday of the Rev. John Sawyer, was attended in this city yesterday by a great concourse of people. The services were at the Central Congregational Church, where the venerable centenarian delivered an address of an hour and a quarter in length without apparent fatigue.—The Sabbath School scholars made him a life member of the American Sunday School Union. Some very appropriate old tunes were sung by the ancient Billings and Holden Musical Society.

Japanese Curiosities.

A number of articles and documents have been received by a gentleman in Newark, N. J., from Japan, which may be regarded as curiosities from that heretofore unknown people. One of them is a literal translation of a letter sent to Commodore Perry, of the Japan squadron, by two scholars who were desirous of coming to this country. It is as follows:

"KANAGAWA, Japan, April 11, 1854.

"Two scholars from Yeddo, in Japan, present this letter for the inspection of the high officers and those who manage affairs. Our attainments are few and trifling, as we ourselves are small and unimportant, so that we are ashamed in coming before you. We are neither skilled in the use of arms, nor are we able to discourse on the rules of strategy and military discipline. In trifling pursuits and idle pastimes our years and mouths have passed away. We have, however, read in books, and learned a little by hearsay, what are the customs and education in Europe and America, and we have been for many years desirous of going over the five great continents; but the laws of our country in all maritime points are very strict. For foreigners to come into the country and for natives to go abroad are both immutably forbidden. Our wish to visit other regions, consequently, only goes to and fro within our own breasts in continual agitation, like one's breathing being impeded or his walking cramped.

"Happily the arrival of so many of your ships in these waters and their stay for so many days—which has given us opportunity to make a pleasing acquaintance and careful examination, so that we are fully assured of the kindness and liberality of your excellies and your regard for others—have also revived the thoughts of many years, and they are urgent for an exit.

"This, then, is the time to carry the plan into execution, and we now secretly send you the private request that you will take us on board your ships as they go out to sea. We can thus visit around in the five great continents, even if we do in this slight the prohibitions of our own country. Lest those who have the management of affairs may feel some chagrin at this, in order to effect our desire we are willing to serve in any way we can aboard the ships and obey the orders given us. For doubtless it is when a lame man sees others walking he wishes to walk too; but how shall the pedestrian gratify his desires when he sees another one riding? We have all our lives been going hither and yon, unable to get more than thirty degrees east and west, or twenty-five degrees north and south; but now, when we see how you sail on the tempests and o'erave the huge billows, going lightning speed thousands and myriads of miles, skirting along the five great continents, can it not be likened to the lame finding a plan for walking, and the pedestrian seeing a mode by which he can ride?

"If you who manage affairs will give our request your consideration, we will retain the sense of the favor; but the prohibitions of our country are still existent, and if this matter should become known we should uselessly see ourselves pursued and brought back for immediate execution without fail; and such a result would greatly grieve the deep humanity and kindness you all bear towards others. If you are willing to accede to the request keep wrapped in silence our error in making it until you are about to leave, in order to avoid all risks of such serious danger to life; for when, by and by, when we come back, our countrymen will never think it worth while to investigate bygone doings. Although our words have only loosely let our thoughts leak out, yet truly they are sincere; and, if your excellencies are pleased to regard them kindly, do not doubt them or oppose our wishes. We together pay pay our respects in handing this in."

[It is hardly necessary to add that the request was granted by the Commodore, as it would be a breach of good feeling between the two countries.]

MISSISSIPPI.—The editor of the Jackson Mercury says he took a ride a few days since on the Canton Railroad, as far as its present terminus—ten and a half miles. He says the work is progressing as rapidly as circumstances will allow, and by the 15th of November the cars will run regularly to "Calhoun," the depot sixteen miles from Jackson, that the work is done in the most durable manner, and will compare favorably with any railroad in the country. This road, he says, will not be completed to Canton before the first of January next, owing to the late epidemic, and low water rendering it impossible to procure cross-ties.

Up to the 15th instant there were thirty-two cases of fever at Raymond and eight deaths, to wit: Mrs. Nancy Adams, Dr. W. C. Payne, H. C. Hicklin, W. S. Dozier, Daniel Napp, Mr. Shook, Mrs. Sarah Brown, and C. H. Gibbs.

We learn that on Monday evening, the 15th inst., Mr. Thomas McPherson, of De Soto county, Miss., was shot and killed, by Mr. Morrison Futrell, of the same county. Both parties lived near Tatcaville, and were of respectable families. Futrell, we learn, fled immediately, and had not been apprehended at last accounts.

The Jackson Mississippian of the 17th says: "There has been a considerable decrease of the prevailing disease during the past week. In that time but few deaths have occurred. The disease being generally of a mild type, yields in most cases readily to the skillful treatment of our physicians. There are about fifty cases under treatment. About ten have occurred within the last three days. We would advise absent residents not to think of returning until there are several killing frosts.

THE GORHAM (ME.) POWDER MILL EXPLOSION. The Portland Argus of the 13th gives the following particulars of the terrible explosion of the Gorham powder mille, a paragraph in regard to which we have already published:

It appears that there were two powder storehouses near the canal at Gorham, owned by Mr. Oliver Whipple, of Lowell, Mass. Yesterday morning, about 11 o'clock, as some men were loading a canal boat with powder, the stores and the powder in the canal boat (100 kegs) exploded, killing six men and wounding another fatally.

The press house had three hundred kegs of powder, and a quantity loose. The wheel house, as it is called, about four rods from the other, had a like quantity.

Phinney, after the explosion, walked several rods, until he met a man who spoke to him, and he instantly fell dead.

Swett was thrown nearly a quarter of a mile.

Hawkes had his bowels blown out, and one side of his head blown off.

A cart to which a yoke of oxen were attached, was shattered to fragments, and the hair was burned off the oxen almost entirely. A buggy wagon was also blown to pieces, and the horse driven like a wedge, into a pile of timber.

The fragments of the buildings were thrown by the violence of the explosion, up a hill a quarter of a mile distant, lining its sides with the timbers, which seemed to have plowed their way up through the soil where they first struck.

A large portion of the wharf was demolished, and a large stick of timber, some two feet in thickness, lying upon it, was broken in pieces, like a pipe-stem.

The smoke went straight up, instead of spreading itself, and hung immediately over the spot, a dense, black, funeral pall, for some two hours.

It is not known certainly how the terrible calamity occurred. A man who left the press house but two minutes before the explosion, says that the workmen were rimming a cast iron plate to sink some boat heads, and it is supposed the ignition was caused by friction.

RELICS OF A FRENCH FRIGATE.—The schooner Director, of Scituate, is now discharging (says the Boston Journal) at Long Wharf, some eighteen or twenty old iron guns which were taken from the sunken wreck of the French frigate "Bien Faisant," or Good Will. This frigate was sunk in 1758, at the time of the attack of the English upon the French at Louisburg, to prevent her falling into the hands of the English. The guns, which varied in weight from one and a half to four and a half tons, were taken up by the submarine armor of Messrs. Edwin Otis & Co., of Scituate, Massachusetts. We have in our counting-room a flake which came from one of the guns, composed of iron, wood and rope. Among other things raised was a piece of one of the floor timbers, which sided 18 by 36 inches. The Director will return to the spot where the wreck lies to secure more of the remains.

THE HARVEST IN FRANCE—Reliance on the United States for Food.—The Paris Moniteur of Sept. 22d publishes the following important report to the Emperor:

Sire—The produce of the last harvest, and the large addition which the United States and other more favored countries can easily supply to it, assure to our people the requisite amount of sustenance for the consumption of the year. Commerce, thanks to the security, encouragement and facilities given to it by your government, will know how to supply food for the markets, and there will be no want of grain anywhere. But its price, temporarily increased, causes sufferings which touch your heart. To alleviate them, you desire to multiply labor and relief throughout the land. By your orders I submit for the signature of your majesty a decree opening a special credit of ten millions for this object. The assistance of the departments, of the communes, of private individuals, will double and triple, if necessary, this fund of provident benevolence, and the working classes will once more bless the incessant and paternal foresight of the Emperor for their sufferings and their wants. I am, with the most profound respect, Sire, your very humble and very obedient servant and faithful subject, BILLAULT,

Minister Secretary of State for the Interior.

The Moniteur adds the decree of the Emperor sanctioning the credit.

FATAL ACCIDENT—Escape of Prisoners.—The Washington (Ark.) Telegraph of the 10th inst., states that a few days previous Mr. A. B. Manos, of Hempstead county, was suddenly crushed to death by the caving in of a well in that place, which he was engaged at the time in repairing. Some four or five feet of sand fell upon him, killing him, we presume, instantly.

The same paper states that on the previous Friday night, all the prisoners confined in the jail at Washington made their escape by pulling up the rotten floor, and digging under the foundation. There were but three prisoners in the jail at the time—two white men and a negro. One of the white men, Brown, was retaken on Saturday morning and returned to his quarters; the other, Spraggins, and the negro, are yet at large.

Our readers have heard of the old lady who had played cards for twenty years without having a trump. She always misdealt when it was her deal. We have met persons who were afraid to play whist too often, lest they should exhaust their number of possible games. Mr. Galloway, however, in his treatise on Probability, has a crumb of comfort for the old lady, and for those prudent economists. It appears that if 1,000,000,000 persons, about the population of the earth, were to deal the cards incessantly, night and day, for 1,000,000,000 years, at the rate of a deal by each person a minute, and even if each one of these deals were essentially different, they would not have exhausted the one hundredth thousandth part of essentially different ways in which the fifty-two cards can be distributed between four players.

FROM TEXAS.—The steamship Perseverance arrived yesterday afternoon from Galveston.

We have nothing further from Captain Callahan's command. The Civilian gives the following sketch of the gallant Captain's previous service:

He came to Texas some eighteen or twenty years ago. As early as 1841 he was Captain of the Seguin Minute Company, and in that capacity made several short campaigns, and with Capt. Howard, of the regulars, was in the skirmish on the Los Moros. He commanded a small company when San Antonio was taken in March, 1842; another in the battle of Salado, Sept. 1842, and also in various other campaigns and some skirmishes for several succeeding years. After annexation he settled down for several years as a merchant on the San Marcos. Some two or three years ago, he located as a farmer on the Rio Bianco, in the mountains. He was employed in 1853 to command Major Erskine's party of cattle drovers to California, and did so with more success than any expedition that has ever gone through. In the far West he pursued and whipped a party of Indians who had stolen some of their animals. He returned immediately to his home and from that retreat was lately called out by Gov. Ponse.

The Galveston Confederate claims the election of Evans, American candidate in the East Congressional District, by 89 majority. There is still dispute about it however.

A REMUNERATIVE RAILROAD.—The receipts of the Galena and Chicago (Ill.) railroad has been over $1,200,000 for the past six months—enough after allowing 50 per cent. for running expenses, to pay half-yearly dividend of 11 per cent. on the cost of the road, $5,600,000. The length of the road is 221 miles.

☞ We seldom recommend a manufactured medicine, believing that, in most cases, Nature herself performs a cure more rapidly and effectually than can be accomplished by that vegetables and minerals of medical science. But in the matter of dyspepsia, these are chronic features about it, which very often defy all the efforts of nature to create a healthy action of the digestive organs, and it not unfrequently happens that thousands suffer for years, diseased both in body and in mind, from indigestion and its kindred ills. To such, HOOFLAND'S GERMAN SITTERS, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, are truly a most valuable preparation. It as a tonic medicine, giving a healthy action to the stomach, and will be found highly serviceable at all seasons, but especially during the spring. Dyspepsia can only be cured by a patient perseverance in one course of treatment, and to all those suffering under this and malady we would recommend an application to the Depot of Hoofland's German Bitters, 120 Arch street, Philadelphia. See advertisement.

Payment to be made at the close of each term. Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood at ten dollars per month. Students will be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. We would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at the earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, for it being, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationery, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

We invite the special attention of parents and guardians to the advantages here offered to young men desirous of a finished collegiate or business education. The location of the college, in a quiet valley, ten miles from a town—the freedom, consequently, from temptations to vice—the full and thorough course of study—the experience and ability of the Faculty—the wholesome discipline—the facilities for lectures afforded by ample apparatus, libraries and cabinets, and, withal, the cheapness of terms and healthfulness of position, cannot fail to secure to this college, as heretofore, a liberal patronage.

COLORED MISSIONS, DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

At the third quarterly Conference for Dayton Station and Dayton Colored Mission, when the subject of missions was called up, the following report was unanimously adopted, and ordered to be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The report was written by a layman of our church, one who takes a deep interest in the general cause of missions, and who contributes liberally to the missionary fund.

As ministers of the Gospel, and official members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, we feel called upon by the action of the annual Conference, and prompted by a sense of duty, in presenting to the consideration of the slave-holders within the bounds of the Dayton Colored Mission that important branch of domestic missions which is receiving in the South the co-operation of other churches, and which we trust will ere long be perfected into a system, which will prove efficient in shedding the light of divine truth into the benighted mind of every slave. The Southern branch of the Methodist Church owes her distinctive character and organization to her views upon the subject of slavery, and whilst the ministers of the Northern branch of the same church are neglecting the weightier matters of the law, stooping from their high and holy vocation to pander to the prejudices and add fuel to the flame of Northern fanaticism, she (the Southern branch) is directing her best efforts to the accomplishment of a more noble and holier object. We think we will be sustained in the assertion that the missionary efforts of Southern Christians, together with the protection thrown around the slaves by legislative enactments, have, by placing them upon a higher moral platform, made them more willing subjects to control and discipline, and consequently happier and more contented.

The weight of responsibility resting upon the master cannot be denied; his duty is too plain to be neglected with impunity. As slaves, they require at our hands protection, food and raiment; and when the feelings of humanity, the laws of our country, and our own interest have prompted us to do thus much, our obligation is but part fulfilled. That they ought to have the benefit of religious instruction none will deny; and how are they to receive it but by the consent and material aid of their masters. "Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a master in heaven."

We trust that the "spirit which is now actuating the ministry may be imparted to the membership of the church," and especially to the slave-holders, who we fear are "slumbering over this great interest."

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature" is a precept that must be obeyed. Though directed to the ministry, this precept should claim the attention of all to whom one or many talents are entrusted—not only the slave-holder, but every Christian; for we are all the stewards of God's blessings and privileges, and will have to account for their improvement or neglect: therefore, let us ever remember, that from him to whom much is given much will be required.

We think it unnecessary to present in detail the action of the church upon this department of domestic missions; suffice it to say that the want of room, the difficulty and even impropriety of so many slaves assembling at the regular stations and places of preaching, prevents a large number from ever hearing preaching, except by chance. To overcome these difficulties, and, if possible, to supply all, led to the organization of colored missions, making it the duty of the missionaries appointed to the work to preach to and catechise the slaves on the plantations where the consent and assistance of the master could be obtained. Thus far the plan has worked well, and resulted, as we trust, in much good.

When a mission does not sustain itself, the Conference draws upon the general fund of domestic missions to make up the deficit. The general fund, as you well know, is made up by contributions from all classes of society.

Of the fifteen missions in the bounds of the Alabama Conference, only a few sustain themselves, and, we regret to say, that the Dayton mission, with all its wealth, is not one of the number. We cannot believe that a community so enlightened and so liberal in all other christian enterprises, will in future suffer it to be said that the slaves of the South, and especially those in our midst, are in part dependent upon the widow's mite for the bread of life.

The ministerial help at the disposal of the Conference is not sufficient to supply all and every plantation with preaching as often as the patrons of the mission would wish; hence arose, because they cannot be supplied with a whole loaf, refuse the half, and thereby leave their slaves destitute of preaching. To overcome this difficulty we would suggest to planters whose plantations are near each other, to unite in erecting churches, so that two, four, or even a half dozen families might assemble under the supervision of themselves or overseers and hear preaching at the same place.

By reference to a report of the missionaries upon the Dayton Mission, it will be seen that there are nineteen places of preaching and twenty of our plantations, numbering in the whole about 1300, who receive instruction and are preached to once in three weeks. Besides this number, there are about 250 slaves belonging to plantations near Dayton who are preached to every Sabbath by the preacher in charge. The above report will form some data by which patrons will be enabled to regulate their contributions so as to sustain the mission.

We cannot close this without calling upon those planters in and near Dayton, whose slaves are blessed with weekly preaching, to lend a helping hand in supporting the mission. You may say that you contribute to the support of the station and of domestic missions. So can a number of your neighbors and townsmen whose slaves are not blessed as yours are, and who, being patrons of the missions feel it their duty to contribute to its support. We hope that you, when applied to by our missionaries for aid, will feel resting upon your minds a like sense of duty.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

SHANGHAE, July 30, 1855.

Dear Bro. McTyeire—There has recently been so much writing from China that I suppose you and your readers are losing somewhat of the anxiety and curiosity formerly manifested in regard to the affairs of this country. But while this may be the case, I hope your interest in the Methodist mission established here will never be found decreasing, but rather deepening and widening and bringing forth fruit in the shape of many fervent and faithful prayers, and the material which not only enables missionaries to live, but also to build churches, print tracts and bibles, and does many little things towards helping on the Gospel.

I am sure you will be gratified to learn that after a deal of money spent, and many encouraging words from our brethren on the other side of the world, our missionaries have been at last induced to move forward, and the car of Methodism is beginning to rumble along the streets of Shanghae. We have rented a building in the city, which we call the Tsam Kaou Dong, or "Hall of Instruction," and for which we pay $108 annually. In this building we purpose after awhile to have preaching every day. At present we have to be satisfied with half that amount, as those of us who have arrived more recently are as yet able to make only occasional efforts, and cannot venture upon a regular appointment. In a room adjoining, Mrs. Cunningham has a female school, the cost of which is about $8 per month, which Bro. C. pays out of his own private funds, as none of the appropriations made for schools have reached us this year.

Our congregations are quite respectable, and there seems to be much attention to the word spoken, while the curiosity of the people about the Gospel seems not only to be great but increasing. Bro. Cunningham preaches regularly, and seems to be very well understood, while he promises to become a very fluent and correct speaker of this local dialect, (as the Chinese say,) which is of course a great desideratum here. I have attended preaching frequently since our house has been opened, and I find not only a willingness to hear but an apparent desire to understand among a large portion of those who compose the congregation. We have some hope from present prospects to begin soon to receive among us those who are truly converted, as we think it highly probable that some are even now pressing into the kingdom.

I find that there is a prevailing impression at home that a man ought to preach in Chinese in six months after he arrives here. That such an impression does prevail, I cannot but be very sorry, for it certainly misrepresents the facts as found to exist among missionaries in Shanghae.

It is true, however, that this question turns upon what we mean by "preaching." If we mean a clear unfolding of the elementary doctrines of Christianity, with such clearness as to be understood by the congregation, and with such force as to make an impression upon their hearts, I answer few have attained unto it. If we mean such a command of the language as ordinary colored people have of the English language, it can be attained in two or three years. But if we mean an ability to speak a few dozen sentences sometimes correctly, but as often incorrectly with a liability to make most ridiculous mistakes, such as telling a man to "come and have his head shaved," when you simply mean "come here," (which has often occurred,) this may be acquired in six months. Thus you may account for the fact that your new missionaries have not as yet taken their stand alongside of the other brethren in the regular ministrations of the word. And thus you may further account for the fact that some who have thought the Chinese language so easy, after years of study, cannot make themselves understood yet.

There seems at this time to be quite an awakening upon religious subjects in the city and vicinity. Every three or four weeks some one is admitted into one or another of the various branches of the church who have missions here, and the missionaries all seem to be very much encouraged. But Anti-Christ is at work here as elsewhere. The French Romanists have gained a powerful hold upon the feelings and fears of the people in consequence of the course taken by the French in the recent disturbances. The priests have of course taken advantage of this state of things, and by promising to protect them in case of future disturbances and other worldly inducements, they prevail upon the people to be baptized, after which they give them a list of saints' days and fast days, teach them "Ave Maria," and confess them when necessary. This is nearly all their converts know. Mary and Jesus are incorporated in the list of Chinese gods and saints. Such is Romanism in Shanghae. Surely the Pope is the devil's right-hand man in the work of destroying human souls.

The rebellion seems to be at a stand, or rather on the decline. Every gazette from Pekin reports successes gained and cities retaken by the Imperialists. I think Tae-Ping-Wang has lost the sympathies of foreigners in China to a great extent, and it is possible that unless he takes some vigorous step soon, even his friends will lose what confidence in his success they have, and their sympathies will be withdrawn from one who proves incompetent to the mighty task which he professes to have undertaken. It is indeed improbable that the peaceable kingdom of Christ should be established by one whose watchword is slaughter and bloodshed.

The Mission families are all well. I have myself just recovered from an attack of ague and fever.

Accept my sincere thanks for the Advocate, which comes to Bro. Lambuth and myself regularly. It is indeed refreshing to read of the doings of those with whom I have often associated, and to whom my heart is drawn out in the warmest feelings of affection. Of such especially are the members of the Alabama Conference, from whom I am always glad to hear anything good.

Perhaps you may hear from me again next mail.

Affectionately, your brother,
JAMES S. BELTON.

THE MINISTRY AN OFFICE, AND NOT MERELY A WORK.

Let it not be forgotten that there is such a thing as "rights of the ministry." An office of such responsibilities must have corresponding prerogatives. In the radicalism of these times, when the ambition of many seems to be to reduce the Church of Christ to analogy with the lowest type of democracy, these truths are like to be lost sight of.

The following remarks from Dr. Hodge we copy from the Southern Presbyterian. They contain valuable truths, well proved and stated. In the last few sentences, beginning with "if," the argument limps: that however is due to his attempt to accomodate it to his own ecclesiastical system.

1. Our first remark on this subject is that the ministry is an office, and not merely a work. An office is a station to which the incumbent must be appointed, which implies certain prerogatives, which it is the duty of those concerned to recognize and submit to. A work, on the other hand, is something which any man who has the ability may undertake. This is an obvious distinction. It is not every man who has the qualifications for a Governor of a State who has the right to act as such. He must be regularly appointed to the post. So it is not every one who has the qualifications for the work of the ministry who can assume the office of the ministry. He must be regularly appointed. This is plain: a. From the titles given to ministers in the Scriptures, which imply official station. b. From their qualifications being specified in the word of God, and the mode of judging of those qualifications being prescribed. c. From the express command to appoint to the office only such as, on due examination, are found competent. d. From the record of such appointment in the word of God. e. From the official authority ascribed to them in the Scriptures, and the command that such authority should be duly recognized. We need not further argue this point, as it is not denied, except by the Quakers, and a few such writers as Neander, who ignore all distinction between the clergy and laity, except what arises from diversity of gifts.

2. Our second remark is, that the office is of divine appointment, not merely in the sense in which the civil powers are ordained of God, but in the sense that ministers derive their authority from Christ and not from the people. Christ has not only commanded that there shall be such officers in his church, he has not only specified their duties and prerogatives, but he gives the requisite qualifications, and calls those qualified, and by that call gives them their official authority. The function of the church in the premises is not to confer this office, but to sit in judgment on the question whether the candidate is called of God, and if satisfied on that point, to express its judgment in the public and solemn manner prescribed in Scripture.

That ministers do thus derive their authority from Christ follows not merely from the theocratical character of the church, and the relation which Christ, its king, sustains to it, as the source of all authority and power, but also from the fact that it is expressly asserted that Christ gave some apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers, for the edifying of the saints and for the work of the ministry, by and not the people, constituted or appointed the apostles, prophets, pastors and teachers.

3. Ministers are therefore called the servants, the messengers the ambassadors of Christ. They speak in Christ's name and by his authority. They are sent by Christ to the church, to reprove, rebuke and exhort with all long suffering and doctrine. They are indeed the servants of the church, as laboring in her service, and as subject to her authority: servants as opposed to lords: but not in the sense of deriving their commissions and powers from the church.

4. Paul exhorts the presbyters of Ephesus "To take heed of all the flock over which the Holy Ghost had made them overseers." To Archippus he says, "Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord." It was then the Holy Ghost that appointed these presbyters and made them overseers.

5. This is involved in the whole doctrine of the church as the body of Christ, in which he dwells by his Spirit, giving to each member his gifts, qualifications and functions, dividing to every one severally as he will: and by these gifts making one an apostle, another a prophet, another a teacher, and another a worker of miracles. It is thus that the apostle reconciles the doctrine that ministers derive their authority and power from Christ, and not from the people, with the doctrine that church powers vest ultimately in the church as a whole. He refers to the analogy between the human body and the church as the body of Christ. As in the human body the soul resides not in any one part to the exclusion of the rest, and as life and power belong to it as a whole, though one part is an eye, another an ear, and another a hand; so Christ by his spirit dwells in the church, and all power belongs to the church, though the indwelling spirit gives to each member his function and office. So that ministers are no more appointed by the church than the eye by the hands and feet. This is the representation which pervades the New Testament, and necessarily supposes that the ministers of the church are the servants of Christ, selected and appointed by him through the Holy Ghost.

6. The third remark relates to the functions of the presbyters. They are charged with the preaching of the word and the administration of the sacraments. They are the organs of the church in executing the great commission to make disciples of all nations, teaching them and baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. They are rulers in the house of God. They are invested with the power of the keys, opening and shutting the door of the church. They are clothed with all these powers in virtue of their office. If sent where the church does not already exist, they exercise them in gathering and founding churches. If they labor in the midst of churches already established, they exercise these powers in concert with other presbyters, and with the representatives of the people. It is important to notice this distinction. The functions above mentioned belong to the ministerial office, and, therefore, to every minister. When alone, he of necessity exercises his functions alone, in gathering and organizing churches, but when they are gathered he is associated with other ministers, and with the representatives of the people, and therefore can no longer act alone in matters of government and discipline.

FASHIONABLE CHURCH IN NEW YORK.—You enter the church porch. The portly sexton, with his thumbs in the arm-holes of his vest, meets you at the door. He glances at your hat and coat, and, so he graciously escorts you to an eligible seat in the broad aisle. Close behind you follows a poor, meek, plainly-clad seamstress, deprived from her treadmill round, to think one day in seven of the immortal. The sexton is struck with sudden blindness. She stands embarrassed one moment, then, as the truth dawns upon her, retraces her steps, and, with a crimson blush, recrosses the threshold which she has profaned with her plebian feet.

Mark to the organ! It is a strain from "Norma" slightly Sabbath-ized. Now the worshippers one after another glide in: silks rattle, plumes wave, satins glisten, diamonds glitter, and scores of forty dollar handkerchiefs shake out their perfumed odors.

What an absurdity to preach the Gospel of the lowly Nazarite to such a set. The clergyman knows better than to do so. He values his 1st salary and handsome parsonage too highly. So with a velvet tread he walks all round the ten commandments, places the downiest pillow under the dying profligate's head, and ushers him with seraphic hymning into an upper-ten heaven. [Fanny Fern.

Foreign News by the Atlantic.

FULL PARTICULARS.

The dates by the Atlantic are up to the 6th inst. from Liverpool.

The leading events in connection with the war are the quartering of detachments of French and English troops at Sebastopol, and the fact that the Allied armies of operation threaten the Russian army, both from Eupatoria and Baidar. The French cavalry under Gen. d'Allonville defeated the Russians near Eupatoria, on the 17th. Russian loss 400 killed and 100 prisoners. French, 6 killed and 25 wounded. A fourth campaign expected as the Russians are making tremendous preparations and the Emperor himself is at Odessa. The fleet has sailed from Sebastopol on a secret expedition. It is supposed either to Nicolaieff or Odessa. Kars still held out, according to last accounts, though the provisions were nearly exhausted. It was expected however, that the snow would compel the Russians soon to retire. In France the government has interfered to regulate the prices of butcher's meat. Corn has reached its maximum price.

THE WAR.

Position, Movements and Prospects of the Armies in the Crimea.

The last official dispatches report the south side of Sebastopol to be occupied by detachments of French and English troops, who have held distinct quarters of the town assigned them.

The Russians concentrated their forces in the northern forts, and were occasionally firing upon the town, to which the Allies replied from the two forts which remained intact, (Nicholas and Quarantine,) and from the ruins of other forts. Prince Gortschakoff in his report describes the fire of the Allies as heavy.

Preparations were making by the British and French engineers, by the sinking of immense mines, to destroy the splendid docks, arsenals and ship-building yards of Sebastopol, and thus upset the place as a naval stronghold. Though there is no official information on the subject, the Allied Generals, for obvious reasons, being silent as to their future operations, there are various presumptions of a vigorous campaign in the open field.

Prince Gortschakoff on the 23d ult. reported that 26,000 men had been landed at Eupatoria, and that on the 25th this force was increased to 33,000 men. The despatch reported that "imposing masses" of the Allied troops continue to threaten the left wing of the Russian army from the valley of Baidar, while a force amounting to between 20,000 and 30,000 men threaten the right wing of the Russians from Eupatoria.

It is uncertain, and will remain so for some little time, which of these threatened attacks is the real one, but there is quite enough in Prince Gortschakoff's dispatches to show that he considers himself seriously threatened in front and on both flanks. Another significant fact is that the English land transport corps are in full activity; that the field batteries of the artillery are in marching order; that large numbers of the French cavalry have embarked for Eupatoria; and by the telegraphic accounts from Vienna it is stated that the Allied fleets had left Sebastopol on some secret expedition.

It is again asserted from Vienna that the Russian army is retreating.

The Times correspondent, writing on the 21st, is not at all sanguine that the Russians will be forced to abandon their position on the approach of winter.

The correspondent of the Daily News takes a different view. He says:

The belief gains ground that the Russians are preparing to evacuate the north side of the harbor of Sebastopol. The extensive earthworks which have been lately constructed, and others in course of construction, are regarded as simply intended to cover the retreat, and protect the rear guard of the Russian army. Carts are coming in empty from the direction of the Mackenzie Heights, and have gone away laden, it is supposed, with provisions.

These arrangements are supposed to indicate an intention to retire. It is still understood that a combined movement is to take place against the enemy's position on the Mackenzie Heights. A direct attack from Baktchi-Serai is spoken of, the approach from the south being made by a route which is kept secret, and which will have the effect of avoiding the enemy's fortified intrenchments.

Le Nord of Brussels takes a hopeful view of Russian affairs in the Crimea. A writer in that journal says:

"The situation is not entirely to our disadvantage, and the honor of our arms has been in no way compromised. Our men will no longer be obliged to offer themselves up as a holocaust, but will now be able to defend themselves in a close fight, and sell their lives at a high cost."

The same paper states that out of the 10,000 seamen who had undertaken, with their officers, the defence of Sebastopol, only a fourth survives, and some six or seven officers.

In an order which Prince Gortschakoff has addressed to his soldiers, the Prince admits a loss of 500 to 600 men per day during the last thirty days of the siege. To continue to defend the south side, he says, would have been to expose the troops to be uselessly murdered. He concludes by saying: "It is not Sebastopol we have left in the enemy's hands, but burning ruins that we have set fire to ourselves. Sebastopol enchained us to its walls; with its fall we acquire freedom of action, and a new war commences."

By telegraph we learn that the Czar has left Nicholaieff for the Crimea, his object in proceeding thither being doubtless to inspirit his forces by his presence, and turn the tide in favor of Russia.

Various Russian and Prussian accounts state that the war is to be carried on with the greatest determination, and that the Crimea is to be defended to the last extremity. Gen. Mouravieff, now in Asia, will, it is intimated, take the place of Prince Gortschakoff, who is to become Minister of War.

Moscow advices state that 120,000 men have been added to the military force of Russia.

War Movements in Asia.

Letters from Kars describe the thorough devastation of the surrounding district by the Russians. The provisions of the garrison could not last longer than the 15th of September, and if reinforcements did not arrive, Gen. Williams would be compelled to submit.

The Russians, however, were themselves hard pressed by the snow, which had already set in, and which, if the garrison could only hold out a little longer, would compel the besiegers to retreat.

Another letter from Kars says: "Omer Pasha has arrived at Batoum, and was received with great enthusiasm by the half starved garrison at that place." The strength of the corps d'armée, which is represented as 16,000 men of all arms, does not exceed, at present, 4,000 sabres."

The Baltic.

A brief telegraph from Hamburg states that on the 27th ult six English vessels appeared before Riga, and bombarded for several hours the batteries of Dunamunde and Virrage Doncleu.

The Latest.

Marshal Pelissier reports, on the 1st inst., that a brilliant contest of cavalry was fought on the 29th ult., at Koughil, five leagues north-east of Eupatoria, in which the Russian cavalry, commanded by Gen. Kurt, were defeated by the French cavalry, under Gen. Allonville. Six guns, twelve ammunition wagons, and a campaign forge, with all the appurtenances, and 150 prisoners, of whom two were officers, were captured, besides 250 horses of the Russian Uhlans. Fifty of the Russians were killed: among them was Col. Androwsky. Of the French, six were killed and twenty-seven wounded.

Prince Gortschakoff's Dispatch.

HAMBURG, Friday, Oct. 5, 1855.—Intelligence has been received at St. Petersburg from Prince Gortschakoff, which brings news from Oct. 3, one day up to the 4th. The prince reports that on the previous day the enemy made another unsuccessful attempt.

CRIMEA, Wednesday Evening, Oct. 3.—Yesterday the enemy effected a movement against our left flank, and then withdrew. Our advanced post still occupy their former position. Nothing has yet been undertaken against the northern forts.

Mines under the Malakoff and Redan.

An extract of a letter from a sergeant, proceeding to show how the Redan escaped being blown up by the Russians, like the other forts:

"A sapper who was exploring the batteries of the Redan perceived a train of powder leading down to the sea, by a hollow of an axe, and then called the attention of the officers to it. On further examination it was found to be a thick metallic wire covered with a coating of gutta percha. This wire led to a very large powder magazine dug under the Redan, and the discovery of which made the boldest tremble when they thought of the frightful explosion they had escaped. The wire came from across the town as far as the sea, which it crossed to the other shore, from whence the electric spark was to be despatched to set fire to that volcano. It was discovered just at the nick of time, as the last soldiers had not yet evacuated the town when the forts blew up one after the other, filling up the trenches with the ruins. The Careening port, the Flagstaff Battery, the Central Bastion, the forts of the bay, the arsenals, and all the principal edifices crumbled to the ground beneath the combined action of shells, fire and mines. The Redan and the Malakoff alone remained upstanding, the former saved by the sapper, as just mentioned, and the latter saved by a shell, which, directed by Providence, had cut the electric wire in two."

Promotions and Decorations.

Major General Wyndham is likely to be placed at the head of a division in the Crimea. The Grand Cross of the Bath, has, it is said, been conferred on Gen. Simpson. Marshal Pelissier has received the same decoration of the Queen, and his Majesty the Emperor of the French, has further awarded to Gen. Simpson, the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor.

A dispatch from Gen. Simpson to Lord Panmure has been published during the night. It contains Gen. Simpson's list of the names of officers and men brought to his notice by the Generals of the Highlanders, 2d, and Light Divisions, on the occasion of the attack on the Redan on the 8th inst.

It is stated, as a note, that the list of officers recommended by Gen. Simpson for promotion for distinguished services, has not yet been received. The first mentioned is very long. Besides the officers, it comprises the names of twelve soldiers of the 3d regiment, eleven of the 41st Regiment, and eighteen of the 6th Regiment, who distinguished themselves by bringing wounded from the front of the advanced trenches.

Prince Gortschakoff's Account of the Capture of Sebastopol.

Prince Gortschakoff's order of the day to his army, the evacuation of Sebastopol, appears in Le Nord. It is dated, "Head-quarters Heights of Inkermann, in the vicinity of Sebastopol, August 26, (Sept. 12.)" He recounts the length of the siege as a proof of the bravery of the Russian soldiers, and then describes the final bombardment and subsequent events:

"Taking advantage of the superiority of their fire at short range, the enemy, after the concentrated action of their artillery during the thirty days, which cost our garrison from five hundred to a thousand men per day, commenced that terrible bombardment (bombardement d'enfer) from their innumerable engines of war, and of a calibre hitherto unknown, which destroyed our defenses, which had been repaired at night with great labor and expense, under the incessant fire of the enemy, the principal work, Korniloff Redoubt, or the Malakoff Hill (the key of Sebastopol as a point of demarcation), the whole town, having experienced considerable and irreparable damage.

"To continue, under these circumstances, the defence of the south side, would have been to expose our troops daily to useless butchery, and their preservation is to-day more than ever necessary to the Emperor of Russia.

"For these reasons, with sorrow in my heart, but with a full conviction, I resolved to evacuate Sebastopol, and take over the troops to the north side by the bridge constructed beforehand over the bay, and by boats.

"Meantime the enemy, beholding, on the 27th of August (8th of September), at 10:30, the half-ruined works before them and the Korniloff redoubt, with its ditches filled up, resolved upon a desperate assault, first on bastion No. 4 (Korniloff) and No 3; Redan, and after about three hours upon bastion No. 5, and the Belkin Schwartz redoubts.

"Of these six attacks, five were gloriously repulsed. Some of the points of attack, like that on bastion No. 2, on which the enemy had succeeded in bringing guns by flying bridges, having at various times been taken and retaken, remained finally ours. But the Kornilof redoubt, more damaged than the other by the bombardment, was taken by the French, who brought more than 30,000 men against it, and could not be retaken after the great losses we had suffered at the commencement of the combat, for it would have been necessary to ascend, in the midst of the ruins, a very steep incline, and then cross a narrow ridge above a deep ditch of the rear line occupied by the French. Such an undertaking might have prevented us from achieving the proposed object, and would have cost us, without the slightest doubt, incalculable losses.

"The attempt was the more needless, as for reasons already mentioned, I had resolved to evacuate the place. Therefore, as the success of the enemy was confined to the sole capture of the Kornilof redoubt, I ordered that no attack should be made on that redoubt, but to remain in front of it to oppose any continuation of the enemy's attack on the town itself, an order which was executed despite the efforts of the French to get beyond the gorge of the redoubt according to the arrangements previously made.

"The examples of bravery you give for my whole army, valiant comrades, aroused such a feeling of esteem in the enemy, that despite the knowledge they must have had of our retreat by the explosion of our mines, which our troops exploded one after the other as they gradually retreated, they not only did not pursue us in columns, but even ceased firing with their artillery, which they might have continued with impunity.

"Valiant comrades, it is painful, it is hard to leave Sebastopol in the enemy's hands. But remember the sacrifice we make upon the altar of our country in 1812. Moscow was surely as valuable as Sebastopol—we abandoned it after the immortal battle of Borodina. The defence of Sebastopol during three hundred and forty-nine days is superior to Saragossa, and when the enemy entered Moscow in that great year of 1812, they only found heaps of stones and ashes. Likewise, it is not Sebastopol which we have left to them, but the burning ruins of the town which we ourselves set fire to, having maintained the honor of the defence in such a manner that our great grand children may recall the remembrance thereof with pride to all posterity.

"Sebastopol kept us chained to its walls; with its fall we acquire freedom of movement, and a new war commences. A war in the open field, that most congenial to the Russian soldier. Let us prove to the Emperor, let us prove to Russia that we are still imbued with the spirit which animated our ancestors in our memorable and patriotic struggle. Wherever the enemy may show himself we will present our breasts to him, and defend our native land as we defended it in 1812.

"Valiant warriors of the land and sea forces! In the name of the Emperor I thank you for the unexampled courage, firmness and constancy you have displayed during the siege of Sebastopol."

Sayings and Doings of the Czar Alexander.

The Emperor, who has been making a journey to the South via Moscow, has issued, through the Governor of that place, an address to the Russian people, in which he says:

"The brave defence of Sebastopol gave done everything possible for human power to do. The former and present unfavorable events, I accept as the inscrutable will of Providence, which visits upon Russia a heavy hour sent trial for our sins. Trials have been much heavier, and God Almighty has always sent her his benevolent help. Let us, therefore, also now trust in Him. He will defend Russia, the Orthodox, which has drawn the sword for a just cause, the cause of Christendom." And, called to see the incessant proofs of the readiness of everybody to sacrifice family, property, and the last drop of blood, for the integrity of the Empire and the honor of the country, I feel comforted and strength in these popular sentiments and aspirations, and with my whole heart united with my brave and faithful people, I recall repeat, confident of God's help and aid, the words of Alexander the First: "Where there is truth there is also God."

Remain young well-wisher,
ALEXANDER."

His Visit to the Crimea.

A letter from St. Petersburg states that the evening before the Emperor set out for the South, a grand council was held, at which it was decided to carry on the war with the utmost energy.

The Emperor went from Moscow to Nicolaieff (the great Russian naval depot on the Euxine), where, on the 23d ult., accompanied by the Grand Dukes Constantine, Nicholas and Michael, he made an inspection of the troops, fortifications and shipyards. The fortifications, it is stated, are to be greatly strengthened and extended.

By telegraph we learn that the Czar has left Nicolaieff for the Crimea, his object in proceeding thither being, doubtless to inspirit his forces by his presence, and turn the tide in favor of Russia.

Various Russian and Prussian accounts state that the war is to be carried on with the greatest determination, and that the Crimea is to be defended to the last extremity.

General Mouravieff, now in Asia, will, it is intimated, take the place of Prince Gortschakoff, who is to become Minister of War.

Russia's Determination to Prosecute the War.

St. Petersburg letters mention that the fall of Sebastopol has had no direct effect on the general situation, the prospect of a peaceful solution being now more distant and more difficult than it was before. The recall of Prince Gortschakoff and his appointment to the ministry of war is definitively arranged. He will be succeeded in his command by Gen. Mouravieff, now engaged in the operations before Kars. The Czar talks of holding out as long as his foes choose to continue the war. The determination meanwhile seems to at headquarters was to defend the Crimea step by step, route qui route, and to retire only when further opposition shall be impracticable. All reports of a precipitate retreat on Perekop without giving battle are said to be imaginary. Strong reserves were on their way to the screen from the interior of Russia, the object being to occupy in force all the strong positions between Khutor-Mackenzie and Inkermann, with reserves posted at Baktchi-Serai and Simpheropol. The Russians would have us believe their Crimean army, with these reserves, numbers 300,000 men. Cri de at Indiana!

Without being curiously anxious as to the future movements, there can be no doubt that the Russians are beginning trying their fortune in a second winter campaign. "Meanwhile," it is added, "the transport of ammunition and provisions and stores is being driven on with all possible dispatch. The utmost activity prevails in all the military and other establishments. And at Nicolaieff, where the Czar is at this time present in person, they profess to have nine war steamers already completed, fitted out, and prepared for active service, and a number more in a forward state of outfit."

A letter from St. Petersburg, in the Warderer of Vienna, says: The evening before the departure of the Emperor, a council was held, at which it was determined to carry on the war with the greatest determination, and the Emperor directed Count Nesselrode to announce this intention to the political agents of Russia in foreign countries.

On the other hand, a recent letter from Berlin says:

"Rumors have been rife to-day in well informed circles that the Russian Government has invited Prussia to take steps toward a renewal of negotiations with the Western Powers. Public feeling in Russia has begun to show itself since the fall of Sebastopol. The large proprietors have lost a half or even two thirds of their revenue from the want of an outlet for produce, and from an abstraction of labor. The Government functionaries and the youth just from the military schools are alone in favor of a continuation of the war. Among the Generals who fell on the 8th were Generals Yousseroff and Vuicheff—the latter an aid-de-camp of the Emperor and a particular favorite.

France.

The Moniteur publishes twenty-four names of officers and soldiers nominated to the Legion of Honor in consequence of their wounds, and ninety one names of soldiers who obtained the military medal.

Abd el-Kader was received on Tuesday, the 2d, by the Emperor, and took leave, previous to setting out for the East.

PARIS, Tuesday, Oct 2, 1855.—Two divisions, one French and the other English, occupy Sebastopol. The army in operation, under Marshal Pelissier, will take the field. Gens. Simpson and La Marmora will hold defensive positions. The fleet has received orders for important operations. The Allied forces are full of confidence. Omar Pasha's forces are expected to relieve Kars soon.

MARSEILLES, Monday, October 1, 1855.—The steamer Euphrate, which sailed from Constantinople on the 24th of September, has arrived. Five thousand French had passed Constantinople on their way to the Crimea, and others were expected. It was stated that the English cavalry would winter at Scutari. The Sultan had ordered a regular budget to be drawn up, and had directed that foreigners should pay the land tax, as paid by the Turkish subjects.

The Exposition.

PARIS, Oct. 5.—On the proposition of Prince Napoleon, President of the Imperial Commission, the closing of the Exhibition has been definitely fixed for the 15th of November next. The distribution of recompenses, by the jury, will take place the same day. This decision gives it the duration of six months. The Emperor and Empress will be present at the closing ceremony, and his Majesty will himself distribute the recompenses. All the French and foreign exhibitors will be admitted, and the nave and upper galleries of the principal palace will be arranged in such a manner as to accommodate the greatest possible number of invited persons. The preparations will commence on the 1st of November.

A traveler who has recently explored the salt mines of Poland, says they he has never seen anything more remarkable than those salt formations, and that they differ from all other salt deposits known. "The salt is solid, crystalized rock, free from all veins of earth, and all flaws, so that it is simply quarried in a lumps of some convenient shape, and so sent away. The quantity is amazing, and the solidity is so great that immense chambers are left, 120 feet in height, with walls of salt on each side, rising from the floor to the ceiling.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1855.

Death of Rev. Charles McLeod.

Another has fallen! The brief and sad intelligence is communicated by Rev. Wm. Murrah, one of his oldest and most zealous colleagues in the ministry. He was a man, known to us, of very kind heart, true principle, zealous apostleship, and of plain, sterling common sense!

"Departed this life, at the residence of Bro. Joseph H. Mayhew, in Pickens county, Ala., 19th October, of typhoid fever, Rev. Charles McLeod, P. E. of the Columbus District, Alabama Conference. He was one of the oldest members of the Conference—was sick seventeen days—received every attention that a kind Christian family could bestow—seemed to suffer but little—was calm, peaceful and resigned to the last. He was asked by a brother minister, a few minutes before his death if he felt that Jesus was present and precious to him then. The emphatic answer was "Yes! yes!" He never spoke again.

"Some one in possession of the necessary materials will doubtless prepare and cause to be published a suitable obituary of this aged and faithful servant of the church. I can but simply announce the mournful fact. His body will be interred at Bradford's church, in this neighborhood, and at the proper time, removed, as he requested, to his family burying-ground. W. Murrah.

Insurance Office.—Providence, says some one, has provided insurance offices. By the payment of a few dollars, a man may be secured against overwhelming losses.

Within the past month the facilities of the community for obtaining protection against losses by fire have been considerably increased by the introduction, through their agent, R. W. Rayne, of the offices of the Home Insurance of New York, and the Hartford Fire Insurance. Both these companies have a solid capital, and have proved their willingness and ability to withstand serious disasters. At a time when bogus companies are about, ready to take the premiums, but not to pay losses, if losses there be, it is well to know solvent and well-managed offices. Our old friend Rayne is no stranger here. Besides a clever man, he is of first-rate business capacity. Hardly had his sign got dry, before the confidence of our best merchants and citizens was shown in numerous applications for insurance. See his advertisement.

Hon. D. D. Richardson.—In the loss of such a man the church and State are equally despoiled. He was one of the first graduates of old Centenary College, in Mississippi. His education, position and willing mind made him serviceable to what was good, and his services valuable. In that portion of Louisiana especially was his advocacy of the church needful. His career as an honest, courteous and firm citizen-legislator was opening with promise. Our sense of loss is increased by the brief and touching tribute of his pastor, disclosing the purposes of his heart, now broken-off, and lessened by the same testimony of his peaceful end.

Jackson, La.—We learn that yellow fever having disappeared, the exercises of Centenary College will open on first Monday inst. Among the victims of the epidemic our obituary column gives the name of the late wife of our bereaved and afflicted brother Miller. He has the sympathy of very many. Mrs. M., by her amiability and cordial hospitality, numbered more friends than the village of her residence could hold.

Neighborhood Chapels.—The subject so well brought to public attention by the Dayton Quarterly Conference will, we trust, receive the consideration it merits. Read it, on first page, and especially ponder well two statements:

1st, That some are having their servants preached to at the expense of a fund made up of widows' and others' mites!

2d, That the ministerial help at the disposal of any Conference is insufficient for supplying every plantation separately with preaching. The only remedy is therein proposed—neighborhood chapels.

Theological Nick-Naming.—The Archbishop of Dublin christened the Rev. Philip Pusey "Dr. Charon." Some of his clergy were quoting the fact of the Oxford Professor continuing in the church as a proof of his soundness. "Nonsense," said the Archbishop, "I know Pusey—he is the Charon of Perversion, and will not quit the boat as long as there is one left in the church that he can ferry over to Popery. He plies the oar between England and Rome."

A Good Call.—The Presbyterian church of the "old Third" have had the good fortune to secure as pastor Rev. N. G. North. Mr. N. has been long and favorably known here, and under Divine blessing, will do more to build up this church than any heretofore settled over it. They have quit looking to their neighbors and sending abroad for help to reap the field, and taken a well-tried home man—and now the laden will fly.

Quarterly Review for October, 1855.

We have enjoyed the gratification of running over the October number of the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review, edited by Dr. Doggett, and published in Richmond. This number closes the volume of 1855, and is in all respects equal to any that has been issued since the Quarterly has been in the present hands.

The first article keys up the literary tone of the Quarterly. It discusses, with copious Latin and Greek foot-notes, the disposition of certain notable old Romans towards the early Christians.

The article on prayer, by a layman, in reply to Dr. Winan's strictures on his views of the subjective efficacy of prayer, published a year ago, is very readable and suggestive. The Doctor will have to say something. To us this last paper seems to narrow if not change the ground in controversy. It waxes interesting. From a tentative essay, Mr. Tucker boldly advances to the position that prayer is powerful only subjectively. It does not prevail with God—is no motive to Him. Only puts man, the worshipper, in proper position to receive benefits pledged on conditions.

Col. Cobb, of Mississippi, gives us another excellent paper on Italian Literature. He has fine subjects to deal with this time, and feels their inspiration. To Alfierri, the tragic poet, who died in the beginning of the present century, the list is brought down. Alfierri—the Italian Byron. The opera is brought on, in its turn, with such half-commendatory allusions to histrionic recreation, that the editor puts in a caveat about worldly amusements! Mr. Cobb also indulges an apologetic strain for the gilded vices of his splendid characters. But something must be allowed to his natural and noble enthusiasm on such a subject. We trust he is not at the end by several instalments. A very practical turn this article takes in rebuking the niggardly patronage shown by wealth and power and position to genius chilled by penury. Apprentices pay—and they only suit this utilitarian age. Who searches out and educates the talented poor for the love of it? We sneer at Italian effeminacy, and show our better mettle by spending more on a race-horse than the degenerate Romans lavished on a first-class poet or artist.

The Book Notices and Editorial Miscellany make up a rich repast. We cannot conclude this brief and imperfect notice without challenging the attention of the reading and thinking public to the claims of this Review. Its friends may urge its claims with confidence and boldness. It is worthy. Let us of the South and South-west do ourselves the justice of giving it a greater circulation.

Autobiography of "Uncle Travis."

The last week we have read two characteristic personal histories—agreeing in some points, widely differing in others. Both persons were Mississippians by adoption, and both lame from their youth. One was the most richly endowed genius that has flashed his meteor-light across these skies. He went down in darkness. His lofty faculties of mind and soul were clouded and broken by dissipation. He lived not out half his days.

Not so with "Uncle Travis." In old age his leaf is green—his heart is full of the "joy forever." Temperate, humble, zealous in his master's work, spent in his service—he sits now with the crown of age upon his serene old head—preaching, from his arm-chair, to those who come to his house. With less talent more useful, with less fame more honorable; he looks back without remorse and forward with hope. What difference religious consecration makes in summing up the lives of two men!

He who was a member of the first delegated General Conference (1812); who was the spiritual father of such men as Dr. Few; who licensed Stephen Olin to preach, has seen some things. In those days they worked Methodism four-square.

This book introduces us to its normal state. He naively tells how he tried "Stephen" to see whether he would do or not for a preacher! The book is in the "brother and sister" style, with straight collar and shad. It greets in Pauline fashion, and abounds in affectionate personalities.

Faithful Shepherds.

A friend, writing 21st October, says:

The fever has nearly subsided at Jackson. Bro. Godfrey, the pastor of our church there, is now up again, having had a severe attack—and he is the only Protestant minister left in the city.

Bro. Godfrey deserves the lasting gratitude of his flock, as well as that of the community, for his consecrated toil and faithful devotion to his duty amidst perils that drove others, equally bound to remain, to healthy resorts. God bless the fearless and faithful shepherds.

A flock may easily graze at noon, when there is no peril, no alarm, without the presence of the shepherd; but how sad is the spectacle of a flock whose shepherd has fled at the first cry of danger! We want shepherds that are ready to live and die for and with the flock. For every such one that falls, may God raise up a score to fill their honored places! Amen.

Frost and Ice.—The weather since Wednesday has undergone quite an unexpected, though not an unwished for change, having traversed, in the course of one night, nearly forty degrees of the thermometer, falling from the sixties down to the thirties. On Thursday morning last the whole face of nature was clad in robes of whiteness, a real November frost attended with ice. [Thibodaux Minerva, 27th.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The Hon. Daniel D. Richardson died of yellow fever, after an illness of fourteen days, at his residence (Wayeland) near Pattersonville, parish of St. Mary, Louisiana, September 29th, at 4½ P. M., 1855.

Bro. Richardson was born 1820, in Wilkinson county, Miss., and in early life removed with his parents to this parish, where he resided until his death.

In early life he embraced religion, and for a time was an active and zealous Christian. He joined the M. E. Church, and was deeply impressed upon the subject of preaching, believing that God had called him to this work. But, alas! for the church and himself, from the sacrifices and responsibilities of the ministry he shrank, and devoted himself to the study of law, and afterwards to agricultural pursuits, maintaining his connection with the church, for the support of which he was a liberal contributor.

In this condition the writer of this notice found him in the early part of the year 1854. At a protracted meeting at Pattersonville, held in June of that year, at the altar of prayer, he confessed his wanderings from God, and received the testimony again of his acceptance with Him.

Never shall I forget the joyous moment when, with radiant countenance, he arose from the altar, at which for several days he had mingled his tears and prayers with the crowds of penitents that thronged it, and exclaimed: "I've got it again! Glory to God! I've got it again!" moaning the witness of his acceptance. With a return of his religious enjoyments came the impression that it was his duty to preach the Gospel of Christ to perishing sinners; and I am glad to say that to this work he solemnly dedicated himself, so far as to commence arranging his temporal affairs, and also directing his reading and studies with a view to that end. His object, as frequently expressed to me, was to enter the itinerant connexion, and live and die in the regular work.

He was a good class-leader and an excellent steward, and in his death our church has lost one of its most useful members in this State.

During his illness we had repeated opportunities of conversing with him closely on the subject of his readiness for his change. His sky was clear, his enjoyments often amounting to extacy. Some twelve hours before his death I asked him if he loved the Saviour. He replied "Oh! yes, more now than ever." We sang the beautiful hymn on page 314 of our hymn book—"Jesus, lover of my soul," etc. He joined in and sang four lines, paused and exclaimed: "Oh! what a sentiment. How sweet the name of Jesus is!" We prayed after singing, and fervently he responded with a hearty "amen!" About one hour before he expired, while his mind was wandering and his language incoherent, we tried the sound of Jesus' name. As soon as the sound fell on his ear he became extatic, frequently exclaiming "bless his holy name!"

Just before life became extinct, he seemed to imagine his brother Edward (who had died some months previously) to be present, and addressing him remarked: "Every day, brother Edward, every day, every day!"

Thus died our beloved brother Richardson. The Lord sustain his companion in her bereavement, and take care of her and her dear little daughters, and prepare them to meet him in the skies. Upon the venerable father the stroke will fall heavily, as well as upon the whole family, for he was devotedly loved. May they improve all of God's providences to his glory and their salvation, amen.

N. A. Cravens.

REV. JOHN ANGELL JAMES.

Few events have recently excited so much interest among the British churches as the services of the Jubilee Festival, which has just celebrated at Birmingham the close of the fiftieth year of the ministry of the Rev. John Angell James, at the Carrs Lane Independent Church in that town. The praise of Mr. James as a devoted Christian man, a preacher, a pastor and a writer, and one worthily occupying a place in the highest rank of excellency in each character, has long been in all the churches. The promoters of the movement, however, were not by any means prepared for the manifestation of public feeling which it elicited on the part not only of all the denominations in the neighborhood—Church of England, Wesleyan, Presbyterian, Baptist—but of many of the great religious societies, as the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Religious Tract Society, the London Missionary Society, etc., which sent deputations from London to represent their sentiments on the deeply interesting occasion. Private individuals, too, from all parts of the kingdom, and belonging to all evangelical denominations, assisted at the proceedings, and contributed to the fund which was designed to perpetuate its memory; and an association of American clergymen was worthily represented by Dr. Patton, of New York, who read an address from his brethren.

One of the principal events by which it was determined to mark the occasion was the building of a new chapel in the vicinity of Mr. James' residence, to be called "Jubilee Chapel," and the interesting ceremony connected with the laying of the foundation stone was the opening public service of the occasion. At a subsequent period, at an overflowing meeting in the Town Hall, a personal testimonial was presented to Mr. James, consisting of some very valuable books, a beautifully wrought and costly vase of a character, adapted to the occasion, a finely carved cabinet for their reception, and a purse of £500, the subscriptions to the testimonial having left a balance of that amount over the cost of the articles presented.

The words of the semi-centenarian on laying the corner-stone are a model. The stone being duly laid, "amid loud and continuous clapping of hands and three hearty cheers," Mr. James mounted upon its top and said:

"And now may the work so happily commenced, proceed without hindrance and with all prosperity! May no accident happen to any of the workmen to be employed! May the top stone be brought forth with the proclamation of Grace, Grace! May God's smile rest upon the undertaking, and, when complete, may his presence fill the house! May a flourishing and perpetual Church be gathered here, of which its walls shall be called Salvation, and its gates Praise; and when the Lord shall write up the people, may it be said of every man, they were born here! Let thy work, oh, God! appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children, and let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us, and establish thou the work of our hands upon us—Oh, God! establish thou it!"

OUR NASHVILLE CORRESPONDENCE.

Oct. 27, 1855.

Mr. Editor,—I fear you will think me rather dilatory as a correspondent, but the truth is, I am not as much of a loafer as I used to be, and engagements too pressing to admit of delay, have prevented me from writing sooner.

The session of the Tennessee Conference recently held in this city, was a tedious one, owing in part to the large size of the body. It is composed of nearly two hundred members, most of whom are young men, or men in the prime of life. Bishop Kavanaugh, who presided over their deliberations, impressed me as being a man of tremendous mental nobilities, but scarcely quickness and decision enough to control men who are sometimes disposed to have their own way in spite of parliamentary rules. I could not help sympathizing with him on several occasions when, as it seemed to me, certain stormy discussions might have been stopped immediately, had the authority of the Chair been promptly asserted. Some of these were so merely personal, and, withal, so obviously ill-natured in their character, as to have a decidedly bad effect, both upon the combatants themselves, and upon the spectators, who of course felt at perfect liberty to go away and make remarks which were anything but complimentary. What a pity it is, that there cannot be two great men in one Conference!

You are doubtless aware that the Memphis Conference has been postponed two weeks in consequence of the prevalence of yellow fever in Memphis. The church here is generally gratified to learn that Bishop Kavanaugh will remain in the city during the intervening period. If his singularly patient good nature sometimes prevents his being an effective presiding officer, it shines delightfully in the pulpit and the social circle, in both of which relations he is universally beloved. We hope to hear several more of his magnificent sermons while he is with us.

The Bishop is accompanied by his wife, who goes with him to California, a long and fatigueing voyage, from which, it seems to me, he might well be spared. Is it heterodox to wish that a resident Bishop could be elected, who should attend our General Conference regularly to report on the state of affairs in that far-off region? I cannot help thinking that circumstances certainly alter this case, and that such an arrangement would save an immense amount of expense to the church, and toil to the Episcopacy.

The Legislature of Tennessee is now holding its session in the new State House, which was completed only a few days before it convened. Although composed for the most part of young looking men, the proceedings of this body are characterized by great decorum and industry. The rooms of the Capitol are elegantly furnished, and the whole building is lighted by chandeliers of the most splendid and costly description. We consider ourselves justified in being proud of this monument of the prosperity and liberality of our citizens.

The Publishing House has now assumed a look of completeness. Since you was here last Spring, a fine three story building has been erected, extending all the way from the front to the back buildings, a distance of perhaps more than a hundred feet, and covering by its breadth about one-third of the open court. This is to be the Bindery.

Nashville is improving rapidly. When the various railroad communications now in progress are completed, I see nothing to prevent her from becoming one of our great cities. When it was finally determined to locate the Publishing House here, there were, as you may remember, many shakes of the head, and many surmises of disaster and ultimate failure; but I am told that the statistics presented to the recent Conference, show a dividend of eight per cent. on the capital employed. If I am not mistaken, this is doing much better than either of the great book concerns in New York or Cincinnati have ever done. This fact tells its own story to those who are disposed to complain.

The cold season has set in prematurely early. We had a little snow on the 24th, and the atmosphere is chilly and unpleasant.

The health of the city continues good. Some apprehensions were entertained at one time, that we should share the fate of Norfolk and Portsmouth, but there have been no cases of the dreaded fever here.

I forgot to say, while speaking of the late session of our Conference, that some of the brethren were exceedingly anxious for the establishment of a Methodist Theological Seminary, and, I believe, proposed something of the kind, but it was met with such decided opposition from the Conference, that it was dropped.

The Missionary Secretary and his family are expected here next week to remain permanently. Crotchet.

LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE.

This Conference closed its tenth session in Greenville October 8th, Bishop Paine presiding. The Secretary writes to the N. C. Advocate:

This was a very harmonious session. Not a single difficulty during the Conference. Preachers were full of religious feeling, strongly united in their work, and I believe have gone forth with more than usual longings for the salvation of souls.

Dr. Hamilton and Brother Pitts did us fine service in the pulpit and at our anniversaries. We collected and paid Dr. Hamilton for tract cause $131 75.

At our Missionary Anniversary the collection was small—something over $200. General collections fall considerably below that of previous years. Much to be regretted.

Our nett increase among the whites is four hundred and thirty-seven, and eighteen among the blacks.

The following brethren were admitted on trial: Thos. B. Lewis, John H. H. Young, Wm. Childers, C. D. Donaldson, Jeremiah J. Talbott, G. Gooch, Wm. H. Lambuth, and J. P. Crenshaw.

Samuel F. Johnson, Samuel D. Aikin and Wm. Holeman were re-admitted.

Six received Deacon's orders, and eleven were ordained to Elder's orders on the Sabbath.

AN APPEAL

To the Methodists, Ministers and Laymen within the Mississippi Conference in behalf of Female Education.

Dear Brethren—With regard to the importance of the subject on which I address you I have not one word to say. Fifty years ago this might have been necessary, but at this time it would be entirely supererogatory. But it may not be amiss to remind you of a few facts that are known and felt by us all.

In the first place, then, I would call your attention to the fact that while there is but one male institution under the patronage and control of the Mississippi Conference, (and that only in part,) we have under our fostering care no less than seven for the education of females; and in the second place, it is an equally well known but deeply mortifying fact, that notwithstanding the number of female schools regarded as Conference institutions, there are many of our people who send their daughters beyond our bounds to receive an education, some at Holly Springs, some at Shelbyville, Kentucky, and, what is more extraordinary, some at schools known and acknowledged as sectarian, under the immediate control of denominations adverse to the Methodist church; yea more, incredible as it may appear to some, there are persons calling themselves Methodists who must needs send their daughters to the Catholic Convent, there to be taught—what?—to despise the religion of their parents, to hate the church into which they were baptised, and to be carefully instructed in the mysteries of a false religion!

If you ask them why they act thus, what is their uniform reply? "Because," forsooth, "we have no good Methodist schools." While I am far from endorsing this sentiment, but believe on the contrary that our schools will compare favorably with those of other denominations, I am yet free to acknowledge that we have not a female institution that fully meets the demands of our people. We greatly need, and, from the position we hold, the public has a right to expect from us a female college of the highest order—one with buildings sufficient to answer every purpose, comprising well arranged and well conducted boarding houses, and having a good library, philosophical apparatus, etc., and withal an ample supply of able and experienced teachers, including a chair for normal instruction, and a course of study much more extended than is usually found in female academies—one that will include the Latin, Greek, French, Spanish and German languages, and a full Yale College course of mathematics. Give us such an institution, and the Methodists of our Conference will no longer have an excuse for sending their daughters abroad; the community at large, who already begin to see their former error, will give us their patronage, and we shall present to the world a female college, an ornament alike to the church and to the whole South.

And now, let me ask, what prevents our having just such an institution? or rather I should have asked, why have we not long since had such an one?

In attempting to answer this question, I hope I shall be pardoned when I suggest that the fault lies, perhaps, partly with the Conference and partly with the membership.

In the first place, then, I would say that perhaps the Conference has acted injudiciously in dividing their patronage between so many schools. This I think will be apparent if we for a moment look at some of the consequences resulting from this course of action.

Where there are so many regarded as Methodist schools, parents will naturally be inclined to patronize the one nearest their respective places of residence, and the patronage of the church becomes thereby so much divided that no one school receives sufficient encouragement to justify them in erecting suitable buildings, employing teachers, etc., and thus no one can, to any considerable extent, succeed.

Again, while the patronage of the Conference is thus divided, let an agent be appointed, say ler Sharon Female College, and the preachers in charge at the places where the other schools are in operation will feel a delicacy in seconding the efforts of the agent, while the people in the vicinity of each school will make theirs an excuse for not contributing their money towards the building up the one whose interests the agent represents.

And right here let me observe, that this same manifestation of sectional feeling is one of the formidable obstacles in the way of building up such an institution as is here contemplated. While there are some so enfatuated with the name of having their daughters educated abroad, that they would rather patronize an Episcopal school in Maryland, or a Catholic school in Kentucky, than a Methodist institution of the highest order at home, there are others so sectional in their feelings, that they cannot be influenced to lend their aid in building up any one, however excellent, unless it is in their immediate neighborhood; and as for giving their money to build up or endow a college at the distance of fifty or a hundred miles from them, it is perfectly out of the question. Others, again, actuated by this same feeling of selfishness, have been heard to say: "My daughters all be educated before such a school established," not remembering that they have grandchildren and great grandchildren that must be educated. But even though you never should have, has your vast wealth destroyed all your Christian philanthropy? Are there no poor orphan children of ministers who spent their lives in poverty and in behalf of the church, while you, enjoying all the benefits of their labor, have lived at ease and amassed wealth until your fortune have become a burden, I had almost said course? Brethren who have wealth—[illegible] preachers who have amassed fortunes and lived in affluence, while your fellow labor "have borne the heat and burden of the day"—I appeal to you to awake to a sense your duty on this subject.

But can our object be effected? I hope not to say it can, provided the Conference and church will unite; but while we are [illegible] tional, selfish and illiberal nothing can be done.

Let us then—let the Conference resolve the first place, that we will have just one female college as we need. In the next place let the Conference appoint a Board of Commissioners, composed equally of ministers and laymen, who shall receive bids and determine upon the place of its location.

Let an efficient agent likewise be appointed to solicit donations. Finally, let the church give, and give willingly and liberally, not tens, but by hundreds and thousands—let some give their tens of thousands—let them give until a pure conscience says enough. Then shall our female college be established. Its corner-stone shall soon be laid amid the prayers and blessings of the church, and its head-stone shall be brought forth with shoutings, crying "grace, grace unto it!" Philo Mi[illegible]

St. Peter's Church, Rochester.—Christian Intelligencer of New York says this Church, we noticed two weeks since

We are indebted to the kindness of friend for a copy of "The Church Book St. Peter's Church, Rochester," containing the Order of Public Worship; the Order Administering Baptism; the Order of Publicly Receiving Baptized Persons to the Fellowship of the Church; the Order of Administering the Lord's Supper; the Marriage Service; the Funeral Service; Morning and Evening Prayers for Families; a Psalter; Responsive Reading; the Nicene and Apostolic Creeds; Psalms and Hymns; Tunes for Congregational Singing.

St. Peter's Church is Presbyterian, but modelled its mode of conducting the service of the sanctuary somewhat after that of the Episcopalians. This originated, doubtless, from a desire to give the congregation a larger part in worship than, it was thought, was enjoyed in the usual way. It will be seen that the departure from the Presbyterian order is not so great as to dispense with extemporaneous prayer by the minister.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP ORIZABA.

The United States steamship Orizaba, Capt. Forbes, arrived yesterday afternoon from Vera Cruz, bringing dates from that city to the 17th, and from the City of Mexico to the 17th.

There is not much news of interest in the papers by this arrival. Information of the division of the State of Coahuila, by Capt. Coffman's command had been conveyed to Francisco Alvarez in a letter written by Vidaurri from Monterey. He places the number of the invaders at 300, and states that it was reinforced by another force of 400 had crossed the Rio Grande somewhere in that region. Senor Vidaurri states that he is ignorant of the motives of the invasion, but that it was probably for the purpose of reclaiming runaway negroes, or punishing the Lipan Indians, who have, he says, while living in peace with the Mexicans, been accused of committing murders in Texas. In order that this violation of Mexican territory might not pass with impunity, Vidaurri had dispatched five companies of infantry and two of horse, with four pieces of artillery, including howitzer, to act in concert with the troops that section in repelling the aggression; and further says that should the matter become very serious he shall himself proceed to the theater of difficulties. The military works at Matamoras and Tampico were suspended, and troops were being concentrated from all the Northern departments; in short, every preparation was made to meet an immediate avalanche of the "Northern barbarians."

The papers are filled with decrees and other official documents relating to the organization of the new government.

Troops had been sent from the capital to assist Vidaurri against the invaders, notwithstanding the fact that many complaints had been received from the north against the cruel pursued by this chief. On the 10th inst. news reached the City of Mexico that he had entered Saltillo with a portion of his forces and arrested the principal functionaries of the town. The motive for this step we do not find stated.

official letter from Saltillo, dated September informs the Government that the people of department of Coahuila coocur in the plan Ayutla, but that public sentiment has been pressed and overawed by the movements Vidaurri, who, in direct opposition to the of said plan, had established a military tion of the State and its capital, thus throwing its sovreignty and liberty. El Si of the latest date received, speaks in doubtful terms of the condition of affairs in Coahuila, and counsels the utmost prudence and caution on the part of the Government to avoid dangers and misfortunes.

Senores Comonfort, Haro and Doblado, had come to an understanding at Lagos and united upon the plan of Ayutla, had addressed Vidaurri upon the subject, but he had sent a direct reply, saying, that if the adoption the plan of Ayutla could establish a good, and just government, he would be the first support it, and with him the whole northern frontier. A rumor was current that the [illegible] under Vidaurri had adopted a new flag, bearing five stars and the words, "Union, Religion Independence." This was jocularly contradicted by some of the papers.

In virtue of the faculties conferred upon him the Minister of War had suppressed the Order of Guadalupe. El Monitor says that a general desire exists to have suppressed the various bodies of military guards, "ridiculous imitations of this Imperial Guard of Napoleon."

The United States Minister, Mr. Gadsden, proceeded on the 14th to Cuernavaca, to present himself to the new President, as a matter of ceremony, we suppose.

Deaths.

DIED—Of yellow fever, Oct. 7th, in East Baton Rouge parish, MARGARET HAWES, in the 61st year of her ago.

For many years she was a pious member of the Methodist Church. In the providence of God she had been called upon to withess many trying scenes, and to participato in some of those allotments by which her Heavenly Fathor designed that "the trial of her faith might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ," whom, it could be truly said, "she loved, and in whom she rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

All of her once large family, except two, Samuel and John, had passed before her into the spirit-land. But she had buried them in hope of a blessed reunion. She had seen the society (Salem) of which she had been a member from the beginning, though for a time the most prosperous in the circuit, dwindle away by death and removal to a few names, while her religious privileges were by this means and her frequent afflictions grently diminished, still she lived the life of faith.

Her last sickness was protrated and painful, yet the sentiment of Dr. Watts, repented by her—

"There I shall see His face,
And never, never sin;
There from the rivers of his grace
Drink endless pleasure in."

afforded to her children and friends an index to the truth, that Heaven was the object of her thoughts and aspirations.

Being asked by her son, Rev. Sam'l Hawes, if, in view of approaching death, she felt her confidence in God unshaken, she replied with characteristic calmness: "Oh, yes." Her last words on earth, and doubtless her first in heaven, were "Glory! glory!"

Oct. 13, 1855. THOMAS PRICE.

DIED—Of yellow fever, in Jackson, La., on Friday, the 19th Oct., in the 36th year of her age, Mrs. PATTY A. MILLER, wife of Rev. A. G. Miller.

Mrs. Miller was born in Western Pennsylvania. At the age of eleven she united herself to the church of God. Though very young when she experienced the pardoning mercy of God, she never faltered in her religious life.

She was naturally amiable; and possessing a cultivated mind, and the ornament of religion, she was a lovely woman. She filled every place in life with the grace and gentleness that become a Christian woman, contributing to the happiness of all around her. She was seldom absent from the house of God, and loved social Christian meetings; and on such occasions, though naturally timid and retiring, was always ready to speak, to praise or to lead in prayer if desired to do so—in a word, she shrank from no duty.

Such a life might be expected to have a happy end, and such it had. Shortly after she was taken sick she expressed doubts of her recovery. On the night before she died she bade farewell to the servants, children, her husband, and the friends of her family, sending messages to these at a distance, desired singing and prayer in her room, and frequently shouted the praise of God. Her excitement during this time appeared no greater than if she had been well and at a prayer or class meeting. She exhibited no aberration of mind from first to last. She was calm and collected, even when she could no longer speak, with a countenance as placid as a summer lake, and the wave of life ripling gently to the shore; folding her arms upon her bosom, she fell asleep in Jesus, to wake amid the glories of eternal life.

STERLING BASS, Sr., a native of Greenville county, Virginia, departed this life at his residence, in Russell county, Ala., on the 20th Sept., in the 85th year of his age.

The disease which terminated his life was cancer, and for months he bore this severe affliction without a murmur or complaint, triumphant in the consolation and assurance of the promise, until it pleased his Heavenly Father to take his spirit home.

In contemplating the life and death of so good a man and pious Christian, we become impressed with mixed emotions of pain, sorrow and consolation; painful, for "the house which knew him shall know him no more forever," with all the clustering and consecrated affections of family, relatives and friends blighted in time; and yet consoling, for we cannot doubt his "title clear" to a blessed immortality.

DIED—In Madison county, Miss., Mrs. ANN A. BATTLEY, on the 4th of October, aged nearly 28 years.

She was awakened at a protracted meeting held by us before her marriage. The precise period of her conversion we do not know. She told me, a year or so since, her experience, and said she desired to join the church. There being no church near her, she did not, saying she hoped we would have a church built in her neighborhood, which we were trying to do. Some hours before she died I baptized her, and received her into our church. I asked her if she felt her sins were pardoned. She said she did. Are you afraid to die? She said, "I don't think I am." G. W. S.

DIED—In San Jose, California, Sept. 30th, 1855, at 2 o'clock, P. M., OLIVIA CORNELIA, youngest daughter of Rev. Wm. R. and N. P. Gober, aged one year and seven months.

After a severe and protracted attack of pneumenia, which lasted for more than a fortnight, the little sufferer was released and went to heaven. "The fairest flowers are the first to fade." "Nellie" has only gone before, and is the first of the little family in heaven.

Southern and Memphis Advocates please copy.

DIED—On the 8th Sept., at his residence in Ashley county, Ark., Mr. JOSEPH R. WARD, aged about 38 years.

It is with truly melancholy feelings we make this announcement, for in his death our community has sustained no ordinary loss.

A. W. J.

DIED—Suddenly at her residence in the parish of Terrebonne, in the 23d year of her age, ANNE ELIZABETH SHAFFER, wife of Wm. Shaffer, Esq.

Sister S. was born in Mississippi, and was the eldest child of Robert McKee. Her father died when she was quite young; her mother, with herself and younger sister, removed to Thibodaux, La., and in a short time followed her husband, leaving her two children without father or mother among strangers. But the God of the orphan raised up friends for them, and they were cared for and sent to school.

Sister S. was entered at the Thibodaux Female Institute, where, in 1852, she graduated, and soon commenced a life of usefulness as a prooeptress. She joined the Methodist church at Thibodaux the same year, during the pastoral care of Rev. R. J. Harp, and at a protracted meeting that fall she professed religion. She continued an acceptable member of the church until her death.

She was married January 3d, 1855. In a few short months the heart of her husband was made to bleed in separation, and many friends to mourn.

L. A. REED.

DIED—At Donaldsonville, La., of yellow fever, SARAH GRAHAM, aged about 19 years.

She came to Donaldsonville from Louisville, bringing a certificate of her membership, and immediately identified herself with the church.

She was at church on Sunday, the very picture of health, and manifested considerable feeling. On the following Tuesday she was taken down, and in a few days her head was laid low in death. Her sufferings were great.

STEAMER BURNER.—The steamer Frank Lyon arrived this morning, having on board the officers, crew and passengers of the steamer Exchange, which boat, together with her cargo, consisting of near 300 bales cotton, took fire on Sunday evening last, two miles above Gorton's Landing, on Red river, and were totally destroyed. The fire spread so rapidly that no one saved anything but their lives. The books and papers were all lost. The boat, after burning to the water's edge, sank in twenty feet water. The boat and cargo we understand were insured.

COTTON.—The receipts for the twenty-four hours ending last evening at 6 o'clock were, by the T. P. Leathers, from Napoleon, 2,496 bales; Frank Lyon, from Ashton, 2,109 bales; Union, from Opelousas, 36 bales. Total 4,639 bales; and making since last Saturday morning, 25,879 bales.

The Attorney General has decided that it is no departure from the neutrality laws for citizens of the United States to sell gunpowder, arms, or other articles that are contraband of war, nor for the merchant ships of any State to transport troops or military munitions for either belligerent. Such commerce, he decides, is perfectly lawful, subject only to the chances of capture by the vessels of the opposite party.

Mr. James Webster was shot and killed by Mr. John Richardson, near Pine Bluff, Ark., on the 18th. A dispute occurred about a crop of corn the parties had made together, and when Webster attempted to take some of it away, Richardson deliberately shot him. The murderer made his escape.

Scoresby, the British voyager, in 1806, reached a latitude as high as 81 deg. 30 min., only 500 miles from the North pole. The open ocean expanded before him. Kane has gone still one degree nearer to the mythical spot, and as far as 82 deg. 30 min. N. L. He was thus no farther from the North pole than the Straits of Mackinaw from Louisville, Ky. He saw apparently a continent on his left, stretching northward, while the unobstructed ocean spread out before him towards the North.

A correspondent of the Washington Intelligencer suggests that the most northern land discovered by Dr. Kane and named by him "Washington," should be called after the Doctor himself, or else after the unfortunate Franklin.

Niepece, the co-laboror of Daguerre, has, after years of study and experience, succeeded in almost perfecting the art which his associate discovered. "I have begun," says he, "with re-producing in the camera obscura, colored engravings, then artificial and natural flowers, and lastly dead nature, a doll dressed in stuffs of different colors, and always trimmed with gold and silver lace. I have obtained all the colors, and, what is more extraordinary and curious, the gold and silver are depicted with their metallic lustre, and rock crystal, porcelain and alabaster, are depicted with the lustre natural to them."

A convention of Radical Abolitionists, as they style themselves, assembled on the 23d in Tremont Temple, Boston. They propose to form a National Abolition party, and find a remedy for slavery in political agitation, clothing the Constitution on their side.

During the agricultural fair at Haverhill, a place was wanted for the trial of horses, and a man named Lee offered the committee and spectators free admission to his grounds for that purpose. The crowd rushed in, but when the sport was over, it cost them a "quarter each" to get out.

From Fort Laramie.

Letters have been received in St. Louis from Fort Laramie as late as the 19th of September. They contain some news of interest, (says the St. Louis Republican,) and altogether preseht the condition of things in that quarter as of a belligerent character.

Captain A. P. Howe, 4th artillery, was about being tried by a military court, of which Col. Hoffman was President, charged with disobedience of orders, in having failed at the battle of Blue Water to go down the hill, after being dismounted, to fight on foot, whereby Col. Cooke was deprived of the services of his company during the fight.

Gen. Harney arrived at Fort Laramie on the 17th. The Sioux Indians, it is said, have commenced war in earnest. They attacked a small party of three men from Laramie, a few days after the battle of Blue Water. They ran off the Government herd from that post a few days since, and succeeded in getting thirty animals. Johnson was sent after them, but had to give up the pursuit after going some ten miles, his horses (broken down ponies) having given out. The greater part of the animals since by the Sioux were afterwards recovered.

The same Indians attacked some express men from Fort Pierre; they saved themselves and their mail bags, being on fleet horses, but they lost all the leal horses.

Again—says the letter—the Sioux Indians last night stole eight mules from some people en route to the States, encamped near this fort. The ball is now opened, and we may have, and doubtless will have, work ahead. The Indians say, "come on." They are on White Earth in large numbers, and have sent messages to Gen Harney to "come on with his young men—that they were ready, and wanted his horses—that he had better not come further into their country, or he would cry."

Wharton is at Fort Grattan, at Ash-Hollow, but goes to Fort Kearney. "The chances for a fight are good, but in my opinion the Indians will run."

Two forts are to be established between Laramie and Fort Pierre.

Colonel Cooke deserves great credit for his admirable decision and quickness in the battle of Blue Water. It is feared the command will lose all the dragoon horses this winter—they are now poor. The ponies are doing admirably, and stand this country well. Captain Lovell has returned. He had no fight. At the time he was passing through the country the Indians had not been attacked by General Harney, nor had they heard of the fight.

This war will not end in a day, and I predict that more troops must be sent out. Gen. Harney has enough troops to whip the Indians whenever he meets them, but not sufficient to guard the road and garrison forts.

Captain Cady is to go with General Harney in command of the battalion of the 6th. Col. Hoffman's health is such as not to permit him to go on the campaign. All the officers are well.

The St. Louis Republican of the 25th, has the following still later intelligence from the plains:

Gen. Harney was to leave Fort Laramie on the 20th, to establish a military post on White Earth River, about half way between Laramie and Fort Pierre. Ten companies of troops—four of dragoons and six of infantry—were to accompany him. The infantry would be left to garrison the new post, and the dragoons are to return to Fort Laramie. But another object in taking this large force into the field was to chastise the Minneconjos Indians, who were regarded as the most insolent and hostile of the tribes in that region.

Shortly after the battle of Blue Water, Gen Harney held talks with the Ollgalla and Brule bands of the Sioux, in which they agreed to deliver up the murderers of the mail party, and to confine themselves to a proscribed district of country. Gen. Harney sent word to Little Thunder—Chief of the party engaged in the battle of the Blue Water—that if he behaved himself he should not be molested. It has been generally supposed that Little Thunder was killed in the battle of Blue Water, but this was not the case. He escaped unhurt. All the prisoners taken in that battle—some 70 women and children—have been sent to Fort Kearney. One of the Indians concerned in the massacre of the mail party, called Spotted Tail, was in the battle of Blue Water, and received four wounds—two pistol shots passing through him and receiving two sabre cuts, and still he escaped on the horse of a dragoon, which had probably thrown his rider.

It was the general impression at the Fort that there would be no more fighting. The presence of so large an armed force seems to have had a most salutary effect upon the Indians, and they will be glad enough to keep quiet. There was a report that the Indians had attacked and killed the party of Sir George Gore, but this report is noticed only to discredit it. The rumor was not believed at Fort Laramie, and is improbable in its very nature—Sir George's company consisting of a large number of mountaineers, who could whip any Indian force likely to be brought against them.

The winter had set in with great severity at Fort Laramie—ice was formed about the middle of September. On the 5th of October, a great snow storm was experienced by the party. It lasted for several hours.

The Military Court Martial, ordered for the trial of Capt. Howe and others, had been dissolved without proceeding with the business before it—on account of irregularity in the order constituting it.

Col. Sumner, in command of seven companies of the 1st U. S. Cavalry, was met near Fort Kearny, en route for Fort Laramie.

Several hundred men were at work at Fort Riley, in the building of quarters for the large force now stationed there. It is presumed that they will be tenantable at an early day.

LATER FROM SANTA FE.—The St. Louis papers of the 25th publish telegraphic dispatches from Independence, from which we extract the following:

The Santa Fe mail arrived on the 22d, with dates to the 1st.

The election for Delegate to Congress is over, resulting in the success of Gallegos by 90 majority. Great efforts were made by Otero's friends, but there was a good deal of anti-American feeling in the country.

Indian troubles have measurably ceased. A treaty was made at Albuquerque with the Jicarilla Apaches; but a few disaffected ones, who were not present, still make disturbances.

While the treaty was being made, some misunderstanding sprung up between Kit Carson and the Governor about feeding the Indians. The Governar suspended Carson, who leaves shortly for Washington, where the whole affair will undergo investigation.

Col. Fauntleroy was to have gone out with the Governor, but he would not turn over the command of his regiment to Major Blake, sent out by General Garland to receive it. The Colonel is guided by the opinion expressed by the War Department against Major Blake, who is to be tried on grave charges.

The Governor, Col. Brooks, and Capt Ewell, are to leave in a few days for the States. Judge Watts and others will also come in during December.

The rainy season was much prolonged, and a great deal of damage done throughout the country. In Santa Fe many of the houses fell down. Mr. Speigle (merchant) and his wife were buried in the ruins of his store-room, and both killed.

The Camanches handled one of Majors & Russell's trains roughly, killing three or four of their cattle and applying the whips to the hare backs of the teamsters, at the Point of Rocks.

The mail party saw few or no Indians on the route. Everywhere, the grass was pretty well burnt off.

A letter from an officer at Sebastopol, in the Paris Constitutional says: "It was a corporal of the 1st Zouaves who planted the first French standard on the Malakoff. His name is Eugene Libaut, of Paris. It was General McMahon's standard of the first division, the hoisting of which was to be the signal for the attacks on the other points. The General gave him the standard with his own hands, with the words: 'This is the signal flag—go!' Libaut was the first to spring out of the trenches. While getting into the enemy's ditch he was struck by a stone, but, notwithstanding the pain, he scaled the parapet in the midst of a hail storm of projectiles of every kind, and at length planted the flag, around which our brave soldiers soon flocked, and maintained their ground."

RIGHT OF BELLIGERENTS IN THE UNITED STATES.—The Attorney General of the United States furnishes the following definition of the rights of belligerents and neutrals, so far as this country is concerned, in the matter of enlisting troops for foreign service:

1. It is a settled principle of the law of nations that no belligerents can rightfully make use of the territory of a neutral State for belligerent purposes without the consent of the neutral government.

2. The undertaking of a belligerent to enlist troops of land or sea in a neutral State without the previous consent of the latter is a hostile attack on its national sovereignty.

3. A neutral State may, if it please, permit or grant to belligerents the liberty to raise troops of land or sea within its territory; but for the neutral State to allow or concede the liberty to one belligerent and not to all would be an act of manifest belligerent partiality, and a palpable breach of neutrality.

4. The United States constantly refuse this liberty to all belligerents alike, with impartial justice; and that prohibition is made known to the world by a permanent act of Congress.

5. Great Britain, in attempting, by the agency of her military and civil authorities in the British North American provinces, and her diplomatic and consular functionaries in the United States, to raise troops here, committed an act of usurpation against the sovereign rights of the United States.

6. All persons engaged in such undertaking to raise troops in the United States for the military service of Great Britain, whether citizens or foreigners, individuals or officers, except they be protected by diplomatic privilege, are indictable as malefactors by statute.

7. Foreign Consuls are not exempted, either by treaty or the law of nations, from the penal effect of the statute.

8. In case of indictment of any such Consul, or other official person, his conviction of the misdemeanor, or his escape by reason of arranged instructions or contrivances to evade the operation of the statute, is primarily a matter of domestic administration, altogether subordinate to the consideration of the national insult or injury to this government, involved in the fact of a foreign government instructing its officers to abuse, for unlawful purposes, the privilege which they happen to enjoy in the United States.

SPONGING ON THE PRINTER.—Here is a little article, says the Memphis Eagle, we think something of framing, to hang conspicuously over the editor's table: "The public have a funny notion about printers. They think it costs nothing to puff, advertise, etc. And thus one and another will sponge an extra paper, a puff, or some benevolent advertisement. They forget that this business makes them known. They forget that it is the printer's ink that makes nine-tenths of their immense fortunes. They forget that it takes money to pay compositors, to buy ink, type and paper; and lastly, they forget to even thank you for working for nothing, by grantitously puffing their business."

THE NEW WAR STEAMER WABASH.—A Philadelphia paper says:

The large and splendid war steamer Wabash, which is to be launched from the navy yard on Wednesday next, has been thrown open for the inspection of visitors. Of the six steam frigates authorized to be built by act of Congress, only one has been launched—the Merrimac, built at Boston. The dimensions of the Wabash are those of a ship-of-the-line, her extreme length being 301 feet 6 inches. With the addition to the navy of those frigates alluded to, we shall be able to do what has not been in our power heretofore—form a line of battle on the ocean, fully able to carry the stars and stripes victoriously through a naval battle with the best fleet which any nation of the world can put afloat and keep in service.

MAIL ROBBER CAUGHT.—A blacksmith, at Marion, Iowa, and his wife, have been arrested for mail robbery. While under arrest, their little boy discovered the place where the money was secreted, and $5,970 was recovered.

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE NEUTRALITY LAWS.—It will be remembered that sometime ago the American schooner C. E. Foote was chartered to convey a number of shipwrecked Russian soldiers and their arms from Simoda, Japan, to Petropolowski. This matter has been made the subject of legal investigation in the U. S District Court for the Northern District of Louisiana, as a violation of the neutrality laws. Nothing will be the result. Have not the French and English chartered several of our finest clipper ships? We never heard that anybody objected.

Information has been received at the State Department from the United States Consul at Havre, that the decree of the 9th of October, 1854, relieving all vessels wholly laden with breadstuffs, grain, etc., from tonnage dues, and those partially loaded from a corresponding proportion of the dues, till the 31st July, 1855, and which, by another decree of the 2d of June, was extended to the 31st December, 1855, has by a decree of the 8th September last, been further prolonged to the 31st December, 1856.

Advices from St. Domingo, of the 11th inst., state that a tremendous hurricane had blown down nearly one-third the houses in that place and almost destroyed the growing crops. Several merchantmen were injured, and two men-of-war wrecked. The people were plunged in great misery, but the Government was taking measures to alleviate it.

A dispatch of the 23d from St. Joseph, Mo., says:

"I have seen the constitution of a secret military order of the free State men of Kansas Territory, for the overthrow of the Territorial Government. I will telegraph you to-morrow. The expose, which is a strong document, is made by P. Laughlin, a member of the Executive Committee of the order.

The steam frigate Wabash was launched on the afternoon of the 21th at Philadelphia. She was christened by Miss Grace, daughter of the naval builder.

It is said in Washington that Mr. Crampton, the British Minister, asserts that the recent attempt to convict him of violating the neutrality laws is a conspiracy on the part of foreigners to embroil the two governments, and he promises to substantiate this at some future day. It is also stated that Mr. Crampton has intimated that in the event of his recall, no successor will be appointed.

Before a large audience, Mr. Thomas Francis Meagher delivered one of a course of lectures in the Broadway Tabernacle, on the evening of the 22d, taking for his subject, "The present prospects of Ireland in connection with the national cause." The speaker's sketch of the present political condition of Europe is said to have been given in a masterly style of oratory. His conclusion was to the effect that when the prophecy of the great Napoleon should be fulfilled, and that "Europe would be all Republican and not Cossack," Ireland would be found placed as the fairest of one of the European free States.

Mrs. Bodisco, widow of the late Russian Minister, has, with her brother, entered a bond in the Orphans' Court, in Washington, of one hundred thousand dollars, as administratrix of the will of Mr. Bodisco, so far as relates to his personal estate. The judge has decided that the will bearing only his signature, and not having been witnessed according to the statute, was not sufficient to pass the real estate, which, however, goes by descent to his widow and children. All his property in this country is supposed to amount to $300,000.

On the 16th, an affray occurred near Waterboro', S. C., in which a man named Benton was shot dead by Pinckney White. He was arrested, together with his mother and sister, who were charged with being accessory to the murder. White stated that Benton had slandered his mother.

Report of a Fishy Convention.

All the marine monsters, big fish and small scaly fry of the great deep, lately met in convention to take into consideration the conduct of the ocean, and also of mankind in general. The Whale was elected President, and from his greatness might be termed the Prince of Whales. He opened the Convention by stating that he did not wish to make a speech; he would take up as little room and be no longer than possible. (Cheers.) The Shark whispered to the Swordfish that it was not possible for the Whale to be much longer, for he was eighty feet now; in his opinion he only wanted to chance to spout, and he considered him a regular old blower. The Whale contended that, notwithstanding his general size, (he might add fame) he was not exempt from suffering. He had been grossly insulted by man—he would say lampooned; not that he would pun upon the use made of his fat; as he did not wish to make light of such a matter. He had been harpooned at least. Men were sarcastic towards him, and his shafts were sharp and pointed. Some of his fellow-whales had been very much cut up and exceedingly tried. He had lately learned that a substitute for oil had been invented, which might lessen the persecution of whales; but he feared it was all gas. The whale alluded to a harpoon which had lately hit him; it had made a great impression on him, and he feared had affected him deeply. (Great sensation.) Here his feelings overpowered him, and he sat down (on the Shark) amid a general blubber.

The Shark rose with some difficulty, and remarked that the tale of the Whale had moved him; in fact, it was very striking. His own situation was far from pleasant. He was by profession a lawyer, and he flattered himself one of the deep kind. (Cheers and laughter.) But business was bad, and he had been obliged to take in a few pupils. He had lately presented a fine opening for a young man who fell overboard, but was soon afterwards obliged to reject his suit as indigestible. Unless he had more cases he should leave the law and open as a dentist, as he was well acquainted with the art of setting teeth. He then held up one fin, as a signal that he had finished.

The Sea-Serpent did not wish to intrude upon the Convention, as he did not know whether he properly belonged to the fish tribe; did not appear, at times. All he asked was not to be classed with the Eel, whom he considered a slippery character. (Here the Eel was observed to wriggle.) Lately, he was quietly passing a certain species of the Eel, when just happening to touch him, he had been so shocked that he hardly recovered. The Eel hastily rose and said that he was electrified at these remarks. It was evident to him that the Serpent was more than half-seas over, and that if he was not careful, would get himself into a regular coil. As for his being a "slippery character," he thanked Neptune he didn't belong to such a scaly set as the Serpent. The Whale called the Eel to order, and the Eel called the Whale a confounded old swell-head, and was then summarily put out of the convention.

The Turtle was sittering from a slight indisposition. He was walking ashore a short time since, when he met a party of jolly young sailors. The result was that he was laid flat on his back, and was unable to move for sometime, and since he had not felt so nsual. There was one thing to which he would call the attention of the convention; he prided himself upon the purity of his political principles: he was the alderman's best friend. The shark had lately insulted him by calling him a "regular old hard shell." Here the Shark interrupted him by asking him if that was not his case? The Turtle replied that he should say nothing more at present, but should have something to say before the next meeting. The Shark replied contemptuously, "Yes, a few eggs, probably." The Porpoise did not exactly understand the purpose of the convention, nor whether all the members were present. The Secretary should call the roll. The Whale called him to order, and was sorry to see him reeling about in that disgraceful condition. His motion was as entirely out of order, and he appeared to be attempting to get up a revolution. The Porpoise assured the convention that his movements proceeded entirely from the motion of the waves, but still he should waive his motion. He then took a back seat, amid cries of "You're a blower!"

The President remarked he should be happy to hear from some of the small fry, the Oyster, Lobster, and others, who, if not the "bone and sinew" of the tribe, were at least the Muscles. The Oyster proceeded to open his case, which was a hard one. He was continually in trouble, and always in some stew or broil. He had family troubles, also; his half family brother, the Clam, was a disgrace to the family, always in liquor, and generally considered a "squirt." Some of his family were very lazy, and spent most of their time in beds. There had been also some rakes among them, creating a great disturbance. He was most respectable himself; his father was quite distinguished, and his maternal ancestor was "Mother of Pearl." He went in for his own rights, and did not care whether the rest got theirs or not. (The Jewfish remarked that "dat vosh very selfish.") The Oyster continued, there was one of his neighbors—he would not call any names—who were very surly and orabbed; that he was a one-sided individual, and no one approved of his motions. The Crab protested against this abuse, and said that the rest took the advantage of him because he was "soft." He respectfully retired backwards.

Here the Cod-Fish entered and apologized for his lateness, as he had been visiting a school. He thought the Whale was badly off, since men took his oil to make lights of. His own case was the reverse of this; they took his lights, (and liver, too, for that matter,) to make oil of. This might be very good for consumption, but it was confounded bad for him. The most alarming kind he had ever heard of was the consumption of cod fish. It might be very good fun for men to cut him open and salt him, but to hang him up afterwards, was rather too dry a joke. The Herring said that there had been a disposition manifested to play tricks of this kind in his school, and that lately some of his companions had been badly smoked.

The Shad, too, in his spring migration up the rivers, had been greatly persecuted, particularly by the members of the Legislature. Men had greatly nettled him, and had nearly driven him insane. He was a superstitious fish, and a most unlucky day to him was Friday. However, he thought his enemies had suffered somewhat in the warfare, and found his tail a regular bony part. (The Flatfish was not particularly flattering in reply to the Shad, for he did not believe there was a shadow of truth in his remarks.)

The Salmon, also, had his troubles. He was an aristocrat—[Here there was a general turning-up of noses, and some tittering]—not of the codfish kind either, and did not associate with the small fry.

He spent most of his time in travel, and in summer went up to the inland rivers, and took his family to the Springs and the Falls. He had been lately much afflicted and grossly maltreated at the South. Passing up the Savannah river, his family had been surrounded by a party of infamous kidnappers, and some of his children had been hooked. It was his intention to inform Uncle Tom and Sam of this outrage, and the Union would be dissolved immediately. Here there was a regular row among the small fry. The Trout called the Salmon a Northern fish with Northern principles, who had no business poking his nose up Southern rivers. He considers the story of the Salmon all gammon, and got-up for political effect. He was a small fish himself, but any insult to his native streams he would not brook. The Flying Fish flew into a tremendous passion and appealed to the Blackfish, who modestly thanked Neptune that, though his back was black, his belly was white.

Just then there was a great disturbance also among snndry others of the small fry, who had evidently been drinking. There was a lot of Suckers who were much inebriated; and one small fish sung at the top of his gills, that he was "a jolly old Sole;" and the convention, like many of our political meetings, broke up in a general row; therefore it is presumed everything will go on as if nothing had happened.

The ordnance department of the United States army have instituted experiments that have resulted in the establishment of a new model for the United States musket, which contains all the advantages of the Minie rifle, and others not pulled in itself. Most of these experiments have been carried on at the Springfield armory by Lieutenant Benton, of the ordnance corps, assisted by the gunsmiths and machinists of the armory.

That Mysterious Lodger.

A few days since officer Hale was informed by a friend that he believed he had got "on the track of something." Hale asked him to explain. He did so in the following words:

"Two weeks ago last Monday a well dressed, but rather mysterious looking individual, called on me and asked if I knew where he could hire the upper part of a house with a quiet neighbor. The rent was nothing—all he asked was privacy."

"Well, what reply did you make?"

"I told him I had such an apartment to rent, and that he could have the same for six dollars a month."

"Did he give you reference?"

"No; but paid six months rent in advance."

"Well, go on."

"The day after we concluded on the terms he made his appearance with a load of all kinds of queer things. The moment he got them in his room he locked himself in and was not seen again for the next two days, when he stole out on tip-toe, about nine o'clock int night, and returned with two furnaces, three dinner pots, and a crucible."

"Well, what more?"

"The next evening he stole out again, and returned with an apron full of bricks, and a pail full of mortar. These were followed, the next night, by a basket of charcoal, and about a peck of oyster shells. I tried to discover what he could possibly do with all these things, but I failed. The door is still locked, while the window that look over the back shed are barred with boxes, baskets, etc."

"Well, what do you suppose this all means?"

"I will tell you what I think it means. I imagine that he's a maker of bogus coin, and that the pots and coal are used for preparing the metal."

"But what do you suppose he wanted of the bricks and mortar?"

"To inclose his crucibles with."

"And what of the oyster shells?"

"To make a cement to be used in adjusting his dies."

The suspicions of Hale's friend seemed so plausible, that he communicated the facts to one of the police magistrates, who agreed that the stranger's movements were sufficiently mysterious to justify an examination.

This was just what Elias wished for. He had a taste for such things, and is never better pleased than when "smoking out" a scamp who has taken extra pains to avoid an arrest. Elias returned to "his friend," and informed him that he would make a demonstration that night, while the tenant was out "on his nine o'clock jaunt." He was as good as his word. He was on hand a little before nine, a short time after which, the mysterious tenant crept stealthily out of the front door, and went towards Pearl street. The moment he was out of sight, Elias and friend went up stairs, forced the lock, and went in. The moment Elias saw the arrangements, he was satisfied that he had made "a ten strike"—had reached the head-quarters of a piece of iniquity that could not be too early broken up. In the mantlepiece were twenty-three half dollars, a bar of solder and a paper of sulphur. On the floor were baskets, dinner pots, chunks of iron, pulverized oyster shells, a heap of sand, a hand-barrow, three broken jugs, a demijohn of vitriol, a vial of quicksilver, and a champagne basket containing about fifty pounds of broken glass. This, the friend informed Elias, was to give the coin "the proper tone," a piece of information that Elias assured his friend, was justified by the laws of metallurgy.

Having made up his mind that he had "found the fellow who got up that coin passed in Troy last month," Mr. Hale took up a position in the hall for the purpose of arresting the operator before he had a chance to discover that his secret was exposed. The ruse was soon crowned with success. A little after ten the stranger returned with three links of stove pipe under one arm and a sledge hammar on the other. Hale laid hold of him the moment he stepped over the threshold. This led to a struggle. During the struggle the parties got upon the sidewalk. The sidewalk containing a piece of peach skin, caused the parties to plunge into the gutter. In getting up, Mr. Hale's prisoner effected his escape, and "struck out for freedom" in a manner that would have done honor to a frightened locomotive. He ran down Lydins street to Bread, down Bread to Westerloo, and down Westerloo till he disappeared "somewhere." Hale continued the search for an hour and a half, but was at last forced to give it up so. The mysterious lodger had made good his escape, while Elias went home to swear about his bad luck.

The next day the fugitive was found in the woods, near the Alms House. On bringing him to the police office it was discovered that he was the lunatic who escaped from the Utica Asylum a week ago. The discovery has made Hale feel slightly wolfish. The idea that an Albany policeman should be sold by "a man without brains," irritates him awfully. We can't say that we are surprised at it.—[Alb. Miscellaneous News Items.

Strange incidents sometimes occur in the life of an actor or actress. One evening last week, while Miss Logan was performing in the "Hunchback," at the Albany Theatre, and just as she said, "Clifford, why don't you speak to me?" one of the spectators replied, in an audible voice, "Do, Clifford, I would, if she'd talk to me in that way."

A patient at the Utica Insane Asylum, who was formerly a doctor, while out upon a stroll, was attracted by the cries of a poor girl who had fallen and broke her arm. He immediately went to work and set and splintered the broken limb, and told the destitute mother of the child that he hurt was nothing, and went on his way.

Spurious indigo is said to be very common in the commercial markets. The test of genuineness is to rub its surface with the finger nail or any hard substance, when a genuine article will show a copper or brown color, varying in brightness according to the quality of the article; the spurious article is devoid of this.

Santa Anna is safely housed in his old residence near Carthagena, in New Grenada. The Aspinwall Courier says:

"Our readers are aware that he has a beautiful residence but a few miles distant from Carthagena. His hacienda was under good cultivation two years ago, when he left it at the call of his partisans in Mexico. He now returns to private life for the third time, and we presume the little pueblo of tobacco must have strong attractions to induce him to locate his retirement there a second time, after his exciting and varied career. During his former residence at Tobago, his style of living and the hospitality were liberal even to profuseness, and his cordial welcome astonished many a sojourner of various nationalities and of different religious and political creeds. He was the general benefactor of a large neighborhood, and gave considerable attention to the vicinity.

A correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer says that the launching of the naval steamer in course of construction in Washington, will be delayed some two months, owing to the necessity of a more extensive excavation than was expected for the enlargement of the basin destined to receive her. The completion of those at Norfolk will be delayed probably six months by the sickness at that station. These steamers will be the noblest triumphs of naval skill which our architects have yet achieved, and they will also be larger than any steam vessels yet constructed for our navy or that of any other country. In point of speed and strength it is expected they will maintain the same pre-eminence.

A correspondent of the New York Sun, gives the following account of the manner in which railroad accidents are provided against in Germany:

Every railroad company is bound by law to have a double track on their lines, and no person is allowed to walk on a railroad track at any time, by day or night, under penalty of the law. A barrier, consisting of two stout planks, is placed along the side of the tracks, to keep off animals. Every fifteen or twenty miles along the track there is a station for a guard or watchman, who lives in a little hut beside the road, and whose business it is to be at his post, with a red flag in his hand, at the approach of every train; and before the train is due to patrol his beat to see that all is safe, and to remove all obstacles which are sometimes placed upon the track by miscreants. In case of danger, the guard hoists on a telegraph so called, which stands near each guard house, a red painted cancer, which can be seen by the engineer a great distance, but if everything is right, the two wooden arms of the telegraph are stretched to the air. During the night there is instead of the cancer a lantern with a deep red light placed in the air as a warning of danger, and a common one if all is in a safe condition.—Scarcely crossing there is a gate, which is locked up as soon as a train is due and any one, either on horseback or in a carriage who desires to cross must wait until the train has passed.

The Montreal Chronicle, of the 12th instant states that the Commissariat advertises for a vessel to convey six thousand barrels of cartridges from Quebec to England. The large consumption of ammunition in the present war not only exhausts all that the mills can make, but will cause the larger part of the contents of the provincial magazines to be sailed out of their slumbers into actual service.

New Orleans Money Market.

Thursday Evening, Nov. 1, 1855.

The market continues to be well supplied with money, with no very marked increase in the offerings, both in and outside of bank. The city trade is good, and the daily circulation of money is increasing. On the levee business is rapidly assuming its usual winter briskness. Whatever may be the result of the season's business, we have a good commencement, and half of the battle is fought and won.

The activity in and about the Custom-house continues, and from the monthly imposts received, it will be perceived there is a slight increase for the month ending yesterday over the corresponding month of last year, with an increase of 10 per ct. over October, 1854.

Amount of duties received on Merchandize, imported through the Custom-house of New Orleans, for the month of October, for four years past:

1852, (October)	$141,758	1854, (October)	$119,754
1853, (October)	199,811	1855, (October)	127,194

We shall furnish the value of merchandize as soon as the accounts are made up.

We are gratified to learn that our remarks regarding the purchase of bonds by our Banks from the Opelousas and Jackson Railroads have been received with much favor, and we doubt not, if any Bank Director and Stockholder would go and look at the roads and make themselves actually and fully acquainted with the great progress that has been made within the last eighteen months, and closely study the benefits and advantages which are to accrue to the community, to every individual, transient and permanent, would be convinced that they are objects worthy of their most favorable consideration. The Opelousas road is now completed to Tigerville, sixty-six miles from the city. At a recent meeting of the Directors of the Company, it was resolved to push the work

The Mouth of Fame

My father was a slave all the week, and could only call himself his own on Sunday. The master naturalist, who used to spend the day at the house of an old female relation, then gave him his liberty on condition that he should cut, and at his own expense. But my father used secretly to take with him a crust of bread, which he hid in his botanizing box, and, leaving Paris as soon as it was day, he would wander far into the valley of Montmorency, the wood of Meudon, or among the windings of the Marne. Excited by the fresh air, the penetrating perfume of the growing vegetation, or the fragrance of the honeysuckles, he would walk on until hunger or fatigue made themselves felt. Then he would sit under a hedge, or by the side of a stream, and would make a rustic feast, by tears on water-cresses, wood strawberries, and blackberries picked from the hedges; he would gather a few plants, read a few pages of Florian, then in greatest vogue, of Gessner, who was just translated, or of Jean Jacques, of whom he possessed three odd volumes. The day was thus passed alternately in activity and rest, in pursuit and meditation, until the declining sun warned him to take again the road to Paris, where he would arrive, his feet torn and dusty, but his mind invigorated for a whole week.

One day, as he was going towards the wood of Viroflay, he met, close to it, a stranger who was occupied in botanizing, and in sorting the plants he had gathered. He was an oldish man, with an honest face; but his eyes, which were rather deep set under his eyebrows, had an uneasy and timid expression. He was dressed in a brown cloth coat, a gray waistcoat, black breeches, worsted stockings, and held an ivory-headed cane under his arm. His appearance was that of a retired tradesman who was living on his means, and rather below the golden mien of Horace.

My father, who had great respect for age, civilly raised his hat as him as he passed; but in doing so, a plant he held fell from his hand; the stranger stooped to take it up, and recognised it.

"It is a Dentaria heptaphyllos," said he; "I have not seen any of them in these woods; did you find it here, sir?"

My father replied, that it was to be found in abundance on the top of the hill, towards Sevres, as well as the great Lacerpetium.

"That, too!" repeated the old man more briskly. "Ah! I shall go and look for them; I have gathered them formerly on the hill-side of Robaila.

My father proposed to take him. The stranger accepted the proposal with thanks, and hastened to collect together the plants he had gathered; but all of a sudden he appeared to be seized with a scrupla. He observed to his companion, that the road he was going was half-way up the hill, and led in the direction of the castle of Dames Royales at Bellevue; that by going to the top he would consequently turn out of his road, and that it was not right he should take this trouble for a stranger.

My father insisted upon it with his habitual good nature; but the more eagerness he showed, the more obstinately the old man refused; it even seemed to my father that his good intentions at last excited suspicion. He therefore contented himself with pointing out the road to the stranger, whom he saluted, and he soon lost sight of him.

Many hours passed by, and he thought no more of the meeting. He had reached the copses of Chaville, where, stretched on the ground in a mossy glade, he read once more the volume of Emile. The delight of reading it had so completely absorbed him, that he ceased to see or hear anything around him. With his cheeks flushed, and eye moist, he repeated aloud a passage which had particularly affected him.

An exclamation uttered close to him, awoke him from his ecstacy; he raised his head, and perceived the tradesman-looking person he had met before, on the cross-road at Viroflay.

He was loaded with plants, the collection of which seemed to have put him into high good-humor.

"A thousand thanks, sir," said he to my father. "I have found all that you told me of, and I am indebted to you for a charming walk."

My father respectfully got up, and made a civil reply. The stranger had become quite familiar, and even asked if his young brother botanist did not think of returning to Paris. My father replied in the affirmative, and opened his tin box to put his book back in it.

The stranger asked him, with a smile, if he might, without impertinence, ask the name of it. My father answered that it was Rousseau's "Emile."

The stranger immediately became grave.

They walked for some time side by side, my father expressing, with the warmth of a heart still teeming with emotion, all that this work had made him feel; his companion remaining cold and silent. The former extolled the glory of the great Genevese writer, whose genius had made him a citizen of the world; he expatiated on this privilege of great thinkers, who reign in spite of time and space, and gather together a people of willing subjects out of all nations; but the stranger suddenly interrupted him:

"And how do you know," said he mildly, "whether Jean Jacques would not exchange the reputation which you seem to envy, for the life of one of the wood-cutters whose chimney's smoke we see? What has fame brought him except persecution? The unknown friends whom his books may have made for him, content themselves with blessing him in their hearts; while the declared enemies that they have drawn upon him, pursue him with vibilence and calumny! His pride has been flattered by success! How many times has it been wounded by satire! And be assured that human pride is like the Sybarite, who was prevented from sleeping by a crease in a rose leaf. The activity of a vigorous mind, by which the world profits, almost always turns against him who possesses it. He expects more from it as he grows older; the ideal he pursues continually disgusts him with the actual; he is like a man who, with a too refined sight, discerns spots and blemishes in the most beautiful face. I will not speak of stronger temptations and of deeper downfalls. Genius, you have said, is a kingdom; but what virtuous man is not afraid of being a king? He who feels only his great powers, is—with the weakness and passions of our nature—preparing for great failures. Believe me, sir, the unhappy man who wrote this book, is no object of my admiration or of envy; but, if you have a feeling heart, pity him!"

My father, astonished at the excitement with which his companion pronounced these last words, did not know what to answer.

Just then they reached the paved road which led from Meudon castle to that of Versailles. A carriage was passing.

The ladies who were in it perceived the old man, uttered an exclamation of surprise, and, leaning out of the window, repeated—

"There is Jean-Jaques—there is Rousseau!"

Then the carriage disappeared in the distance.

My father remained motionless, confounded and amazed, his eyes wide open and his hands clasped.

Rousseau, who had shuddered on hearing his name spoken, turned towards him:

"You see," said he, with the bitter misanthropy which his later misfortunes had produced in him, "Jean-Jaques cannot even hide himself: he is an object of curiosity to some, of malignity to others, and to all he is a public thing, at which they point the finger. It would signify less if he had only to submit to the impertinence of the idle; but, as soon as a man has had the misfortune to make himself a name, he becomes public property. Every one rakes into his life, relates his most trivial actions, and insults his feelings; he becomes like those walls, which every passer-by may deface with some abusive writing. Perhaps you will say that I have myself encouraged this curiosity by publishing my Memoirs. But the world forced me to it. They looked into my house, through the blinds, and they slandered me; I have opened the doors and windows, so that they should at least know me such as I am. Adieu, sir; whenever you wish to know the worth of fame, remember that you have seen Rousseau.

ALLEGED IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.—The Boston (Mass.) Atlas announces that Captain Griffith Morris, of the iron steamer R. B. Forbes, has discovered how to detect and measure the deviation of the compass from local attraction in any ship. His method has been successfully tested by himself and other sea captains, for the last four years.

THE TIRED SOLDIER.

A SKETCH BY MEISTER KARL.

"Sister, there is a strange man by the well!" cried little Toinette.

"I see—it is only a soldier," added the auet. Sister Marie sighed. "My Francois was a soldier," she reflected. But this was a grief of three year's standing, and though she sighed, she found it possible to give her mind an abrupt twirl to some other subject.

There he sat by the well—a travel-worn, and sun-browned soldier. A patient, gentle man; he seemed, too, as one that had borne and suffered too many great-hardships and griefs to be lightly moved by trifles. Courage and fortitude render some men defiant and unbelieving—they had influenced this man into kindness and silence.

Possibly the fatigues of the day's journey had wearied him into apathy, for he gazed on the parents and children earnestly, yet said nothing.

"A warm evening, friend," quoth the old man. Marie said nothing, but gave him a pitcher filled with fresh water. He drank eagerly, and returning it, with thanks, gazed again into her face with a steadfast and somewhat sad air.

"You are married?" he inquired, yet in a tone which gave no offence.

"No," said Marie.

"So pretty a girl never wants lovers" remarked the soldier to the parents. This was a compliment, but it was conveyed with such a tone of sombre wisdom, that the old people nodded as if the cure himself had spoken it.

"I do not know whether I have a lover in the world," replied Marie. And she replied in a grave tone. For a jesting conversation, on such a subject, and with a stranger, this was the strangest manner of carrying it on.

"Perhaps, then, you would be glad to hear of Pierre Basil," said the soldier.

"He is dead," answered Maria, her eyes filling with tears. "Why do you talk so?"

Here the old gentleman, who posted behind Marie, had been latently scrutinizing the stranger, winked to himself with an air of satisfied sagacity, nodded, smiled downwards with the right corner of his mouth, and laid his hand on the old lady's shoulder. That touch said distinctly;

"Hush! Keep still. Here's something coming off!"

"Not yet," replied the soldier to Maria, meaning that Pierro Basil was still alive.—"Not yet." And looking intently in her brown eyes, he added:

"Don't you know me, Maria?"

There was no faisting or extravagant joy manifested. Both had seen and suffered too much for that. But Marie clasped her arms around her old lover's neck and kissed him, and as her tears ran down his brown cheek she whispered:

"Pierre, I have always been, and always will be thine."—[Appleton's Ornamente of Memory.

The Newport Mercury, speaking of the result af tha prusing in tha Navy by the naval board, and of how heavily it falls on Rhode Island, says:

Lt. Brownell has seen the British flag pulled down seven times. He was with the army at Fort George, Little York, and was at the battle af Erie, and with Harrison at Malden and on the river Thames. He was also at the siege of Erie, and was the senior officer of three vessels ordered to Buffalo to cooperate with and aid in crossing Gen. Brown's army to besiege the fort. He commanded a part of the forces which surprised and drove out the garrison of Dover, having first crossed into the enemy's country as a spy, to get the necessary information before the attack. With two hundred sailors and one hundred infantry, he crossed the lake and marched seven miles in the dead of night, drove out seven hundred British troops, burnt the place and thereby prarented the meditated attack upon and the destruction of tha fleet of Erie; and in the battle of Lake Erie he also distinguished himself. Lieut. Brownell is a superior sailor, is in the full possession of all his faculties, and no charge has ever been brought against him—yet he is set aside, without an opportunity being offered him of defending himself. Who dare say that republics are not ungrateful?

AMERICAN SURGEONS IN THE RUSSIAN ARMY.—We have seen, says the Patriot, a letter from Dr. J. B. Stoddard, Jr., of this city, in which he states that there are eight American surgeons attached to the Russian army in the Crimea—Drs. Eldridge, Jones, Johnson and himself, from Maryland; Drs. Reed and Denninger, of Pennsylvania; Dr. Holt, of South Carolina, and Dr. Smith from Louisiana. He states that they are treated with great consideration by the officers of the Russian army, and that he witnessed the assault on Sebastopol, which resulted in the taking of the southern portion and the retreat of two hundred thousand Russians across tha bridge, to the northern side, attended as it was by tha conflagration of Sebastopol, tha explosion of mines, hurrying thousands into eternity, and tha sinking of a navy, constituting a scene too fearfully tragic to be expressed in language. THE YELLOW FEVER.—We regret that it is not in our power to announce tha cessation of this scourge of death. But few cases occur in town, and though it has certainly ceased to be epidemic here, yet we are satisfied that our atmosphere is not free from the melaria of the disease.

Tha yellow fever has taken a wider range this year than on any former occasion, and clearly shews its transmissibility. It has not only been taken by persons on the low lands but by those in tha pine woods, who had not been in town or anywhere where it existed, and whose attack can only be accounted for by its being communicated to them by those who, being susceptible to the disease, had been where it existed.

It has taken off some highly estimable citizens this week—Jos. L. Brown and Oscar T. Haworth, of Bayou Rapides, and J. J. Irwin and wife, in Gray's Creek Pine Woods settlement. One or two children of Mr. Irwin and O. P. Alexander, of the same neighborhood, a most exemplary man, died of it last week.

We understand that tha fever has broken out afresh and with redonbled virulence in Marksville. Handerson Taylor, Esq., and twelve or fifteen others, have been taken with it. Mr. T.'s case, we are happy to learn, is mild.

LATER FROM TEXAS.—The steamship Louisiana, Capt. Talbot, arrived yesterday morning from Galveston.

We hear nothing further from Capt. Callahan. The Galveston News says:

The battle of Escondido was brought on through a mistake, on the part of the Indians and Mexicans. The previous plan was to have let Capt. Callahan pass the party which he fought, when it was to have fallen upon his rear, while another force was to attack him in front. But the first party attacked him, supposing he was going to San Fernando, instead of the Indian camp. The fact that the Indians were with the force that attacked Capt. Callahan's command, is satisfactory proof that the Mexicans fully knew his object in crossing the Rio Grande, and that they intended to protect the Indians. We have always been of the opinion that the Indians were encouraged by the Mexicans to commit depredations upon our frontier, and now we are satisfied that such is the case.

Finding that Capt. Callahan was not to be deceived, the Mexicans and Indians, to the number of a thousand or fifteen hundred, surrounded tha town of Piedras Negras, and commenced an attack. Not being prepared for a siege, and doubting the propriety of attempting to hold out until reinforcements could reach him, Capt Callahan determined to abandon the place, and on Friday, the 28th ult., commenced crossing his horses. To prevent the enemy from attacking his rear, he found it necessary to fire the town. He succeeded in getting all his horses and men across tha river before noon the next day, without the loss of a man or horse. Some twenty-odd head of horses were previously stampeded.

An extradition case was before the U. S. Commissioner, in New York, on Friday last—one Bacilion, a Frenchman, having been claimed by the Government of France, on the charge of forgery. The prisoner declined to answer any questions.

Murder of Six Americans on the Amazon.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune furnishes the following account of the massacre of a number of Americans at the Fort of Tabatinga, on the frontiers of Brazil, taken from the Pario, published at Para:

On the 24 of the current month (September) there arrived here from Tabatinga a "Corneio Extraordinario," with intelligence that six filibusteros, whose nationality could not be wholly distinguished, although all appearances indicated that they were North Americans, had forced the authorities of Loreto (ie Peru) to give them the pass, with which they entered the territory of Brazil, robbing and destroying whatever they found, without any regard to whom it belonged or to the directions that had been given them by the authorities of Peru. The authorities of Loreto, from whom they had extorted the pass, hastened to give information of the same to the commander of the fort of Tabatinga, Capt. Garcez, who, putting himself on the alert, saw the filibustero coming into port in a canoe, and ordering them to halt, they answered by a discharge of their guns and passed down the river. Without loss of time they were pursued by a canoe with troops, sent by the said Capt. Garcez, which, arriving within gunshot, the soldiers were saluted by a second discharge from the said eight, who then, jumping on shore, proposed to strengthen themselves, taking for a wall the trunks of trees, behind which they made, over the top of a canoe, a very lively fire, from which one soldier was killed and a Tapuio Indian gravely wounded.

"In these critical circumstances the commander of the expedition judged it prudent to let the canoe he taken down the current, and then making a small disembarkation under cover of a high bank of earth he ordered that small division to cut a way through the matted undergrowth to the rear of the enemy, while he turned to take him in front and divert his attention, for which end here turned up the river, expending some shots for diversion of the enemy, until the filibusters, finding themselves surrounded, redoubled their energy, and exposed themselves to everything to which a General subjects himself when he has no place for retreating in good order. Now throwing into the water whatever they had brought with them, they struggled and fought boldly, and as if they were sixty—because, having arms of ten barrels, the number that they represented appeared thus large; but the low, steady aim of the Brazilian soldiers succeeded in sending below and ordering within a little time from this for a better world, five of the resistants. The sixth, the only one that escaped an ounce of lead, took to his heels with the nimblest activity; but encountering a lake, and thrusting himself into it head foremost to pass it by swimming, he was made a prey of by the alligators that called him bait.

The Tribune correspondant says that as to the robbing, there must be a wide mistake, for there is nothing in tha whole country that can be taken, unless it be the forest, the rivers, the monkeys, alligators, mosquitos, sand flies, and occasionally a few bananas at an Indian ohacra. He also says:

"Mr. Dewey, the United States Consul here, has just received a letter from our enterprising fellow-citizen of New Jersey, Marcus Williams, who resides at the Barra, and who, besides being a general favorite and knowing everything that occurs in the country, is discriminating and reliable. He is of opinion that the party were robbed and murdered, and that he will never be able to obtain any reliable information concerning the massacre, as they have probably taken good care to let no one escape. Our Consul is about forwarding the facts to our Minister at Rio, although for all practical purposes he might as well send them to 'the man in the moon'—not because our Minister is inefficient—he is quite otherwise—but because we have no treaty with Brazil that does not mean any one thing quite as well as another, or whose few and faulty stipulations cannot be in every respect reasoned into moonshine by the astute French diplomacy of the professional ministers at Brazil. As delay is the great instrument of Brazilian diplomacy, it would doubtless take two successive "administrations" in our country, with the most energetic representation in Brazil, to arrive at the outskirts of the real facts affecting this massacre on the Amazon."

Later from California.

By the arrival on Monday night of the steamship Grenada, from New York via Havana, we have dates from San Francisco to the 6th inst.

We extract the following items from the summary of that excellent paper, the Evening News:

The only matter partaking of importance which has transpired, is the decision by the 12th District Court, Judge Norton, against the city, in the suits of the purchasers of the slip property to recover back the instalments of the purchase money already paid in. The decision is based upon the fact that the ordinance ordering the sale was not passed by the legal majority in the Common Council, consequently was null; and that therefore tha purchasers acquired no title, and are entitled to receive back what they paid. The property is very much depreciated in value. The purchasers have placed attachments upon it, and at a forced sale it would not bring a third of the original price. So that should the Supreme Court affirm Judge Nortou's decision, the city will lose from $500,000 to $900,000. It is pretty confidently expected, however, that the Supreme Court will reverse the decision, which in the opinion of the majority of the Bar is erroneous.

A diabolical attempt was made on the 22d of September to poison the whole family of Col. Watkins, of Almeda, opposite to this city. Some unknown fiend placed strychnine in the coffee which the family was to partake of for breakfast. Fortunately the quantity was so great that the presence of some foreign substance was perceived. Col. W. immediately made his family desist from drinking the coffee, and soaking a piece of meet in it gave it to a dog. In a few minutes the dog was dead.

The Board of Land Commissioners, on the 26th of September, rejected the claim of Lucas brothers for the Julpinas tract, claimed by them. This was an immense tract, covering some three hundred square miles.

Alexis Brient, the gunpowder man, who attempted to blow up the store of Ritter & Co., was sentenced on Sept. 27th to two years' imprisonment in the State Prison.

Five of the men who deserted from the U. S. frigate Independence a week or so ago, were drowned in attempting to make their way through the inlet in Marin county. Their bodies have been recovered.

The town of Jamestown, in Toulumne county, was destroyed by fire on the 30th of October. The loss is estimated at $75,000.

The Maine liquor law was defeated in this State at the recent election by a majority of about six thousand.

We have already received intelligence that a young man named Gibson was killed by the Sioux Indians, near the Platte Bridge, while on his way across the plains. After his death the train, which consisted of fifty well-armed men and twelve wagons, was constantly attacked by the Indians, and another man named Gallagher was killed.

A celebrated hangman in England, showing the gallows attached to Newgate, observed to the bystanders that he had hung twenty persons on it at one time. Some one suggested that it was too small. "Oh, no, bless you, twenty-five people could swing on that very comfortable."

The Imperial Library of the Court of Vienna contains more than sixteen thousand manuscripts in the Greek, Hebrew, Chinese, Arabic, etc., languages on parchment, and nearly twelve thousand in the European language upon paper; twelve thousand Incunabula, nearly two hundred and eighty thousand modern books, more than six thousand volumes of music, and eight thousand eight hundred autographs of distinguished persons. There are beside in Vienna seventeen libraries, among which tha private imperial library and that of the University are the most considerable.

LOUISIANA.—The Opelousas Patriot, of Saturday last, says:

We regret to learn that on Tuesday morning last, the gin-house of Mr. Macelie Lafleur, on Bayou Boeuf, in this parish, together with about eighty bales of cotton, was burnt, and that in the effort to extinguish the fire five negro men were badly burned. The fire was accidental, and no insurance upon either house or cotton.

The Bayou Sara Ledger, of Saturday, has the following paragraphs:

Quite a severe frost was observed in the vicinity ou Thursday morning last, and the weather at the present writing is delightfully serene—a bracing atmosphere reinvigorates the wasted energies of our citizens, produced by the protracted heat of last summer, while not a cloud or a speck thereof dims a visible space of the blue firmament above us.

We regret to learn that an attempt was made to fire our town on Wednesday night last. Circumstantial evidence was strong against an individual and he was compelled to leave.

LOUISIANA.—The Baton Rouge Gazette of Sunday has the following:

We understand from communications with gentlemen from the country, that the horse thieves, who have been for several years committing depredations in our parish, have again commenced operations with a celerity and concert of action, rendering detection almost a matter of impossibility. Some three weeks since Mr. Charles Pipes lost a fine black horse, and to-day we insert the advertisement of Colonel Pratt, offering $250 reward for the apprehension of the thief who stole a fine mule from him a few nights since.

The Capitolian of Wednesday last says:

Some excitement has existed in Baton Rouge during the last week, arising from several anonymous letters, announcing a concerted insurrection among the slaves of that city. It is generally supposed to be a hoax.

The Planters' Banner (Franklin) of Thursday says:

Winter is paying us an early visit. The late showery weather has been succeeded by a keen north wind for the last two days, and this morning we had a smart frost, sufficient to kill the infectious influence of yellow fever, though we fear it will prove fatal to some of those down with the disease in the lower part of our parish.

The Concordia Intelligencer of Friday last says:

A rain set in on Monday of the present week, ending at night with a change of wind to the North and colder weather; and on yesterday morning, 25th last., we had a severe frost. Ice was formed in several places in this village and neighborhood, and at 6 o'clock the thermometer stood at 32 degrees.

The Natchitoches Chronicle states that on the 15th the gin house of Mrs. Lemoe, situated about seven miles from that place, was destroyed by fire, together with one hundred and sixty bales of cotton. A female slave was arrested and confessed that she fired the building.

A married lady named Pfeil, who was a devotee of the Brahmin faith, died a few days ago in Milwaukee, Wis. Previous to her death she requested that in accordance with a provision of her religion, her corpse should be burned to ashes. Her husband collected a pile of cord-wood—sixteen or twenty cords—and proceeded with this novel rite, but the Sheriff interfered and prevented its accomplishment.

ENGLISH BEST OF ALL.—Ernest Jones, the war poet, touches this idea to a fine point in the following lines:

Greek's harp we love to hear;
Latin is a trumpet clear;
Spanish-like an organ swells;
Italian rings its bridal bells;
France, with many a frolic mien,
Tunes her sprightly violin;
Loud the German rolls his drum
When Russia's clashing cymbals come;
But Britain's song may well rejoice,
For English is the human voice.

☞ We seldom recommend a manufactured medicine, believing that, in most cases, Nature herself perfects a cure more rapidly and effectually than can be accomplished by the vegetables and minerals of medical science. But in the matter of dyspepsia, there are chronic features about it, which very often defy all the efforts of nature to create a healthy action of the digestive organs, and it not subsequently happens that thousands suffer for years, diseased both in body and in mind, from indigestion and its kindred ills. To such, HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, prepared by D. C. M. Jackson, are truly a most valuable preparation. It is a tonic medicine, giving a healthy action to the stomach, and will be found highly serviceable at all times, but especially during the spring. Dyspepsia can only be cured by patient perseverance in one course of treatment; and to all those suffering under this sad malady we would recommend an application to the Depot of Hoofland's German Bitters, 120 Arch street, Philadelphia. We invite the special attention of parents and guardians to the advantages here offered to young men desirous of a finished collegiate or business education. The location of the college in a quiet valley, ten miles from a town—the freedom, consequently, from temptation to vice—the full and thorough course of study—the experience and ability of the Faculty—the wholesome discipline—the facilities for lectures afforded by ample apparatus, libraries and cabinets, and, withal, the cheapness of terms and healthfulness of position, cannot fail to secure to this college, as heretofore, a liberal patronage.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.
Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 19 miles east of Bayou Sara. The location is beautiful, retired and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.
As the section of the Southwest is but poorly provided with academies and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received for entering College proper.
The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.

THE CHRISTIAN PORTION.

Ache on, poor stricken heart, ache on,
Thy Saviour's heart has ached before—
It is thy precious pension
To bear—He bore.

Thy little cross of pain, how light,
Compared with that, my soul, he knew—
Thy little cares and ills how slight,
How nameless few.

Oh, had this life, like summer day,
Shone brightly, soul, upon my path,
From God thou long hadst staid away,
A child of wrath.

But now a drooping, trembling thing,
Oft sorely smitten by his rod,
Thou comest in thy grief to cling
Closer to God.

Yet aching, suffering heart, be still—
Soon, soon shall life's short pang be o'er—
With its last pale it soon shall thrill,
Thee—feel no more.

Then feel no more! Ah, no! ah, no!
Then feel but peace and bliss alone—
Then feel what angels feel—then know
Their joys its own.

Oh, that it now might rise and win
That omnipotent still to spin fiat given,
And career up its hopes within
Its God—its heaven.

Walk softly with the holy dead—
Their presence know, their spirit share—
Think of their bliss, their path way tread,
Their image bear.

Oh, thus with Jesus by our side,
What are this earth's low griefs to thee—
Up, then, in God's high strength abide—
In Him be free.

Free to the soul's unfettered flight—
Free to the love that wins its way
Where all is pure, where all is bright—
Heaven's cloudless day.

QUESTIONS OF LAW.

The Southren Methodist Church has already taken notion—see last editon of Discipline—squared to the following suggestions. The Christian Advocate and Journal contains the following correct view of disciplinary provisions:

WHO ARE TO DECIDE QUESTIONS OF LAW?

The Bishops in Annual Conferences, and the Presiding Eldors in Quarterly Conferences.

But is a Bishop authorized to decide questions of law when not presiding in Annual Conferences? I apprehend not. The words of the Discipline, page 42, are as follows. Speaking of the duty of Bishops, among other things it is said to be his duty "To decide all questions of law in an Annual Conference, subject to an appeal to the General Conference; but in all cases the application of law shall be with the Conference."

Now, allowing that a Bishop is authorized to expound the law when out of a Conference, how is the Conference to "make an application of the law" to that particular case? The Conference is not in session, and therefore can neither enforce the law, nor appeal to the General Conference.

It is implied that it is Conference, and not an individual member of it, that must appeal, if an appeal be made; and how, then, can the Conference appeal from a Bishop's decision when there is no Conference convened to hear it? And how can a Conference "make the application of law" when there is no Conference in session?

I conclude, therefore, from the very words, as well as from the spirit and design of the rule in this case, that the decision of a law question by a Bishop, when not in a Conference, has no binding force, and that it is only in force in that particular case on which it is given, and to which the Conference is to apply it. It may indeed be quoted as a precedent in other similar cases, but can have no more of an authoritative influence than the opinion of any other good and wise man.

Nor is any preacher or presiding elder under any obligation to abide by any decision of a bishop in the administration of discipline on his circuit, station or district, that is given him out of the chair of the Conference—though he may take it if he choose, as the advice of a wise and good man.

The bishop presides in an Annual Conference, in the case of a trial in the capacity of a judge. And who ever heard of a judge expounding the law, in any particular case, when not in a court? He may, to be sure, write his opinion upon the law, and it may be quoted as an opinion, nothing more; but while seated upon the bench, it is his duty to expound the law to the jury, and they are bound to frame their verdict accordingly; and this decision of the law, and the verdict, must stand, unless set aside by a higher authority. Even so must the decision of a law question by a bishop "in an Annual Conference," stand as the rule of judgment in that particular case until it is set aside by the higher authority of the General Conference, by its being reversed by an appeal of the Annual Conference. But if it be made out of the Conference it has no binding influence whatever.

I desire those who think differently to read attentively the rule in the Discipline on this subject, and see if they can come to any other conclusion than the one above expressed. Let them show, if able, how a Conference can either appeal from the decision of a bishop, or make an application of the law when the Conference is not in session.

Wesleyan Conference of 1855.

An occasional correspondent of the Independent takes off the personnel of this body of 550 divines, ranging from John Hickling, who has attained the ripe age of 90, to Edward Day, now appointed on his first circuit:

The Conference platform first attracts the notice of the visitor, elevated as it is about six feet above the ground floor, and occupied by the President in the center, having on his left the Secretary, sub-Secretaries, letter-writers, editors and missionary secretaries, and on his right all the ex-Presidents still alive. The officials on the left are men of the highest mark in the body. I saw there Dr. John Hannah, the eminent Wesleyan theologian, a fit associate of Joseph Benson, Adam Clark and Richard Watson, who has prepared for the press elaborate expositions of separate books of Scripture, which, when published, will vie with those of Dr. Joseph Brown, of Edinburgh. I saw in the same group the author of "The Brand of Dominic," "The Jesuit," and other valuable works, Wm. H Rule, who received a D.D. from Dickinson College, United States, during the Conference, and of which he is richly deserving. Singular enough, Dr. Rule in appearance looks exactly like a Jesuit, albeit he is one of the most terrible foes to Popery that this kingdom contains. I saw, too, in near contiguity to Dr. Rule, the Rev. Wm. Arthur, author of the "Successful Merchant," "Mission to the Mysore," "The People's Day," without exception the most popular writer who bears the cognomen of Methodist in this country. Catholic in spirit, Mr. Arthur is ever ready to fraternize with the members of other churches. At the Anniversaries last May, Mr. Arthur delivered at the meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society one of his mighty pleadings for Christian Missions, and at the meeting of the Congregational Missionary Society in Exeter Hall, he was called upon to make what is called in this country the "collection speech."

Passing from the left to the right of the Conference platform, my eyes were attracted by the stately and venerable forms of those ministers who have previously occupied the President's chair. Among these grave seniors the palm is borne by George Marsden, who has twice, in 1821 and in 1831, filled the President's chair, and who has been an itinerant preacher for the long space of sixty-three years. Mr. Marsden's piety is altogether of the solemn and sombre kind; his voice is sepulchral in its tone, and report says that he never smiles. Certain it is that the writer of this, who has occasionally seen him for the last twelve years, never himself saw a smile flit across his countenance. Dr. Jabez Bunting occupies the most conspicuous place among the ex-Presidents. He has been President four times, in 1820, 1828, 1836, and 1844; the only man, except the late Dr. R. Newton, who has had this fourfold honor. Dr. Bunting commenced his extraordinary public career in 1799; his sagacious intellect, his pure commanding eloquence, his consummate wisdom, his evangelistic zeal, his governmental ability, and his unparalleled tact and power as a debater, all combined to give him the supreme place in the counsels of Methodism forty years ago, which he has ever since retained with honor to himself and advantage to the Methodist community. At this present Conference, although able scarcely to place one foot before another, or to support himself on his legs, through great physical infirmity in the extremities of his body, yet his mind has held fast all its fire, force and brilliancy, as was seen in almost every speech which he delivered during the three weeks' session of the Leeds Conference.

Dr. James Dixon is another notability among the ex Presidents. He is the son-in-law of the far-famed Richard Watson. He was the delegate of the British Conference to the General Conference of the American Methodists in 1848. More than other Wesleyan divines he proves the doctrines of Methodism by a rigid process of philosophical as well as Scriptural induction; and for a species of intellectual enthusiastic eloquence he is unsurpassed among his compeers. Dr. Dixon is an ardent admirer of your vast Republic; so much so, that his loyalty to our Queen has been somewhat questioned since his visit to the United States. And, inexplicable as it may appear, Dr. Dixon's high estimate of American Methodism has induced the suspicion among his brethren that since his return he has been disaffected toward English Methodism. It cannot be doubted that the course which the conference has deemed it right to pursue toward the "Reformers" has not commanded the approval of the Doctor, and this, more than anything else, has lessened the interest which he has appeared to take in the proceedings of the British Conference of late years. At the recent Conference, Dr. Dixon was only present the first six days, and while present never once opened his mouth on any question. He has also become prematurely old, chiefly through his excessive indulgence in the use of tobacco; the incessant stimulation to which he has long subjected himself having now shattered his nervous system, and nearly deprived him of the use of his eyes.

The other ex-Presidents are the brothers Thomas and Samuel Jackson; the former the able theological Professor at Richmond College, and the latter one of the best pastors and keenest controvertists belonging to the body; John Scott, remarkable for his wisdom and his perfect mastery of all the ecclesiastical and financial departments of Methodism; John Lomas, of unruffled temper and angelic mien, possessing, too, a mind of uncommon strength and beauty; John Furrar, the best classical scholar in the Conference; and Dr. Beecham, far-seeing, sedate, devout, who has just returned from British America, loaded with well-earned honors.

Several able speakers and active administrators were to be found dispersed among the body of the Conference on the floor, some of whom may be briefly characterized. I heard Charles Prest, the thunder tones of whose voice pealed on almost every question, whose disputative and business talents, however, have eaten up the freshness and unction that formerly marked his pulpit labors. Samuel D. Waddy, the founder of Wesley College, Sheffield, next to Mr. Prest, makes his manly voice heard on all important occasions. He is thoroughly independent, and yet looks upon his brethren who may differ from him with profound respect; and I could not, while listening to him, divest myself of the conviction that he is destined to initiate some valuable improvements in the practical working of Methodism. John Wesley Thomas, too, is one of the best speakers in the Conference. During the lifetime of the eminent Dr. Beaumont, Mr. Thomas was usually found on all disputed questions pitted against him. The leviathan Doctor could with ease vanquish all his other opponents, but when Mr. Thomas began to speak, and hurled at the Doctor those piercing sarcasms for which he is so renowned, Mr. Thomas was very quickly left in sole possession of the ground. Dr. Beaumont is now no more, and this year's Conference has been harmonious on almost every question, so that Dr. Thomas' peculiar talent has not been called into requisition. On two occasions only did I hear him speak—on the Sabbath, when he onstigated the publicans, the Times newspaper, and infidel statesmen, who had conspired, he said, against England's Sabbath, and commenced a crusade against the sanctities of the Lord's day; and on "question by penalty," that vexed question, which has been so vexing to those who have seceded at different times from the jurisdiction of the Parent Conference.

When the book-room report was presented, I could not help contrasting the slow and cautious steps of the British Conference with the enterprise infused into all American book schemes and periodicals. Although we see the year 1855, this influential church has no weekly journal and no Quarterly Review; and the sales of the few publications of the Conference are anything but creditable. Of the Shilling Magazine there have been sold during the year 5000 copies a month, being 500 less than the former year. Of the Six-penny Magazine, 2500, the same as before. Of the Youth's Instructor, at 4d. or 8 cents monthly, 3250, a falling off of 500 on the year. Of the Christian Miscellany, 2d. or 4 cents, 43,000 a month, and of the Early Days, 30,000 a month, the circulation of both being the same as last year. But for the hymn-books sold, 116,405, and the life of Dr. Newton, 16,000 copies of which have been sold, the profits of the Book Concern this year would have been very inconsiderable. If I could have my way, the English Book Steward, John Mason, should be sent to school in America for a year, and he would then come back to us rid of his antiquated notions, and prepared to take some steps in advance.

ZETA.

ENGLAND, Aug 31, 1855.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate

A REMARKABLE PROPOSITION.

Perhaps it is not known to many that, once upon a time, in the history of this Republic, a formal proposition was made by the Pope for initiating a union of Church and State!

A friend who delves in musty and curious lore has brought it to light for our columns.

Mr. Franklin had the good sense not to present and support the Apostolic note.

[Ed. N. O. C. Adv.

From the Pope's Nuncio to B. Franklin.
(TRANSLATION.)

25th July, 1783, (Paris.)

The Apostolic Nuncio has the honor to send Mr. Franklin the enclosed note, which he requests he will be pleased to forward to the Congress of the United States of North America, and support it with his credit.

NOTE.

Before the Revolution, which has just been completed in North America, the Catholics and Missionaries of those provinces depended, as to their spiritual concerns, on the Apostolic Vicar resident in London. It is well-known this arrangement can no longer exist; but as it is essential that the Catholic subjects of the United States should have an ecclesiastic to govern them in their religious concerns, the congregation de propaganda fide existing at Rome, for the establishment and conservation of missions, has come to the determination of proposing to Congress to establish, in some city of the United States of North America, one of their Catholic subjects, with the powers of Apostolic Vicar, and in the character of Bishop, or simply in the quality of Apostolic Prefect.

The establishment of an Apostolic Vicar-Bishop appears the most eligible, the more so as the Catholic subjects of the United States would find themselves in a situation to receive confirmation and orders in their own country, without being obliged to go for that purpose to the country of a foreign power. And, as it might sometimes happen that among the subjects of the United States, there might be no person in a situation to be charged with the spiritual government, either as Bishop or Apostolic Prefect, it would be necessary, in such circumstances, that Congress should consent to chose him from among the subjects of a foreign nation the most friendly to the United States.

A GOOD TOAST.—Woman—the morning star of our youth; the day star of our manhood; the evening star of our old age. God bless our stars.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

This body met in Nashville 15th October, Bishop Kavanaugh presiding, Bishop Kavanaugh preached at McKendree, and ordained seventeen Deacons; and Bishop Soule ordained twenty-one Elders in the afternoon. Bishop K's sermon was delivered in simplicity and power, and produced a most happy effect. We derive our information from the N. C. Advocate.

THE BISHOPS IN SPAIN.—The Bishops have recently presented another remonstrance to the Queen on the sale of church property. They endeavor to prove that the sale is illegal, and counsel her to revoke the decree by which she gave her consent to it. In order to put an effectual stop to any repetition of these impertinences, the Gazette publishes an order forbidding the bishops or clergy to draw up or present, either to the Queen or Cortes, any addresses or demands or petitions of any kind whatsoever. The prevention of the right of petition, which would appear to be inherent to the meanest of the Queens's subjects, sounds like an arbitrary assumption of authority; but in this case public opinion will hold the Government excused, for the conduct of the clergy has of late surpassed the bounds of propriety.

SPOILED TUNES.—The Rev. Thomas Hill of Waltham, writing on church music, in the Christian Examiner, says: "Sometimes an attempt is made to alter a secular air by changing the cadence to a religious form. We have recently heard tunes of this character, from some new collection of sacred music, popular Irish and negro melodies; being cut off in the last measure, and a chord of the sub-dominant introduced, as it were, to smoothify them. The result is, that the tunes are spoiled for whistling on a week day without being rendered fit to sing on Sunday."

EXPRESS TO THE ATTAKAPAS COUNTRY.—We copy the following from the Thibodeux Minerva, of last Saturday, with much pleasure:

Jones' Express.—All the world and his wife will be delighted to learn that our friend, Starr S. Jones, Esq., has been reinstated in his office as Express Agent on the Opelousas Railroad, and well, as heretofore, run a Daily Express between this place and New Orleans, on the passenger train. There is not a more obliging person than Mr. Jones, and the business public may rest assured they will ever find him punctual in attending to their demands. Mr. Jones also informs us that he has made the necessary arrangements with the steamer Naomi, running between Tigerville, the present terminus of the railroad, and New Iberia, for a tri-weekly express from New Orleans to Franklin, thereby affording to the people of the Attakapas country some of the advantages of railroad communication with the Crescent city.

ONLY HALF A VICTORY
The Russians not going to Evacuate Northern Section.

[From the Camp Correspondence of London Times.]

CAMP BEFORE SEBASTOPOL, Sept 29.—The contrast between the actual proceedings of the Allied armies since the 8th of this month, and the fevered dreams in which the public at home, as represented by the press, are indulging, is as striking as it is painful. The Russians, far from flying in discomfiture over boundless wastes, are calmly strengthening their position on the north side. The face of the country bristles with their cannon, and their batteries. As I write, the roar of their guns is sounding through our camp, and occasionally equals the noise of the old cannonades which we fondly hoped had died into silence forever. There is no trace of any intention on their part to abandon a position on which they have lavished so much care and labor. They retired from the south side when it became untenable, shaken to pieces by a bombardment which it is impracticable for us to renew. They have now between themselves and us a deep arm of the sea, a river, and the sides of a plateau as steep as a wall. We let them get off at their leisure, and looked on much as we would have gazed on the mimic representation of such a scene at Astley's, while the Russian battalions filed in endless column over the narrow bridge, emerging in unbroken order out of that frightful sea of raging fire and smoke, which was tossed up into billows of flame by the frequent explosions of great fortresses and magazines. What time our generals woke up and knew what was going on, I cannot tell, but it is certain they did not see a body distress themselves by any violent efforts to get a near view of the enemy's movements early in the morning.

It was late in the day when Fort Paul blew up. At about 5:30, as well as I can now recollect, that magnificent work was shaken violently, heaved upwards, seemed to fly into pieces—the breaking masonry and embrasures emitting sheets of white smoke, lighted up fire—and then collapsed, as it were, into ruins. The mine missed in the first instance; but, so cool were the enemy, so perfectly satisfied of our inaction were they, and so convinced they had awed us by their tremendous energy in destruction, that they sent across a boat with a few men in her, about half-past four o'clock in the evening, who quietly landed and went into the fort, and were seen by several people in the act of entering, in order to prepare for the explosion which followed immediately after they had retired. Spies have, however, informed the authorities in the most positive manner that the Russians were prepared to retreat, and had all in readiness to cover a retrograde movement in case the fleet succeeded in forcing a passage, and the Allies evinced a determination of throwing their whole force against the north side. Their field guns and guns of position were all in readiness, and were strengthened by a very large corps of cavalry, which would hold our infantry in check, and our cavalry could not, of course, get over the water in less than several days, nor could it gain the heights of Mackenzie unless the infantry had previously established themselves there.

Everything was foreseen and calculated, and the Russians were in hopes that they might catch us at a disadvantage amid some of their fortified positions in a difficult country, and retrieve their past disasters, or, at all events, make a masterly retreat. But when they saw that all was hesitation, if not confusion, in the army of the Allies, they recovered their courage, stared the situation in the face for one moment, and the next were busily engaged in making the most of it, and they have now erected such batteries as to shut up the harbor to our present navy, and to render any attempt to cross it as rash as it would be undesirable. Yesterday they finished a new line of batteries, to-day we begin to make some in reply. The papers which arrived yesterday must have been amusing to the authorities, for they have assuredly falsified all those absurd anticipations of further victory, of utter route, of vigorous pursuit, and of energetic action of which these mere writers and readers—men who have read Thucydides until they are stupefied, and have muddled their brains poring over histories of wars and lives of generals, and who have musty traditions about your Cæsars, Alexanders, Bonapartes and Wellingtons, involving disagreeable inferences and comparisons—have ridiculously and unjustifiably indulged.

It is quite evident that the expectations of the people at home have not been gratified to the full extent, and that we are not in undisputed possession of Sebastopol, and that the Russians are not utterly defeated, and that the campaign will have to be renewed next year by doing what might have been done three weeks ago. How many men will Russia have in the Crimea by the time the country is fit for military operations, should she be determined to hold it, and be able to maintain the war? On the north side there are few houses, but there are very large magazines. First, on the western extremity of the northern shore stands Fort Constantine. The roof is covered into a great depth with sand-bags, and there are large guns mounted on it en barbette, but many of the embrasures are empty, and do not show guns. A very heavy parapet with traverses—in fact, a line of batteries—strikes out from the north side of the fort, and cresta the seaward face of the cliff, communicating with the Wasp Fort, Star Fort, and the works of the sea defences towards the mouth of the Belbek. Next to Constantine, on the harbor, there is a large earth-work, with heavy guns, behind which is the citadel; which has recently been much strengthened, and is in a commanding position on a hill side.

Next came more earth-works, a large stone storehouse, and the casemated walls of Fort Catharine, with two tiers of guns; then more earth-works, till the line of defence merges into the works at Inkermann. In fact, Fort Constantine, Sievernaia, Fort Michael and Fort Catherine, with their connecting works, and the citadel and forts in their rear, form one great battery, too far to injure us seriously behind Sebastopol, but quite able to withstand any infantry attack from the south side. The difficulty of the north side was foreseen all along—foreseen, but not provided for. In fact, there was no step taken to insure the possession of the fruits of our labor. We did not prepare for success, and we now have to face a new campaign, and the Russians have seven or eight months to strengthen themselves, to recruit their exhausted army, to gather new materiel, and to dispute our progress with fresh slaughter, which leaves us victory but half enjoyed.

A FITTING REPLY TO A BASE PARAGRAPH.—The first paragraph quoted below is from the New York Tribune;

The Princess Alice of England is a tall, gawkish girl, with the dull, insalent eye and pale, sensual cheek, which are peculiar to the Guelphs. She has lately been reported to have exhibited considerable industry and skill in the manufacture of mits for the wounded Crimean heroes, but she had never previously been accused of an aptitude even for the most ordinary female accomplishments.

To which the Herald replies:

The young girl who is here assailed with such brutal ferocity was born on the 25th April, 1843. The Tribune, par excellence the organ of humanity, the advocate of a more kindly brotherhood amongst men, is nevertheless ready to lend its columns to this species of Arab gallantry, which strikes down what is most defenceless. How generous and noble it is in an American press to assault the character and misrepresent the attributes of a young girl of twelve summers, who has not a friend within three thousand miles of the assailant! The Tribune exhausts its humanity in its defence of the negroes.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Perseverance, Capt. Place, arrived yesterday from Galveston, bringing news to Saturday. The News of that date says:

The weather is as mild as though it were the middle of summer, and genial showers continue to fall at intervals, stimulating vegetation, and causing the fall crops in the gardens to look unusually forward. We should not, however, be surprised if we have a severe norther in a day or two, as such weather as we now have, usually precedes these unwelcome visitors.

The Civilian says:

Slight frosts have visited every part of Texas the present fall, with the exception of the Gulf-coast. The weather has not been cold enough, however, to damage crops of any description.

The San Antonio Herald, after announcing the arrival of Capt. Callahan and his men, says:

We doubt not the Mexican and Indians will now combine and openly invade our State. Unless something is speedily done to check and intimidate them, we shall soon expect to hear of depredations and outrages all along our unprotected frontier. In this emergency, it is useless to look to either the Federal or State Governments for relief or protection. They have been appealed to in vain. Rude and ugly. We are promised a few companies of mounted troops, by the Commander of the Department. But what protection will they afford? If they can protect themselves and their horses, it will be more than they have been able to do heretofore. The fact is, the regular troops are not adapted to frontier service, no matter how well drilled. They are not composed of the right material. It requires men familiar with frontier life, and with some knowledge of Indian warfare. To overtake and chastise the small marauding bands of savages that have, and will continue to infest our frontier, requires troops that can move as rapidly as the Indian, and like him, subsist themselves, if necessary.

The Austin State Times has letters from Major Neighbors and S. P. Ross, Indian agents for Texas, representing that there is a prospect of trouble with the Camanches Indians. A number of horses having been stolen from the agency, a party of Delawares pursued the trail five days in a north-west direction. They met a party of Yamparicos, who informed them they were going down to the frontier to kill white people and steal horses. They also said that the Northern Indians had declared war upon all the people south of Red River—white and red. The two parties camped near each other, and the latter thus describes what took place between them:

About midnight they proposed to gamble with the Delawares, but the captain told him he had not come there to gamble—however, he had no objection to four men playing at a time; and whilst they were playing the Delawares managed to cut three or four of their bow-strings half in two. The Yamparico told his men that at daylight he should commence the fight. Neither party slept during the night. Just as day was breaking the Yamparico ordered his men to fire, but the Delawares, understanding them, fired first, and killed four the first fire, and charged the camp, killing three and wounding one—letting two escape to tell the news. They found on them a black cloth coat, velvet collar, also one under shirt, striped, and from stains of blood showed to have belonged to some white person killed by them.

They (the Delawares) brought in ten head of horses and mules, and seven scalps. They are going to have a scalp dance to-day. Our Indians are anxious to hear from you. They say with two hundred Texians they can whip all of the Northern Indians. The shield belonging to the Yamparico had fifteen or twenty scalps fastened to it—about half of which are white scalps.

A letter from Capt. J. R. Bayler, Special Indian Agent, to Maj. Neighbors corroborates the above, besides giving the following additional information:

"They told Jacob that they had met the Indians that killed old Skidmore, and had learned from them that there were plenty of horses down here; and that they were on their way down to kill and steal; and that a large war party was coming down to kill John Conner, Katemse, Lamshead, and all they could find. They seemed to know all about the condition of the posts and our frontier; and said that they had joined the Sioux Indians against the whites in the North.

* * * * * * *

I have no doubt we will have the devil to pay and our frontier is in the greatest danger. I hope you may succeed in your plan, as it is the only hope I have of having anything done. The Indians here are ready and willing to go against the Camanches, and I think them about the best protection we have, if they are managed by some white man. A few killing scrapes more will give them a distaste to these parts any how. Jacob learned from the Captain he killed that the point selected for winter quarter of all the wild Indians was on main Red River, where it runs through the mountains; and that some eight or ten tribes united with the Sioux in their war."

ARRIVAL OF THE CAHAWBA.

The U. S. mail steamship Cahawba, R. W. Shufeldt Commander, from New York 25th ult. and Havana 31st, arrived here Saturday morning.

The Havana papers contain no news. The obliging and intelligent purser furnishes the following:

From Havana we learn that the American brig Tribune, Capt. J. Cummings, bound from Nuevitas to New York, got ashore on the 21 of October on the "Cay Comfites." Capt. C. proceeded to Nuevitas to procure assistance, leaving the brig in charge of the mate and three seamen. During his absence, on the 11th, a British wrecker from Nassau came alongside, and after having an understanding with the mate, stripped the vessel, took out her provisions, part of the cargo (cigars) and all the moveable effects, and then left her. Capt. C., returning to his vessel with launches and men, found her plundered and deserted. He then went back to Nuevitas. On the 21st the vessel and cargo, as it lay, was sold at public sale by order of the Acting U. S. Commercial Agent, and purchased by a Mr. Hens. This person, taking an order from the Governor of Nuevitas, and a certificate from the Consul to insure possession, and show ownership, went out to the wreck on the 22d with the necessary aid to discharge cargo, etc. On the 26th he was interrupted and driven off by a fleet of seven schooners and two sloops, and a force of seventy men, which arrived from Nassau, and took forcible possession of vessel and cargo, making a clear case of piracy in both cases. The Spanish Government have sent out men-of-war to capture them, if possible.

The health of Havana is good—business reported "not active."

The Cahawba has had a very pleasant passage, and brings quite a number of our citizens and families who have been at the North during the summer. She landed 60 passengers at Havana, and brought 147 to this place.

The Cahawba has on freight $600,000 in gold and a large cargo of assorted merchandize.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1855.

Covington, La.

At this village we have had the pleasure nf spending a few days, including last Sabbath, by kind invitation of the pastor, Rev. G. T. Vickers, to attend his Quarterly Meeting.

Five or six hours on the Lenora,—fast as she is,—and only under Capt. Davies—suffice for crossing Lake Pontchartrain and up the Tchefuncta.

The crop of St. Tammany parish is sand, brick and lumber. Schooners load with sand for the city market, at two cents per barrel and sell at five or six.

The railroad has cut off the trade of Covington, and it is declining. The largest merchants have left. Here are four churches—Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian and Roman—to supply about six hundred people. Ours was here first, and has ever maintained the majority of hearers and members. Sectarianism is an evil under such circumstances. Probably next year it will be thrown into a fortnight circuit.

Here resides, and for twenty-five years has resided, like another Anna, of four score and four, Mother McNeil, of such honorable memory and mention in the reminiscences of Rev. J. Travis and others, itinerants of early days, on Brunswick Circuit, N. C. Her health and strength were above our expectation. With mind clear, spirit calm, she waits her change.

In the family of Bro. Ross, we found a brief and pleasant home. Such rusticating is decidedly a treat.

Amen.—As the Chinese have no word which will compare with the word "Amen," they say, "Sin lyeen ching sin," "thn heart wishes exactly so."

Temperance Hats.—Booth, 35 Gravier street, is a great Temperance man. His hats are temperate in price and do not hold bricks. At least there is one that never will.

Graham's Magazine, for November, is on our table, in the lead of its line. The "Tired Soldier," is a picture of mellow sweetness. We published it last week.

Harper, for November, through McGinnis, 36 Camp street, is promptly to hand, with all its treats. See advertisement. It discloses a wonderful circulation.

Pronunciation of Sebastopol.—We often hear the word pronounced Se-bas-topol; laying the strem on the third-last syllable, (antepenult) Its etymology is made up of two Greek words, Sebastos and polis, "August City." Similar is the composition of Constantinople, (Greek, Constantinnpolis.) Nn nne speaks of Con-stan-ti-no pol, hut the accent falls on the second-last (or penult) syllable. The proper pronunciation is therefore Sebas-to-pol. Our attention was drawn to this the other day by that modest and learned man—Dr. Kohlmeyer, of the University of Louisiana.

A Bishop for the West.—Certainly—one west of thn Mississippi river—living thnre—moving about there—acquainted there—at home there. Non-residence, even in a general superintendency, is an evil that may be, in part, remedied. The Iowa Conference passed a resolution instructing their delegates to seek the creation, by the next General Conference, of an additional Bishop, who shall be elected with the understanding that he reside west of the Mississippi.

Tuskegee (Ala) College.—The Tuskegeense are doing up the Methodist College handsomely. The Republican says: "This beautiful building still continues to progress with all the expedition that is possible under thn circumstances. A competent number of workmen are engaged upon it, and we observe that they have been, during the last several days, engaged in giving the finishing touch to the top of the tower."

But brick and mortar and ordinary "workmen" can be had any where for the money. Not so such Presidents as Dr. Lipscomb, of Montgomery, who, we understand, has signified his acceptance of that office. The committee have been fortunate as well as judicious in securing him.

Marion, La.—Rev. J. Landrum, writes Oct. 20th, dated Many:

"Our protracted meeting of twelve days at this place closed last Sunday night with a large and anxious congregation, and with twenty penitents at the altar. During the meeting we received forty probationers, of whom twenty-three were whites. There were thirty seven baptisms, thirty of whom were adults. God has graciously visited the people of Many, for which they are thankful."

After much advancement we may expect something to humble us, lest we be puffed up. Exaltation to the third heavens calls for a thorn in the flesh.

Theological Inconsistencies.

PRINCETON AND NEW ENGLAND.

From a leading editorial of the "Independent" nf the 25th nlt., onn of the organs of New England Theology, we clip somewhat commenting the least bit in the world. Subject—Princeton Theology. These nre branches of a Calvinistic stock: thn former congregntional and thn latter presbyterinn in polity. Calvinism is not one as here appears. And if those so near akin in faith, divided by a single hair, can see logical inconsistencies in each other, can they blame nthers for n few exclamations, who look from an Arminian standpoint? The "Independent" says:

"Among the lesser publications of the "Presbyterian Board of Publication," is n sermon preached by E. C. Wines, D. D., "before the Synod of New York, Oct. 16, 1855, and pnblished by request of the Synod." The sermon is entitled "Adnm and Christ, or thn doctrino of representation stated and explained." Published under such patronage, it may be safely taken as a setting forth of Princeton orthodoxy in its most revised and corrected shape. We do not refer to it here for the purpose of reviewing it, hnt only for thn purpose of showing our readers, in one or two points, how the Princeton theology, in spite of all efforts to the contrary, is slowly dragging its anchors, and drifting from its old moorings towards a conformity with common sense and with the Bible.

One object of thn sermon is to set forth the representative rolation of Adam as hnad of the human race, and of Christ as head nf the church or thn elect people of God. For the most part, the author uses the phrases and arguments which are familiar to all who have any knnwlndgn of that system. Bat we find, here and there, a glimpse of something like innovation, if not progress in theology.

For example, we find near the close of the sermon, statements in regard to the doctrins of the atonnment, which seem to be taken, bodily, from thn system of the most approved New England divines. The statement is adopted, that "the death of Christ is a most perfect sacrifice and satisfaction for sins; of infinite value and price; abundantly sufficient to expiate thn sins nf the whnle world." It is affirmed distinctly, that "thn cross is accessible to all, and available for thn recovery of all who will repair to it." In the most straightforward, nvangelical style, the preacher says, "There is not a sinner of mankind, to whnm the offer of eternal life is not unfeignedly made on thn ground of Christ's atoning mediation. If any perish, it is not for want of an adequate remedy, but through thnir nwn vnluntary rejection of thn remedy."

* * * Thn preacher says, in applying his doctrine of an atonement unlimited in its nature, "Through this mighty restorer, it is in thn power of every one of you, my beloved hearers, to rise from the death and shame and misery of sin."

This sounds like our trnmpet! It might have been taken also bodily from a thousand Methodist pulpits and standards. But don't subscribe even to New Englandism till you hear more nf it:

"Nor is the present statement of Princeton orthodoxy less explicit in asserting the New England doctrine of election. On this point the Old School doctrinn is, that God having nlected a certain portion of mankind to be saved, has madn an exclusive provision for their salvation. The New England doctrine is, that God, having made a full and free provision for the salvation nf men as sinners, and foreknowing that all men, if left to thnir own spontaneity, will reject the nffered salvation, has predetermined to bring some, elected by his sovereign grace, to repentance and to Christ. In othnr words, thn question is, Where, in the system of doctrines, does the nlection of grace "come in?" Does that distinguishing purpose contemplate mon simply as lost, or does it regard thnm as sinners, for whom pardon is provided, and to whom it is freely offered? The tract before ns answers thus: "Notwithstanding the sufficiency of the Gospel provision, and the sincerity nf the Gnspel call, the natnral state of men's hearts—their inability of will—prnsents an obstacle in thn way of salvation, which nothing can nvercome bnt the power of the Divinn Spirit. Here thn election of grace comes in. On the ground of the atonnment, God has made an unlimited offer of saving mnrcy to the whole human family But all spurn the offer. All nontinne in sin. All will perish in unbelief unless thn grace of God prevent it. Forseeing this, God determined to put forth a gracious lnfinence upon thn will of many sinners, and constrain them to accept thn offer of salvation, so making sure to his Son, as the reward of his sufferings, a "willing people."

Wherein has New England improved the Old School? Theory may, fit tighter and hang closer, but practically it is all the same. The difficulty is shifted off the Son upon the Holy Ghost. What matter where such election comes in! Those who hold and preach the Arminian system "in nonformity with common sense and with the Bible," are happily free from these turmoils. It is not sufficiently considered how much more nf scholastic preparation and theological training the oppositn system needs in those who are to dnfine and defnnd it. See how New England Calvinism, with this small advantage, twits Princeton Calvinism about ingenuousness and sincerity and sense in offering salvntion to all, and then say if thn New England system be free from its own objections:

"We find in all this tract, and in all Princeton theology, so far as we have studied it—no atonement but by purchase or redemption, no redemption other than a literal paymnnt of a debt by the endorser, no idea or theory of atonement which is at all consistent with an indiscriminate and universal offer of salvation. We have thn entire Princeton theory in such words as these. "Christ as a surety "took the law place of a chosen people, paid their debt, satisfied the claims of justice, and redeemed them from death and hell. Hn is then thn surety of the saved only"—that is of the elect only—"He can be the surety of none else." Where then is the sense, whorn the ingenuousness or sincerity of pretending that there is any possibility of salvation for any other than the elect? Can any man be saved for whom there is no atonement? Is there an atonement for any bnt thnt chosen people whose law place Christ took, whose debts he paid, and for whom he satisfied the claims of justice? How then could the preacher whose sermon is before us, dare to say, "There is not n sinner of mankind, to whom the offer of eternal life is not unfeignedly made on the ground of Christ's atoning mediation." Did he not feel these pieces of new cloth tearing the old garment—did not thn entire Synod hear the old garment rip, when the preacher said so earnestly, yet so forgetfully, "It is in the power of every one of you, my beloved hearers, to rise from the death and shame and misery of sin, to a life that shall know no end, to a glory that shall suffer no eclipse, to a bliss that shall dread no forfeiture."

Keen, isn't it? But how it cnts both ways! As for us—wn like Arminianism more than ever. And if we ever talk or write against Calvinism, it is not against Calvinists. Our whole feeling on the subject is well expressed by the Calvinistic Independent in its concluding paragraph: "In pointing out the logical inconsistency of thn preachor, as we have done, we do not mean to impute to him any lack of honesty or sincerity in his indiscriminate offer of pardon and salvation. Inconsistency is a blessed thing in theology. Blessed is that man who is willing to be inconsistent, and nven to contradict thn most venerated dogmas of his traditional orthodoxy for the sakn of offering to sinners, in the name of Christ, a free and full salvation."

OUR EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS.

Mr. Editor—The crisis in the ednoational interests of the Methodist people of Alabama induces me once more to address them through the Advocate. The snccessful existence of colleges depends upon endowments or patronage, or on both. Where there is rich endowment, (all things else being equal) thern will follow numerous or large patronage. In the multiplication of literary institutions, the chances for endowment or patronage are diminished in proportion to the number created. By consulting all the catalogues I have been able to obtain, my conclusion is that thn State of Alabama has not more than four hundred young gentlemen in college, in and out of the State. Professor Pratt, of the University of Alabama, collected thn catalogues of the different colleges a few years since. His conclusion was that thers was something over three hnndred students in college from Alabama. I suppose there are five hnndred. Those students come from Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Roman Catholic and Campbellite families. The gentlemen who disdain religious associations are quite as numerous as any onn of thn denominations, and have, no donbt, as many of their sons in college. This presents us with seven distinct communities, all of whom are intent on building up their own institutions. It may be said that thn Roman Catholics and Campbelites are not as numerous as the nther divisions or sects. Granted. This will divide the four or five hundred students (throwing Catholics and Campbelites together) into six distinct communities presenting five hnndred students to be divided between the six interests, which give sto each eighty-three and two-sixths students. I have shown in a former nrticle that no Conference has more than one college, and that not one of them was endowed to any independent or comfortable extent—indeed they are all poor and their usefulness curtailed by thnir poverty. In several instances, two or more Conferences arn united in the support of one College, and it is still poor. South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama all unite in the Oglothorpe College, under the controll of the Presbyterians, and with the aid of the four States, the institution is feebly, if at all endowed. With those facts standing prominenly out to the gaze of the anxious and mortified founders, shall we, with one college on hand (Lagrange) struggling for existence and changing its position in hope of better success, think of creating two more colleges in Alabama? In doing this our strength will be dissipated, ourselves mortified, and thn people of the State injured. Wise connels must prevail. The Alabama Conference ought to be true to its first impulses and announcements, and create one great central institution.

I scarcely know what to say to my fertile friend "Hope against Hope," who claims to be the enlightened author of the magnificent idea of two colleges in thn Alabama Conference. The name hn assumes imports well with his condition. In Romans, 4th chapter, 18th verse, the Apostle Paul represents Abraham's faith triumphing, notwithstanding the great nge of his spouse making it apparently impossible for her to bear seed. His reason was astonnded—his judgment was mute. "What!" says Abraham, "an heir at this advanced period of life! Myself a hundred years old and Sarah ninety, and my seed as numerous as the stars of the heavens!" Against hope hn belinved in hope. So our friend "Hope against Hope," notwithstanding reason, judgment and nxperience, (our own and that of others) of the impracticability of two colleges being created in thn Alabama Conference, yet against hope he believes in hope, and lauds himself on being thn first to suggest the creation of two colleges in the Confernnce. Wonder if hn is inspired! Has the Lord spoknn to him as He did to our father Abraham? With all the lamentable facts before him, how can he have faith in the necessity of two institutions, and how can he conclude that they can be created and endowed?

HOPE.

P. E. Board of Missions.

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.

Among all the inquiries which press upon our hearts and rise oftenest to our lips touching other sects, these are first: "What are they doing in the great work of spreading the everlasting Gospel, and what the measure of success which has crowned their efforts?" With this feeling we lay before our readers the annual session of the Missionary Board of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which met 17th ult. in New York. These meetings seem generally to have a character for dullness, but thn last was quite a revival. We quote from the Church Witness.

After religious services, the Board was called to order by Bishop Mendo, who, as the oldest Bishop present, presided at all the meetings. There were a goodly number of the Bishops present, and a respectable but not full representation of the clerical members of the Board. The number nf laymen was unusually small.

The Committee on Domestic Missions reported that the mission to the Chinese in California, undertaken last year with so much interest and promise, has been abandoned, as from various causes the missionary finds that he cannot continue his labors with any prospects of success. He has been released, and will probably go again to China. Owing to the expenses of this mission, the Committee are now in arrears to the amount nf $7000. Reports were appended from the Missionary Bishops, which give the record of abounding labors and fields white for the harvest. More, it was stated, could be expended to advantage in any single diocese at the Southwest, than is now appropriated in the whole country.

The foreign treasury is now $10,000 in debt. The contributions of the last year were not as large as the year before. Three young men had been waiting and longing to go, but the committee could not send them. They were then present, asking to be sent.

A very large congregation assembled in Trinity Chapel at 7½ o'clock. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. R. Nicholson, of Cincinnati, from 2d Sam., xxiv. 24: "Nay; but I will surely buy it of thee at a price; neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the Lord my God of that which doth cost me nothing." The object of the discourse was to show that cost was an element in all religious service, and that religion calls for the entire consecration of the whole man—his time, powers and possessions, all as parts of himself. This was applied, as it very naturally might be, to the work of missions. It was not so stirring a discourse (says the editor of the Witness) as we expected from the preacher, although it had many most important truths and many striking observations. We could not help feeling that one of his ordinary missionary sermons would have effected far more. To the surprise of all there was no collection. It was supposed that the Rector had prevented a collection by withholding the plates used for that purpose; but it appeared afterwards that thn whole thing arose from a misconception on the part of the assistant ministers in charge.

Next day a noble scene was madn up and witnessed by a few. A revival sprung up—beginning at the altar. While the embarrassments of the foreign treasury were under discussion, and how to send out those three young men, several stirring speeches were made. Bishop Mellvaine deplored the beggarly offerings to God by those who made munificent ones to fashion. He said: "As a general rule the possession of wealth contracted the mind and impoverished the heart. The collections for this purpose were chiefly furnished by those in the middling and humbler ranks of life. He even considered the death of the missionaries encouraging, inasmuch as they died in thn discharge of their duty, and their work would be left after them."

Bishop Mellvano was followed by the Rev. Dr. Tyng, who with great force and feeling set forth thn difficulty and extreme anxiety with which the work of foreign missions had been carried on by the committee during the past year. He pledged himself to send out one at least on his own responsibility, if it were even by the sale of his personal property; let other ministers and other churches then come forward and do likewise. In round numbers he said the support of one unmarried missionary for one year and the expense of sending him out was estimated at $1500; the whole sum required was $4500.

The presiding Bishop recommended presenting the subject that evening at the Church of the Ascension.

Dr. Tyng—"No sir. I cannot go before women and children to-night. What! when there are sixty men here now?—No, sir; I would be ashamed to do it."

Bishop Mellvane came forward and said that he had $50 which he had been intending to appropriate to some object in which he himself was not personally interested. During his exposure last winter on the Ohio river, he lost his luggage, and this $50 had been sent by a society of young men to repair his loss. He did not wish to spend it upon himself, but to devote it as a thank offering, and he appropriated it to this object.

One and another rose and pledged different sums to effect the object. A paper was placed upon thn Secretary's table, and it was deeply interesting to see one and another moving forward to put down their names for the various sums for which they were willing to be held responsible. that these young men might be sent out to their work.

Bishop Meade, of Virginia, stated that there was power given to the clergy—a power given to none others, nye, even to priests of false religions on earth was this power given. and they all would have to render a greater account. The great sin which would be charged on the clergy was that, in this respect, they did not discharge their duties. The people were willing, if appealed to, and they would be the chief witnesses against their ministers for not doing so. These poor rich men who with their heavy burden could hardly enter the kingdom of heaven, would rise up against them for not pointing out the way of relief.

One clergyman stated he had no parish, nor did he know where his support was to come from for the remainder of his life, but he pledged himself, God willing, to give $25, when it would be in his power before the end of thn year, and the same sum for four years afterwards.

The glow of good feeling all about—they were doing their duty. Rev. Dr. Hawks thanked God for what was done this day; this came to the root of the matter. A spirit had been shown which he would be glad all the clergy throughout the Union could have witnessed. Others, he said, had spoken plainly, and he would speak plainly too. We had lost ground while we had been disputing about minor matters. He trusted that now the time had come for united work. He earnestly called for peace.

It was announced that the subscription had succeeded. The sum of $4600 was raised between six bishops, twenty ministers, and one layman, being $100 more than was required.

In the evening the subject was brought to the congregation. Bishop Clark reviewed the contributions for the last ten years. They averaged $60,000 or $70,000 for foreign, and taking into account all that is done, about $100,000 for domestic missions. Is this all that we ought to do or can do? Two-thirds of the churches contribute nothing. We are able to increase these contributions a hundred fold. There is no want of means or of calls to use them. Nor is there a want of men. We have them. God will always find the men when men find the means. It is not organizations that we want. If organizations and canons were the thing needed, we should have done our work long ago. Love to Christ is the great want.

Bishop Mellvano followed. He uttered a very pungent sentiment. "Our Church," he said, "had almost killed itself with boasting; but we had cause for anything but this while we did so little for the cause of Christ."

The venerable Chairman made the final address. Thn test was now to be applied to the congregation; he hoped to see them come out like refined gold. He condemned those who were rich and able to contribute, who held back from giving assistance to the great work in which the Board was engaged. Many of these, in the next world, might wish they had been paupers instead of rich men. There are superfluities in everything, even in building temples of religion, except in throwing gifts into the treasury of the Lord. "What is the cry, brethren," said he, "piercing as it is, for poor dying bodies, to the cry for those dying souls who may perish forever and ever? Take this into your hearts, my brethren, and give according as God has given you."

A collection was then taken up, which amounted to nearly $900.

There are no seats in any of the Greek churches, and even the Emperor must stand during the service. The priests are almost all majestic-looking men—tall. with hair falling over their shoulders, and beards sometimes half-way down their waists. They are not allowed to wear any ornament.

Auburn, Ala.—Proposals are being issued for building the College on the plan adopted. The Gazette, of November 2d, speaks in this spirited manner:

"The begins to look like reality, and the College is now a "fixed fact." The members composing the committee "Executive" and "Building," are indefatigable in their efforts to consumate the noble enterprise, and they are backed and sustained by the public. We are to have the College, whatever may be the action of the citizens of Greensboro'. We do not doubt the moral honesty of the Alabama Conference, and therefore have no fear that that reverend body will repudiate the action of the Summerfield Convention, which located the College at this place upon the same footing as the location at Greensboro'. It matters not whether the Summerfield Convention was empowered to locate one or two colleges. They located two, and the Conference must accept the two or repudiate the entire action of the Committee, and reconsider both propositions. We are satisfied either way. We intend to build and endow the College here, and we, relying upon the good sense of the Conference, therefore, do not believe they will refuse to accept it. Let Greensboro' build her College if she wants it, but this will be the College after all."

Those who keep a good conscience may entrust God with the keeping of their good names.

Had our censures and judgments more of deliberation, there would be more of mercy and moderation in them.

It becomes us in many cases to be gentle towards such as are suspected of wrong.

Necessary censures should be managed without noise, for the words of the wise are heard in quiet.

SPECIAL AGENCIES.

Our Congregational brethren are beginning to experience a little friction in their system of dependence on special collecting agencies in their benevolent associations. They find them rather too expensive and are thinking of dispensing with them as far as may be practicable. The question is interesting to our own denomination just now, inasmuch as the system is seeking a place in our benevolent societies, especially our Tract Society. We therefore quote a paragraph or two from the report of the Hartford North Association on the expensiveness of the agency system:

"Take the following National Societies—the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Home Missionary, Bible, Tract, Education, with the Society for promoting Collegiate and Theological Education at the West, and the Protestant Society, now with the Foreign Evangelical Society merged in the Christian Union—and we we will find their annual expenses on their whole receipts to be about twenty-nine per cent; on all donations, so far as they can be distinguished, thirty-eight per cent. Leaving out the Foreign and Home Missionary Societies, the expenses will be about fifty per cent. on all donations. And if we deduct the income of these two societies from legacies, funds, etc., the rate of expense on the annual donation of them all will not vary much from fifty per cent.

"The annual expense of the American Board, exclusive of appropriations for missionary objects direct, are about twelve per cent. on the receipts; of the Home Missionary Society fourteen per cent.; of the Bible Society sixteen per cent. on receipts and forty-five on donations; of the Tract Society eleven per cent. on all receipts and twenty-seven on all donations; of the Education Society twenty-seven per cent. on receipts and fifty on donations; of thn Society for Collegiate and Theological Education at the West about fifty per cent., or eighteen per cent by the showing of their report, which includes only the salary of the Secretary, postage, printing and incidentals; of the Protestant Society, now merged in the Christian Union, over seventy per cent. on all donations."

The Association very properly objects to the absorption of so large a portion of the funds, devoted to benevolent objects, in the machinery for their collection; and recommends the churches and pastors to make their collections without the intervention of agencies from abroad. This is sound advice. The agency system is a bad one, and should be tolerated just so far as it is absolutely necessary, and no farther. At any rate we hope our church will not take it up, now that our Congregational brethren, after long experience, are beginning to cast it off as a burden too heavy to be borne. We can do without, if they cannot. [Z. Herald.

The rigor of the law is not unfrequently the height of injustice.

The Planters' (La.) Banner, of the 1st inst., has the following paragraph:

The last frost, though light here, is said to have done considerable damage to the canes—not only on Red river but on some plantations bordering on the Lafourche. Some of our planters are experimenting with the bi-sulphate of lime, manufactured here by Messrs. Parkenson & Nystrand, and with good effect.

Notices of New Books.

Scenes in the Practice of a New York Surgeon:

We have received from the publishers, Witt & Davenport, through Thomas L. White, 105 Canal street, a copy of the above work. It is neatly printed, and embellished with numerous illustrations. It is written by Edward H. Dixon, M. D., editor of the "Scalpel." It contains a number of sketches, descriptive, humorous and pathetic, drawn from a varied and extensive experience, and will be read with interest by the profession and the general reader. "The Nerve Power," "Pathology of a Lady of Fashion," "Watering Place Snobs," "Causes of the early decay in American Women," "Causes and Evils of Celibacy," "Importance of Truth in Education," "The Sense of Feeling" are the titles of some of the articles it contains. The practical suggestions for the preservation of health and for increasing domestic comfort are valuable.

The life of a Surgeon and Physician opens into peculiar scenes and sorrows, as Warren has shown in his Diary.

A Visit to the Catacombs; or, First Christian Cemeteries at Rome: and a Midnight Visit to Mount Vesuvius. By Sarah Bunbury. Price 25 cts.

This is a pleasing little book on the Catacombs—those venerable mementos of Christian antiquity. Any one who wishes to know more about them can be gratified by perusing "The Church in the Catacombs," by Maitland. Our young friends will see enough, however, in this volume, to satisfy them that the religion of the primitive Church of Rome was a very different affair from that of the Church of Rome in the present day—and also, we trust, to make them feel grateful that they are not the victims of persecution like the adherents of the former, or of superstition like those of the latter.

Here follows a batch of books that are books. Deficient tutors may get "keys" and lazy students "ponies," and the masses classical taste pure and cheap. We have them through H. D. McGinnis, 36 Camp street, who keeps them on sale:

Sallust, Florus and Velleius Paterculus. By John S. Watson, M. A. New York: Harper & Brother.

The great publishing house of the Harpers is doing similiar service in this country to that done by Bohn in Great Britain. They are publishing translations of all the celebrated authors of olden times, with critical and explanatory notes, at such prices as will enable every one to comprise them in the catalogue of his library. The translation of Sallust by Mr. Watson, containing Catiline, the Jugurthine War, and fragamentary remains of his history, is contained in the same volume with the epitome of Roman History, by Florus, and the compendium by Paterculus. We have seen before translations of some portions of Sallust more beautifully and rhetorically rendered, but never any more critically exact in all respects or likely to be of more use to those who will read it as they do Josephus and Niebuhr. The book is neatly printed, well bound and afforded at a very reasonable price. Those who have never dabbled in the language of the dead, as well as many who have, will find this work of great value.

The Works of Horace. Translated literally into English prose. By C. Smart, A. M. A new edition, with notes. By Theodore A. Buckley. New York: Harper & Brothers.

The present and latest translation of Horace contains his odes, satires, epistles and art of poetry. Probably no one of the classic authors has been more zealously and studiously worked at by students than Horace, nor has any one of his translators been more happy than Professor Smart, who wisely refrained from endeavoring to make the hexameters and pentameters of Rome accommodate themselves to similar measures of our own "grunting, guttural" tongue.

Smart's Horace is the best and most universally used of all translations of that author, and the present edition is admirably printed and can be afforded at a very low price.

The Works of Virgil. Literally translated into English Prose, with Notes. By Davidson. Revised, with Additional Notes, by Theodore A. Buckley, of Christ Church. New York: Harper & Bros.

The Bucolics, Georgics and Eneid of Virgil are all set before the English reader in the translation by Davidson, with remarkable fidelity and correctness. The exact rendering, or as nearly such as can consist with graceful expression, is to be found in this edition more than in any of its predecessors; for it is apparent to all who have compared Dryden with the original that a great difference exists between the two. As Virgil is a standard in our public schools and seminaries, it is every way important that teachers should be able to give a proper significance to every sentence. This they will be able to do by comparing the original with Davidson's translation. The English reader will be pleased with the perusal of what is a prose-poem even in its translation.

Christian Theism: the Testimony of Reason and Revelation to the Existence and Character of the Supreme Being. By Robert Anchor Thompson, M. A.

"Christian Theism" is the title of a prize essay on the evidence that there is a Being all-powerful, wise and good, by whom everything exists; and particularly to obviate difficulties regarding the wisdom and goodness of the Deity; and this, in the first place, from considerations independent of Written Revelation; and, in the second place, from the Revelation of the Lord Jesus; and from the whole to point out the inferences most necessary for and useful to mankind.

Many works have been written on this same theological tenet concerning the existence, omnipotence and goodness of God, but none, to our knowledge, arguing so exclusively from evidence extraneous to the Bible. The writer takes up and examines all the various leading beliefs with regard to the existence, attributes and eternity of God—and all the more important works of philosophers and metaphysicians relative thereto. Materialism, Pantheism, Idealism, and their subjective distinctions are carefully analyzed, not with a mere metaphysical skill or the craft of dialectics, but in a spirit of pure reflection that would have delighted Fichte himself. The work will prove full of interest to the mere lover of logic as well as to the student of theology.

Jacob Abbott's Young Christian Series. Vol. IV. Hoaryhead & McDonner. With numerous engravings. New York: Harper & Brothers.

The reputation of Jacob Abbott as a writer for youth is too well established and too well known to need any fresh reference thereto. He is one of the most prolific and popular of all our authors for youth, and always interweaves a moral with the warp and woof of the story, that is correct and religious in its tendency. The present volume is but a re-publication of tales told before, with many elegant and appropriate illustrations. It will commend itself to the attention of all into whose hands it may chance to fall, and will prove interesting to an older class than the one for which it was intended.

According to the London Times a large amount of the sound dues goes into private pockets. A ferry boat is employed to take skippers to the chamber of sound dues, and although the distance is but a few yards, from seven to nineteen dollars is charged. A pilot's fee for a vessel drawing fifteen feet is from $30 50 to $47, with an increase of $2 a foot after sixteen. The sum total of the perquisites amounts to over $100,000 annually. The director of the sound dues has, or had in 1850, a salary of $15,000; the clerks from $4,000 to $8,000 each; the cashier $6,750, and the others in proportion.

BUSINESS PROSPECTS.

Business, real business for the season, has been in progress for some weeks, which is far in advance of any previous season recorded in the annals of the commercial history of our city. Apparently a combination of circumstances—such as epidemics, low water, want of direct communication with the interior of the country, through the agency of the great moving power, railways, would seem to indicate that our prospects of our city were retrograding. But this is not so. The unparalleled quantity of cotton, breadstuffs, and other articles which have been sold since the first of September, exceed anything heretofore known. The continued uninterrupted navigation with the West is confirmed impressions long since entertained, that nature favors us. If, however, we remain idle and inattentive to the great efforts now making in every section to direct the trade which nature intended should center in this emporium of the Southwest, we shall justly be liable to the sneers and inuendoes which, from day to day, week after week, occupy so great a share of editorial attention in the North and East. The thousand equivocal remarks which from a good part of the leading matter of many journals having pretensions to candor and fairness, but which appear to be moved by envy and jealousy towards us, it is not our purpose to notice.

The ruthless and unceasing attempts which from time to time are made to destroy the credit of our community, the apparent malignity which mark the course of prominent individuals in different sections of the Union, the unjust aspersions on the general health of our city, the repeated decrying of its social character, appear to be part and parcel of a system brought into action to retard its destiny, for no other purpose than to destroy that influence, that providential importance which the God of nature designed as the crowning glory of the Crescent city.

With the advent of the month of November, the general resumption of active trade is expected. In this respect we are gratified to know our community has not been disappointed. Our great staple—cotton—has been arriving freely since the middle of August, beyond all anticipations that were entertained at the commencement of the commercial year; that it has brought highly remunerative prices cannot be denied by the grower; that, in the face of depressing accounts received almost every week for two months, it has sustained itself as well as it has, is in part attributed to the unparalleled easy position of our money market and the general soundness and stability of our commercial community. There is now a stock on hand of nearly 200,000 bales, which has never been exceeded only in one season before. The continued favorable (or which are made to read favorable) accounts, which go by every steamer for Liverpool, with exaggerated accounts of a great yield, fine weather for picking, with the uneasy sensations regarding money affairs in England and France, all tend to repress any chances for any advance in prices this season. In fact it will be unjust to the planter to hold forth encouragement of any real improvement being realized in the present untoward aspect of commercial, financial and social relations in Europe.

Turning from our chief great staple, which, with its sure adjuncts—sugar and molasses—are sufficient alone to constitute New Orleans the greatest exporting city in the Confederacy, and the second in commerce on the continent, we must not overlook the good prospects for a large increase in tobacco, breadstuffs and cereals. There is not an article in the whole catalogue of the prices current, excepting lard, meat and molasses, but what there will be, this season, a large excess over last year.

Flour this season (according to the Price Current) gives 164,000 barrels against 95,747 last year; of Wheat, 260,000 bushels against twenty-three hundred and forty bushels (2,340) last year; Corn, 82,365 sacks against 33,500; Oats, 92,684 sacks against 28,348; Hay, 20,316 bales against 4,991 bales; Potatoes, 41,290 barrels against 13,645; Tobacco, 2,196 hhds. against 1,527; Whisky, 6,957 barrels against 3,546; Lead, 9,411 pigs against 2,040; Sugar, 8,518 hhds. against 6,139; Bagging and Bale Rope, as increase. In the article of Coal, it is all increase, being 63,000 barrels.

Of our immediate great staple, sugar, the season has not sufficiently advanced to determine, with any degree of accuracy, the probable product. The receipts and sales justify the remark that existing prices will be in some measure sustained, and the gross returns will be as much as last year.

The facts show for themselves, and they cannot be controverted, that the season's business has commenced most auspiciously. It is really cheering to witness the cordiality and good feeling which are daily evinced among those engaged in commercial pursuits. Above all, not one of the highest considerations, is the safe mode of selling produce in our market. It is the cash system; on that alone we feel disposed to stake our destiny with any of the numerous competitors so eager to draw business from us.

It is well known that in New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, all of the many kinds of produce are sold on credits of 2, 4 and 6 months, a custom of years standing, and one which will never be eradicated. Compare this with the superior advantages which our market holds, and has held from time immemorial. Every article, every description of produce, is sold for cash, and cash only. So soon as it is landed on the Levee, sold and delivered, the buyer expects his bill, and pays it. No tax of a guarantee commission, discount for prompt pay, embellishes a New Orleans account of sales, and the general charges average from 25 to 50 per cent. less than in Northern cities. This system ought, and will alone, secure New Orleans a good share of the increasing business of the expanding West.

The facilities of communication by the unrivaled steamboats which navigate the Mississippi river, are the strongest incentives for yearly visits of tens of thousands of the residents of the West. Not only will they be desirous of availing themselves of our delightful climate for a winter's residence, and where all the appliances of comfort, health and temporary mercantile pursuits offer the greatest inducements; but when they come once, they will come again. And this season will, from the immensity of products and the remunerative prices, cause the farmers to be free in their expenditures. The great and varied attractions of New Orleans will induce thousands to visit it who never have heretofore.

The entire West must, in the natural course of events, be dependent on this emporium for one of the most important articles of domestic use—sugar. It will also, this season, undoubtedly require a large increase of molasses to promote the efficiency of the heavy crop of hominy, of which, in its main ingredient, they have been so greatly favored with an extraordinary yield. It presents itself, what share of the present crop will be required for use west of the Allegheny mountains, nearly all Louisiana will have to spare. Of course it is not supposed that the wildest opponent of New Orleans will contend that it will not maintain its great and controlling influence and importance as the sugar mart of the United States, though unfortunately a deficiency will, from the vicissitudes of the weather, be the result of the season product, yet good prices as now prevail will relieve cultivators of much pecuniary embarrassment.

In taking a prospective view of the general aspect of business, we discern nothing indicating any adverse change, other than what may momentarily arise from convulsions in money and produce markets with which our community is connected. If the Banks of England and France were both to suspend, the effect on New Orleans would be only temporary, and the occurrence would be laughed at in a week after it happened, though some cotton exchange might be jeopardized. Prudent foresight is at all times wise, but to make a panic or aid in creating one, benefits no community. If, however, any members of the mercantile fraternity are impressed that dangers are ahead, we recommend them to allay their fears so far as the suspension of coin payments in Europe. A cautious feeling on the part of our business men has been perceivable for months past, which, with the action of our Banks, has tended to keep the community generally from extending itself beyond its control.

But what New Orleans most requires—what is all important to its manifest destiny and its immediate advance, is the building up of manufactories—some defined system of doing for ourselves what we send hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly out of the State to have done for us. In the rapid strides with which we advanced until two years since, the great desideratum, the most essential concomitant to commerce and trade, the ne plus ultra of an industrious and frugal community, manufacturing pursuits have been entirely forgotten. In no place on the face of the globe are there more natural advantages for cotton factories than in our good city, yet there is not so much as a spindle or a loom engaged in making even the ordinary clothing for our laboring classes. This most important and lucrative branch of commerce and industry is surrendered to Northern bigots and European nabobs. While our citizens appear content with the trade which arises from the receiving, storing, selling and transporting its raw material, other cities are reaping all the benefits and profit.

There is hardly any description of manufacturing but what can be pursued to the highest advantage in New Orleans. We are sustained in this assertion by the success attending the Louisiana Manufacturing Company, in the Fourth District, devoted to the making of cotton bagging and hale rope. The results of only one year's experience has satisfied the proprietors of the most pleasing prospective. And we learn that labor and all the necessary requirements for conducting extensive associations can be procured in New Orleans on more favorable terms than in any other city in the Union. If a regular system of manufacturing was started in our city, laborers, workingmen and artizans of every class would settle with us, the general condition of our city be improved and enhanced, the development of the great resources of our State would follow, our city attain that enviable eminence which nature has destined it, and we should be a happy, prosperous and contented people.

We may return to the subject at a future day.

A Beautiful and Truthful Extract.

We clip the following beautiful and truthful extract from an exchange, the name of which has escaped our memory. Let it be considered well. It is full of solemn facts, which should be considered profoundly by every devotee of republican liberty. And we would do well to profit by its warnings if we would save our country from the fate of every other Republic, ancient or modern:

The past is secure. It is unalterable. The seal of eternity is upon it. The wisdom which it has displayed cannot be obscured; neither can they be debased by human folly or human infirmity. The future is that which may well awaken the most earnest solicitude, both for the virtue and the permanence of our Republic. The fate of other Republics, their rise, their progress, their decline and their fall, are written but too legibly on pages of history, if indeed they were not continually before us in the startling fragments of their ruins.

They have perished, and perished by their own hands. Prosperity enervated them, corruption debased them, and a venal populace consummated their destruction. They have sometimes been cheated out of their liberties by servile demagogues; sometimes betrayed into a surrender of them by false patriots. They have disregarded the warning voice of their best statesmen, and have persecuted and driven from office their best friends. They have reverenced power more in its high abuses and summary movements, than in its calm and constitutional energy. They have surrendered to faction what belonged to the country. Patronage and party, the triumph of a leader, and the discontents of a day, have outweighed all solid principles and institutions of government.

Such are the melancholy lessons of the past history of the republics, down to our own. Let the history of the Grecian and Italian States warn us of our danger. Let the American youth never forget that they possess a noble inheritance, bought by the toils, and sufferings and blood of their ancestors, and capable, if wisely improved and faithfully guarded, of immortality to their latest posterity all the substantial blessings of life, the peaceful enjoyment of liberty; property, religion and independence. The structure has been erected by architects of consummate skill and fidelity; its arrangements are full of wisdom and order; its foundations solid, and its defences are impregnable from without. It has been reared for immortality, if the work of man may justly aspire to such a title. It may, nevertheless, perish in an hour by the folly, or corruption, or negligence of its only keepers. The people Republics are created by the virtue, public spirit, and intelligence of the citizens. They fall when the wise are banished from the public councils, because they dare to be honest, and the profligate are rewarded because they flatter the people in order to betray them.

A HORRIBLE STORY.—Several years before the French occupation of Constantine, in Algeria, amongst the numerous malefactors with whom the prisons overflowed, were two persons condemned to death—two brothers who were to be executed the next day. They were highway robbers, ham-stringers, and cut-throats, of whose courage and strength the most surprising tales were related. The Bey, fearing they would make their escape, ordered them to be shackled together—that is, each of them had one foot riveted in the same ring of solid iron. No one knows how the matter was managed; but every one knows that, when the executioner presented himself, the cell was empty. The two brothers, who had succeeded in escaping, after vain exertions to cut or open their common fetters, proceeded across the country, in order to avoid any unpleasant meeting. When daylight came they hid themselves in the rocks; at night, they continued their journey. In the middle of the night they met a lion. The two brothers began by throwing stones at him and shouting with all their strength to drive him away, but the animal lay down before them and would not stir. Finding that threats and insults did no good, they tried the effect of prayers; but the lion bounded upon them, dashed them to the ground, and amused himself by eating the elder of the two at the side of his brother, who pretended to be dead. When the lion came to the leg which was confined by the iron fetter, finding it resisted his teeth, he cut off the limb above the knee. Then, whether he had eaten enough, or whether he was thirsty, he proceeded to a spring a little way off. The poor, surviving wretch, looked around for a place of refuge, for he was afraid the lion would come back again after drinking. And therefore, dragging after him his brother's leg, he contrived to hide himself in a silo which he had the good luck to find close by. Shortly afterwards he heard the lion roaring with rage and pacing to and fro, close to the hole in which he had retreated. At last, daylight came, and the lion departed. The instant that the unfortunate man got out of the silo, he found himself in the presence of several of the Bey's cavalry, who were on his track. One of them took him up on horseback behind him, and he was brought back to Constantine, where they put him into prison again. The Bey, scarcely believing the facts related by his vassals, decired to see the man, and had him appear before him, still dragging after him his brother's leg. Ahmed-Bey, notwithstanding his reputation for cruelty, ordered the fetters to be broken, and granted the poor wretch his life.

ASTRONOMICAL SCIENCE.—The President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, in his opening address at the yearly scientific gathering lately held at Glasgow, stated, as one of the results of Lord Rosse's telescope, that for the first time since the days of Newton a suspicion has arisen in the minds of astronomers that awe other than that of gravitation may bear rule in space; and that the nebula phenomena revealed to us by that telescope must be governed by forces different from those of which we have any knowledge.

The circular from the Danish Government, inviting the United States to a congress of nations for the settlement of the Sound Dues question has been received in Washington.

A SERGEANT'S SILK HANDKERCHIEF.—There lives in the little village of Brentwood, a sergeant retired from the 7th Fusileers, by name Thomas Everett, illustrated in the Crimean war with five wounds and the loss of one eye. A mighty hunter of Russians was Thomas Everett, having, it is said, bagged fifty of the children of the Czar—the miserable little ones. At the Alma a shot whistled through Thomas Everett's ear, whispering danger private and confidential. A bayonet went through his arm in a sortie; and by way of variety Thomas Everett enjoyed a ball on the same evening through the hip. A cannon shot made so near an acquaintance with one of his feet, that it delicately removed the sole of a shoe. Two of his comrades were taken into Sebastopol prisoners, but Thomas Everett stole into the city at night, shot the sentry who guarded them, and returned with his rescued friends. Great, heroic have been the deeds of Thomas Everett; and great, magnificent, has been his reward, for—but the theme calls for a new paragraph.

For Thomas Everett has received a silk handkerchief, hemmed by her majesty! How much heroism, how much devotion may be covered by one silk handkerchief! The gallant fellow is of course delighted—proud of the present. We think he ought to be paroliticel, on Sundays and holidays, to hoist that handkerchief as his own peculiar flag, on his own staff, before his own cottage door. How, streaming to the wind, it would gather around it all the youthful rustics, firing their blood with a sense of glory, and kindling their hopes that, for only the loss of one eye, the inconvenience of five wounds, with deeds of prowess, too numerous to particularize, they too might hope some day to obtain a silk handkerchief! Of course, Thomas Everett, a sergeant, receives a pension. But wherefore has he not been promoted to the rank, at least, of ensign? At least the silk handkerchief might have wrapped up a commission. THE WIFE.—The leading features in the character of a good woman are mildness, complaisance, and equanimity of temper. The man, if he be a worthy and provident husband, is immersed in a thousand cares. His mind is agitated, his memory loaded and his body fatigued. He retires from the bustle of the world, chagrined perhaps by disappointment, angry at insolent and perfidious people, and terrified lest his unavoidable connections with such people should make him appear perfidious himself. Is this the time for the wife of his bosom, his dearest and most intimate friend, to add to his vexations, to increase the fever of an overburdened mind, by a contentious tongue or a discontented brow? Business, in its most prosperous state, is full of anxiety and turmoil. Oh, how dear to the memory of man is the wife who clothes her face in smiles, who uses gentle expressions, and who makes her lap soft to receive and hush his cares to rest. There is not in nature so fascinating an object as a faithful, tender and affectionate wife.

RAPID EXTRAORDINARY.—A horse-race took place at St. Paul, Minnesota, a few days since, between two horses. The distance was from St. Paul to St. Anthony and back, a distance of twenty miles. The time occupied was 58 minutes. The papers very justly denounce the brutality of forcing horses to such deeds. Several thousands changed hands on the result. The losing horse was but twenty feet behind the first.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—The mortuary returns for the week ending Sunday morning are the smallest we have had for a number of years—showing an unexampled state of public health. Six only of the deaths were by yellow fever, and four of those at the Hospital.

ELECTION AFFRAYS.—We regret to state that during the several disturbances at the eighteenth and twentieth precincts, in the Third District, on Monday, two men were killed and several others were wounded.

At the eighteenth precinct—no Victory street, between Marigny and Mandeville streets—Major Henry Busse, a German military officer, and keep r of a coffee-house at the corner of Victory and Elysian Fields streets, was shot at, and received two bullets, one in his hip and the other in his leg. At the origin of the difficulty we have been able to arrive at but one point with certainty, viz: that he was the first to make any hostile demonstration, which he did by drawing a revolver. He had no sooner done so than numerous American revolvers were drawn upon him; without firing he turned and fled, dropping his pistol which some one snatched up and fired after him. As he ran other pistols were fired, and thirteen bullet holes in the fence and house past which he ran, show what a miraculous escape from death he had. He is at his residence doing well.

At the twentieth precinct, corner of Casualvo and St. Ferdinand streets, at about one o'clock, a Frenchman named Antoine Feller raised an altercation on account of his naturalization papers being rejected, which resulted in his receiving two stabs, from the effects of which he died in a cab, while on his way to the hospital. The Coroner held an inquest on the body yesterday, which will probably continue several days. A man named William Delmut was slightly hurt at the same time and place.

At the same precinct, at One o'clock in the evening Dr. Frederick Scherer, a German, who kept a drug store at the corner of St. Ferdinand and Greatmine streets, was shot and killed. Our best information is to the effect that he went to the police in a state of terrible humor, speaking very loudly and incoherently as he went through the crowd. An American gentleman, well known for his peaceable and amiable disposition, approached him, and putting his hand on his shoulder, said, in a friendly way, "Doctor, don't go so—so—you'd better leave here, for you'll get hurt if you stay." At that the Doctor becoming exasperated, drew a revolver and fired full at the gentleman. The bullet missed its aim, but lodged in the right thigh of a youth named Joseph Rutter, who was standing by. Thereupon the crowd made a charge at him with pistols and knives; he ran out St. Ferdinand street a short distance and fell, with four bullets in his body, three of which alone, and separately would have caused death. He died in an hour or two afterwards. The Coroner commenced an investigation in his case also, yesterday, which he had to postpone, owing to Recorder Seuzeneau taking away the witnesses for his purposes as a magistrate. The Doctor was a rabid anti-American, and had frequently boasted in public that all he wanted to do was to kill a Know-Nothing. Young Rutter's wound is a very bad one, although the bullet had been extracted, and he is doing well.

At about the same hour, whilst Mr. James Boylan, a deputy Street Commissioner, on horseback, and several other members of the American party, in two carriages, were coming up from the twenty-first to the eighteenth precinct, they were fired upon by a party of Irishmen at the corner of English and Victory streets, and by other Irishmen concealed in houses on Victory street, that neighborhood being exclusively Irish. Some thirty or forty shots were fired at them, yet, by strange good fortune, none of the Americans were hurt. Mr. Boylan, being much exposed, spurred his horse onward, having drawn his revolver, which he discharged back at the Irish as he went. After his pistol was empty, an Irishman ran out of a house with an axe, which he drew back as if to chop the forelegs of Mr. B's horse. Mr. B scared him off by pointing the empty pistol at him, but was just then seized by another Irishman, who came up from behind, and was in the act of dragging him from his saddle, when he was shot by the other Americans, who had jumped from their carriage and come to the rescue. He staggered to the sidewalk, fell on his face, and was left for dead; but when the Americans had got some distance off he was seen to jump up and run like a good fellow. He was probably only grazed by the bullet, and stunned. Some of the Americans at the eighteenth precinct hearing the Orion ran down to the rescue, but could find no one upon whom to wreak vengeance, every door, window, and gate being closed, and no body visible, and they, with all their excitement, being too considerate to molest women and children by breaking into houses. That no riot followed this most flagrant outrage, speaks very highly for the Americans of the Old Third.

There were numerous other difficulties, but not of a serious character—knock-downs, foot-races, etc—at different times during the day, the precise nature of which we could not ascertain, and which are, therefore, not worth specifying.

Very serious occurrences, however, (in which no blood was spilt, although there were a few knock-downs) occurred in the First and Second Districts after nightfall. We allude to the destruction of the ballot-boxes of the seventh and sixth precincts. We have no information as to who the parties were that perpetrated these acts of violence. The officers of the law will, doubtless, investigate the matter with all due vigilance. [Crescent.

THE CLOSING OF THE COFFEE-HOUSES.—The closing of all the coffee-houses, great and small, on Monday, for the purpose of subserving the public peace during the elections, was a spectacle unexampled in the history of New Orleans. When we consider how much coffee-house keepers are wont to profit on election days, and when we consider that their action on Monday was in no wise compulsory, but voluntary, in obedience to the mere wish of the peace-loving community, so large a portion of whom indulge in perpetual abuse of and hostility to the vending of strong drink, we confess to some special wonder and admiration. During our rounds on Monday, we were surprised to find out only the coffee-houses closed, but many groceries, where liquor is retailed, closed also, which was more than was expected by the public. We learn that a few drinking houses did a little business "on the sly," by means of side alleys, back doors, etc.; but the temptation was great, and the shortcomings of the few should not detract from the honor due to the many. The day was rather warm; and this, with the absolute excitement, created an universal thirst; and those who had not been provident enough to lay in supplies of the ardent beforehand, might have been seen crowding the soda-shops in great numbers. The closing of the coffee-houses was a noteworthy and praiseworthy incident to our local annals—contributing, as it did, beyond a doubt, to the peace which prevailed in most of the city, and which surprised everybody—and we hope that those who sympathetically denounce the liquor-vending class, will now be as appreciative as that class has been accommodating. WHAT IS GLORY? WHAT IS FAME?

BY MRS. SOUTHWELL.

What is Glory? What is Fame?
The echo of a long lost name;
A breath, an idle hour's brief talk;
The shadow of an errant thought,
A flower that blooms for a day,
Dying next morrow;
A storm that hurries on its way,
Singing of sorrow.
The last drop of a hoofless shower,
Shed on a sere and leafless bower;
A rose, stuck in a dead man's breast—
This is the world's tame, at the best!

What is Fame? And what is Glory?
A dream—a jester's lying story,
To tickle fools withal, or be
A theme for second infancy;
A joke scrawled on an epitaph;
A grin at death's own ghastly laugh;
A blinding that to mists the eye,
But mocks the touch—unreally;
A rainbow, substanceless as bright,
Fitting for—for
Our hilt top to store distant height,
Nearing us never;
A bubble blown by fond conceit,
To cheat itself to cheat;
The witch fire of a frenzied brain;
A fortune that to lose were gain;
A word of praise—perchance of blame;
The wreck of a time-handled name—
Ay, this is glory! this is fame!

GLOVES VS. SLIPPERS.

(Translated for the Express from the Courrier des Etats-Unis.)

A little incident has recently enlivened Parisian Society. It is of no consequence to tell whether the heroine was French or Spanish; will it not suffice to say that she is young and pretty.

This heroine had a husband, and this husband, being of joyous temperament, was indifferent to nothing that could amuse him. It was his right, and you shall see how he exercised that right.

One day last week, it happened that his wife, in managing about her chamber, found among her effects a pair of slippers. These slippers were of white satin.

"Good," said she, "there is to be a ball this evening, I will wear them." She took them out and tried them on. The slippers were too small and her feet would not go into them.

Meanwhile the husband made his appearance. "Whose are these slippers?" demanded the wife, pushing her foot into the white satin."

The husband looked down and became red, and a hopeless fellow!

"These slippers! they belong to you," he replied at once.

"To me! don't you see I cannot get them on?"

To find slippers and not to be able to wear them—what a disappointment!

"It is because your feet have swelled so," continued the husband, "you dance so much."

The wife rejoined, the husband would not relinquish the point, and the slippers went flying out of the window.

Eight days after wards the husband looking for a pair of gloves, found some which he wanted to wear; he slipped in a finger, he slipped in two, but the glove would not go on. Moreover the gloves had been worn.

The husband frowned.

"Eh, madame! what is this?" he demanded of his wife on presenting himself before her with the gloves on the tips of his fingers.

"This? It is a pair of gloves," said she calmly.

"Parbleu! I see that very well—but whom do they belong to?

"To you, apparently."

"Indeed! look you! it is impossible for me to get into them, and besides some one has worn them."

"Ah! then the gloves belong to the same person who owned the slippers. You recollect the slippers the other day."

The husband flew into a passion, the wife burst into a laugh.

"I have found slippers, you find gloves: we are quits," said she.

The husband pouted for twenty-four hours, after which he asked for a treaty of peace. The negotiations were made and the wife agreed to them. A tit out of a clonk of Russian sables defrayed the expenses of the campaign.

In accepting it, the wife smiled—"See how good I am," said she, "I am willing to acknowledge that these gloves, these famous gloves, belong to my cousin who lent them to me to assist me in taking revenge upon you; give them to me, and hereafter if I find no more slippers, you shall find no more gloves."

Later from Texas.

The steamship Chas. Morgan, Capt. Place, arrived on Saturday last from Indianola via Galveston. The Galveston News of the 1st has the following paragraphs:

Nearly all our exchanges from the interior speak of sharp frosts being experienced in various parts of the country. The weather in Galveston, for several days past, has been unusually mild for this season of the year.

We learn from a letter, received from Washerville, that Mr. A. R. Oates, of Lagrange, has just returned from a tour through the country, where he has been canvassing for subscription to stock for the proposed extension of the Harrisburg road, and that he has succeeded far beyond his most sanguine expectations. From the exertions lately made by the counties west of the Brazos, we have little doubt, before another year, this road will be extended to the Colorado river.

A letter of the 31st ult., from Houston to the News, says:

The prospect, I learn, of the sugar planters in the adjoining county is more inviting.

The Austin State Times publishes the Mexican account, by Col Laugberg, of the battle between Capt. Callahan's forces and the Mexicans and Indians. This account places the number of the Rangers at 800, and the Mexican force at 350, and states that the former were beaten, with a loss of ten killed and thirteen wounded, and that they lost thirty horses and all their weapons, etc. This statement is, of course, absurdly untrue. The Colonel admits, however, that the Mexican leader "retreated to San Fernando to procure powder." The Times says:

Without intending it, Col. Laugberg goes far towards establishing the charge of treachery made by Capt. Callahan against the Mexican authorities. They know as well before he crossed, his object was to operate against the Lipans and Seminole Indians, as people can be made to know anything. Col. Laugberg himself understood the thing perfectly well. The Alcalde at Piedras Negras, gave Capt Callahan written permission to cross the Rio Grande, which he is said to have exhibited to the commander at Fort Duncan. The Mexicans professed to be anxious to co-operate with the Texans in the campaign, aided them in crossing, and did all they could to deceive and betray them. Col. Langberg acknowledges his having prepared "secretly" to meet them. Why did he order Col. Munchaca to fall back from the river? Would it not have been more manly to deny them permission to cross—tell them they could not pursue Indians into their territory, than to act as they did? Why did Col. Langberg wish to decoy them into the country, by removing all show of troops, by directing the authorities to suffer them to pass over unmolested? Simply because he was a party to the deception—the perfidy—and wished to seduce them away from the river to destroy them.

The San Antonio Texan, of the 25th, has the following:

Our correspondent at Eagle Pass, in a private dispatch, remarks that Gen Langberg has asked the merchants this side of the Rio Grande to raise a subscription to pay for the damages done by the burning of the city of Piedras Negras, and remarks, "that this very town is built mostly and supported by plunder received from the east side of the Rio Grande."

The head-quarters of the army have been established in our city for the last few weeks, and numbers of the United States baggage wagons may be seen daily arriving and departing.

Major Neighbors, writing to Gov Pease, says there is a prospect of some trouble with the Northern Camanches, and seems to anticipate an attack on the frontier settlers, who are wholly unprotected.

Gen Smith has communicated to Gov. Pease an official order from the head-quarters of the army, announcing that the 2d regiment of cavalry, at Jefferson Barracks, will proceed by marches across the country to Fort Belknap, to be there disposed of by the Commanding General of the Department of Texas.

EPITAPH.

The following beautiful epitaph was discovered on the back of a portrait of Washington, sent to the family from England:

WASHINGTON.
The defender of his Country—the founder of Liberty,
THE FRIEND OF MAN.
History and Tradition are explored in vain for a parallel to his character.
In the annals of Modern Greatness,
The noblest names of Antiquity
Lose their lustre in his presence.
BORN THE BENEFACTOR OF MANKIND,
He united all the greatness necessary to an illustrious career.
Nature made him Great;
He made himself Virtuous.
Called by his country to the defence of her Liberties,
He triumphantly vindicated the rights of Humanity.
And on the pillars of National Independence,
Laid the foundation of a great Reform.
Twice invested with the Supreme Magistracy by the unanimous vote of a free people;
He surpassed in the Cabinet
the glories of the Field.
And voluntarily resigning the sceptre and the Sword, retired to the shades of private life.
A spectacle so new and so sublime
Was contemplated with the profoundest admiration.
And the name of WASHINGTON,
adding new lustre to Humanity,
Resounded to the remotest regions of the Earth.
MODERATION IN YOUTH;
GLORIOUS THROUGH LIFE;
GREAT IN DEATH;
His highest ambition, the happiness of Mankind;
His noblest victory, the Conquest of himself.
Bequeathing to posterity the inheritance of his Fame,
And building his monument in the hearts of his countrymen,
He lived a ornament of the 18th century,
AND DIED RECEIVED BY A MOURNING
WORLD.

USE OF A NOSE.—A good story is told of Mozart, at the time he was a pupil of Haydn. The latter challenged his pupil to compose a piece of music which he could not play at sight. Mozart accepted the banter, and a champagne supper was to be the forfeit. Every thing being arranged between the two composers, Mozart took his pen and a sheet of paper, and in five minutes dashed off a piece of music, and much to the surprise of Haydn, handed it to him, saying:

"There is a piece of music, sir, which you cannot play, and I can: you are to give the first trial."

Haydn smiled contemptuously at the visionary presumption of his pupil, and placing the notes before him, struck the keys of the instrument. Surprised at its simplicity, he dashed away until he reached the middle of the piece, when stopping all at once, he exclaimed:

"How's this, Mozart? How's this? Here my hands are stretched out to both ends of the piano, and yet there is a middle key to be touched! Nobody can play such music—not even the composer himself."

Mozart smiled at the half excited indignation and perplexity of the great master, and taking the seat he had quitted, struck the instrument with such an air of self assurance that Haydn began to think himself duped. Running along the simple passages he came to that part which his teacher had pronounced impossible to be played. Mozart, as any body is aware, was favored, or at least endowed with an extremely long nose, which, in modern dialect, "stuck out about a feet." Reaching the difficult passage, he stretched both hands to the extreme ends of the piano, and leaning forward, bobbed his nose against the middle key, which "nobody could play."

Haydn burst into an immoderate fit of laughter, and after acknowledging the "corn," declared that nature had endowed Mozart with a capacity for music which he had never before discovered!

A BLESSING TO THE COUNTRY.—A lady now on a visit to Paris, Tenn., has written to a friend here some particulars of a remarkable and most exemplary matron of that vicinity, which particulars have been communicated to us as worthy of a place in our columns.

The matron in question is a Mrs. D——, now eighty-seven years old. She had twenty-three living children, and prayed to the good Lord to give her one more, to make the round and goodly number of two dozen. Besides these, she has raised fourteen orphan children. She has educated thirty children—her own and a portion of the orphans—and for many years sent nineteen children to school in Paris, and their dinners with them. She says that none of those she has reared and educated have ever disgraced her or themselves. The girls have all married well, and are rich. The boys have all done well—one of her orphan proteges has been in Congress, several others in the State Legislature; there are sundry colonels, etc., among them, and all are highly respectable.

[Indianapolis Jour.

WOLVES IN INDIA.—A singular document has just been published, showing that within a recent period six hundred children have been destroyed by wolves in the Punjanb; nearly a thousand were some twenty years ago slaughtered in the same way aronnd Angra. The ornaments of the infants are generally found in the dens where their poor little bodies are devoured: and those who make a trade of getting possession of the plunder thus provided to their hands have created an impression amongst the people that the village in which a wolf is killed is sure to come to ruin; and the ferocious brutes, when caught, are frequently set free with a ball aronnd the neck. The loss of life from snake bites in Scinde has become so serious that government has taken measures for the destruction of these reptiles.

BEAUMONT'S TYPE DISTRIBUTING MACHINE.—We yesterday witnessed the operation of this machine, and after a pretty thorough examination of its working, are convinced of its practical utility in large printing establishments Each machine will distribute bnt one size of type; bnt the inventor informs us that they may be so constructed as to be easily adapted to the different sizes of small type. If worked by hand, one man or boy can distribnte 12,000 ems per hour, and with scarcely a possibility of an error of a single type; whereas, by the nsual process of hand distribution, 3,000 ems are about the average. The machine can be worked by steam, and one man can then attend to three of them, making the total distribution in one hour 36,000 ems. [N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

A SINGULAR RELIC.—We were shown, on Saturday, by Col. Ogle, of this county, a small copper tobacco box, about two by six inches The history of this box is interesting. When William Penn first began the settlement of Philadelphia, he gave it to an Indian chief as a present. The box was perfectly plain. Long afterwards it was procured from the Indian by a white man, when it was discovered to be rudely carved all over. One part of it represents Penn treating with the Indians, and the figures of Indians are scattered in many places The carving has evidently been done with a sharp stone—tha cuts seem to be scratched ont. It is a living illustration of the artistic skill of the aborigines. The box has been in the possession of the family of Col. Ogle for over one hundred years. [Terre Haute (Ind.) Express.

AN ANCIENT FROG.—James Crabtree, pit sinker to Messrs. Ackroyd, of Barkinshaw Bottom. In sinking a pit at Morley, near Leeds, recently found a live frog in the centre of a large coal, two hundred and thirty feet below the surface, considerably below the Morley tunnel, to which it is close adjoining. The frog is still very lively. When found it was very dark in color, bnt is becoming like the common, every day species. The eyes are very bright, and surrounded with a gold ring. It has four claws on its fore feet, and five (web-footed) on the hind feet. Its mouth is closed, or firmly shut, but it has two vents, apparently nostrils, on the top of its nose The seam of coal from which it was disinterred was saturated with water; and probably from this circumstance, combined with close confinement, it had been enabled to sustain its half torpid life through countless ages. [Leeds (Eng.) Mercury.

"Don't stand there loafing," said a professor at Union to three students, standing where they should'nt

"We're not loafing," said they, "there are only three of us, and it takes leaven to make a loaf."

MADAME RACHEL'S RECEIPTS.—The total receipts from twenty-four performances and two readings, given by Madame Rachel, in New York, was $46,564, of which the manager as her share $23,282.

THE STEAM ENGINE.—An eloquent lecturer before the American Institute of New York, after alluding to the immense benefits resulting to mankind from the discoveries of science, thus thrillingly apostrophised the steam engine:

"Behold the giant of the nineteenth century, how he is compelled to tug and strain the tireless sinews of his strength, in countless fields of usefulness and labor! See how bravely he bears us through the storm. Insensible to cold and careless of sleep, behold the snow that blockades our path fly before him in the dim starlight! With mouth full of fire, and nostrils expanded with smoke, hear him laugh defiantly at the solstitial rays beneath which every other laborer would melt. See him furrow the hillowy brine for millions of miles, and interchange the growth of different zones. He spans the seas with bridges. He enters the factory, and seizing the central crank he plies its complicated machinery with inconceivable velocity and power. He weaves our garments and carves our furniture. He multiplies our thoughts in book and newspaper, and impels them through the world. He bores his way through rock and mountains, and leaves an avenue for the flow of commerce. He grinds the grain of continents, and carries it to meet the necessities of man. He clenches the tough quarts, and crushing it in his iron fist, compels it to surrender the golden treasure it so tightly held. He lifts and excavates; he flames, and saws, and hammers, and yet with infinite and etherial delicacy, he points the finest needle and draws the metallic threads. No labor is too undignified for him to perform—no task too heavy for him to accomplish. He delights in noise and dirt, and soot, and smoke. He is not afraid of his dainty fingers. Wherever work is to be done, there is his home. Whenever a difficult job is placed before him, his iron muscles fairly thrill with joy. See how, in the few years of his wonderful activity, whole forests have gone down his throat, leaves, and boughs, and mighty trunks. And who shall say that this laborious Titan has yet fully got himself into harness?

A FINE STREAM.—A good story is told of a Philadelphia judge, well known for his love of jokes. He had advertised a farm for sale, with a fine stream of water running through it. A few days afterwards a gentleman called on him to speak about it.

"Well, Judge," said he, "I have been over that farm you advertised the other day, and find all right except 'the fine stream of water' you mentioned."

"It runs through the piece of woods in the lower part of the meadow," said the Judge.

"What, that little brook? Why it does not hold much more than a spoonful. I am sure if you empty a bowl of water into it, it would overflow. You don't call that a fine stream, do you?"

"Why, if it were much finer you could'nt see it at all," said the Judge blandly.

We never heard whether the gentleman bought the farm, but we rather suspect he did'nt.

ARRIVAL OF EMIGRANTS.—We learn that some eighty odd emigrants, direct from Bremen, have arrived at the Brazos, on their way to some point on the Upper Rio Grande—rumor says the Mesilla Valley. We are ignorant as to their destination, but their arrival, we are inclined to hope, opens up a new and far more prosperous era to the prospects of this, the richest and least known portion of Texas.

[Brownsville Flag.

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD.—It will be gratifying to our readers (says the Macon, Miss., Star,) to learn that the cars are now running to Marion, and that the work of track-laying is being so energetically prosecuted by the contractors as to insure the completion of the road to this point early in April next. We have understood that, should the river be navigable during the ensuing winter, it is the intention of the Company to have rails transported to Columbus, and from thence lay the track until it reaches us—thus speedily "making the connection" between the latter city and Mobile.

GROSS OUTRAGE.—Last night, as a procession was returning from the Democratic meeting of the 18th ward, and when passing the Clipper office, six balls were fired at the office—five of them going through the windows into the composing room, where a number of the hands were at work, and one ball grased the body of Mr. Brown, himself a good Democrat. Fortunately no one was injured. We are glad to know that the names of the persons have been ascertained who fired the pistols. Such murderous assaults are all right when they proceed from the Democrats; and if those miscreants had been shot down, in self-defence, there would have been a great outcry made by their friends, of cold-blooded murder, etc.—Balt. Patriot, 27th.

The Ouachita (La.) Register of the 25th ult. says of the yellow fever in that region:

This terrible disease is still raging in Columbia, as will be seen by our correspondence from that place. The citizens of Monroe should feel truly thankful to Divine Providence for the seemingly almost miraculous escape, thus far, from this scourge of all diseases. We think it can be said, in all truth, that Monroe has been the most healthy town in the Union during the past summer.

An independent editor somewhere in the West says, in a recent issue of his seven-by-nine sheet:

"We this week strike from our books the names of two of our subscribers, who have recently been hanged in Texas. We wish to have those who read our paper kept out of bad company."

RACHEL "NO GREAT SHAKES."—Rachel does does not appear to make a very profound impression in Boston after all. The Post there says:

We are sure we have seen as good playing as hers, time and again, upon the English stage. Upon the whole, we cannot say that in our opinion she is worth all the pila of adjectives that have been heaped upon her, both in France and England. We have no reverential or gingerly feeling in approaching the subject of her performances, for we think that as fine actresses as Rachel have been upon the English stage, and will be there again—and this without going back to the Siddons and O'Neil, if we suppose those ladies to have been all that they are represented to be. We do not mind adding that all but Rachel's shares in the classical tragedy is insufferably tedious to us, and to most of the audiences, to judge from the faces and actions of those within sight. The effect would be decidedly improved if all but Rachel's scenes were left to the imagination."

The Illinois Central Railroad Company have contracted with the responsible and widely known firm and houses of Grayham & Buckingham, of New Orleans, and Adams & Buckingham, of New York, extensive grain and provision dealers, for the construction at Cairo, between now and the first day of December next, of a warehouse four hundred and sixty feet long by one hundred feet deep—the object being to facilitate the forwarding of grain and provisions to market from the Southern and middle portions of the State, and to avail themselves of the cheapest and most direct communication with Europe after the close of lake navigation.

SOME CHICKENS.—An individual by the name of Bottlebaim, or Bottlebolms, has been edifying the students of Dartmouth College, in New England, and the citizens of the country round about, with his experinces in Japan—a land concerning which a great deal may be safely said without fear of contradiction. There is certainly the merit of novelty in the fecturers addresses, whatever the case may be with regard to their truthfulness. Think of Japanese chickens!

The fowls, too, seem to vie with the vegetables, as to which shall be the greater, as the shanghais are a mere trifle in size, and he has often seen fows absolutely three feet high

The city of Philadelphia appears to be bankrupt, there being no funds in the treasury to pay the ordinary expenses of the courts, schools, and the salaries of the officials. In the Court of Quarter Sessions, a few days ago, the jurors complained that they could neither get their pay from the city government nor the warrants for it. The District Attorney at the same time stated that neither himself nor the officers of the Court had received their salaries since June last.

Mr. Branwood, accordiug to the London Quarterly Review, has stated his belief that, by long exposure to heat not exceeding that of boiling water, or 215 degrees, timber is brought into such a condition that it will ignite without a light. The time which the process of desiccation is going on, natil it ends in spontaneous combustion, is, he thinks, from eight to ten years. Pipes for heating buildings by steam should, therefore, be clear of all wood work and rest on metal brackets only.

A LARGE MERCHANT FLEET.—On the 27th of August, fully one thousand merchant vessels, of every country and rig, were within the range of the eye, beating through the Straits of Gibraltar.

FURTHER FOREIGN NEWS.

BY THE SOUTHERN LINE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3d.—Annexed are some additional items of intelligence received by the Baltic.

The Russian army in Asia had attacked Kars, but was defeated with a loss of 4,000 men.

The Czar had issued an ukase for the enrollment of twenty-eight men in every thousand souls in the Empire.

In Sicily hands of armed men were collecting. The troops who were sent against them were repulsed.

The Viceroy of Egypt was about to prohibit the export of corn.

New York Market.

Our cotton market was unsettled to-day by the Baltic's advices.

Flour advanced 12½ to 25 cents per bbl.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5th.—Our cotton market is dull; we quote Middling Orleans at 9¾, and Middling Uplands 8¾ cts per lb. Flour is a trifle lower, with sales of State at $9 25 per bbl.

Important from Nicaragua

NEW YORK, Nov. 4th.—The Steamship Star of the West arrived at this port to-day from San Juan, having on board about $1,000,000 in specie, en route from California.

The passengers by the Star of the West left San Francisco on the 5th ult., but were delayed nine days in Nicaragua, in consequence of political troubles there.

The war in Central America was assuming a serious aspect. Walker attacked and captured the City of Granada, the capital of Nicaragua, on the 14th of October. Previously to its capture, the town was almost entirely destroyed.

On the 22d of October a treaty of peace was formally ratified with Carroll, the commandant of the government forces.

The steamer San Carlos, belonging to the Transit Company, which was conveying the passengers per Star of the West, from New York, October 5th, up the San Juan river, was fired into by the government forces, near Lake Nicaragua. A lady and child on board were killed, and the boat somewhat damaged.

On the 19th ult., the government troops made a murderous attack on the returning Californians at Virgin's Bay. Four were killed and eight wounded.

Mr. Wheeler, the American Minister to Nicaragua had been imprisoned for two days by the government forces.

The Late Railroad Accident.

By the accident on the Pacific Railroad last Thursday, twenty persons were killed and about fifty seriously injured. So says a late dispatch from St. Louis.

AGREEABLY DISAPPOINTED.—A correspondent of the Newark (N. J.) Eagle writes from Leavenworth City, Kansas, as follows:—"I am a great coward, and came here with fear and trembling, expecting to have my throat cut from ear to ear, before I reached the hotel in the city of Leavenworth; but so far from being molested, I have been treated with every civility, and I have never been among a people so universally polite as the 'border ruffians' of Kansas." Probably the gentlemen minded his own business.

The New York Evening Post, of the 27th, states that it was rumored in London the day before the Africa sailed, that the six-wire cable which was being laid across the Mediterranean from France to Algiers, was cut and abandoned in a gale of wind, under circumstances similar to those which interrupted the operations of the Newfoundland Company last summer. It was insured in London for about $300,000.

There are now in Georgia between fifty and sixty cotton factories, conducted in the most skillful and successful manner, with all the appliances to the way of machinery that can be found in the same kind of establishments in New England.

Ole Bull has again resumed his profession, and formed a company, with which he intends to make a concert tour throughout the principal cities of the Union.

FOND OF MUTTON.—On the night of the 9th ult, a valuable flock of French and Spanish ewes, belonging to Henry Adams, Esq., of Vergennes, Vt., were attacked by dogs. Between twenty and thirty fine sheep were killed or missing, and about fifty others more or less hitten. The only way to cure dogs of worrying sheep is, to cut off the tail close to the ears.

HEAVY MEAT OPERATION.—Messrs. Hall, Hunt & Co., of this city, says the Louisville Times, have contracted with an English house to furnish them 4,000,000 pounds of pork, at six cents per pound, off the hooks The transaction amounts to the round sum of $240,000 on which it is supposed their profit will be from $30,000 to $50,000. It is the largest operation ever made in the city.

George Peabody, of London, (the American Banker,) has made a donation of $500 for the benefit of the orphans of Norfolk, Portsmouth and Gosport.

A PRINCELY SALARY.—The New York Academy of Music has contracted an engagement with Roger, a Mexican tenor, at $60,000 per annum.

THE COTTON CROP IN FLORIDA.—A correspondent at White Springs, in a postscript to a business letter says: "As a general thing the cotton crop on the Suwanee will not be over two-thirds what it was last year. I am riding almost every where in that neighborhood, and I scarcely see a field that is not injured at least one-third by the rust."

A COOL STATEMENT.—The Nuremburg (Germany) Courier states, under the head of Stuttgard, that the corporation of Reisingen, in the province of Hesh have sold their poor-houses to the Jews, and sent their poor to America.

In Paris, apothecaries are obliged to put up all poison in red paper, while white labels must be used for medicine intended for internal application.

Canada is rapidly rising into importance. There are 168 newspapers printed in the two provinces. It is said the growth of wheat has increased in the last ten years over 400 per cent.

Canada has now 3,400 miles of telegraph wire in operation. The last line of the link ending on Lake Huron, at Goodrich, was finished this week and business commenced.

A magnificent public park, two miles and one-third in length by three-fifths of a mile in breadth, is talked of in New York—the cost between five and six millions of dollars! Fine picking for public functionaries.

The following hit at Lord Carnarvon is from the pen of Lord Brougham. It will do:

"Carnarvon is so piping hot,
Irascible and jadish;
His mother was a mustard-pot,
His father a horse-raddish."

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 12 miles east of Bayou Sara. Its location is beautiful, retired and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

As this section of the South west is but poorly provided with academies and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received for entering College proper.

The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.

SILESIAN WARE.—This article, which gained so much admiration, and of which so many purchases last season, is now offered for sale at No. 7 Camp street, at which place old customers and new ones are invited to call and supply themselves. No ware ever offered in this city has gained such universal approval from the purchaser, in view of the price paid. Why then expend such large sums, when the interest of your money will procure such articles as will give to your tables both elegance and durability, scarcely less than that costing ten times as much, and will retain its luster for better than silver. Almost every variety of articles for table use are now manufactured, and of styles greatly admired.

GRISWOLD'S IMPROVED COTTON GINS.

—These Gins are more celebrated and extensively used than any other in the States of Georgia and both the Carolinas, and have the preference in all other sections where known. They are manufactured by SAMUEL GRISWOLD, of Griswoldville, Georgia, who has manufactured and sold nearly 20,000 stands—a number more than double that of any other man or firm. He has the only factory having gin gear and seed cotton where reliable improvements can be made, which enables him to prove the advantages of every experiment, while all others must make them on an uncertainty; and although he is ever aiming to better his gins, he has recently succeeded in making a greater improvement in their performance than it was ever before supposed possible to make. These statements are made in good faith as an evidence of which planters have the permission of giving the Gins a fair trial before paying for them.

The following are a few of the many testimonials he has received of their worth.

This is to certify that I have used Griswold's Improved Cotton Gin, and find it to perform to my satisfaction, and take pleasure in recommending them to planters in want of a superior article of Cotton Gins:

We have used, for one season, Griswold's Patent Water Box Cotton Gins, and find them to run light, pick fast and clean, and mote well. They are convenient and simple in construction, and we doubt not their durability. In short, they are all that Mr. Griswold recommends them to be.

PLANTERS AND COLORED MISSIONS.

Mr. Editor.—The Southern Methodists have manifested considerable zeal in behalf of colored missions, and many of our most faithful and efficient men are laboring exclusively for the benefit of the slave population. Thousands have been converted and brought into church membership through their instrumentality; and doubtless multitudes now among the spirits of the just made perfect are praising God for the influence exerted in their salvation by the missionary labors of the M. E. Church South. The ministers, and many of the lay members, feel a lively interest in the success of the colored missions, and are ready to co-operate in every plan for the salvation of the spiritual welfare of the dark man; yet is feared that some who are proprietors of large plantations, have never felt the force of their responsibility in this respect, and do not take that lively interest in affording facilities for their religious instruction that they should.

The servant is a member of the master's household, whether he serve on the plantation or in the family, and the master is responsible for the religious training of his servants as well as of his children. He should regard them as immortal spirits, placed under his charge by the providence of God, and make it his great object, as a Christian, to promote their happiness, both for time and eternity; and he should therefore rejoice in every thing the co operation of the faithful missionary in its accomplishment. He should bear in mind that every one of his servants is possessed of an immortal soul, which has been redeemed by the precious blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, destined to an eternal state of existence, and that a large share of the responsibility of his soul's salvation or damnation rests upon him, and that he will have to give an account to God for the influence exerted, for weal or woe, upon the servants committed to his charge by the great Master in Heaven.

We rejoice to believe that many Christian masters do interest themselves deeply in this matter, and are liberal and zealous in affording facilities for the religious instruction of their slaves; and many of our colored missions have been established at their instance, and through their solicitation, but there is not that general and united interest which is necessary to give complete success to the efforts of the ministry in this work. I wish, if I may not be considered intrusive, to call the attention of our Christian planters to this subject, and make a few suggestions, which, if weighed and acted upon, may do much to give an impetus to this important cause.

In the first place, I would remark, that it is all-important that proper houses of worship should be provided. Where one planter has two or three quarters adjoining, a neat chapel, sufficiently large to accommodate all the servants, should be erected at same convenient point, where they can be most conveniently collected together. When two or three large plantations are contiguous, let the owners unite in erecting a neat house of worship; and if it is thought best, let the neighborhood form a church, with especial reference to the black population, and interest themselves in having regular preaching to them, and in having a proper police to prevent impropriety and protect the servants from interruption.

It is impossible to supply every plantation with an appointment, for we have not a sufficiency of laborers, neither is it the best mode of preaching to them. The blacks will not appreciate the service so much, nor regard it in the light of public worship. The social element, which constitutes so great a part of christian worship is lost, and they will not take the interest in their meetings, nor will the meetings be so successful. I know there is an objection on the part of many to the congregation of negroes together in large numbers, but the evil is more imaginary than real. Where the negroes have been in the habit of congregating for years, in our towns and cities, the churches have been found the best conservators of the peace, and the best protection for the lives and property of the inhabitants. But if there are valid objections to the indiscriminate collection of blacks in the congregation, there can be none to the use of three or four plantations having a house of worship for their own blacks, in a central position, where the overseers or owners can meet with them and see that no improper conduct is indulged.

Our missions are suffering for want of places of worship. It is discouraging to the missionary and offensive to God to show so little regard for his worship as to put the preacher into a little dirty negro cabin, to preach in the midst of forty or fifty blacks on a hot summer's day. The incense is anything but a sweet smelling savor either to God or man. In cold weather, to have his eyes blinded and his lungs suffocated with smoke, and surrounded with old bread-trays, broken stools, horse collars, and the usual lumber of a negro cabin. I know it will require some sacrifice of time, and perhaps a small investment of money to accomplish this object; but what of that? Is not the object one of sufficient importance to justify the outlay? Will any planter regret on a death bed the amount of money he has invested in making his servants comfortable and happy, and in affording facilities for their salvation? I think not, but, on the contrary, the efforts expended in that way will be a chief solace to his soul in the prospect of meeting God in judgment.

Another suggestion is, that the Christian planters should interest themselves in supporting the missionary. What is the insignificant amount necessary to support a missionary, when apportioned among fifteen or twenty planters, who make from one to six hundred bales of cotton a year. It is altogether wrong for the missionary society to be compelled to furnish money to support a missionary among the blacks of the most wealthy planters in the country. The planters should see that the missionary is paid his allowance. Let them meet and apportion the amount among themselves in proportion to slaves and cotton bales, and it can be easily raised, and I have often found unconverted men among the most generous patrons of the missions.

Not only should the missionary be furnished with a place to preach in, and paid for his services, but he should receive the countenance and co-operation of the planters. They sustain him by their influence, and furnish him with every facility for success. Much may be done in this way to hold up the hands of the missionary, and to cheer his heart amidst the discouragements incident to his calling. Let the negroes see that their masters respect him, and feel a deep interest in his labors, and it will have weight with them, and add greatly to his influence for good among them.

The negroes should be allowed to have prayer meetings among themselves, on the Sabbath on the plantations. There can be no good reason for prohibiting them from this privilege. If they become excited, and do not preserve all the order of white persons in their exercises, or become somewhat noisy in their devotions, do not deprive them of one of their chief sources of enjoyment on that account. Or if it is feared that the prayer meeting will induce a collection of negroes from other plantations, to the annoyance of the overseer and injury of the blacks, it will be easy to prohibit that without breaking up the meeting entirely. The religious negroes highly appreciate their prayer meetings, and the privilege of singing their religious songs and choruses, and they are happier and more contented when permitted to enjoy themselves in this way.

I have had considerable experience in the field of colored missions, and am fully convinced that a judicious missionary would do more to promote the interests of the master and the peace and welfare of the slave, than any instrumentality he can bring to bear upon them.

The labors and influence of the missionary powerfully aid in promoting a wholesome discipline on the plantation; and, considered only in a temporal aspect, more than compensate for the expense of supporting him; but, when considered in their spiritual bearing, their value cannot be estimated by dollars and cents, and eternity alone can develope the beneficial results.

It is greatly to be desired that our wealthy planters should awake to this subject, and open a door of usefulness to the ministry of Jesus Christ in this important department. Our rich bodies of land are becoming occupied by vast numbers of blacks, whose owners reside not on the plantations, and unless the missionary is sustained, multitudes of souls will be as destitute of the Gospel as the heathens themselves. How would it sell in favor of the moral worth of the Southern people if everywhere throughout the cotton-growing country were seen the neat missionary chapel, occupied from Sabbath to Sabbath by happy throngs of colored people, listening with intense interest to the proclamation of the Gospel of Christ, and rejoicing in hope of a blissful immortality, where "the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest."

Not long since I visited the plantation of a wealthy planter in Sumpter county, Alabama, (where a missionary had been employed during the year,) for the purpose of preaching and administering the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. After supper, the missionary and myself walked about half a mile to the chapel, which was found in a pleasant grove. When we reached the place we found one of the men busy in arranging matters for the meeting, and I was much pleased to see the attention which had been paid to the preparation for the meeting and comfort of the worshippers and preacher. A snug log chapel had been built, lined with boards; a good pulpit and benches; the floor was nicely laid; the house and yard were swept, and every thing looked clean and inviting. The master occupied a seat near the door during the services, and I think must have been blessed in seeing the happiness manifested by his servants during the exercises, and in feeling that he himself had greatly contributed to it by the facilities which he had afforded them to worship God. Go thou and do likewise.

THE COLLEGE QUESTION.

It is mortifying to see discord and division in any of our Church enterprises.

Having read several articles under the signature of "Hope"—written, as I presume by one of the Commissioners who voted for the compromise—who urges the establishment of but one College, I am induced to give a brief statement of the facts connected with the action of the Alabama Conference, and also the action of the Board of Commission appointed by that Conference to locate a College.

The citizens of Auburn sent a delegation to the last Conference asking the location of a College at that place, pledging themselves to raise a certain amount of money. To place the matter beyond a doubt of its success, the Conference deemed that there should be at least the sum of one hundred dollars secured, and consequently gave notice that proposals would be received from any point within the bounds of the Conference that wished to have the College located at said place; and a Board of Commission was appointed to meet at Summerfield, on the 4th July last to receive the propositions and make the selection. The Board to consist of one minister and two laymen from each district, making in all more than thirty members. On the day appointed, they met for the discharge of their important trust. They were Christian men from all parts of the Conference, and with the desire of serving the best interests of the church they represented, they laid aside all selfishness, and with generous feelings entered upon their high duties. Propositions were received from Greensboro' and Auburn, each having more than met the requisitions of the Conference, the first having subscribed the sum of $113,000, and the other that of $104,000!

These amounts would have been considered under ordinary circumstances large, and the noble-hearted subscribers of them very generous; but when we take into consideration the circumstances under which these subscriptions were made, we are almost astounded at the unparalleled liberality and at the largeness of heart evinced. The great stringency of the money market, caused by the want of means of transportation of the great staple to market, the very great scarcity and consequent high price of all kinds of food, and the very warrantable apprehensions of a famine on account of the unprecedented and long-continued drought, present altogether so gloomy a picture that to give would almost look like rashness. But these great-hearted men in their magnanimity rose far above these discouragements, and in a short time made up a larger sum than was asked.

In view of these facts, the Committee, composed of highly intelligent gentlemen, to whom the whole subject was referred, unanimously reported in favor of having a College at Greensboro' and another at Auburn, with the request that the Conference at its next session would ratify these proceedings. This report was adopted with only two dissenting voices.

I have just read a letter written by Brother P. P. Nealy, published in your paper. He will, I trust, pardon me for saying that in that letter there is an important error. He says: "The Board of Commissioners met at Summerfield, and fixed the location of said institution at Greenshora'. From the action of that Board there can be no appeal."

On this point I beg leave to differ with him. Greensboro', I am free to admit, in our action is placed first, and although the Conference had only clothed us with power to locate one College, yet there is a fact in this connection which I wish stated, viz.: Greensboro' asked as a matter of courtesy that she should be placed first, in order to bind her subscription. How she can take legal advantage of this, and at the same time preserve good faith with Auburn, I do not understand.

The relative claims of the two places were never discussed, or their strength tested by the Board. I do not doubt but that every member of the board would have preferred having but one College if there had been a central point presented, one upon which all could have harmonised and brought into concentration the energies and sympathy of the whole Conference. Greensboro' is too far west, and Auburn is too far east. To have selected either place in preference to the other would have, I feared, produced discord and hard feelings. Each having done so nobly, and their respective fields of operation being so wide and fruitful in wealth, liberality and numbers, that there does not remain a doubt but that funds and students more than sufficient will be secured to make each a blessing to the church and State. Hence I am of the opinion that our action was right, and I feel assured that the Conference will endorse that action. Should it not, I fear the consequences to the church in the bounds of the whole Conference. If it does not—if the Conference determines that there is to be but one College—it will have to annul the entire action of the Board of Commission and assume original jurisdiction, giving each place a full hearing.

It is to be hoped—it is a consummation devoutly wished, for the sake of harmony, good feeling, and the great good of the church—for the advancement of learning and religion—that the ensuing Conference will ratify our action, and at no distant period we will have a College at Greensboro' and also at Auburn that will more than fulfil the expectations and wishes of those who feel such an intense interest in, and who have subscribed so liberally to the advancement of the project, as do and have the citizens of both places—yea, institutions that will reflect credit on the church under whose patronage they were founded.

A COMMISSIONER.

NEW MEXICAN CORRESPONDENCE.

Rev. D. D. Lore, late missionary of the M. E. Church in Rio Janeiro, now sent by the Society to Santa Fe on a missionary exploration, writes to the North-Western Christian Advocate. We clip from the correspondence. A different country he finds himself in from the luxuriant tropics:

Bro. W.—In accordance with your request, I address you from the capital of the territory, in the midst of the mountains of the American continent.

It would be tedious, perhaps, to our readers to enter into a very minute detail of the journey here. Many of them having long been accustomed to the "perils of the wilderness," to such it would be "stale as a twice told tale." Yet to connect myself with civilization, and not to appear here as one dropped from a passing cloud upon a mountain top, I will say, that in about one month from the time I left your office in Chicago, I reached Santa Fe. The mail-coach left Independence, Mo., on Monday, the second of July, and reached this place on the twenty-fourth of the same month.

The journey across the plains, or what with propriety might be called the American desert, is the most tedious, wearisome to flesh and spirit, of any I have ever made, by sea or land. To leave a country of steamboats, railroads and magnetic telegraphs, and take a seat, to be occupied for more than twenty days, in the corner of a wagon, drawn by mules, for a journey of eight hundred miles and more, is a change that requires some little patience and fortitude in order to be comfortable. Through Divine mercy, however, we passed this entire time and distance without accident or alarm.

The prevailing characteristics of New Mexico, as far as I have yet seen it, are barrenness and poverty. The soil is as worthless as any I have looked upon. As you travel over the barren sand-hills and mountains, partly covered with a stinted growth of pine, scrub-oak and cedar bushes about four feet high, and cross the deeply washed gullies between the ridges, which look as if they had been worn by the rains of centuries, you feel that you are in some other planet, which was made and worn out long before mother earth was from chaos formed. Desolation! desolation! is written all around you, and the whole human lamp becomes loosened with sadness and despair. And such are the native expressions of countenance. There is a poverty-pinched, wayworn, woe-begone, meager look, which constitutes the national characteristic of face. I have not yet seen in the territory, a cheerful, sprightly, energetic Mexican countenance.

Everything is in keeping with this inherent poverty. The agricultural productions are stinted and scanty. The wheat grows but about two feet high, the corn four, pumpkins and melons are very small, potatoes there are none; onions are an exception, these grow to a large size. The fruit—apples, peaches, apricots and wild-plums and raspberries, are all diminutive.

The stock is the same. Horses, mules, cows, jackasses, sheep and goats, all that I have seen, look as if their growth had been arrested for want of sufficient food.

The jackasses and the goats constitute the bulk of the stock that I have met in the territory. There may be other—there may be other—there doubtless is, somewhere—but in the hundreds of miles that I have traveled, I have not seen one hundred Mexican horned cattle. Jackasses and goats—goats and jackasses, are everywhere to be met with. The jack is an ugly, poor little animal, not much larger than a sheep, and is the drudge of New Mexico. Everything that can possibly be packed on the back of an ass is packed there. I have seen two lazy Mexican men mounted on one staggering little jackass. These bring in our marketing, and all our fuel from the mountains, which is cut in lengths of about one foot, and brought to your door, for twenty-five cents per load about a wheelbarrow load.

Our market is of the same character, poverty-smitten. You will find it all crowded into two corners of the public square, in the street. The meat-market, consisting of mutton only, is strung along a line stretched between two posts. The vegetables, already described, are spread on the ground, with the market men and women sitting around them.

The houses are of the same character—insufficient to protect the inmates from the storm, of which we have just had destructive evidence. A recent storm of rain, having washed down, in whole or part, some twenty houses, and I have not heard of one in the place that did not leak. The building material is mud, the "adobe," which is nothing more than mud mixed with straw or grass and dried in the sun. With these the walls are built, the floors generally being the earth, the roof is earth, supported by beams laid across from wall to wall, heaped to the thickness of twelve or twenty inches. Such houses, as a matter of course, would soon yield to the storm. There is not a house in the town that could with propriety be called a good house. The 'palace' is nothing more than the biggest pile of mud in the place, with the exception, perhaps, of some of the papal churches. Now they build with this perishable, worthless material, notwithstanding good building stone and limestone in abundance all ready for use within a short distance of the place.

The dress of the inhabitants gives the same unerring indications of poverty. That of the women is as scant as common decency could possibly permit; the men wear a shirt and buckskin breeches, and wrap themselves up in coarse blankets. I have seen many of the children entirely naked, as old, I should judge, as six or eight years.

But perhaps, Mr. Editor, I should cease this strain, lest you should think me a hypochondriac, incapable of taking a cheerful view of things. I am not conscious of having 'set down aught in malice,' but have endeavored to give a straightforward statement of first impressions of matters and things in general. As far as I have been able to form conclusions from personal observation and information gathered from other sources, my opinion is that even Yankee ingenuity and energy will not be able to make a profitable speculation of New Mexico.

As yet I have not been in the valley of the Rio grande. It is said to be the best portion of the country. When I see it I will faithfully report. I made a calculation from the agricultural statistics, as given in the census report for 1850, by which I find that the average products per acre, including everything raised, even the peas and beans, was three and a half bushels! What would the Illinois farmers think of such a yield?

This territory of New Mexico is looked to at the present time with considerable interest by the Christians of the United States as a missionary field. And if moral degradation and deplorable ignorance constitute claims upon missionary zeal, then we will venture to say that there is not a people to be found whose claims are greater than those of New Mexico.

Notwithstanding for generations past they have been sprinkled with holy water, and signed with the sign of the cross, and have paid tithes of all they possessed to the priests of a system professing to be Christian, they are as far from Christianity as truth is from a lie. Uninstructed in the first principles of religion, "Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity."—Rom. 1, 29.

The above quotation is almost literally applicable to this people, who have been so long trained under papist influence. Laziness, lying, thieving, gambling, drunkenness, are the notorious, every-day practices of the vast majority. Modesty and chastity are the exceptions among the females. Many of them make a boast of being kept as mistresses by the baser sort of Americans, many of whom are here. The morals of Santa Fe, perhaps, are worse than those of any other portion of the country. I hope they are. There are reasons why it should be so. This is the largest town in the territory, having, I suppose, 3000 inhabitants. There may be 4000 in the valley. It is also the head quarters of Romanism—the curse of the land. And, last, it is the head quarters of American influence, which, up to the present time, has been an evil second only to bishops and priests.

How almost impossible it will be to establish gospel morality in such a community, where wickedness is sustained by such influences. Sustained by Romanism, who countenances vice of all descriptions by standing at her altars and publicly proclaiming her readiness to pardon, and repeat her pardons ad infinitum, for a few pennies. Sustained (oh, shame!) by American intelligence and influence, dignity of office, and money drawn from the public purse. With such influences to contend against, how shall the morality of the Gospel be established? And without the morality of the Gospel there can be no Christianity. "Come, oh, four winds, and blow upon these dry bones that they may live!"

D. D. LORE.

SANTA FE, New Mexico, August 20, 1855.

The movements in breadstuffs at the present time are almost unprecedentedly large. The receipts of flour at tide-water by the New York canals, during the third week in October, exceeded one hundred thousand barrels, and of wheat half a million bushels; while the shipments from that port during the past week reached seventy thousand barrels of flour, valued at $622,000, and one hundred and sixty-three thousand bushels of wheat, valued at $317,000.

The late General Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church, after several days debate, refused to admit into the Synod the delegation of the church from the State of North Carolina, because it would bring into their councils the disturbing elements of Southern slavery. Thus another of what Mr. Calhoun, in his last speech in the United States Senate, called the binding cords of the Union, has been snapped asunder, in the division of another Christian church into a church North and a church South.

Foreign News by the Baltic.

The Baltic left Liverpool at 3 15 P. M., on Saturday, 20th ult., and encountered heavy westerly gales and heavy seas for eleven consecutive days, being repeatedly reduced to a speed of only three miles an hour.

At midnight of Wednesday, 24th, in lat. lon. 52, long. 25, passed steamship Pacific. On Tuesday, 30th, 50 miles North-east of Cape Race, saw a large iceberg.

The Baltic arrived at Liverpool October 14. The Ericsson left Southampton on the 10th.

The Allied expedition which left the Crimea on the 6th, after making a show before Odessa, bombarded and captured Kinburn, an important Russian position at the mouth of the Dnieper and Bug.

The Allies have also destroyed two towns, Taman and Phanagoria, in the straits of Kertsch.

According to the latest from the Crimea, the advanced posts of the Allies were within five leagues of Bakschi Serai. The Russians were retiring slowly, General Liprandi intending evidently to defend the line of the Belbec. A battle is soon anticipated here.

The north of Sebastopol has been surrounded with new fortifications, and placed in a state to support a siege.

The Russians, in an attack made upon Kars, were repulsed with immense slaughter; 4000 being reported as lying dead under the wall.

THE WAR.

An important cavalry engagement at Eupatoria is thus described by Marshal Pellissier, in a dispatch published in the Moniteur: "A brilliant cavalry engagement took place on the 29th of September (at Kaughill, five leagues north east of Eupatoria), in which the Russian cavalry under General Korf was completely defeated. The action inaugurates very auspiciously the series of operations, of which Eupatoria will now be the pivot. As the result of the action, we have taken six guns, (three cannon and three mortars,) twelve caissons and one field forge, with their horses and harness; 160 prisoners, of whom one was an officer, and 250 horses. The enemy left on the field about 50 killed, among them Colonel Andreswski, who has the reputation of being a cavalry officer of great merit. We have 6 killed and 9 wounded."

The Russian accounts state that the Russian force concerned in this action was a corps of observation, consisting of a regiment of Lancers and a battery of horse artillery, under Gen. De Korf, and at another point a regiment of Lancers, commanded by Gen Tervelensky. They had instructions to fall back if attacked by a superior force. Gen. Korf, having lost sight of the enemy, who was pursuing Tervelensky's Lancers, halted and caused his men to dismount. Not having placed videttes in proper order, Korf was surprised by between 2 00 and 3000 of French cavalry appearing suddenly on his rear and right flank, and he had neither time to get his force in order nor prepare for a combat. The Lancers were therefore compelled to scatter, and fall back fighting. Loss, 150 Lancers, a subaltern officer, six guns, and some of the gunners.

By an imperial ukase, the embodiment of the militia in the provinces of Orenburg and Samara is to commence on the 15th of November and end on the 15th December—the proportion of men being twenty-three in every thousand souls.

A commission has been instituted by the Emperor at Kieff, to examine all prisoners from the foreign legions in the service of the Allies. They are not to be treated as prisoners of war, but handed over to their respective Governments.

Accounts from the Crimea to the 14th, state that on the 12th, the advanced post of the Allies were within five leagues of Bakschi Serai; that the Russians were retiring slowly, and that everything led to the belief that Gen Liprandi intended to defend the line of Belbec, and to rest upon the corps commanded by Prince Gortschakoff.

The battle which would definitely decide the possession of this ground was expected shortly to take place.

Other accounts state that the Russians have surrounded the north side of Sebastopol with a chain of new fortifications, and placed it in a state to support a siege. All the plateaus on the north side are, it is said, covered with redoubts and earthworks, and on the line of the Belbec, new works, constructed in the form of the Mamelon, have been raised.

The Allies are extensively engaged in road-making and hut-building, not only along the isthmus de la Chersonese, but all along the Toberanyn line up to Asia. The line of the railway has been adopted from the main road from Balaklava to the camps in the neighborhood of Sebastopol.

The English have found in the Karobelnai immense Russian stores of ammunition and clothing, valued at £70,000.

The Daily News says that Gen. Eyre has been recommended by Gen Simpson as his successor, but that government will not accept Simpson's resignation.

The Allied Expedition in the Black Sea.

The correspondence received from the Crimea describes the sailing of a grand expedition, consisting of 15,000 French and nearly 8000 British troops from Balaklave, for a destination imperfectly known in the camp. Telegraphs, however, of a late date, have intimated that the expedition made its appearance, but an appearance only, before Odessa, and later telegraphs announce that on the 15th a detachment of the Allied fleet effected a descent upon the Spit of Kinburn, near the Salt Water lakes. The peninsula of Kinburn is one of the most important military and naval positions on the south coast of Russia, at the mouth of the rivers Bug and Danieper, and opposite Nicolieff. The telegraphic dispatch describing the landing of the detachment, (and which comes from Nicolaieff via St. Petersburg,) states that "the number of troops disembarked was inconsiderable. Towards the close of the day six steamers began to cannonade the town of Kinburn. The fortress, however, replied in such a manner as to keep them at a distance, and damaged one of the steamers."

By their position at Kinburn, the Allies place in close blockade the naval arsenals and port of Nicolaieff, the towns of Cherson and Berislaff, and the whole region watered by the Dnieper, Boug and Ingoul.

Operations in the Straits of Kertsch.

A dispatch from Admiral Bruat, and a letter from Lieutenant Colonel Reed, announces that on the 24th of September, a successful attack was made upon Taman and Phanagoria, in the Straits of Kertsch. The expedition consisted of ten gunboats. Bruat says all the houses at Phanagoria were destroyed. Sixty-six cannon and four mortars were found at Phanagoria, but were unserviceable. At Taman, eleven twenty-four pounders were found buried in the sand.

Repulse of the Russians at Kars.

From Russian sources—Gen. Mouravieff's report and a letter from Trebizond—we have accounts of the repulse of the Russians, with great loss, in an attack which they made on the fortress of Kars, on the 29th September. General Mouravieff says: "At the beginning, the attack was successful, but the position and the numbers of the enemy forced us to withdraw. Notwithstanding this, and a heavy loss, our troops took fourteen banners and a stand of colors. The blockade of Kars is re-established."

The account via Trebizond, gives more particulars, and states that the Russians were determined to raise the siege. It states that at one time the Russians succeeded in taking two batteries, but before they had time to turn round the guns, or even to spike them, the Turks rushed upon them with such vigor as to regain possession of the batteries, and decide the fortune of the day. The Russians, furiously repulsed, fell back upon their comrades, who were thrown into confusion. The Turks then rushed out of the fortress, and massacred an enormous number. The account states that, though a large number of killed and wounded Russians were removed, four thousand were left dead under the walls. Two hundred were taken prisoners, and some pieces of ordnance captured.

Several Russian officers of high rank were killed or wounded early in the action, which lasted eight hours.

On the 25th September, five days before this event, 4,000 men of Omer Pasha's army, sent to raise the seige at Kars, by threatening the Russian provinces of Abasia, Mingrelia, Imeritia, Georgia and Tiflis, (the capital) landed at Anobum Kale, in Abasia. Their active operations, however, it is understood, will be much retarded by the lateness of the season.

France, etc.

The Duke of Brabant, heir to King Leopold, and his Duchess, sister to the Empress of Austria, are on a visit to the French Emperor. Magnificent fetes for their amusement have taken place.

The International Association for bringing about a uniform system of coins, weights and measures, assembled on the 17th at the Exhibition Palace, Paris. Mr Field attended from the United States. A permanent international committee, to sit in Paris, was constituted.

A "concordat" had been concluded between Austria and the Holy See, which gives most important privileges to the latter.

The telegraphic advices from Copenhagen state that the Danish government has appointed M. Hahme, the director of the Sound Dues administration, to be Danish Commissioner at the conferences respecting the Sound Dues, which it is proposed to hold in November. The report is confirmed that Denmark will propose that the dues shall be capitalised for the purpose of redemption.

India.

The dates from Bombay by the overland mail are to Sept. 12th. Trade was dull, and freights unprecedentedly low. Scarcity of food was anticipated, though a timely rain had averted famine. India generally was tranquil, and the Santal insurrection, though now entirely subdued, was not characterized by the outrages with which it commenced. One thousand of the rebels had surrendered. Their deportation to British Burmah is spoken of. The Parsees were still vigorously agitating for reforms in their laws and institutions—reforms to which the clergy were entirely opposed. Money market unchanged.

Attempt to Assassinate the Governor of Ceylon.

The Indian mail brings the intelligence that an attempt had been made on the life of Sir Henry Ward, the Governor of Ceylon, by a Cingalese. Had the Governor not been armed with a pistol, the consequences might have been very serious.

Financial and Commercial.

The Banks of France and England have simultaneously raised their rates of discount to six per cent., the former from five, the latter from five and a half, which were respectively the previous rates. The Bank of England lost a further sum in specie, amounting to £580,860 sterling, in the week ending 13th of October. The absence of arrivals of gold from Australia, whence ships are overdue, having, according to advices from one to one-and a-half million pounds sterling of gold on board, has caused great disappointment.

The further advance in the rates of interest by the two banks is viewed as a conservative measure, and though some excitement has been caused, leading to caution and restriction in mercantile operations, neither dissatisfaction nor alarm has been occasioned. There appears to be a steadiness of commercial distrust. There is no diminution in the consumption of cotton.

For the week of present advices, the large sales of 54,100 bales are reported at full previous prices—the principal part of these sales, namely, 43,000 bales were to the trade for consumption. A portion of the sales were made at an advance, but the market lost this as soon as it was known that the Bank of England had raised its rate to six per cent. In breadstuffs there is an important advance announced in the Liverpool markets—4d. to 6d on wheat, 18. 1 to 2s. 6d per barrel on flour, and 2s. 6d per quarter on corn.

The more recent reports from France speak of a deficiency of at least 35,000 quarters of wheat, and a like quantity of rye, which have given a new impulse to orders for grain in the English markets. The English imports of grain, therefore, are reckoned as good as specie, as they furnish exchange with France.

The price of consols has receded, as might be expected, from the advance in the rate of interest. The last quotation is 87, which is a decline of 1⅛ per cent.

Later from Mexico.

By the arrival on Sunday of the steamship Orizaba, Capt. Forbes, we have received papers from Vera Cruz to the 8th ult., but our files from the capital have not come to hand. There is no news of importance. We see nothing said of the rumor that Alvarez intended to resign the Presidency.

According to the latest news from the capital the Ministry, or Cabinet, had organized definitively.

The Secretary of War has issued orders to Col. Lamberg, commander-in-chief of the forces in Coahuila, to restrain such of the Lipan Indians as dwell in Mexican territory within the bounds marked out for them. He warns them not to trespass these bounds, as they will be responsible for the consequences, and a war of extermination may be declared against them—whether by Mexicans or Texans he does not state. It is evident that Capt. Callahan's spirited dash has had a good effect. The Secretary states that the assassinations and robberies committed in Texas by the Lipans may very well have been the cause of the invasion; but that the Texans, although their hostilities were directed solely against the authors of these evils, had no right to inflict punishment beyond their own proper territory.

A pamphlet has appeared in Vera Cruz with the title "Memoir, Moral and Political, of the Dictator Antonio Santa-Anna." It makes a monster of him.

A VERY CONSCIENTIOUS AND TIMID MAN.—The Louisville Journal tells the following story: A Mr. Where, of Indiana, a respectable and wealthy German, was summoned on a jury, and although he told the Sheriff he was "too Dutch to sit upon the jury," he was not excused. After trial of an important case, a motion was made by the defeated party for a new trial on the ground that Mr. Where could not understand English, and the man was then brought forward for examination. The account says:

During his examination, Mr. Where became very much alarmed, and, in spite of the assurance of the Court, the bar and his friends that he had done no wrong, he still thought he was upon his trial for some crime he had committed. He inquired, in his own language, what would become of his family, and burst into tears. Not being able to reconcile him, he was discharged, and immediately proceeded homeward. On arriving at home, he remarked to his family that the lawyers here had "scared him almost to death, and he did'nt know that he could get over it." He remained thoughtful and melancholy until Sunday, the 20th instant, when his family were horribly shocked by finding him a corpse, suspended by the neck in his own barn. Not understanding the nature of the examination he was subjected to, and supposing he had committed some great wrong, so wrought upon his mind as to induce him to commit suicide.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1855.

To Members of the Mississippi Conference—Postponement.

A telegraphic dispatch from Rev. C. K. Marshall, dated Vicksburg, Nov. 13, says—"We have decided to ask the Bishop to postpone our Conference two weeks."

We presume this is to secure the session from any dread or interruption from yellow fever. It changes the date of meeting from Nov. 28, to Dec. 12.

Southern Organ.—This able Temperance paper has been discontinued, at the close of 3d vol. The editor, Dr. Harmon, did strong service and good—and we wish we could say appreciated. The receipts of the Organ for the last three months were $49. Call you that backing your friends, temperance people?

Patriotic Coffee Houses.

We dislike to turn a man's magnanimity against himself—but is there not a cause? An election riot was feared 5th inst., so our Mayor, for several days before, had a standing card in the city papers, beseeching peace and the more certainly to have it, the coffee house keepers were implored to shut up on that day and the night following.

The grogshop association met and generously resolved to sell no fire water that day. People were astonished and delighted at the effect. The coffee-house keepers were extolled for their self-sacrifice to public tranquility. Quiet reigned in places where disorder usually ran riot.

Now, if closing coffee-houses promotes the public good one day, why not for three hundred and sixty-five days? These magnanimous and patriotic institutions ceased one day and night to poison and madden men—and they are thanked for it! It was generous in them! A self-sacrificing set, to be sure. Next morning early, those 2700 flood gate of liquid fire were lifted and the stream of death began and continues its flow!

Would it not be as well to shut up the coffee-houses all the year round?

Distribution of Preachers.

A letter from the Rev. E. M. Walker, of the Louisiana Conference, dated Nov. 3, gives a sad report of his health. He fears it may not permit his return. He is now in Kentucky. Bro. Walker was one of those valuable transfers which Kentucky has furnished to Louisiana.

What of ministerial distribution between Conferences? Ought it not obtain here, as well as between appointments? The rich and crowded Conferences—have they no help for the young and feeble? They are preaching little cross-road villages to death, with stationed preachers, that would do better in a healthy and well-served circuit; while otherwhere ample fields, uncultivated, spread out. Are there not graves here? Yes, and souls to be saved—crowns to be won.

"We have more calls for preachers than the Bishop can supply. Our Conference could appoint a dozen more." That is the answer of old Conferences. But do they look to a time when the ministry will be a drug—when there are more on hand than can be disposed of? There is a difference in the importance of appointments. Paul, for this cause, left regrets behind him even when there was no welcome before him.

Ballot-Boxes Destroyed.

Last week, in our local columns, the elections held in the parish the Monday previous were reported—with a startling and ominous gap in the figures, filled out with the words "ballot-boxes destroyed."

Two precincts were invaded by ruffians, at night, while the Commissioners were counting out votes—the boxes seized and their contents scattered or burnt.

In consequence, numerous contestations of elections have followed, with which our courts are now occupied.

As yet we have not heard of any arrests of offenders, or whether they have been identified. There is the usual partisan crimination and recrimination—but nothing short of a relentless ferreting out and condign punishment of the offenders can atone for this outrage upon our common laws. A vital stab has been given them. Not the purity but very existence of the ballot-box is jeopardied. Then it, the person of a king should not be held more inviolable. It is treason the most malignant. And yet, we fear our citizens are so much taken up with the side issues as to lose sight of the main one in this grave matter. The crime and the criminals are getting away, while they are adjusting the ins and outs of office! The sternest justice, the purest patriotism and the highest morality demand that these ballot-boxes be so avenged as never again to be destroyed.

The Mobile papers of Thursday report heavy rains in the interior of the State, and the Alabama and Bigbee rivers were rapidly rising.

It is said that President Pierce will not accept the proposal of Denmark to submit the question of the Sound tribute to a congress of powers.

Popular Taste for Preaching.

HOW TO CORRECT IT.

"Star preachers" cost dear, like "star actors"—without the compensating receipts. The minister who runs down the church while building up a congregation—picks out the best points, and after giving and taking a "benefit" passes on to others—dazzling and disappearing now here, now there—handling a few well thumbed star texts—preceded by a carnal trumpet and followed by a spiritual collapse—renders to the kingdom of Christ a doubtful service. Your regular "worky," belonging to the "stock company" of laborers, does twice the real service and subsists at half the cost.

But the young ladies and children—the young gents, who have a smattering of Byron will have it so. In their verdict, some outsiders who are not as good judges of a gospel sermon as of certain brands, vociferously concur. He is the great preacher. The minister who makes known the mystery of the gospel and deals in its staple doctrines is tame in comparison.

Itch is catching, and hearers with itching ears heap up to themselves teachers troubled with the same malady.

What is to be done? We olip from the Puritan Recorder a few excellent reflections on the subject. The proper functions of Theology and Rhetoric, of Philology and History, are to enable the student to do his Gospel work more thoroughly, not more agreeably to others. It is not a matter of much consequence, whether, in doing this work so as to please his Master, he can also excite the admiration of his people.

Whitfields are exceptions to the following remarks:

"Indeed, it would hardly be unsafe to assume, that, generally, where there is a rush of the popular taste in the direction of a certain pulpit, there will be found there a proportionate lack of the substantial truths of the Gospel. The talent which can fill the slips with miscellaneous sinners, is a talent which will be likely also to keep them sinners. The talent which can so entwine the sword of the Spirit with garlands as to hide its glittering edge from the sinner's fears, is a talent which will not distinguish itself in the solid work of dividing asunder soul and spirit, joints and marrow."

Touching this vitiated but unspoken popular taste, the Recorder addresses first ministers. They may do much to apply the corrective. We are mistaken if these directions do not strike at the root of the matter:

"It is a fundamental sin which lies right across the path of Christian progress. Let them treat it as such. Let them also preach the Gospel with freshness and energy, but in Gospel simplicity and spirituality, and leave the responsibility of making it acceptable to hearers with Him who has appointed no other way of salvation. Let the simple substance of the Gospel, the doctrines of Sin and Redemption be the themes upon which they show their liveliest interest and their greatest power. Let them give the hearer no occasion to say that they are most interested and eloquent, and most at home, when upon miscellaneous and occasional themes. If hearers are not most interested in the staple doctrines of the Gospel, let it not be the minister's fault, but their own.

"Let Church members honor this kind of preaching. They should give tone to the public sentiment on this subject. They do determine it, and this is our grief. Let them then school themselves to approve and prefer this kind of preachers. If anything at all is said about sermons, let their Gospel elements be the subject of remark. Let no discourse be praised where these elements are wanting; and none despised, where these are found in the Gospel proportion. Let Church Committees, casting about for a "Supply," seriously consider how far God would have them send in order to obtain a "great preacher;" and past how many of good ministers, whom he approves, he would have them go to secure one whom men approve!

"Let people aspire to say nothing more of their pastor and preacher than that "he is a good minister of the Lord Jesus Christ;" and that as an ambassador from God, "he speaks well."

"Thus let young candidates for the ministry see what will be desired and required of them. Let them know, from their earliest thoughts about the ministry, that any other preaching will be unsatisfactory, distasteful, and rejected by the conscience and the taste of the Church."

DISCLAIMER.

Mr. Editor.—I have just been informed by one who has had the opportunity of knowing whereof he speaks, that it is the opinion of certain persons in the city of Nashville, that the article signed A. Z., which appeared in your paper in answer to "Crotchett," your Nashville correspondent, was written by me. Lest such an opinion should be imposed upon others, for whose kind regards I am more immediately concerned, you will please permit me through your columns to make my disclaimer.

The article in question was neither written by me nor for me. Nor did I conceive it necessary for me or my friends to write any thing in reply to your correspondent on my account. If I was one of the unfortunate individuals to whom he alluded, I was not aware of it, and therefore gave myself no concern about it. Furthermore I will add, that when anything from my pen finds its way into a public journal, reflecting upon the character and conduct of my brethren, they shall be apprized of the authorship, or such articles shall have my proper signature.—Anonymous productions and public measures I consider may be reviewed anonymously, but when it involves private character, or becomes personal—NEVER! I hold the guerrilla mode of warfare in utter abhorrence, and if I did not regard those who engage in it with contempt, I certainly should despise them.

MOBILE, ALA. THOS. W. DOREMAN.

Death of Rev. W. Hyer.

Another (the fourth) name is added to the list of ministers who have died of yellow fever, within the last six weeks, in Vicksburg:

Rev. Wm. Hyer departed this life on the 3d of November, of yellow fever, in the 45th year of his age.

Mr. Hyer had been the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this city for nearly two years. He was sent by the late venerable Bishop Capers from the Memphis Conference to the church in this city, and he entered upon the discharge of his duties in a spirit of energetic devotion to his holy calling. He possessed many qualifications for usefulness, and seemed ever desirous to build up and improve the Church of Christ.

He was in all respects an honorable gentleman, and a steadfast and consistent Christian. He was a graduate of one of the Northern universities, and was a devoted student, toiling in the pursuit of knowledge that he might increase and extend his usefulness.

As a preacher he was practical, earnest, instructive and faithful, and there was always a freshness and suitable newness in each separate discourse which showed much preparation and an earnest purpose to instruct and improve his hearers.

It does not fall to the lot of every minister of the Gospel to possess at once talents of a high grade for the pulpit and the pastoral office necessary to the prosperity of a church. Mr. Hyer's labors were perhaps too much confined to the pulpit, and too little to the duties of pastoral visitation, although he was not indifferent to this branch of his duties. Some blame has been attached to him by those who think he did not prove sufficiently zealous in visiting the sick during the late epidemic. In extenuation of any such neglect, it must be borne in mind that the ministers of his church who were familiar with epidemics stood pledged to attend to any and all calls for such service. Furthermore, it should not be expected of a minister of the Gospel, as a rule of conduct, that he should go to families where there is sickness, uninvited, any more than a physician. Indeed, physicians dislike intensely to have clergymen visit where they are practising, and very many will not do it till solicited in the last extremity. Be this as it may, Mr. Hyer did visit several sufferers, and often, and declined but one call, and that was where another minister was really the choice of the friends.

Profane and frivolous wits, who revel in the ridicule of religion, and feast daintily upon the real or seeming faults of Christians and especially of clergymen, may have greatly exaggerated the facts to suit their peculiar appetites; and if not, why strive to fix blame upon him for submitting to the imperative requirements of a physician in absenting himself for awhile from the room of a member of his family who was sick, and upon whose mind his presence produced an unfavorable influence? But the censure of the world is part of the Christian's inheritance. But now all is over, and Brother Hyer has gone "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary be at rest."

His great solicitude for his family may have led him to adopt too prudential measures for the preservation of his health and life. But he was free from all alarm, and calmly bowed himself to the sceptre of death with as fearless a spirit as ever met the great destroyer. His dying counsels and words of consolation to his family and brethren will be preserved as the choicest jewelry in the household, and only fade when memory shall fail.

A large concourse followed him to the grave from the church, where appropriate services were performed, and a discourse delivered adapted to the occasion.

This is the fourth clergyman who has fallen in this city of yellow fever within the last few weeks. Two of our church, one of the Presbyterian, and a Catholic priest. Brother Hyer leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss, and the church and Conference will deeply sympathise with them in their sore bereavement.

C. K. MARSHALL.

VICKSBURG, Nov. 5, 1855.

Our English Correspondent.

HOW PALMERSTON WAS SOLD.

Our John Bull sends us a capital letter—but Sebastopol has quite runnawy with him. He gives Russia the final blow—with his pen. His spirits would be counted high, even on the 4th of July. Inasmuch as neither we nor our readers concur in the glorification (especially since the last dispatches showing what small share England had in the glory) and the news having been anticipated in our columns, we publish only a paragraph. We have not seen it before:

"Urquhart is a 'prophet of woe.' He and a few others exclusively embody the knowledge, wisdom and courage which could alone save the world. He avers that not only did Lord Palmerston sell himself years ago to Russia for £30,000, but he also states how it was and where it occurred. Lord Palmerston was in pecuniary difficulties; overtures were made to him that he should in every way promote the Russian interests in the English Court, in the British Parliament, and amongst the British people. Those overtures, Mr. Urquhart adds, were sympathetically responded to. But how was the money to be paid, so that appearances would be preserved? Here is the answer supplied: His lordship received an intimation from the Princess Silven, through another party, that he was to go, at a period named, to a gambling-house kept by a Jew named Hart, and that a foreigner would lose £30,000 to him at play. It is added that his lordship went, and won the money."

Business.—Business on the levee is brisk.—In the arrival of many boats at this time, deeply laden with the rich products of the West, there is an indication of activity which is seldom witnessed at this season of the year, though up-freights are not so plenty as they will be when sugar and molasses arrive more freely. There is one thing certain, the country generally is not buying more goods than it can pay for, and this is a very essential consideration for the future.

The Baptist Church in New Orleans.

A connectional effort is being made by the Baptist Church in the Southern States for building up their interest in the Crescent City. By order of the Convention a collection is to be taken up this month in aid of the church on Colyseum Place. When completed, it will be an ornament to the city and an honor to the denomination. A flourishing congregation is already gathered there, which much increases our religious facilities. We hope for successes to this connectional effort. It is worthy. The following figures show the state of the case:

1. The whole of the Paulding legacy, after paying for the lot,	$15,784 35
2. Subscribers from New Orleans	$7,741 21
Subscriptions from N. Y. and Philadelphia	434 21
Subscriptions from the country	3,003 12
		11,178 33
3. Obligations incurred and in good part paid for the denomination by James Low		14,094 93
Total		$41,027 61

It appears from this statement that Mr. Low, relying on the promised co-operation of the Baptists of the South, has assumed in their behalf, and in good part paid, some $15,000.

German Doubt.

Can any good thing come out of Germany? has been the question, not only with the main body, but the thinking and reading class of American christians. Rationalism and Neology taint all! But to use a vulgar illustration, the hair of the dog has been the cure of the rabid bite. The only competent answer to Infidel Germans has been made by evangelical Germans. The Christian world is now and for several years has unconsciously been drawing more of light and life from that source than any other. Not directly it may be, but through translations, compilations and nameless borrowings without credit. An evangelical German must be the soundest of Christians. There is no cant about him. He has taken nothing for granted and risen from a ground start.

Rev. A. Stevens, in some personal sketches written for the Christian Advocate and Journal from the Christian Alliance, in Paris—sets forth one of these Germens:

"Glance down from the platform, and you see, not far from it, another noted German, but a perfect contrast to Krummacher; it is Tholuck. You would single him out from all this throng as the least important, the least interesting man present, not to say the most ugly and the most inferior.—He is small in stature, stoops somewhat, has a low, wrinkled, but broad forehead, and rugged, uninteresting features. He is one of those men whom it seems impossible for the best tailor to improve into ordinary dignity; his clothes hang and dangle about him. Tholuck would be shabby in the robes of royalty. But this great man has done a mighty work, borne a mighty testimony in Germany. His name and his rough person are dear to all good men in Europe. He is said to be very "nervous," and usually in poor health, but he works like a giant. There is a great lesson on that strange agonized face of his. I thought of it, as he was relating to me, the other night, the history of one of his American students, who, while in Germany, had passed through the soul-struggles of German doubt. "If we come out triumphantly from such conflicts," said the German professor, "we are strong forever,"—and he darted away into the throng of the company as if struck by a sudden and irresistible impulse."

TWO COLLEGES.

Mr. Editor.—Without intending to enter into the merits of the one and two College dispute, I beg to correct an error into which Brother Neely has fallen, and to vindicate the Conference from the charge of "duplicity," even should it dare to favor two Colleges.

1. Dr. Neely, speaking of the removal of LaGrange College, says: "The acquiescence of our Conference was asked and agreed to, with the proviso that we be permitted to withdraw our part of the preachers' fund, as individuals," etc. This is an error. The committee on LaGrange College reported, among other resolutions, the substitute of this quotation, but when offered to the Conference, swayed by the persuasions of Dr. Green, and the excoriations of Dr. Hamilton, the resolution was lost—some of the committee voting against their own bantling! "This," says Dr. Neely, "was a virtual withdrawal from LaGrange College." Nay, brother, so far from this, the Conference voted to remove LaGrange College, without any written proviso whatever, and this, too, after an earnest appeal by one brother to the Conference to be consistent; that is, if we vote removal, let us stick to the College; if we did not intend to go with it removed, and there its fame and fortunes, let us have the manliness to say so. If the Conference were not sincere in this movement, right here is the appropriate place for Dr. N. to begin his exhortation to the Conference to avoid "duplicity."

2. Again, Dr. Neely says: "Indeed I am unable to see how we can, as a Conference, in connection with the present College movement, the basis of which is the resolutions we adopted at Talladega, even entertain a motion to establish two Colleges without making ourselves vulnerable to the charge of duplicity." You cannot "see," etc. Well, I can; and the reason of this difference of perception between us is not because of stronger mental vision on my part, but simply there are two stand-points from which to see this whole matter. Brother Neely sticks to the old position, that is the one of last year, when, as he affirms, we determined to have one College—Methodist College!—far surpassing all its predecessors. And what was our greatest idea of materiel old for such a College? One hundred thousand dollars! Did half the Conference presume to think we would realize this sum certainly in five years? I doubt. Here then is the why that at that time we thought of one College; viz: the necessity of the $100,000, and fearful probability that we all together could not raise that. But where will the Conference stand to see this matter at its next meeting? In the broad light of the facts that more than $200,000 are hooked already; that one place, with its large munificence, looks to $300,000 as its ultimatum; the other equally confident of $200,000. "Circumstances alter cases," is an old and true saying; and it is the new circumstances that will make many brethren, good and true, see differently from Brother Neely, and not be guilty of duplicity for all that. I am now done with the points I set out to notice; but I confess to a fear that many of our leaders are ago on the subject of education, and hence this rage for splendid "literary Meccas!"—tombs of false prophets. Very significant this. For like as millions go to Mecca to worship at the tomb of Mehomet, and return no nearer the truth and righteousness than when they went, so will result many pilgrimages to these literary Meccas. Too much splendor and ease anticipated. Just count up a few of the large items that is to fill the bill of Alabama munificence now shortly:

Greensboro' College	$300,000
Auburn College	200,000
LaGrange College	100,000
Centenary Institute	150,000

Here is the pretty little sum of three-fourths of a million, to say nothing of the wants of Tuskegee and Talledega, and other places. These are the sums that the friends of the places respectively are looking for. And for what? To put the means of useful education within reach of the poor? It is not so announced. The Lord pity us, and forgive our pride!

EXTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

TALLULA CIRCUIT, Mississippi Conference.

No intelligence is perhaps more cordially received by the conductor of a religious journal than revival intelligence; certainly none is read with more eagerness by the Christian reader. Would to God that our Advocates contained more of this interesting news! Would that I had more to communicate at present. We have, however, cause to thank God for what is past, and encouragement to trust Him for all that is to come.

Much of my ministerial labor this year has been devoted to preaching the Gospel to the colored portion of my charge—to imparting religious instruction to the ignorant and the poor—to the sable sons and daughters of Africa—and I am happy to say that in the early part of the year a revival influence seemed to pervade the plantations where the Gospel was preached; this influence has not abated, but has continued to increase and still prevails. About three hundred colored people have joined the church, and a very large proportion of whom have given satisfactory evidence of being soundly converted to God. The ordinance of baptism has been administered to a great number, and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper has been administered as often as practicable to the religious portion of this part of my charge.

Talluln mission is entirely on the Mississippi river, extending up and down the river about forty-five miles, in Issaquena county. The colored population here is numerous, and access may be had to almost every plantation, for the intelligent planter has learned from experience as well as theory that religion inculcates honesty, sobriety, obedience, industry and perseverance, and that it must consequently make his servants happier and better.

Often during the present year, while preaching the everlasting Gospel to the slaves on these plantations, together with kind master, his wife and little ones, and while witnessing the effect of the Gospel, the melting influence of God's spirit upon them all, I have thought of a Giddings, a Soward, a Hale, and others, whose sympathies seem so much aroused for suffering humanity in the sunny South. I have thought if those people could be present on those interesting occasions, that they would surely acknowledge their folly and repent of their misdoings.

The white population here is very sparce. I have, however, two interesting white congregations; for the people, being an intelligent, educated people, nearly all go to church. A fine church building is now being erected in the circuit, which will be a great convenience to the neighborhood in which it is being built.

In consequence of the ravages of yellow fever among us, causing affliction, sorrow and death, together with universal sorrow and gloom, our camp meeting could not go on. The yellow fever here has abated, yet it still lingers among us. There are some cases at this time.

We have had, however, some good meetings of late. At our last quarterly meeting four persons joined the church, all of whom promise to make good members. Thus our little flock among the whites has been gradually increasing during the year. Increasing in numbers, and I trust increasing, too, in the love and knowledge of their Lord and Saviour.

GREENVILLE, MISS.

Among the colored people of my charge, we have had a "time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." There have been a good many conversions, and about 125 accessions to the church, and, including adults and children, 150 have been baptised. Oh, this is a great and glorious work, and well may it enlist deeply the feelings of the Conference to carry out properly this missionary enterprise.

In this rich and fertile valley there are thousands of souls that are perishing for the want of more preachers to offer them the bread of eternal life. According to the census of 1850, there are in in the counties of Washington, Issaquena and Boliver, fourteen thousand one hundred and twenty-one colored persons, and the population must now be at least twenty-thousand. And there are not more than six thousand of that number that are preached to regularly.

Thus we may see what a field is opened on the banks of the Mississippi river, and Deer Creek for usefulness.

Would to God that means could be speedily devised that those perishing could have the cup of salvation offered to them.

We have one white congregation, viz, at Greenville. And it is one of the most intellectual, refined and interesting congregations in the Conference. Brother Jones, our venerable and much esteemed Presiding Elder has been present at all the quarterly meetings for this work, and has greatly endeared himself to this people by the zealous manner with which he dispensed the words of eternal truth.

My labors for this Conference year will close in a few days. May God continue to bless this kind and interesting people.

AUBURN, ALA.

Our College building committee met last Tuesday and determined on a plan. It will be a beautiful structure if completed according to plan—two hundred feet by sixty-two; basement story nine feet; three others of twenty feet each; of Gothic architecture, after the plan of Free School Academy of New York, with alterations, especially in the openings, to suit a Southern climate. When complete to cost forty or fifty thousand dollars. The committee were directed to have it lithographed for exhibition at the meeting of the next Alabama Conference.

You may say to the friends of missions that the good people of Auburn station have a heart to feel for the moral destitution of the world, and that their purses are open to relieve the exhausted missionary treasury. We held a missionary meeting yesterday, and you may put us down for $400 at next Conference.

COOK'S STORE, LA., Oct. 3, 1855.

Having to write to you on business, some eight days ago, I visited this neighborhood for the purpose of attending the funeral of a deceased daughter. When I come, a protracted meeting had just commenced at Morine school house. We have had the rise of thirty whites and some eight or ten blacks professed to have received the pardon of their sins. A part of the time there were as great an excitement as I have ever seen in the South. Rev. James J. Graves, of Caddo circuit, had charge of the meeting.

CANDO, LA., Oct. 5, 1855.

We had a glorious revivel of God's love with us at the Lake Church six days since, which continued eleven days. There were some thirty-three souls happily converted to God. Some of the brightest converts that my eyes have ever witnessed, and the church abundantly revived.

RIGHTS OF SHIPPERS.—A novel case, but one of the highest importance to the shipping interest, is now before the Supreme Court of New York. The shippers of part of the cargo on board the packet ship Connecticut, to sail for Havre, have applied for an injunction to restrain the ship from proceeding to sea until lightened of part of her cargo on the ground of being overloaded, and preventing them from obtaining the customary insurance. Her cargo is valued at $200,000, of which the plaintiffs own $80,000 worth; and the underwriters have declined to continue their insurance on it, unless some of her cargo be taken out, as in her present overloaded condition it would be dangerous for her to proceed on her voyage. Counsel for both sides were heard, and the court reserved its decision.

PURCHASE OF RUSSIAN SHIPS.—In reference to the caution from the French Consul at Boston, that Russian built ships in our ports, which were Russian property before the commencement of the war, are liable to seizure, the Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Times says that France stands alone in enunciating such a doctrine, that she will receive no support in it from any other European nation, "and if she attempts to give it practical illustration, so far as it regards ships transferred in good faith to American purchasers, she will certainly meet decisive resistance at our hands."

Missionary Reports.

RICHLAND COLORED MISSION, Ouachita Conference.

As the present Conference year is fast coming to a close, I send you a statement of the condition of the mission. There are fourteen colored appointments to one white, and 127 colored members to seven white. During the past year 23 adults have been baptised and twenty infants. About 50 children have been catechised.

The mission is not in as prosperous a condition as we could wish. The owners of these people take much interest in the missionary work, and would like to have preaching every Sabbath if we could furnish it, but for the want of preachers we cannot supply the work as it should be. It does seem to me that there are many preachers in the older States—men of experience (for these are the kind of men for this work) and local preachers who might be useful in this work. They could live in the bounds of a mission, and preach on the Sabbath, and be at home all the week, yet they could be employed on one mission for years without being removed.

This work lies in Arkansas, and on the rivers, and they say: "I can't live there—it is unhealthy, and there is no society in that country, and if I go to that sickly country I shall die." Well, we do not want these kind of preachers. We want those whose commission is to the world, and not to a healthy State or society, but to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel." Come, brothers, Arkansas belongs to the world, and if you have a commission from high Heaven as minister of the Gospel, then your commission is to Arkansas. Yes, to the sable sons of Africa. We could employ some four missionaries from Napoleon to Pine Bluff, a distance of 80 miles. There is not more than two or three local preachers in all that region of country. We hope, Mr. Editor, that the time is not distant when these river bottoms will be vocal with the praise of God.

BLACK CREEK MISSION, Alabama Conference.

Dear Bro.—As the Conference year is drawing to a close, permit me to report for the third and fourth quarters. Since my last report, twenty have been received into full connection, fifteen have been admitted on trial, four have been received by certificate. One adult and seven children have been baptised. During the year two have died in hope and expectation of eternal life. We have but one Sabbath school—it appears to prosper. There has been but little revival of the work this year, yet we trust that some good has been accomplished. The Presiding Elder has been with us at all our quarterly meetings, and has done his work faithfully. Two new appointments have been added to the missions; there are now fourteen in all for three weeks. The plan of the work for the next missionary will be four weeks, in order to give him time to visit as a pastor more than I have done. It is thought that in a few years this mission will support its own ministry, and hence it will soon be stricken from the list of missions. The people are not waked up yet to their duty on the all-important subject of sending the Gospel to the heathen. Very few believe that it is more blessed to give than to receive. We have only collected fifty cents for foreign missions, and $100 for the support of the mission. We hope to see better times.

COLOREN MISSION, Montgomery, Ala.

Dear Bro.—As I have not reported the Montgomery colored charge during the present year, it would perhaps be proper for me to say something. We have 700 members and the rise on our church register, and very many good people. I have received on probation twenty, into full communion fifty, baptised fifty, and expelled two. We have a Sabbath school of 180 scholars, and a temperance society of 200 members. On the whole, I regard the charge as being in a healthy condition. Our congregations are large, attentive and orderly, and the charge meets with the favor of the citizens of the place as far as I am informed.

A PROFESSOR IN LIMBO.—The Portland State of Maine tells a queer story of the misfortune which lately befel a somewhat eccentric professor of Bowdoin College, who is preparing a work on Mechanics. At 11 o'clock at night it occurred to him that he ought to investigate the operation of car-brakes, and, seizing a lantern, he hurried to the depot. The light of his lantern and the noise he made knocking about the cars soon attracted the attention of the watchmen, who seized the learned gentleman and conveyed him to a stronghold in the depot prepared for offenders—plunderers of the company's property, etc. The professor's earnest protestations of innocence and representations of his position and objects finally induced his release, but he finds it not as easy to free himself from the burden of the joke.

The English papers state, that, with the month of September, departed the restrictions which for ages has existed on the free transit of whisky from Scotland into England. The revenue duties in both countries are now alike, and the occupation of the "smuggler and the border ranger become extinct together.

Deaths.

The yellow fever, which has been such a scourge to our cities, has been among us, (in Jaquena county) prevailing as an epidemic six weeks or more. This deadly disease making out for the first time in our midst, produced a panic unparalleled in the county; and well it might, for I suppose that it never manifested itself in a more malignant type anywhere than here. Some of our most valuable citizens died.

Mr. WM. T. LOWRY was one of its victims, a kinder heart and more generous spirit in his does not linger among us. He was in the vigor of manhood, esteemed by all and loved by many. He was not a professor of religion, but a regular attendant at church and a liberal supporter of the Gospel.—He died praying for pardon through Jesus Christ

Dr. THOS. G. FARRER, while exerting all of the powers of mind and body to relieve the sufferings of others, took the disease himself and died. Dr. Farror was a young physician of superior talent and great promise. He was loved by pious parents, and he himself loved the services of God. He loved the Holy Bible, and promises and precepts of which had been inscribed upon his young heart by his pious mother. When told by his friend, Col. Davis, that he would certainly die, and that if he had any preparation to make he had better do it at once, he calmly replied that he had been preparing for sometime, and that he was not afraid to die. The friends of this excellent young man loved him much, and mingle our tears with those of his bereaved parents and venerable parents. Yet we sorrow not like those without hope.

WILLIAM MOORE, a medical student, and a young man of promise, also took the deadly disease and died, after an illness of five days, with black vomit. His father is doubtless in Greece. His kind and good mother is still living among us, a mother in Israel. She has cause to believe that the prayers of the parents have been answered in the salvation of the mother, a young gentlemen on a visit to the community, while waiting on the sick, took the fever, and after an illness of five or six days, died, as all the others, with black vomit. Mr. MOSBY was in the bloom of youth about eighteen years of age—had been raised by a fond and pious mother, but was all I believe, a member of the church; yet on his dying bed he felt a necessity of a change of heart in order to meet his God. I was with him frequently during his illness; praying for him, read the Holy Scriptures to him, encouraged him in the promises of his Saviour; and the best of all was, he laid hold of these precious promises. Brown's Landing, Miss., Oct. 23, 1855.

DIED, in Jackson county, Miss., Sept. 4th, 1855 in the 40th year of her age, Mrs. ANNA WILLS, daughter of Mathew and Mary Carter, and consort of Bro. Isaac Wells.

She embraced religion while young; and united herself to the Methodist church, in which she remained an acceptable member. The relation of wife, mother and mistress, seldom see her equal.

I have had the happiness of being leader of the class to which she belonged for the last two years. I have frequently asked her for a statement of her religious experience, her hopes and enjoyments, and her responses were generally short but satisfactory. Her religion consisted not in outward show or dress, but rather in meekness, humbleness and sincerity. Her charity was as extensive as her means. Many of our travelling preachers no doubt recollect her kind attention to them while under her roof.

She has left a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her absence, but their loss is her infinite gain, for "blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." May her bereaved husband and son continue faithful to the end, and be counted worthy to meet her in that day when Christ shall make up his jewels.

WM. LYONS.

DIED, on the 16th of August last, Mr. JAS. CAROTHERS.

He was born in Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, September 29th 1800, and came to Louisiana in 1826. His last sickness was complicated and protracted; under his sufferings he became patient and resigned. He had hopes of his recovery until informed by his physician of his critical situation. He manifested a disposition to have the minister, family and friends engage in prayer with him frequently. In these exercises he appeared to be mentally engaged, and he prayed "God be merciful to me a sinner."

He remarked to his wife that there was a great contradiction going on within, (which she understood to mean trials of his mind,) but that he hoped to gain the right place at last.

AWFUL DISASTER ON THE PACIFIC RAILROAD

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE!

The St. Louis papers of the 2d and 3d have accounts of a most appaling disaster on the railroad between that place and Jefferson City, by which about thirty lives were lost and a great many persons severely wounded. On the 1st instant, a train started for Jefferson City with about 600 passengers, to celebrate the completion of the road to that point. The Evening News thus relates the catastrophe which followed:

At 1 o'clock we left Hermann, preceded by a locomotive and tender, which had been sent forward to see that the way was clear and no danger impending. Soon we came in sight of the bridge across the Gasconade river, about nine miles from Hermann and about thirty-five from Jefferson City. The bridge is approached by an embankment, thirty feet high, which terminates in a massive stone abutment. Forty yards from the abutment, and just at the edge of the river, stands another staunch stone pillar, three more of which reach to the other side of the stream and support the bridge. The river is about two hundred and fifty yards wide, and the bridge thirty feet high, at least.

The Pioneer locomotive had crossed the structure safely, and was waiting on the other side to see the result of our attempt. There was no fear of danger, and no apprehension of peril. We slowly moved along the embankment, and came on to the bridge. The locomotive had passed the first span, and had its forewheels above the first pillar beyond the abutment—there being three, resting on the first span, the locomotive, baggage car, and two heavily loaded passenger cars. The weight was too much for the long, slender timbers which supported the rails and the enormous load above. Suddenly we heard a horrid crash—it rings in our ears now—and saw a movement amongst those in the car in which we were seated; then there came crash—crash—crash—as each car came to the abutment, and took the fatal plunge. The affair was but the work of an instant. We were running slowly at the time, and the successive crashes came on at intervals of nearly a second. We ourself were seated in the seventh car—there being three behind us—and when we heard the horrid sound that came up, as each car slowly and deliberately took the leap, we hoped that our car might stop before it reached the precipice. But no—it seemed that the spirit of ruin was beneath, determinedly dragging each car to the spot, wrenching it from its fastenings, and hurling it to atoms beneath. Six cars fell in one mass, each on the other, and were shivered into fragments. The seventh fell with its forward end to the ground, but the other end rested on the top of the abutment. Those in it were only bruised. The eighth and ninth cars tumbled down the embankment before they reached the abutment.

Such a wreck we never saw, and hope never again to see. It was one undistinguishable mass of wooden beams, seats, iron wheels and rods, from beneath which came up groans of agony. Those who could, crawled out of the ruin immediately, and either sought to relieve their own wounds or the wounds of their friends. Some wept tears of joy to find their friends alive, and others shuddered to find their friends dead. The uninjured organized themselves under the lead of Mr. Pride, the Conductor, and endeavored by chopping to extricate those who were yet alive from the wreck. Here a beam was cut into to disengage a broken arm; there an iron axle was pryed up to relieve a mutilated leg. There was no shrieking and screaming, though all begged, for the love of heaven, to be extricated from some mass of iron or beam of wood, which pinned them to the earth. All begged for water, drank it when it was brought, and prayed for more. There was hardly an entirely uninjured man to be seen. Most of those who had escaped, had streams of blood flowing over their faces from splinter wounds. Others limped and hobbled about, looking for their friends. A board shanty was the only shelter to be had, and that was soon filled with the wounded, whose silent, speechless agony was enough to make the stoutest heart shudder. Immediately after the accident the heavens grew dark and black as though the night had come. The wind shrieked through the leafless trees; the heavens were rent in twain, and from the crevice gleamed the white lightning, and the hoarse thunder hellowed its cruel mockings at the woe beneath. It seemed as if the elements were holding high carnivel over the scene of slaughter.

The Republican of the 3d furnishes the following list of the dead, as far as had been ascertained. It was supposed that a few other bodies were yet to be recovered:

—— Chappell, father of J. T. Chappell; Rev. H. Bullard, B. B. Dayton, Mann Butler, Thos. Gray, Rev Mr. Teasdale, S. Best, Patrick Barr, Mr. Mott, Representative of Dunklin county; Thos. S. O'Sullivan, Chief Engineer; E. C. Yosti, (firm of Shields & Yosti;) C. Case, E. C. Blackhure, J. A. Ross, Henry Choutoau, Capt. O'Flaherty, Joseph Barrie, of St. Louis county; E. C. Jeffreee, Rep of Franklin county; Adolphe Abelee, George Eberie, —— Lynch, R. M Duhols, Wm. Howe, Jos. Finnegan, —— Bayan.

Two were not identified and one negro.

Mr. Moore, of Cape Girardeau, died at the Hospital last night.

Mr. O'Neal, the engineer, was left at Hermann, very dangerously injured.

Some of the bodies of the dead were marked with unusual and terrible mutilations. One of the survivors informs us that he saw two corpses with the entrails torn out by splintere.

A LAW STORY.—A few years ago a couple of Dutchmen, Von Vampt and Von Bones, lived on friendly terms on the high bills of Limestone. At last they fell out over a dog. Von Vampt killed Von Bones' canine companion. Bones, choosing to assume the killing to be intentional, sued Vampt for damages. They were called in due time into court, when the defendant in the case was asked by the Judge whether he killed the dog. "Pe sure I kill him," said Vampt, "but Ist Bones prove it." This being quite satisfactory, the plaintiff in the act on was called on to answer a few questions, and among others he was asked by the Judge at what amount he estimated the damages. He did not well understand the question, and so, to be a little pluiner, the Judge inquired what he thought the dog to be worth. "Pe sure," replied Bones, "the dog was worth nothing, but since he was so mean as to kill him, he shall pay de full value of him."

A dispatch from Philadelphia, dated the 2d instant, says:

Resolutions were adopted extolling the career of Mr. Dallas from his enlistment as a volunteer in the war of 1812 down to his filling the office of Vice President, when the prosperity of the country was poised upon his single vote, in all which he evinced that his principle of action was determined by nothing narrower than the general good.

Stirring News from Nicaragua.

INTERESTING PARTICULARS.

By the steamship Star of the West, which arrived at New York on the 4th, the details of the recent events in Nicaragua were received. They will be found highly interesting. After narrating the incidents connected with the departure on the 5th October of the steamship Uncle Sam from San Francisco, having sixty men of the Walker expedition on board, with arms and ammunition, the landing of them at San Juan del Sur, on the 15th, under command of Captain French, the account proceeds:

The steamer La Virgin, with the remainder of the passengers, left next morning for Virgin Bay, where she was compelled to remain till 2 A M next morning, to await the arrival of Walker's party.

As the Virgin came in, Walker proceeded in a schooner to meet her, and it being quite dark, he approached within a few feet of the steamer unobserved. He demanded the surrender of the boat, but, as he boarded her, the company's agent, Capt J. N. Scott, at the gangway, protested against his coming on board. Colonel Hornsby commanding, replied, "You spoke too late. My force (15 men) is sufficient to take you." He then took charge of the steamer.

The next day Walker permitted the company to land their freight, which he left for Granada, at 6 P M., of the 11th, and landed his men three miles above the city, at 1 A. M., next morning. They marched into the city about 4 o'clock, and found the people celebrating a victory falsely reported to have been gained at Leon. Walker surprised them so much that he took the city without resistance, and with 110 men, having left all the native troops behind—taking the Grand Plaza and capturing their entire artillery, and from 300 to 400 prisoners, who surrendered after Walker's party had killed but 10 men. Walker's loss was only one, slightly wounded.

As the most influential citizens were leaving the city, from fear of harm from Walker and his men, he assured them that they were perfectly safe, and that he would protect their persons and property from all harm. They were so much delighted at this that they assembled en masse, and invited him to become their President, which he declined; but proposed that Corral might serve for the unexpired term of one month. He attended a jubilee at their church, where he was announced by the priest who proclaimed him as being the saviour of their country. The American Minister, Don Juan Ruie, the minister's private secretary, were then appointed Commissioners to treat with Gen. Corrall for peace, and proceeded to Rives, Corral's head-quarters, for this purpose. After an unsuccessful effort to conclude a peace, our Minister and his Secretary ordered their horses, wishing to proceed on their journey to Virgin Bay, when to the utter astonishment they were told that they could not have them, and a guard was placed around their room.

After remaining here two days, La Virgin came to St. George, (two miles distant,) and fired her heavy guns as a signal for them to come down. The natives and corral were greatly alarmed at this firing, and inquired what it meant. Col. Wheeler said the Americans were arriving at Virgin Bay, and unless he was liberated, they would volunteer and take him by force, and kill all the natives; whereupon he was set at liberty, and returned to Virgin Bay, and from thence to Granada.

At 2 a. M, the following Thursday, the Virgin proceeded to San Carlos, and sent a boat on shore demanding its surrender. As soon as the contents of the note were known, the Captain of the steamer La Virgin, who went ashore with two of his men, were at once made prisoners, and the steamer fired into five times with twelve pound shot. The shot were well directed, but fell short of us as we were about a mile distant. A detachment of Walker's riflemen, under Capt. Turnbull, was then sent ashore to take the fort, but a heavy rain setting in, which wet their ammunition, and as they could land only in a narrow neck of land, upon which the cannon of the fort bore directly, they returned to La Virgin, which proceeded for Virgin Bay. The passengers from New York came up, and arrived at Fort San Carlos about one hour after the Virgin had left. The San Carlos (steamer,) Captain Slocum, was hailed from the fort, when Captain S came to and let go his anchor some distance before passing the fort. The anchor had been down about five minutes, when an eighteen pound ball was fired at the steamer and struck her forward, passing through and damaging her machinery, and entering as it passed through the upper deck, instantly killing Mrs. Alexander White, of Clinton, Almeda county, California, and taking both legs off her child, who lived some five or six hours. Another child of the same family had his foot injured with the same shot, but would recover. About fifty rifle shots were directed against the pilot house. After remaining about eight hours to repair, etc., the San Carlos steamed for Virgin Bay. The mother and child were buried ashore at San Carlos.

On the 19th, La Virgin, with Colonel Fry and troops, proceeded to Granada to join Walker. They were landed and the steamer returned on Saturday, 20th.

On the evening of October 19, the passengers waiting for transit were surprised in Virgin Bay by a troop of horsemen, preceded by about one hundred infantry, marching up in front of the company's office. This body fired about seventy shots at and over the heads of the passengers, who were crowded around and in the vicinity of the office. Many of the passengers fled into the woods, but a few secured themselves in the office. These were taken, searched, and their revolvers were carried off from them. As the government troops found no soldiers of Walker's party among the passengers, the latter were assured of security and protection. The colonel in command assured them that as soon as a boat arrived, he would send an officer with them, or give them a passport that would enable them to pass the fort of San Carlos unmolested. He also detailed some of his men to accompany passengers into the suburbs with lanterns, in search of those who had fled. Some were found, but most of them—including even wounded persons—remained all night in the woods. The boat La Virgin came up to her usual anchorage in Virgin Bay, at 1 oclock, on the morning of the 20th, and fired a signal gun; but as the agent was powerless, no light was shown in response, and she left, but again returned about 9 o'clock. As she came to anchor, the troops were, for some reason, marched out of town, and it was rumored that they had set out for San Juan del Sur. On Sunday, the 21st, all the passengers remaining in town embarked on board the Virgin, which boat brought them to Fort San Carlos, at Ometope mountain, in the center of the lake, where they remained, waiting for an opportunity to leave the State.

The two boats—La Virgin and San Carlos—returned to Virgin Bay to take on board any returned passengers that might present themselves, and then proceed to Granada for the sole purpose of sailing upon the United States Minister, Col. Wheeler, for protection. The Virgin received about thirty-five passengers who had been missing on the previous day, and of whom two were badly wounded. Some had made their way back to San Juan del Sur, and taken passage back to San Francisco in the Uncle Sam. One passenger, Rev. Mr. Henry, had walked some twenty miles, notwithstanding he had a shot through his hip.

Col. Cushing, the company's agent, who had been previously arrested by the government troops, was marched on the 19th, under a strong escort, to Rivas. He told the passengers by the Virgin to take care of themselves, and intimated that he expected to be shot.

While the Virgin was in the harbor this second time, a boat came alongside bearing a dispatch from the government officer, threatening that if the Transit Company did not surrender and leave their boats at Virgin Bay, armed and manned, they would immediately shoot Col. Cushing. The missing passengers were also ordered to remain on shore. The boats, however, made good their escape from the shore, and before the last of them had reached the steamer, the native women were seen running in all directions, indicating the approach of the enemy. Immediately afterwards the dragoons were seen dashing through the street down to the company's office, which they took possession of and barricaded, as if they expected heavy firing. Here they lowered the United States flag to half mast. They then demanded that a boat should be sent from the steamer with some person commissioned to hold a conference with them; but the officers did not choose to run the risk of being carried prisoners to Rivas, and so declined the proposition. It was feared the troops would burn the town the same evening, as they had threatened to do. At 5 P. M the same evening both boats left for Granada, where the passengers put themselves under the protection of the United States Minister, and were supplied with good quarters.

Col Walker then sent a courier to Corral, commanding at Messiah, about twelve miles distant, informing him that one prisoner had been shot, (the Secretary of State), who had been conspiring against Walker while on a parole of honor, and unless he (Corral) complied with his propositions for peace, and safely return his courier before 8 o'clock the next day, the prisoners in his hands—about thirty in number—would be shot forthwith. At 10:30 P M. the courier returned, bringing word from Corral that he would conclude a peace, and he in Granada the next morning. On the arrival of such information, bells were rung, fireworks displayed, and a high mass performed in the principal cathedral. It was a scene of the greatest rejoicing, not less to the natives than to the Americans in the city. Some feared that Corral would come in and make an attack during the night, after giving his pledge, but all was quiet.

At about 8 o'clock, Col. Walker's troops were assembled in the Plaza, numbering about 400 men, besides the picket guard on duty outside of the city, and they were drilled by their respective officers. The passengers also formed in double files, and were marched from their quarters under the command of Col. Fabens, and rested on one side of the Plaza. It was a matter of form merely, and to show as many Americans as possible when Gen. Corral surrendered himself.

The passengers embarked on board the San Carlos at four o'clock the same evening, and while coming off saw the government steamer, Central America, bearing down. It was thought that she might have been taken by the government party, and intended to aid in retaking Granada, but she brought news hardly credible—the fort of San Carlos was abandoned when they left, and all their guns had been spiked. The La Virgin proceeded direct to Rivas with news of peace, and the San Carlos down the river to connect with the Star of the West. Dispatches are sent to Havana and to Washington to obtain immediate aid from the government.

Judge Cushing was released, after two days, upon his giving Corral $2000 in cash. He returned to Virgin Bay after the news of peace reached there. The same (government) party inquired of him how much he should charge them for the use of the company's depot, which they had taken and occupied two days previously. It is characteristic of this people that, when they do any violence, it is all a mistake, and they intend no harm. As, for instance, blank cartridges were always to be used at San Carlos in hailing the steamers, but they always happened to be shotted, and not very harmless.

One person only was seen at San Carlos as the Virgin passed the fort, and at Castillo all had left and gone down the river to Greytown. Gen. Mosques, commanding at San Carlos, reported at Greytown that he left for the reason that they had no provisions, except half a cheese, and but three or four rounds of ammunition. Thus the enemy of Walker has fled before him in every instance except one, in the vicinity of the transit route, and peace and plenty are now looked for as the result.

The Case of Passmore Williamson.

On Saturday morning, the 3d inst., Passmore Williamson appeared in the United States District Court in Philadelphia, accompanied by Messrs. Meredith, Gilpin and Hopper, his counsel, and offered a petition, in which he expressed his willingness to purge himself of the contempt in the Wheeler slave case, for which he was imprisoned in July last. Judge Kane received the petition, granted the prayer and required Williamson to affirm what he had to say in reply to the interrogatories of the Court. Certain interrogatories were then propounded to him by Mr. Vandyke, the District Attorney, to which he replied:

I did not seek to obey the writ by prodneing the persons therein mentioned before the Court, because I had got, at the time of the service of the writ, the power over the custody or control of them, and therefore it was impossible for me to do so. I first heard of the writ of habeas corpus on July 20, between 1 and 2 o'clock A. M., on my return from Herrisburg. After breakfast, about 9 o'clock, I went from my house to Mr. Hopper's office, when and where the return was prepared.

At 10 o'clock, as I came into court, commanded by the writ, I sought to obey the writ by answering it truly; the parties not being in my possession or control, it was impossible for me to obey the writ by producing them. Since the service of the writ I have not had the custody, possession or power over them; nor have I known where they were except from common rumor or the newspaper reports in regard to their public appearance in the city or elsewhere.

Some discussion arose between the District Attorney and the counsel of Mr. Williamson. Mr. Vandyke contended that the reply of the defendant was evasive and contradictory. The Judge said the difficulty, he thought, could be easily overcome by amending the answer, and at the suggestion of the Court it was amended in the following manner:

"I did not seek to obey the writ by producing the persons in the writ mentioned before this court I did not so seek, because I verily believed that it was entirely impossible for me to produce the said persons agreeably to the command of the court."

This answer was then accepted by the court and ordered filed.

Judge Kane then remarked that the District Attorney has been invited to aid the court in this case, but that he would bear in mind that his relation to Mr. Wheeler was now suspended. This was only as enquiry as to what injury had been done the process of the court.

Mr. Vandyke said he was aware of the position he occupied.

Judge Kane then said—"The contempt is now regarded as purged, and the party is released from custody. He is now reinstated to the position he occupied before the contempt was committed. Mr. Williamson is now before me on the return to the writ."

Mr. Vandyke then arose and addressed the court, stating that a nolle pros had been entered in the case in this court, but that he had, on behalf of Mr Wheeler, entered a suit for damages in the U. S. Circuit Court. Judge Kane thereupon discharged Williamson from custody. He was immediately surrounded and heartily congratulated by his friends.

BOILER EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF LIFE.—The Savannah Journal gives the following account of a boiler explosion on the Central Railroad, on the 6th inst:

A freight train from Macon had reached two miles and a half below Station 13, when the boiler of the locomotive exploded with fearful violence. The cause of the explosion has not, as yet, been examined fully, and the death of those immediately aware of the facts, renders it difficult to ascertain. The locomotive was thrown forward by the force of the explosion forty feet in advance of the point where the boiler burst, and there pointed crosswise.

The engineer, named Kelly, (a Pennsylvanian, and who had recently come upon the road) was instantly killed, as was also the fireman. An eye witness stated that the body of the engineer was blown literally high into the air, and it is further said, that the dead body of the fireman was found upon the rear most car of the train—fearful proofs of the awful violence of the sudden blow which hurried them into eternity. The brakeman on the tender was most severely scalded. He was in a most critical state at last accounts. His name aed that of the fireman we have not been able to learn.

The locomotive is a complete wreck. It will be a considerable loss to the company, but this is of little importance when compared with the loss of life by so sudden and terrible a calamity.

The Opelousas Patriot, of Saturday last, has the following paragraph: Since the very heavy rains of the early part of the week, which filled the gullies, marshes and ponds, and swelled almost to an overflow all the branches and bayous, the sky has been for the most part clear and the weather cool and seasonable for the cotton picking, which is pretty nearly through with, and cane rolling, which has been commenced on about half the sugar estates in our parish, with light yields. The "Beauty" is in good navigable order for barges, and the "Courtableau" for steamers to Washington.

Foreign News by the Arago.

By the arrival at New York of the steamship Arago, we have dates from Europe four days later than by the Baltic, but the news is out of great interest nor importance.

The London Globe of the 22d ult. says:

Our morning contemporaries give currency to a rumor to the effect that the United States Government had called upon Her Majesty's Government to recall Mr Crampton, in consequence of his encouragement of enlistment for the Foreign Legion. We notice the statement for the purpose of saying that it is entirely without foundation.

The Argus brings additional intelligence from the East, of the capture of Kinburn by the Allies.

The advantages which this victory will give the Allied armies in the East are evidently great. By this success they have doubtless opened to themselves a path into the important district of Southern Russia, and as, says the London Times, may indulge a reasonable hope of penetrating to the building arsenal of the Russian fleet at Nicolaieff.

Marshal Pelissier's dispatch in reference to the capture of Kinburn was received by the Minister of War on the 23d ult. He says that the Anglo-French division of the army had mainly contributed to the success of the allied squadron, having been landed on the peninsula about five kilometers from the fortress, and taken up its position, and on the night of the 16th opened the trenches at 800 kilometres from the works. When the fleet commenced its heavy fire on the 17th, two companies of chasseurs, under cover at a distance of 400 metres from the batteries, were able to keep up a hail fade on the Russian artillerymen at their guns. The field artillery also played an effective part in the operation.

The Times insinuates that General Simpson, Commander-in-Chief in the Crimea, is about to be recalled, and the Morning Herald further states that Lieut. General Sir J. W Codrington is to succeed him. The Globe, an evening journal, states that General Simpson is not recalled, nor is there any intention of recalling him. The ill health of the General, the Globe says, unfits him for further service. Arrangements are being made by the government to provide a successor, but nothing has been decided upon.

The Consular corps at Odessa had addressed the following to the Allied Admirals:

The presence of the Allied fleets in Odessa roads creates a fear of bombardment. In consequence the undersigned. Consuls General and Consuls consider it their duty to ask the attention of their excellencies the Admirals to the dangers to which a bombardment would expose the lives and property of their respective subjects. The undersigned take the liberty to remind their Excellencies that the city of Odessa shelters a vast number of foreign families, subjects of their sovereign, and that the largest portion of the moveable and immoveable property belongs to them. Consequently they venture to hope that their Excellencies will spare a bombardment.

The Czar had not arrived at Odessa on the 9th.

It is announced that down to the 17th ult. nothing new had transpired in the Crimea. It is, however, believed that the Allies are advancing beyond the Baltek, and Liprandi is stated to be retreating, and unable to hold his ground unless Prince Gortschakoff's forces leave Sebastopol to assist him.

The Russian troops are leaving the shores of the Baltic, and everything shows that no fear is entertained of any further operations by the Allies in that quarter during the present season.

The King of the Belgians is reported to have been very actively and personally exerting himself lately with a view to the re-establishment of peace.

The Czar, according to the latest accounts, was still at Nicolaieff, and on the 5th ult., he reviewed the crews of the fleet arrived from Sebastopol.

Admiral Dundas had left Nergen in the Wellington, and gone to Stockholm to pay his respects to King Oscar.

The Bourse at Madrid was deserted from a panic caused by cholera.

Private letters received in Paris from officers in the French army, state that it is believed that Prince Gortschakoff, seeing no possibility of keeping his communications open, and regularly receiving supplies, was actually preparing to evacuate the Crimea.

Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Brazil (Mr. Crenden) has forwarded a dispatch to Lord Clarendon relative to the gold mines which have recently been discovered in that country. Many of the English newspapers having made statements which were likely to induce persons to emigrate from the United Kingdom. Mr. C informs them that the gold district lies in an uncultivated and wild part of the province named the Valley of the Maracasseuma, where the necessaries of life are to be obtained with difficulty and where the climate is particularly fatal to the European constitution. In addition to this, a company has succeeded in getting a monopoly, and any person working on his own account would probably meet with hindrances from their local agents.

Another bread demonstration took place in Hyde Park on Sunday, and after a little speechifying the people separated. One of the leaders in the affair stated that during the winter, when it would be too cold to assemble in the Park, the meetings would take place in Smithfield.

The English Parliament has been further prorogued to the 11th December.

A dreadful accident had occurred on the Lyons railway, by which sixteen persons were killed, and others dangerously wounded.

Sir William Molesworth, Secretary of State for the Colonies, died on the 22d ult. of a low gastric fever.

Just previous to the departure of the Arago, the Peninsula and Oriental Company's steamship Nubia, arrived with the India and the Mediterranean mails. She brought intelligence from Gibraltar that the American ship America, from Trapani, with a cargo of salt for the United States, unfortunately got aground off Cabolta Point. It was expected she would become a total wreck, owing to the wind blowing from the S. S. W., and a heavy sea rolling over her. Her Majesty's steamships Rhadamanthus and Prometheus, together with the Busker, steamtug, went to her assistance, but they were unable to render the slightest service to the vessel.

A SINGULAR BEAR STORY.—We have heard the particulars of a rather singular bear story, which we tell our readers as it was told us. Messrs. J S. Speck and James Lowman, living at Rushville, in this county, were out in the mountain between Rockingham and Pendleton counties, hunting up and salting their cattle, when they came across a very large he bear. Neither of them having a gun, and the animal seeming to be kindly disposed, they resolved to attempt to "drive" him to a certain point, where they knew there was a gentleman who had a gun. They got brain started in the direction of the man with the gun, and by dint of hurraing and screaming, actually drove him into and along a path, a little over a mile, before he was shot.

He kept the path in which they started him pretty well. Whenever he felt disposed to leave it, they would ride out after him and "drive" him back again. He was shot, after being driven in this way over a mile, by Mr. Noble Owens, who had to shoot him seven or eight times, with a shot gun, before he was dispatched. What is the most singular, the animal refused to run after the first shot, which took him in the side. The bear was a monster of his species.

These facts we gather from a responsible gentleman, who had them from the mouths of the gentlemen themselves who drove and killed the bear, and who exhibit the skin of the animal as proof of the truth of their rather singular bear story.—[Rockingham Register.

A dispatch of the 3d inst., from Boston, says:

On the 18th ult. a fire occurred at St. John's, N F., destroying over two hundred dwellings, principally occupied by the laboring classes, and rendering about four hundred families houseless. Five acres were burnt over.

On Wednesday morning last John E. Clark, an inmate of the Lunatic Asylum, at St. John, N B., killed with an axe Barry Mills and William Carroll, two of the attendants in the institution.

The American Aladdin

[From a recent Lecture, delivered by O. W. Curtiss.]

When we go out on Sunday afternoons to meralize and see new houses, we usually take our young ones by Aladdin's Palace. Aladdin was a Yankee. He started life by swapping jack-knives, then putting the halves of broken marbles together and passing them off as whole ones. When he had gathered some brass, he went to school all the summer to learn the golden rule of arithmetic—addition for himself and subtraction for his neighbor.

At an early age Aladdin was considered to be good at a bargain, which meant that he could always succeed in changing a worse for a better—always keeping the blind eye of a horse to the wall when he wanted to sell it; and the village said that certainly Aladdin would succeed. When he left, "he will be rich," said the village, with more approval than it would say, "he will be generous and true." To Aladdin the world was but a market in which to buy cheap and sell dear. For him there was no beauty, no history, no piety, no heroism. Vainly the stars shone over him—vainly the south wind blew. In the wake of the great ship Argo in which Jason and his companions sailed for the Golden Fleece, over the gleaming Mediterranean—where the ships of Tyre, Rome and of the Crusaders had been before him—through the pillars of Hercules, through which sailed Columbus to find fame in a new world—now sails Aladdin to find fortune. To him all lands are alike. No Homer sang for him in the Egean—he only curses the wind that will not blow him into Odessa. No syrens sing for him, but he loves the huge oath of the lively boat swain. With a Bible in his hand and a quid of tobacco in his mouth, he goes about the holy places in Jerusalem, and "calculates" their exact site. He sees the land of the Ramesas and the Ptolomies; and the reverend records of the Lyblan desert, whose echoes have slumbered since they were trampled over by Alexander's army, are now awakened by the shrill whistle of Old Dan Tucker. He insults the Grand Llama, hob-nobs with the Great Mogul, turns his back upon Emperors, and takes a pinch out of the Pope's snuff box. He chews with the Arabs, smokes opium with the Turks, and rides for a bride with the Calmuck Tartars.

Aladdin comes home again, and the admiring village points him out to the younger generation as a successful man. "My son, look at him: he began with nothing and now see" "My son" does see, and he holds him owning a million of dollars—of all sometimes of which he is not president, a director. His name is good as gold—he has bought pictures and statues—he has also bought a Miss Aladdin and housed her in luxury; but he prides his mouth with a silver fork. He has a home for a poet, but he makes it his boast that he reads nothing but the newspaper. He goes to church twice on Sundays, and only wakes up when the preacher denounces the sinner of Sodom and Gomorrah, and thus "tough old Jews" of Jerusalem. His head is bald and shiny, with the sermons which have hit and glanced off. He claps his hands in prayer, but forgets to open them when the poor box is passed around; and he goes home like a successful men thanking God he is not as other men are, and after dinner he sits before the fire in his easy chair, lights a large cigar, and looks languidly at Mrs. Aladdin through the thick smoke.

By and by, old Aladdin dies. The conventional virtues are told over, as the mourning carriages are called out. The papers regret they are called upon to deplore the loss of a reverend parent, generous friend, public spirited citizen, and pious man; and then the precocious swapper of jack knives, and the modest up to the young generation, is laid in the dust. Above his grave, the stars he never saw now burn with a soft lustre which no lamps about a king's tomb can emulate; and the South wind, for whose breath upon his brow he was never grateful, strews his last bed with anemonies and violets that his heel crushed living; and we who are to be formed upon that model, carelessly remark, as we stir our toddies, "So, old Aladdin is gone at last, and, by-the-by, how much did he leave?"

ANECDOTE OF SHERIDAN.—Holland's theatre, the handsomest in the kingdom, was destined to a short existence, being totally burnt down on the night of February 24, 1809, when it had stood only fifteen years. The following authentic anecdote in connection with the building has not before, as we believe, appeared in print. Holland could never obtain a settlement or even an interview on the subject with Sheridan. He hunted him for weeks and months at his own house, at the theatre, at his usual resorts, but he was nowhere to be seen. At last he tracked him to the stage-door, rushed in in spite of the opposition of the burly porter, and found the manager on the stage conversing with a party of gentlemen whom he had invited to show them the theatre. Sheridan saw Holland approaching, and knowing that escape was this time impossible, put a bold face on the matter. "Ah! my dear fellow," exclaimed he, you are the very man I wanted to see—you have come most apropos. I am truly sorry you have had the trouble of calling on me so often, but now we are met, in a few minutes I shall be at liberty; we can then go into my room together and settle our affairs. But first you must decide an important question here. Some of these gentlemen tell me there are complaints, and loud ones, that the transmission of sound is defective in your beautiful theatre, that, in fact, the galleries cannot hear at all, and that is the reason why they have become so noisy of late." 'Sound defective! Not hear!' reiterated the astonished architect, turning pale and almost staggering back; 'why, it is the most perfect building for sound that ever was erected; I'll stake my reputation on it; the complaint is most groundless.' 'So I say,' retorted Sheridan; 'but now we'll bring the question to issue definitively, and then have a paragraph

A Ship Seized by two Black Fellows.—We are indebted to Captain Bowles, of the schooner Black Dog, which arrived from the Islands, July 8th, for the following report of a daring and murderous piracy committed on board the John, of New Bedford, by two South Sea Islanders.—The particulars were supplied to Capt. Bowles by one Francis John, a white man, stationed on Roche's Island, in latitude 2 degrees, 32 minutes south, longitude 176 degrees 9 minutes east. It appears that on April 17th, a vessel was seen standing towards the island from the south-east and the Black Dog being expected there, several canoes put off to meet her. No sooner were they alongside, however, than two natives presented firearms and drove them away. Francis John, seeing the vessel in distress, then pulled to her, when he was hailed by the natives, who enquired to what country he belonged, and if not to London. On answering in the affirmative, he was warned off, as "no white man was wanted along side." Believing the vessel to have been forcibly taken by the two natives, he communicated his suspicions to two other natives who were in his canoe, and made an attempt to board her, but was repelled with loaded muskets. Finding it impossible to get on board, he returned to the shore. Subsequently another canoe, manned by natives, went alongside and entered into conversation with the pirates, who divulged the horrid deed of which they were guilty, and the motives that led to its committal. The captain of the John having ill-used them, they took advantage of the absence of two of the boats and a greater part of the crew, to indulge an insatiate desire for revenge. Besides the two natives, the captain, cook and cooper were left on board; these they killed.

After the capture of a whale, the mate's boat went alongside with it; he was killed with spades, and all his crew but one man, who pushed off from their reach and was left astern, the vessel having some way upon her. Shortly after the second mate's boat went alongside, he and three men were killed, the remaining two having succeeded in pushing off from her and joined the other boat. In this predicament they were left on the wide sea without compass or food.—This statement was voluntary on the part of the pirates, and from information gained from the natives of Roche's Island, it is believed by Captain Bowles to be correct. On being asked where the ship was bound, the pirates replied, "to Ocean Island," but if unable to make it, they would run her ashore where no white man lived. Francis John, the white man, read the ship's name, "John, of New Bedford." She had jib, foresail, fore topsail, main, and main topsail set. The main topgallant sail had been cut away. The mizen topsail, topgallant sail and spanker were also set. She was on the starboard tack, and seemed to have been so from the time of her seizure, as both fore and main tacks were well down, which could hardly be accomplished by two blacks. When last seen she was steering wild from north to west. Prior to leaving, the pirates offered tobacco and other inducements to join them, but to no purpose. The Black Dog arrived at Roche's Island, April 29th, twelve days after the John's visit. Had the interval been shorter, Captain Bowles would have made some attempt to discover her whereabouts.—[Sidney Empire, July 11.

The John was commanded by Capt. Tilton, and we believe was last reported at Paita, Jan 15, with 850 barrels of sperm oil, and 300 barrels of whale oil on board [N. Y. Jour. Com.

An American Consul with Russian Sympathies.—In the midst of the general rejoicings which took place in Kingston, Jamaica, over the fall of Sebastopol, the American Consul gave great offence by refusing to hoist the American flag. A correspondent of a Northern paper says:

Kingston, (Ja.,) Oct. 9, 1855.

The inhabitants of Kingston are displeased that our Consul did not display the flag of the United States when the news of the taking of Sebastopol was made known to them by the arrival of the steamer on the 6th inst., although it is well known that they never hoisted their colors for any victories gained over the Mexicans by us; but, on the contrary, the newspapers simulated not only the greatest untruths, but declared that the sympathy and feelings of the Englishmen were with the Mexicans.

There is no instance of the British flag ever having been displayed here as a token of respect on any of our deceased countrymen, be they Presidents, Senators or other persons, whilst our Consul has never failed to hoist his colors in honor of her Majesty's birthday, and half-mast high as a token of respect for any of her distinguished deceased subjects in England or the colony. Disaster.—The schooner Dolphin, Capt Jury, from Pascagoula for this port, with a cargo of 30,000 feet of lumber, consigned to Messrs. Leonard, Pash & Co., was capsized during a squall on Thursday night last, when off the pickets, foot of the New Canal. About twelve to fifteen thousand feet of lumber, which was in the hold, and the schooner will, it is supposed, be a total loss. The deck load was taken off by the steamer Dolphin.

Letter from a Recent Convert to Free-Love

How Abigail Moses learned what her "in hard water" required, and that Hiram Moses, her husband, was a Booby.

[From the New York Evening Post.]

I rally haint a minute of time, dear neighbor, Mrs. Baldwin, to devote to nobody, but I do reckon I'd better jest let you know somethin' about this here society of Associationers I'm contemplatin' joinin'. Afore I begin I'd like to mensh'n that if you'd just step in and see to hnsband's stockine, I'd take it agreeable. I had'nt no time to mend 'em, for Professor K—h had such a heap to tell me about the inward development, and of his spiritual, cosillion with my spiritual witals, that I sat a good bit longer than I meant to, with him; an' somehow or other he ketched hold of my hand an' said he did'nt know when he'd been so monstronsly drawed to anybody afore. He had'nt nothin' to say agin my husband; he might be a very clever person; but yet he felt convinced my natur was sich an elevated one, he rally believed my wanie had'nt never been met.

I told him sure enough they had'nt, bot I reckoned the reason was, we were too poor to go to farther expense in buyin' things. But I did conless, if there was a want I had, it was for a new parlor carpet, cnrn was a glttin' so dreadfnlly shabby. The Professor give me an awful nudge then, and said I must excuse him, if he did'nt feel disposed for jokin' that mornin'; he was a sufferin' most tremenjons innard tortores, 'cause he'd been misunderstood thn day afore by a person whe was'nt great enough to comprehend him. Of course I let on I understood him, and pretended I'd been jukin', hut, arterwards, when I went to the meetin', I found out all abont what it meant; and I'm real miserable, neighbor Baldwin, to think I've been a livin' these sixteen years with Hiram Moses, an' he's never yet comprehended what my natur' required.

I know my hull bein' aint called into play; there's only one set of faculties agoin, an' I might as well be a livin' mummy as to be mated with anch a noodle. Brother B——e sees he's convinced me and him has sich a sympathy far one another that we must have played together when we was children in some other state of existence, an' though I don't remember ever seein' in that state, yet I spose it's all jnet so. Brother B——e is a very spiritnal soul, and is jest as developed as he can be. Me and him has sich good times together, and sich heantiful attraction to one another, that we don't think no more of kiss-in' than if we was two females. He ed I need'nt tell Hiram, though, for it was'nt likely he'd understand how our spirits met, as' he was one of those common-place bein's who might go and klok up a rumpus about me a kissin' another woman's husband.

I do declare it's too bad to be forced into sich a position as I am with Hiram, but Dr. C——s es that's just the way with him an' his wife; she haint no understeandin' of the ideal beanty of sich friendships, and don't begin to fill up the measure of his soul's yearning after perfec tion. Poor fellow! he's so often cast back upon himself that it's enough to crush his too sensitive natur. The meetins on Thursday nights is all the comfort I have. There's been Professor K——h, an' S——m G——t, an' Dr. E——y, an' Mr. H——s, that's all eitnated in the same uncomfortable way in their domestic relations, besides several females that's stndyin' medicine and 'natomy so hard that they partake qnite of the natur of skeletons. Their souls is developed at the expense of their poor frail, perishable bodies.

E—— B——m don't think no more of dissectin' dead bodies than she would of onttin' up a roast chicken. I don't know as I'd trust her to treat my neuralogy, but Hiram might jest as well employ the poor thing for his rheumatis as not. She looks as though she might handle a right gripin' nase pretty severe. Bnt the best is the principles we purfess. There we sit the hull evenin' and jest discourse about the poor oppressed cretnres that have to git their livin' at shevellin' snow, an' handlin' wood, an' so on it would rally do your very marrow-bones good to see the benevolence an' charity that prevails; an' how they remarks, they don't want nobody to do nothin' that don't agree with 'em—an' I'm sure mendin' stockings don't agree with me.

An' they tell rich lovely anecdotes about the people who go an' git everything done as cheap as they can, so as to cheat folks, an' grind down the poor. And then besides all the active goodness an' a strnggliu' to redeem their feller beins, they have a festival about onst a year, so as to hear the remarks of them as comes from the fnrrin cities—such as Beston and Philadelphia—about the wickedness of people in not payin' their workmen; an' Brother C—— often draws tears from the female members regardin' the trampliu' down of their blessed privileges. He's lovely, an' there aint one of us females, ugly or otherwise, but what he's willin' to embrace in gospel love.

I do hope, neighbor Baldwin, that I'm as virtuous a person as there is in the world; hnt I must say I can't see one bit of harm in relievin' my full sympathies in the bnsnma of them as are my spiritual partners—cause, wat's the body anyhow? 'Taint no more than a wet blanket throw'd over the sperrit—a egnenohin' the yearnin' after that soul communion that every well-developed person feels. Mr. B—— says I'm a "great soul," an' that sich sentiments has inaugurated me more tangibly into his best feelins than any paltry talkin' on of what the false and bnlier world calls "modesty." See he to me, a standin' on the steps t'other night, "Would we was in the blessed Philanstery!" My sperrit whispered, "Without Hiram, tho'," and his'n immediately responded in an audible "yes." So completely do we meet one another.

We have been a readin' Jacqne together. I reckon you would'nt be pleased with his observations on this, hut it's the very spitome of morality and virtue, we think. I'm come to the end of my sheet, an' here's Hiram just come in; ugh! My soul revolts from him. But I'm doomed to misery. Pity my unfortnnate organization that requires such different associations. Yours, Abigail Moses.

Royal Swindling, or How to Obtain a Splendid Carpet.—It has recently been stated that the King of Naples was likely to embroil himself in a war with England. The King had committed one of those petty acts of mean swindling that a despot can lawfully practice. The whole plot is thns clearly developed:

King Ferdinand of Naples, it appears, ordered a splendid set of carpets from an English manufacturer, which were made to size, and ornamented with the royal arms. The manufacturer accompanied his goods to Naples, which were refused on the impudent ground that they were never ordered, although he produced the order in writing. He was told to sell them, but that was impossible, as they had the royal arms on them. Ha was commanded to put them on board ship and export them. He did ship them and had to pay export duty. The vessel was then refused a clearance, and the carpets were landed. Ha was then told to sell them at auction. A very low bidding was made and no advance followed; and ha was not allowed to buy them in. He got for them much less than the export duty he had paid. But what became of the carpets! They were actually bought at the auction by one of the King's agents, against whom none dared to compete, and now cover the floors of the palace for which they had been fabricated. The manufacturer complained to the British Consul, who demanded redress, hut was refused.

But since the fall of Sebastopol the King became frightened, and has offered pecuniary reparation for this attempted royal swindling. His coin will probably be accepted, as Great Britain can claim nothing beyond ample reparation for this individual injustice.

A dispatch of the 6th inst. from Washington says:

"Official intelligence of the revolntionary movements in Nicaragua having reached Washington, the matter has already received the attention of the Government, and Commissioner Spaulding will probably be directed to proceed there immediately, with special instructions."

Dr. Kane, it is said, has made arrangements with an artist, who is now engaged in the preparation of the maps, charts, plates, etc., for the Doctor's report, and for the use of Mr. Grinnell.

The Mythic Sea.

For ages there has existed a myth concerning a Northern Ocean, whose shores were the impenetrable barriers of ice, and whose waters held a life and music all its own. The Scandinavians remember the myth, and to this day in Sweden and Norway and the Northern Islands the great unknown sea has existence in the belief of every superstitious mind. To us, who reason so philosophically that nothing is hidden, it was not deemed probable that such body of water did or could exist; and though many navigators asserted their belief in the myth, it has not had sufficient data to claim attention. A few minds, keen from observation and sagacious from naturo, still clung to the ancient story and suffered it not to die. One of these minds was Dr. Kane, who now returns home with tidings that the lost sea is found!

Our readers doubtless pursued the narrative of the Kane Expedition with a breathless attention, and from it learned that the intrepid navigator left his vessel fast in the almost impenetrable mountains of ice in latitude 78 deg. 45 min. north, pushing his way in sledges and on foot to latitude 82 deg 30 min, where he stood upon the shore of, to his eyes, a limitless sea. Three thousand squars miles did he scan with eye and glass, and yet no bounds to that expense of water were found; for fifty-two hours did a heavy gale from the north heave up the heavy surf, and yet it brought down not a particle of ice—showing that around the pole all was ocean—life instead of frigid death. Thus was the veil penetrated; surprise seized upon the philosophical speculator, and now the world is busy at the re-solution of this wonderful problem of a Northern Sea.

1st. The Doctor represents those waters as limpid as any summer sea. By what proco-s in nature can that high latitude so modify the temperatnre of the air as to leave the sea unfrozen? Where the Doctor wintered the thermometer often stood at 60 degrees below zero, and yet in a still more northerly clime there is a sea which never is frozen. Science stands stupefied, for all its axioms are repudiated and new laws are to reconcile the facts to theory.

2d. Bird and fish life is there existent in the utmost profusion. There the hawk and eider duck range in unlimited freedom, while whales and walrus sport in such herds as to make the waters swarm with their huge merrimeet. Can these all live without proper food? Does the duck infest these regions without its berries and grasses and bulbs for sustenance? Here, then, is another query for the speculator to answer, and the mystery of that Northern Sea grows more and more exciting.

Over the grand loo barrier which Dr. Kane passed was a new land, and he called it Washington, giving names also to the bays and capes. Beyond this is that sea, and that sea bathes the intangible North Pole—it holds the mystery of the Northern Lights in its keeping—it keeps the secret of its own life within its bosom; will man ever solve that secret, and open up that unknown world? We shall patiently await in hope; for, in our minds, is a vague thought floating that the sea which whirls around the pole of this earth holds in its keeping the key to a thousand mysteries, and we have faith to think that in our years—should they be three score or more—that mythic sea shall give up its long kept secret.—[Sandusky Register.

Prosecuting Attorney.—"Mr. Parks, state, if yon please, whether you have ever known the defendant to follow any profession?"

"He's been a professor ever since I've known him."

"Professor of what?"

"Of religion."

"You don't understand me, Mr. Parks. What does he do?"

"Generally what he pleases."

"Tell the jnry. Mr. Parks, what the defendant follows."

"Gentlemen of the jury, the defendant follows the crowd when they go in to drink."

"Mr. Parks, this kind of prevarication will not do here. Now state how this defendant supports himself.

"I saw him last night support himself against a lamp post."

"May it please yonr honor, thie witness has shown a dispositiou to trifle with the court."

Judge.—"Mr. Parks, state, if you know anything about it, what the defendant's occupation is."

"Occupation, did you say?"

Counsel.—"Yes, what is his occupation?"

"If I ain't mistaken, he occupies a garret somewhere in town."

"That's all, Mr. Parks."

Cross-examined.—"Mr. Parks, I understood you to say that the defendant is a professor of religion. Does his practice correspond with his profession?"

"I never heard of any correspondence or letters passing between them."

"You said something abont his propensity for drinking—does he drink hard?"

"No, I think he drinks as easy as any man I ever saw."

"One more question, Mr. Parks. Yon have known the defendant a long time; what are his habits—loose or otherwise?"

"The one he'd got on now, I think, is rather tight under the arms, and too short waisted for the fashion."

"You can take your seat, Mr. Parks."

The Court of Claims.—This body is in daily session at the Capitol in this city in the discharge of its important duties, and it is easy to perceive that it will have abundant materials for the exercise of all the qualities of industry, patient research, and high judicial acumen. The important Florida claims, to which we referred some time ago, are now up for consideration, and the argument has been progressing since Saturday. These claims arise under the treaty of 1819 with Spain, by which Florida was acquired by the United States and a part of what is now the State of Texas was ceded to Spain. The ninth article provided that there should be a reciprocal renunciation of certain enumerated claims on the part of the respective citizens or subjects of each country upon the other. These claims were settled in pursuance of the tenth article, which provided that the United States, exonerating Spain from all demands on account of such claims, should make satisfaction for the same to our own citizens to an amonnt not exceeding five million of dollars. But the last clause of the ninth article provided for satisfaction by the United States for injuries, if any, which, by process of law, should be established to have been suffered by Spanish officers and individual Spanish inhabitants, by the then late operations of the American army in Florida. It is under this clause that the claims now before the Court have arisen. The amount claimed exceeds a million of dollars.

A Doctor's Story of a Broken Heart.—Dr. J. K. Mitchell, of the Jefferson College, Philadelphia, in lecturing to his pupils upon the diseases of the heart, narrated an anecdote in proof that the expression "broken hearted" was not merely figurative. On one occasion, in the early period of his life, he accompanied, as a surgeon, a packet that sailed from Liverpool to one of the American ports. The captain frequently conversed with him respecting a lady who had promised to become his bride on his return from that voyage. Upon this subject he evinced great warmth of feeling, and showed Dr. Mitchell some costly jewels, ornaments, etc., which he intended to present as bridal presents. On reaching his destination he was abruptly informed that the lady had married some one else. Instantly the captain was observed to clap his hand to his breast and fall heavily to the ground. He was taken up and nonveyed to his cabin on board the vessel. Dr Mitchell was immediately summoned, but before he reached the poor captain he was dead. A post mortem examination revealed the cause of his unfortunate disease. His heart was found literally torn in twain! The tremendous propulsion of blood consequent upon anch a violent nervous shock, forced the powerful muscular tissues asunder, and life was at end.

Considerate.—A man being awakened by the captain of a boat with the announcement that he must not occupy his berth with his boots on, very considerately replied: "Oh! the bugs won't hurt 'em, I guess; they're an old pair. Let 'em rip."

That boat could not have belonged to some of the Cincinnati and Pittsburg lines we have "read about." The "hugs" were altogether too inoffensive."

A little child drowned itself in a tub of water in Charleston, on the 2d inst.

The Missing Æronaut.—Winchester, who ascended on the 2d ult. from Norwalk, Ohio, in a balloon, has not yet been heard from. The newspapers of the North indulge in many speculations regarding his fate, among which we find the following in a paper of Milan, Ohio, dated the 27th, where the family of the unfortunate man reside. The conjectoree of the editor appear quite as improbable as striking:

Some suppose that he ascended so rapidly that his system could not accommodate itself to the temperature of the olimate through which he passed, causing the drowsiness and fainting sensations he spoke of as happening during his first voyage, resulting in death, and that the eastern current carried him over the Atlantic ocean. From the best informatioo we can get, his balloon would osrry him about forty hnnrs; and supposing that he should travel at the rate of one hundred miles an hour in an easterly direction, it would land him somewhere in the Old World. We hope the press everywhere will mention Mr. Winchester's ascention, so that if he should be found it will be known where he belongs.

The Northern Mail.—There is a report in town—we know not how well founded—that the two mail coaches from Montgomery for Mobile left full of passengers, the contractors refusing to take the mail bags, which were left piled in front of the Montgomery Post-Office, on the ground that the Post Office Department had failed in its part of the contract. There is some ground to support this rumor in the well known disputes which have for some time past existed between the Department and the contractors Judge Campbell, it appears, has been very rigid in the enforcement of fines, and the contractors allege that his stringency has been carried to the point of injnstice. We have heard but one side. Meantime, the public is principally interested in the suspension of mail facilities which this hiatus in the transportation by the present contractors will cause. We take for granted that the Postmaster at Montgomery has immediately notified the Department by telegraph of the difficulty, and that the immediate remedy will be to ship the mails down the river by the light draft boats, until a new contract can be made for the land service.

We have here another proof of the want of a railway to Montgomery. It is the only gap in the continuous line of railroad from Mobile to Boston, and one which the vast traveling public, from New Orleans to Maine, is interested in filling. These great interests, combined with those of every railroad company on the Great Northern and Southern route, one would suppose could be made available to add this link to the great chain of thoroughfare. Who will take hold of it? Where is the man?

P. S.—Since writing the above, we learn that it is true that the contractors have thrown up the mails, and refnsed to take the bags, both at Mobile and Montgomery.

[Mobile Register, Thursday.

Correctly Defined.—The Toledo (Ohio) Blade is responsible for the following. We are inclined to think the sect mentioned is numerously represented everywhere:

In Michigan, a traveler put up at a farmer's house. He pretended to be a clergyman. After supper he went out with his host to look after his horse. While gone the mother and daughters, with the pious curiosity natural to all the daughters of Eve, began to speculate upon the probable religious faith of their visitor. One thought he was a Presbyterian; another that he was a Baptist; another that he was a Methodist. At last a sudden thought struck one of the girls, that if they could get a sight of his hymn-book, that would unravel the mystery. Old woman and daughters proceeded to examine his saddle bags with all possible despatch. Ont tumbled newspapers, dirty shirts and books, each volume carefully scrutinized. At last, a bright-eyed girl exclaimed: "I've got it! I've got it!" holding up a quart whisky bottle, "he's a Hard-Shell Baptist."

Joseph Wagner, convicted of enlisting men for the British foreign legion, to serve in the Crimea, was on the 1st inst. sentenced by Judge Ingersoll, of the United States District Court, to New York, to two years' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of $100.

The Mexican Three Millions.—"Ion," of the Baltimore Sun, says:

The President has referred to the Attorney General the questione which have arisen as to the legal effect of certain drafts drawn by the Mexican Minister of Hacienda, in favor of Howland & Aspinwall and Hargrove and others, on account of the three millions payable, on a certain contingency, to the Mexican government under the first and third articles of the Gadsden treaty, for his opinion. The Attorney General has, accordingly, given notice to the parties that he will receive their statements and arguments in writing, by coonsel or otherwise. As to the other question, under what circumstances, and when the three millions are demandable and payable, it is already decided in the manner indicated in my last. The Mexican government now in existence has, as yet, made no demand. The money will be payable upon the final action of the joint commission, whose decision is subject to no alteration.

Our Government asking the Executorship of its Deceased Citizens.—A simple and natural construction of the principles of justice and right would appear to lead directly to the conclusion that a government has the right to administer, through its agents, upon the personal effects of its citizens, or subjects, who die in foreign countries, beyond the reach of their friends. It seems, however, that so far as Americans are concerned, the Spanish government recognises no such right, and that we must obtain it by diplomacy, or otherwise, before it can be exercised. A Washington paper says:

Since the difficulties between Dr. Worrell, our late consul at Matanzas, and the Spanish authorities, it has been discovered by the State Department that the consuls of all other countries except our own, within her Most Catholic Majesty's dominion, have the right, by special agreement, to take possession of the effects of their deceased countrymen and affix their seal thereto. It will be recollected that Dr. Worrill was not allowed to perform a similar action, or rather an attempt to do so was not respected by the Spanish authorities. In view of these facts it is said the subject has been officially brought to the attention of the Spanish Government, in order that our Consuls may be secured a like privilege.

An Epitaph.—The editor of the Burlington Recorder bears witness that he recently discovered in a flourishing city on the line of the New Jersey Railroad, a graveyard, in which stood a tomb-stone, on which was inscribed by weeping friends the following touching and simple, yet exquisitely poetic epitaph:

"He was a good egg."

The Recorder at once proceeded to gild gold by composing the following addition:

"Tread lightly o'er this mest, wo beg,
Or else, perhaps, you'll smash the egg."

We have no donbt as to the "fax" of the tombstone case alluded to. Why should we, says the Philadelphia Bulletin, when in another part of New Jersey there are in a row five tombstones, bearing the following inscriptions:

He was a Brick.
He was a perfect Hoose.
He was a whole Team.
He was some Plumbers.
He was one of 'em.
Well, he was!

☞ The Circulation of the Blood is justly esteemed the greatest ordination of Divine Providence; by that beating organ, the heart, it is drawn to all parts of the system, giving vigor and strength to the complicated machinery of man. The living flood, whether we sleep or wake, rallies briskly through the arteries, and returns softly through the veins. How necessary that it should be kept free from all impurity, and yet how negligent many are respecting this great essential to the enjoyment of perfect health. Derangement in the Liver and Nerves is generally the primary cause of Head Ache, Indigestion, and all the harassing feelings attending dyspepsia, which makes life a burden, result from it. Suicide would rapidly follow suicide, if there was no cure. No one would suffer long, if he is able to obtain a bottle of Hoofland's celebrated German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Payment to be made at the close of each term. Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood at ten dollars per month. Students will be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. We would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at their earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationery, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than that attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

THE COLLEGE QUESTION.

AUBURN, ALA., Nov. 5, 1855.

Mr. Editor—Permit me through your paper to reply to a communication in your issue of the 27th ult., over the signature of Rev. P. P. Neely, in reference to the location of the Alabama Conference Male College.

Brother Neely makes an ex parte statement of facts, and comes to the conclusion therefrom that the Conference, at its next session, if it would avoid the charge of "duplicity," should "locate one College and one only," and that one at Greenboro'.

In reply, I submit that if the Conference would avoid the charge of duplicity, she must give full sanction to the action of her Commissioners, and locate two Colleges or else repudiate their action altogether.

East Alabama had long felt the need of a College. The Protestant Methodist Church, aware of this fact, determined to locate their contemplated College at Auburn, and had actually raised a large amount by subscription for that purpose. The enterprise failed for reasons not material to this issue. After that failure the citizens of Auburn raised, hastily, a subscription of $15,000, and by her chosen agents sent up that subscription to the Alabama Conference, at its last session in Talladega, Alabama, praying said Conference to locate at Auburn a Male College under her patronage. That petition was referred to the Committee on Education, of which P. P. Neely was chairman, and the committee in their report, recommended to the Conference, in substance, that they grant the prayer of the petitioners, and locate said College at Auburn. A substitute was offered, and prevailed by the small majority of two, so strong was the feeling in that Conference in favor of immediate location at Auburn. As those resolutions were published in Bro. Neely's communication, I need not rehearse them here. Now, from these resolutions it was doubtless the mind of that Conference that the Commissioners should meet at the appointed time and place, and receive propositions from any place in the bounds of the Alabama Conference, and after weighing carefully the propositions from all the rival places, select that place which might seem to them most likely to promote the interest of the church, whose agents they were. The question now is, was Auburn rejected in accordance with the spirit of the aforesaid resolutions? Brother Neely thinks she was so rejected—I think she was not—and here is an issue fairly made.

When the Commissioners arrived at Summerfield, and the facts were fully known as to the doings of both Greensboro' and Auburn there was a general feeling of admiration, and this feeling was not of Commissioners, it was shared largely by clergy and laity attracted there by the interest of the occasion, It was generally desired that both places might have a College. In accordance with this desire, a compromise was agreed to between the friends of Auburn and Greensboro', In the morning before the Commissioners met. In the afternoon when the Commissioners did meet, a committee was appointed to draft a preamble and resolutions, in accordance with the compromise previously agreed to. The following are said preamble and resolutions, to wit:

"WHEREAS, Commissioners were appointed by the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, at its late session at Talladega, Ala., to locate a Male College in the bounds of said Conference, and whereas, Greensboro' and Auburn have made propositions so noble and generous, to wit: Greensboro', a subscription and donation of $113,000, and Auburn, a subscription and donation of more than $100,000, required by the resolution of the said Conference—that the committee cannot find it in their hearts to mortify or disappoint their brethren or friends at either place, but there being some doubt as to the legal authority of said Commissioners to make an absolute location at each place, the Commissioners have determined and agreed to the following resolutions, to wit:

1st. That a College be located at Greensboro', Ala., according to the terms and conditions of the resolution of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South, adopted at their annual meeting held in Talladega in 1854.

2d. That a College be located in Auburn, Ala., and that the Alabama Conference be requested to adopt the same on equal terms.

A division of the resolutions was then called for. The first resolution was then submitted by the chair, and unanimously adopted. The second was then submitted and adopted, with two dissenting votes. After which, the preamble and resolutions were adopted."

Now I put the question to Bro. Neely and the friends of Greensboro', was Auburn "rejected" by that vote, in accordance with the spirit of the resolutions under which the Commissioners acted? Did not the Commissioners understand what they were doing? If not, it would be better to send them back under plainer instructions, or appoint others of better understanding. If they did understand what they were doing, Auburn was not "rejected." The friends of Auburn could not have intended to reject her, but they voted unanimously for the resolutions. Will Brother Neely say that Auburn was rejected by the vote of her own friends. Then I repeat they ought to be sent back to try over again. Will he say they did not intentionally vote against themselves, but that they were duped into it by the friends of Greensboro'? If so, he certainly has very little confidence in the intelligence of the one or the honesty of the other. But they have declared their own intention in the preamble. They do not say one word about rejecting Auburn. No, indeed; quite the contrary. "The committee cannot find it in their hearts," they say, "to mortify or disappoint their brethren or friends in either place." Yet Brother Neely is full of sympathy. My dear brother, save your tears. Auburn asks them not. She asks but justice. Greensboro', it is true, has the advantage in the verbage of the first resolution. But when the circumstances are stated, it will be seen that she can have no advantage, no superiority or claim before the Alabama Conference. The friends of Greensboro' asked the friends of Auburn to grant them this apparent advantage, not of right, not because they had power to reject Auburn if they had been so disposed, but of special favor.

A munificent donor to the Greensboro' enterprise had died, leaving a subscription of $17,500 if the Commissioners should locate the Conference College at that place. Here was a legal difficulty. Now said the friends of Greensboro' to the friends of Auburn, suffer us to call ours the Conference College in order to secure that donation, and you shall have a Conference on "equal terms." With a nobleness that ought to have touched the hearts of the friends of Greensboro', Auburn agreed to relieve them of this difficulty. Now, I ask, is it fair, is it honorable for brethren when they know these facts to come up before the Alabama Conference, and use all their efforts to have Auburn rejected. "I cannot believe that our Conference will close their eyes to the dictates of justice." I cannot believe it. Justice is clear visioned. She will "look on this picture and on that."

Since the action of the Commissioners the Executive Committee of the Auburn Male College, believing that the Alabama Conference would sanction (as they believed good faith required) the action of the Commissioners have contracted debts to the amount of about $4000. Their time and their money have been expended for the church, in confident reliance upon the pledge of her agents.

And yet we are gravely told that to locate a College at Auburn will be "to act in bad faith with the other contracting party," when that "other contracting party" comes before the Alabama Conference under contract with Auburn that she too shall have a College.—Fair play's a jewel.

Auburn is willing to undo all that has been done and come before the Alabama Conference, and let that body decide where the College shall be located. Or she is willing to go back before the Commissioners and in an open field and in the broad sunlight test her claim to the location of the College. She is willing that the Conference shall sanction, in toto, the action of her Commissioners, or else repudiate it altogether. More than this cannot, in justice be required of her. If the Alabama Conference in her wisdom thinks that "one College and one only" would best promote the interests of the church and the glory of God, let her so determine, and let her, after that determination, give Auburn fair play, as she doubtless will, and then if Auburn is "rejected," she will yield without a murmur.

"FAITHFUL SHEPHERDS."

Under this caption, Mr. Editor, in your issue of 3d Nov., you say that "a friend," under date of 21st Oct., writing of the health of this place, says, etc., etc., and as he makes serious mistakes as to the information given, and now published abroad as true, I think it necessary to write this by way of correction.

Your "friend" says that Bro. Godfrey was "the only Protestant minister left in the city." This was not so. Mr. Corbyn, the P. E. clergyman had just died, and his assistant, Mr. Denniston was then down with the fever, and he was surely "left." The Bishop of the diocese, too, was also at his residence, within a mile of the State-house, ready, I was told, to minister to any of his flock when called upon; and it can hardly be said that he had "left" either.

There is more rhetoric than reality, I apprehend, as to the "perils" referred to by your friend, "that drove others, equally bound to remain, to healthy resorts." There is, at least, as to the facts causing the absence of other Protestant ministers at the time when your friend wrote. Four Protestant ministers besides myself reside in Jackson, (and mine is of a very mixed character,) and but two of us have any pastoral charge there, and of course the others have no "flocks" to watch over. One of them was seriously sick, and was not able to return, and the others—are fully competent to speak for themselves.

I have had charge of the "colored mission" during the present year, and have regularly met with my "flock" every Sabbath evening, as heretofore, during all the sickness, without exception, and, let me add, have had pleasant and profitable meetings. This flock was not quite forsaken, nor had the shepherd fled to any "healthy resort" either. I was within three and a half miles of the State-house, where I have spent seven-tenths of my time for the last three years, when not absent preaching on any work.

Bro. Godfrey had almost no flock whatever to remain with, as nearly every family under his ministry had left, I believe. He attempted to hold but one public religious service, I think, after the exodus, and was absent until within a few days of the time when he was taken sick, and he had been up but a few days when your friend wrote. In short, your friend surely stood on the wrong hill, and looked at South Sebastopol, where beholding no Russians he concluded that he had seen the north side too. "Sad indeed must the spectacle be of a flock whose shepherd has fled at the first cry of danger," but your friend must have mistaken the locality in this instance.

As to being forward or officious in nursing and waiting on the sick generally, when there are others more experienced ready to do so, every minister, I suppose, ought to be fully persuaded in his own mind consistently with all his obligations. What may be a full measure to one in this respect is quite too small for another. At any rate, such are my views, that I could not, where there were plenty of others to do so; because of running the, as I think, unnecessary risk of bringing the fever among more than forty human beings, who would have all fallen on my hands had sickness broke out amongst us.

Bro. Godfrey remained at his post, and your "friend" could very easily have published this fact to your readers, and all the world besides, without any departure from truth, or throwing out insinuations as to the conduct of others in the absence of veritable facts for his premises. If Bro. Godfrey had been consulted as to the information sent by your friend, he never would, I am sure, have approved of it.

Within a radius of five miles around Sebastopol it is supposed that more blood has been spilt, more lives sacrificed, and more misery inflicted within a year, than on any other equal extent of the earth's surface in the same time since the days of Noah's flood.

CADDO CIRCUIT, LA.

For near two years it has been my lot to labor in this work. During that time some changes and developments have been wrought in Caddo as well as in other places.

The seasons have been peculiar—nearly two years without navigation. This brings not only privation and want, by placing market nearly two hundred miles from us, but leaves a mark in the combined history of time and events, the like of which was never before known in the history of Red River. For while the Heavens have withheld the waters for navigation, a sufficient amount has been given to make crops, both corn and cotton, to compare well with the past. This fact, as I learn, holds good out in Texas some two hundred miles, north and west, from the State line. Thus leaving many persons and much produce from one to four hundred miles away from navigation. This "drieth the pools" of commerce as well as the pools of water. As to catables, however, we have plenty of the staff and substantials of life. Flour is brought in wagons overland from Texas to our very door. They raise it there. There comes a wagon, quite weather-beaten and rough. "What have you there?" "Texas flour, seven cents and a half, and two bits for the sack." Sometimes the "sack" is weighed together with the flour, and goes altogether. So you see, those who can "raise the wind" can eat Texas biscuit and beef too.

The religious aspect gives much to rejoice and hope for. In Caddo the Baptist church has been much revived and enlarged. This occurred chiefly at Summer Grove. I am informed that one hundred and nine were added to the church, ninety of whom were added by conversion.

About twenty or twenty-five were aged between six and sixteen years, mostly the children of Baptist parents; twenty-five or thirty colored persons; about twenty-five adults, and the rest converted persons, proselytes from other churches, and chiefly from the Protestant Methodist. These points I get from different persons who attended the meeting. (I live only twelve miles from Summer Grove.) So there was "a time to rejoice."

As to the Methodists, they have done but little compared with what remains to be done. "A Methodist" has given you some items, and passing by what relates to my person, I will endorse what he has said, with the following additional information.

When he wrote there had been about forty added to the M. E. Church in Caddo. But facts change figures, and additional facts require the change. One hundred and thirty-seven have been added in Caddo during the present year, ninety-seven of whom are adult white persons and forty colored. (The number of children I will not publish in this notice.) So you see the Lord has not forsaken us. Nor will He, while we walk by his word. For out of the hundred and forty adults received on probation this year, nearly as many have professed to have not "a little hope," but justifying faith, and "peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Bro. Graves is "knocking along," and on the north end of the circuit has labored with success. At one meeting, through his agency and that of a very efficient local preacher, God converted between thirty and forty souls. Our P. E. has met all his quarterly meetings, and staid one or two weeks beside. And though worn down with much previous labor, his efforts were characterized with his usual zeal and success.

Truly we have been blest, and though we have not crowed as loud as some, it is not for want of success. It is because, in pressing the battle to the gate, there is so much that remains to be done, we have neither the time nor inclination. Indeed we prefer working "while it is day," that we finish the work assigned us, so that in the day of God, when all secrets shall be revealed and works awarded, our crown may tell it in trumpet tones of triumph.

But the victory is not yet won. Many severe conflicts await us. Conflicts, too, which often come whence we least and last expect them. From the world we expect opposition; also from those who are always croaking about successions, either of Popes, Bishops, or of immersion. But when it comes to that kind of opposition, found in our own ranks, which seeks to freight the church with the spirit of the world, the contest will be fierce and the battle hot. When members give up, and even prepare houses for the public dance, for the sake of gain, and even some ministers' daughters attend with those who scoff at the religion their fathers preach, the life of faith and practice is a web of contraries. One, though he be a member, or even a minister, cannot control his little daughter. She would go the dance. And another, who has built a large room, very suitable for such purposes, and used for little if anything else, cannot control his house. The people would have dances, and he thought he might as well get their money. Some such plea is filed either for justification or a pardoning excuse.

And now, preacher, you must mind how you meddle here, or you will get yourself into trouble. If you don't wish to have your name carried around, as one who does not do his lawful duty, you must be sure and let it alone! Ah, yes, that's the way. But listen to this—preacher, thou art made a watchman on Zion's wall; and if you see the sword coming, and warn not the people—in a word, if you neglect your duty, and the church suffer through your neglect, God will hold you responsible.—Ezek., 33. On the other hand, if you attend to your solemn duty, and the sword cut off any, they die, but thou art clear. And this will ever be so, if we practice what we preach.

T. J. LACY.

FEMALE EDUCATION.

TO THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE:

Dear Brethren—Allow one of the humblest among you to invite special attention to the subject above mentioned at our approaching session. Of course I need not urge the importance of the subject. This we all must feel and acknowledge. But are we doing anything in this cause that is worthy of the resources we might control? True, a Conference of Methodist preachers have not the means (pecuniary) necessary to the endowment of literary institutions, but it has been demonstrated that suitable effort among our brethren and friends will secure a handsome endowment and liberal patronage for such schools as may be recommended by the Conference and receive the united support of the preachers. While it is a slander that we hold the reins of authority over the minds and consciences of our brethren, it is nevertheless true that they are accustomed to look to the preachers to lead in all great enterprises of the church, whether literary or benevolent. For one, I confess this is the greatest evil, to my mind, that attaches to our system. Our people do not take sufficient interest in these matters until the preachers lead the way. This is by no means a legitimate effect of any rule of our church, but more the result of habit. I can see no remedy but in the revival of a truly enterprising spirit in the Conference. There is certainly just cause for humiliation, when we contrast our efforts with those of neighboring Conferences. In Tennessee there are several flourishing female institutes, seminaries and colleges under the patronage of the Conference. Memphis Conference, too, is doing a noble work in this department. Alabama will soon equal any, if she does not excel all the other Conferences in the way of literary enterprise. Louisiana Conference, the youngest of them all, will outstrip us very soon. We have not a female school in all our bounds that has patronage sufficient to keep it alive. There is but one of any note under the patronage of the Conference. Mississippi seems in the cause of education, as in finance and politics, doomed to failure.

Now, dear brethren, is there no remedy for this so far as Methodism is concerned? Will not the same means (nay far less) invested at home, secure for our children all the advantages on the one hand that they desire from going abroad, while on the other hand they will be protected from all the disadvantages. Cannot our people be impressed with the propriety and practicability of home education? Surely they can. The time has fully come when we must act decisively and promptly on this subject. We want good schools for our daughters as well as our sons. If the sites at present occupied are not sufficiently eligible, let us select others. If upon examination, however, we find places now partially occupied, are suitable in all respects, let us put forth some thing like commendable efforts to build up the schools under our patronage. We can certainly have as good schools in other parts of the State as at Holly Springs and Grenada. But it is objected that they are private enterprises. So they would seem, but they are by consent made the favorites of the church, through the instrumentality and influence of the preachers of the Memphis Conference; aye, and not a few in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference. We know more than one of the local and travelling preachers in our bounds that turn all their influence in favor of distant schools, who, if they would unite as they should, might contribute largely to the establishment of female schools of high order at home.

In our humble judgment it will not do to appoint agencies for the purpose of endowing our schools without the cheerful co-operation of the Conference. Nor will it do well to appoint a man to this work merely because we deem him unfit for any other. A man of that sort is unfit for any place as a Methodist preacher, and should not receive an appointment at all. Without making invidious distinctions, our honest judgment is, that Mississippi Conference did last winter what she should have done for Centenary College, in appointing one of our best and ablest men to act as agent. Does not the cause of female education demand an equal outlay of talent, influence and effort? Certainly it does. We had better retire, and give the field to others, than continue to perpetrate such folly as we have done hitherto in this matter. Our ministry in years and experience forbids the obtrusion of plans and specifications, and we may apologise for these hints. But we will indulge the hope that something will be done that shall prove worthy our vocation.

Respectfully, H. J. HARRIS.

A laborer named McCanna was killed in Charleston, a few days ago, by a stone falling upon him from a building which he was engaged in repairing.

Foreign News by the Asia.

The steamship Asia arrived at New York on the night of the 8th. We make the following extracts from her mails:

Operations in the Crimea.

The principal portion of the news from Sebastopol, consist of obscure accounts of the manœuvres of the two armies in the field, the substance of which appears to be that the Allies are moving forward systematically in strong force, and that the Russians are retiring in good order, back upon their fortified positions.

The British and French were engaged in clearing away the ruins of the city. The French and Sardinians had advanced from the Tcherunya and Baidar line, and correspondence of the 13th says the French posts were within nine miles of Bakshi-Serai, also close to the Russian position at Aibat and Airgal, where, if at all, the Russians must make a stand.

The Russians have thirteen infantry divisions opposite the Allied lines, namely, one division of Guards at the fortifications on the north plateau, two at Inkermann, two on McKenzie's Ridge, and the remaining eight guard the series of plateaus from Bakshi-Serai down to Aitodor and the river courses of the Belbec, Matioha and Alma.

English correspondence to October 12, supposes that the Russians from the north side of Sebastopol were falling back by detachments on Perekop. There was, however, no diminution of the fire from the forts and batteries on the north side of the harbor. The fire during the last four days had been very active, and was chiefly directed against the Malakoff and the French quarters in the western part of the south side.

A Russian dispatch of the 22d, via Berlin, says the Allies, forty thousand strong, had marched from Eupatoria towards Tonlat; but on the 23d, perceiving our lancers on their left flank, they retired behind Atkatschi.

The announcement that the Russians had blown up Fort Nicholas and their other works at Otchakoff, is confirmed.

Nothing has occurred between Kinburn and Nikolaief.

English letters say that the gunboats reconnoitred to near Nikolaief.

Major Delafield, Major Murdoch, jr., and Captain McLellan, American officers, had arrived in the camp. A British general order provides them with rations during their stay in the Crimea.

Miss Nightingale had returned to Sebastopol.

General Wyndham, the hero of the Redan, has the command of the Fourth British division.

The land strength of the Allies in the Crimea, including the sick, is officially reported at 210,000 men.

Affairs in the Baltic.

The weather was bad, and the English fleet near Nargen was preparing to leave.

The gunboats at Elsinore had been ordered to England.

The coasting trade was again springing up since the removal of the fleet.

The latest dispatch from St. Petersburg, dated Oct. 20, says: "The whole of the militia have been ordered on the march, to reinforce the army of the South under General Ludars. Two liners, sixteen frigates and some gunboats have entered the Dnciper."

The Emperor Alexander had left Nikolaief for Elizagood, 130 miles northward. The usual story is revived, that his reason is affected.

There is nothing more definite as to the resignation or recall of Gen. Simpson than was brought out by the Arago. The London Post says that a new commander is appointed; but does not give his name. Rumor mentions Sir DeLacy Evans, Codrington, Markham, Colin, Campbell and others.

Osman Pacha, who had been taken at Sinope, had been exchanged.

The Moniteur publishes a list of the stores found in Sebastopol, comprising a million shot and cartridges, and half a million pounds of gunpowder.

A St. Petersburg letter of the 15th says the Allied successes had caused despondency, yet everything indicated the intention of Russia to continue the war. Preparations were making for a fourteenth levy and enrollment of the local militia. Prayers were offered for the Emperor's safe return from the Crimea.

The attitude of Sweden was regarded in St. Petersburg with increasing suspicion.

Great Britain.

A new coalition of Lord John Russell, Bright, Gladstone and D'Israeli was still talked of.

Lord Palmerston wishes the Earl of Shaftsbury to accept the vacancy in the colonial secretaryship, owing to Sir William Molesworth's death, but his colleagues oppose. The name of Lord John Russel is also mentioned for the office.

An important discussion has been held in the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce on the present British monetary crisis. Resolutions were adopted that although there is no cause for immediate alarm, the government should anticipate and prevent any break down of public confidence by suspending the operation of the act bank of 1844 as during the crisis of 1847. The London Times opposes this expedient.

The city of London had presented an address to the Queen upon the glorious successes of the allied army, to which the Queen made a suitable reply, promising a vigorous continuance of the war.

The London papers comment strongly on Admiral Stirling's dilatory movements in the Pacific, by which, on the 20th of May, he permitted the Russian fleet to escape.

Lord Wharncliffe and Mr. C. Lucas, member of Parliament, are dead.

The New York oilpper ship Carrier Pigeon, abandoned at sea, was towed by a steamer into Cork harbor. The captain and crew afterwards arrived there in a boat.

The ship America went ashore at Gibralter and became a total wreck.

Sir Charles Napier was canvassing Southwark (London) for Parliament, vice Molesworth, with good chances of success.

France.

The Bank of France had arranged to obtain some millions of francs in silver from the Bank of Amsterdam, and it was rumored that it was also intended to issue 25 and 50 franc bills.

The Paris papers say that splendid gold mines have been discovered in Cayenne.

Belgium.

The Chambers are to meet on the 14th of November.

The King of Belgium actively offers his mediation in the war.

Denmark.

The Ministry is reconstituted. M. Balg is Minister of the Interior and President of the Council.

The name of Congress, says a letter from Berlin, has been erroneously given to the meeting called by Denmark for the settlement of the Sound dues. Denmark has simply invited the States of the Baltic, namely: Prussia, Russia, Sweden, Mecklenburg and Lubec to a conference, in order to come to an understanding with them as to the possibility of purchasing the dues. As no invitation of the kind has been addressed either to England, France or the United States, the meeting cannot in any way be termed a European Congress.

Greece.

The Ministry has been changed again. M. Coudostlenati is Minister of Finance; Christopould, Public Instruction; Bolte, the Interior; Tricoupi, Foreign Affairs.

Egypt.

The Pacha of Egypt has prohibited the export of grain after the 6th of January next, owing to a short coming in the rise of the Nile.

Details of the Attack on Kars.

From the Daily News.

ERZEROUM, Oct. 5.—Yesterday evening there arrived here an express, with letters of the 30th of September, from Kars. The letters were written in the evening, and contained the intelligence that, on the morning of that day, the Russians invested Kars on all sides in full force. The batteries at Kars opened a murderous fire on the besiegers. Three times did the Russians gain a footing in the Turkish retrenchments—and three times were they driven out by the Turks at the point of the bayonet. Col. Lake distinguished himself in the contest, not only by his courage, but by his skill. It was he who drove the enemy from the inglis Tabia. Eight hundred Russians were slain before a redoubt defended by four hundred Turks. The firing lasted seven hours and a half, when the Russians took to flight.

The Turks performed prodigies of valor, and our European officers—Colonel Lake and Captains Tressiain and Thompson—distinguished themselves. Mr. Churchill, formerly attache of our embassy from Paris, and now Secretary to General Williams, commanded at one of the redoubts, and showed himself a thorough Englishman. A postscrip of a letter of the 1st inst., adds, that the loss of the Russians is estimated at about eight or nine thousand killed or wounded. About four thousand corpses lie under the walls of Kars. The Turks are busied now in burying them. The enemy lost besides this a great quantity of stores, and about 300 prisoners were taken, amongst whom were many officers. Four guns are said to have been taken. The loss of the Turks is reckoned at about 700 killed and wounded.

This great battle, which had so fortunate a termination—thanks to the skill of the commander, Gen'l Williams—shows clearly enough that the Turkish soldier, when well led, is not only brave, but able to distinguish himself like the soldier of any other nation. At the same time it must convince Europe in general, and the Turkish government in particular, that the latter has no good native officers, since, from the commencement of hostilities in Asia until the present moment, that is the only victory the Turks have gained, and this is owing to General Williams. When the Turks were under native commanders they experienced nothing but defeats.

I hope that by Tuesday we shall have other dispatches from Kars. I will forward them without delay when they arrive.

This evening I saw a letter written by a Boy of Livania (Turkish Georgia.) He says that Omer Pacha, having concentrated his troops in Churukshu, had marched on Uzinghet, and that he had made himself master of the place without much difficulty. He received there a deputation from the Georgian nobility, who make their submission to the Porte in the name of the inhabitants of the district. According to this letter, Omer Pacha was marching towards Akaltzick, for the purpose of making a diversion in favor of Kars, and of ultimately coming to the assistance of that city. This last news tallies with that contained in letters received the day before yesterday, which say that Omer Pacha has communicated with the Muchir in Kars, telling him to maintain his position for twenty days, at the expiration of which he would be in Kars with his army. He must be near there by this time, and it would be most fortunate if he should arrive in time to cut off the retreat of Gen. Mouravieff, and be able to invest Alexandropol.

P. S.—Not one of the European officers at Kars was killed or wounded.

Letter from an English Officer Engaged in the Battle.

KARS, Monday, Oct. 1. — Here I am on the Karadagh again, none the worse for my late illness. Last night the Russians attacked us in force, and (between you and me and the post) very nearly took Kars. The fight was a most bloody one, and lasted eleven hours and a half, without one second's intermission. The Russians left upwards of 2000 men dead on the field, and their loss in killed, wounded and prisoners, must have exceeded 6000 men. What do you think of us Kars chaps after that? I was not actively engaged, as they know better than to attack my almost impregnable battery a second time; but I did great service with my heavy guns, and twice drove them out of a battery they had taken and turned upon us. It was a nasty sight—the field—afterwards. It was completely covered with dead bodies, mostly Russians, as our men did not lose more than five or six hundred altogether.

The defence was commanded by dear old Gen. Emeti, and when our General thanked him in the name of Queen Victoria for his gallant repulse of the enemy, I thought the brave old boy would have burst his heart open—he was so proud. The Turks fought—not like lions, but like fiends. I never saw such desperate recklessness of life. You can form some idea of what a desperate business it was, when I tell you that the Russians had their whole force concentrated upon Gen. Emeti's division, which, with the reinforcements he afterwards received, did not amount to 8000 men. The reports have just come in, and there are more than 3000 killed on the side of the enemy.

The Recall of Gen. Simpson—His Probable Successor.

From the London Daily News, Oct. 25.

That Gen. Simpson comes home immediately appears to be beyond a doubt. Owing to his great and increasing infirmities he has persisted in his request to be allowed to resign. But if it has been decided who is to be his successor, the secret has been carefully kept. All that has been allowed to transpire is, that the new Commander-in-Chief will be chosen from among the general officers already with the army, and that no new man will be sent out.

An impression prevails among those who have access to the best information, that some time may be allowed to elapse ere a successor to Gen. Simpson is nominated. It is thought so long as our troops are divided—part of them before Sebastopol and part engaged in the northern expedition—Sir Richard Eyre and Sir Colin Campbell will each be allowed to retain a separate and entirely independent command.

Gen. Mouravieff's Account of the Battle of Kars

From the Invalide Russe, Oct. 18.

General Mouravieff announces, under date of Sept. 30, that having been informed that the Turkish troops had received reinforcements in the neighborhood of Batoum, and that the enemy purposed effecting a movement simultaneously advancing on Kars, he resolved to attack the latter fortress on the 29th. Three columns were told off for this purpose. They were also formed in intermediate by columns, under the command of Lieutenant-General Prince Gagarino, and also a general reserve; lastly, a special detachment was to act according to special arrangements.

The columns advanced to the assault in the greatest order, and with the greatest intrepidity. The attack of Major Gen Bazine was crowned with success; but, unfortunately, almost at the commencement of the onslaught several of the principal chiefs and commanders under their orders were killed or wounded. The result of this was that the unity of the operations were broken, and the most brilliant efforts during a sanguinary combat lasting several hours could not re-establish it.

Gen. Mouravieff, having convinced himself of this, caused the reserve to advance, and, under its protection, ordered the assaulting column to effect their retreat.

The obstinacy with which our troops fought is beyond all praise.

During the combat they took from the Turks fourteen different flags and pennons, and either spiked or dismounted several of their guns.

Our loss is not yet exactly known, but it is very considerable. The enemy must also have sustained heavy loss.

Among our generals three are grievously wounded, and one less dangerously.

The blockade of Kars is re-established as before.

DEATH OF BISHOP VANDEVELDE.—This Roman Catholic prelate died in Natchez, Miss., 13th inst. The cause of his death, says the Concordia Intelligencer, was of the most painful and agonising character, he having the misfortune, three weeks since, to break one of his legs in two places, by a fall from elevated door steps. The consequent inflamation produced fever, which merged into the yellow type, causing indescribable agonies during the spasms of the epidemic to his broken bones.

The laying out of the dead in state, and the funeral services were of the most imposing character.

The body arrayed in the rich vestments of his office, enclosed in a costly metalic sarchophagus, placed in an inclined position, half standing, on a catafalque in the shape of a cross, was exhibited in state, all the night following the death, in the episcopal mansion adjoining the cathedral. Great crowds went to see.

He was in the 65th year of his age. Born in Belgium, and a Jesuit. He came to the United States more than forty years ago, and for fourteen years was an humble missionary to the Indian tribes in Western Missouri. Since that time he has been at the head of Catholic universities and Bishop of Chicago and Natchez.

ANITE CITY.—If New Orleans is not healthy, health is not far off. Not to speak of the delightful watering places on the Gulf and Lake, the thrifty village stations that have sprung up, at the distance of a few hours' ride, on the Great Northern Railroad, are hard to beat. A friend who still carries on business here, but recently moved his family to Amite City and fixed them down in a neat cabin—in a region of pine and oak, potatoes and buttermilk—gives us the result, aviordupois. His three lads, aged 19, 16 and 13 years, were weighed July 1st; on Nov. 5th, weighed again, and had gained respectively 20, 17 and 11 pounds! As for his fat baby, the scales could not be believed; while his handsome grown daughter declined them!

LIVINGSTON, ALA.—Rev. R. M. Saunders writes, 16th inst: "We have had a gracious revival. The church was greatly blessed. There were twelve conversions and nine accessions to the church. It was a precious season."

A Matter for the Consideration of the Southern Conferences.

A change in the time of holding the Southern Conferences would be advantageous in many respects: so that the sessions be in the spring or late winter, rather than, as now, in the fall or early winter.

Yellow fever lurks in our low latitude till near Christmas. This has more than once put things out of joint. Commodities just recovering from its visitation are not well prepared to entertain a Conference. Two years ago the Mississippi Conference had to be changed from Port Gibson to Canton. This year the Memphis had to be postponed two weeks—on account of the yellow fever. Such changes are ilty made, and cause confusion on the eve of meeting; and yet they must sometimes be made.

If the whole country were allowed to get healthy and fully recuperate its social, moral and financial energies, Conferences would meet under better auspices.

Travelling facilities are in bad or uncertain condition in the fall and early winter. Red River, Arkansas, Ouachita, Yazoo, Alabama and Tombigbee and the Texas rivers are generally at a low stage till mid-winter or spring. Attendance at Conference under these circumstances is costly and inconvenient and comparatively thin.

These causes, united with others, put off the season of pecuniary and provisional abundance. The sugar and the cotton crop must be sent down to market, sold and returns made before there is a comfortable and easy feeling throughout the country. The church collections are made and the business of the year wound up under a state of rigid scarcity. Preachers often receive their pay in part, by drafts of the most generous and wealthy of the membership on their merchants, payable in February or March. Much of the Missionary fund comes in this shape, and it is the best that can be done.

We have got ahead of the season of health, business, navigation and money.

To the Conferences about convening we submit these considerations. Would it not be well to take some action, in the way of formal requests to the Bishops, etc., by which their sessions may be pitched forward at least two or three months. The present arrangement causes much loss every way.

The Late Rev. John Lane.

Resolutions of the Quarterly Conferences for Jackson and Clinton, Miss.

At a meeting of the official members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Jackson Station, held on Wednesday evening, Nov 7th, 1855, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously resolved:

"Forasmuch as it has pleased Almighty God, in His wise but inscrutable providence, to remove from this world our beloved friend and brother and venerated father in Christ, Rev. John Lane, therefore,

"Resolved, That the long official and social relations between the members of this body and the deceased had by his unmerone public and private virtues, by his long and faithful labors in the Christian ministry, by his uniform urbanity, hospitality and fatherly kindness, and above all, by his zeal, fervor, and self-sacrifice in his Master's cause, won a place in our hearts' best affections.

"Resolved, That while we reverently bow to and submissively acquiesce in the mandates of Him who is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind, and devoutly thank Him for the long loan of His faithful servant to us, yet we deply deplore the loss to the church of so good and useful a minister, and to his personal friends, and especially his children and companion, the irreparable breach in the social circle and the heart's best affections.

"Resolved, That we tender to his family our warmest sympathies, and offer for them our most earnest prayers.

B. M. DRAKE, P. E.,
Chairman.

THOMAS GREEN,
Secretary.

J. A. GODFREY,
Preacher in charge.

JACKSON, MISS., Nov. 16, 1855.

REV. H. N. MCTYEIRE:

Dear Sir—I was requested to forward you the following preamble and resolutions for publication in your paper.

J. B. GREAVES.

"At the fourth Quarterly Conference for Clinton circuit, (Miss. Conference) Nov. 10, 1855, the following preamble and resolutions were offered by the Rev. D. M. Wiggins, P. C., and unanimously adopted; after which Rev. B. M. Drake, P. E. addressed the Conference in some feeling and appropriate remarks relative to the life and character of our departed brother in Christ.

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS.

"Whereas, in the providence of Almighty God, the Rev. John Lane has been removed from among us,

"Resolved, That in the fall of our venerable and beloved brother, a friend, a father, and in many respects, a great man in the church has fallen.

"Resolved, That whilst we deeply regret the removal of our beloved brother, we submit to a kind Providence, knowing that God is too wise to err and too good to do wrong.

"Resolved, That we deeply sympathise with his bereaved and afflicted family, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to them by the Secretary, and also to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

J. B. GREAVES,
Secretary.

Finding his Level.

A writer in Zion's Herald complains that sometimes the church system works unequally; keeping back the modest and hard-working and worthy, while the pushing man of strong friends is unduly rated. He says: "Our economy is capable of great imbecility or great power. Methodism, properly worked, will produce an able ministry. If, through an error of the judgment or of the heart, we place thistles to reign over cedars, we must expect to reap the bitter fruits of our folly in thus perverting the order of God. Methodism, like all other systems, is efficient in proportion as it moves in harmony with the divine mind, as exhibited in nature, providence and revealed truth. Working with God in every sense is the great secret of success."

To this the editor replies:

"We think our excellent brother has formed his judgment from exceptional cases, and not from general results. It has long been our opinion that no other ecclesiastical system secures the success of a true man so effectually as ours.

"True, a valuable man may occasionally be kept unjustly in the back ground too long, and an inferior, managing, scheming man be pushed forward prematurely. This occurs under every system. But in Methodism every man is almost infallibly sure to find his true level in due time. The people soon learn to distinguish between those ministers who fill their churches, build them up in the faith, and are instrumental in the conversion of sinners; and those who are more showy than substantial, who, notwithstanding a certain degree of ability, are deficient in moral and spiritual power. When this discovery is made, the former cannot be kept in the shade, the latter cannot be bolstered up, either by their own management or the favoritism of others. As we have said, there may be occasional exceptions to this rule, but in the end almost every minister amongst us finds his true level."

GERMAN BEER GARDEN CHURCH AND SABBATH SCHOOL.

Mr. Editor—The interest which is everywhere manifested for this our promising institution urges us at once to give publicity of the prosperity of the same, hoping that the sympathy and assistance of the church, at home and abroad, in our Conference and elsewhere, will, through this our humble effort be mightily increased.

The opening of this school in the latter part of July, with 100 children, created quite a stir in the neighborhood of the Bear Garden District. It was a strange phenomenon to adults as well as to children, and we were almost convinced that it was nothing but mere curiosity which had induced such a large number to gather around us on this first occasion. Our experience up to this present date has taught us quite the contrary from what we expected at first. The number of children increased so that the place is not large enough to have them all comfortably seated in regular classes. This is not all. The result of our labor has been crowned with success. The conduct of our dear scholars proves this beyond all doubt. A general reformation is visible since we came here. The children look back with fear and trembling on those days when they were decorating the Sabbath with dancing and drinking in the same place where they are now taught, perhaps for the first time, about a crucified Redeemer. Nothing in the world could now persuade them to visit such a place again. But now, with a sure prospect of success for the future, we are obliged to abandon this glorious cause, if we cannot have a place of our own, where we can meet with and accommodate our children. We would ask here, shall we abandon such a promising field, because we have not the means to build an appropriate place of worship in this direction of our city, where it is most needed! We answer no! Methodists never give up on such trifling affairs. From fifteen to sixteen hundred dollars will enable us to build a good Beer Garden Church, wherein there will soon be found a worshipping congregation and a flourishing Sabbath school. A suitable piece of ground we have already purchased. Through faith we have contracted debts, and we doubt not in the least but that our rich brethren here and in the country will gladly embrace this opportunity to show their philanthropy, brotherly love and Christian benevolence in establishing a monument for future generations. Brethren, this appeal is not for us; it is the Lord's work and cause we are advocating. Will not you therefore assist us with your means, and thus become at once fellow-laborers with us in this good and noble work. The capital you are laying out for this new mission will bear an interest that will reach beyond the grave. No bankruptcy will ever take place, for the Lord of heaven and earth is one of the stockholders of this our enterprise. The dying Saviour on the cross has endorsed it with his own precious blood. We would ask, therefore, again and again, who would not gladly own a share in this undertaking. Come then, brethren, let your money be forthcoming, for we stand greatly in need of it. Our beer-garden room is too small, and not weatherboarded on the sides. This makes it an impossibility for us to occupy it during the winter months. We must, therefore, either build or give up this our pioneer work for German citizens.

We know that our appeal shall be in vain if the Lord does not accompany it with his blessing, but we know also that if He touches the hearts of all the readers of the Advocate, that this trifling amount we are asking from you for the Lord's sake will be made up.

In conclusion let me remark, brethren, that your humble suppliant will live and die for this Sabbath school. Yes, live and die under the blood-stained banner of the cross, is the motto of one who is not ashamed to call himself one of the least of the followers of Christ, not if the reproaches of the whole world should fall upon him.

May the Lord bless His whole church with an outpouring of His holy spirit, and may all the Sabbath schools throughout our whole bright and happy land continue to be what they really are, the great nursery of the church, is the humble prayer of J. U.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. W. R. MILLSAPPS.

Another name must be added to the list of those honored ministers who have gloriously fallen at their poste by the fearful pestilence which has swept over our country—Rev. William R. Millsapps. He was with his afflicted people at Jackson, La., nursing them and administering to them the consolation of our holy religion, when, at the urgent request of the writer, and with the concurrence of some of his brethren in the ministry there, he consented to attend the camp-meeting at Otopasaw, in Pike county, Miss. On his way he was taken with a chill, and returned to Mrs. McCoy's, where we staid the night before. The attack we did not think wee violent, but were, as we afterwards ascertained, mistaken. He continued to grow worse, and on Wednesday evening became entirely delirious, from which he never recovered, with the exception of an interval of a few moments, and on Saturday morning, the eighth day, just at daylight, his spirit passed up to his God.

Up to the time the delirium came on he did not think he would die, but expressed a preference that the disposition of the whole matter should be, as it was, in the hands of God, feeling assured that He would do whatever was best. He had often affirmed his belief in the doctrine that "man is immortal till his work is done," and but a few days before his departure for the camp-meeting, he wrote to me that he felt safe and perfectly resigned; and after his attack, reminded me that he still had an unshaken reliance in the providence of God, and that he much preferred God should dispose of it than that the matter should be left to him. He said that to die would be to be with his mother and kindred and blessed Saviour. Two days before his death his reason seemed for a few moments to return, and with a face beaming with smiles he shouted aloud the praises of his Redeemer.

The night before his attack, while leading the family worship, he enjoyed an unusual unction of the Spirit, and after he retired, remarked that he had seldom felt so happy, and that he felt his end was nigh and that he was ready. The services made such an impression upon the family that the chapter and hymn which he used were remembered by them, and I was requested to use them at his grave.

Bro. Millsapps was born in Copiah county, Miss., 1832, born again in 1849, during a protracted meeting held by Bro. Scott. Six of the converts of this meeting entered the ministry. Two of them have gone to their reward. He graduated at the Asbury University, Green Castle, Indiana, and during the last year of his college course attended the lectures in the Biblical Department under Dr. Berry. After his graduation till the next fall he was engaged in preaching the Gospel, which to many, as they will testify, was a savor of life unto life. The next year he attended the Theological Seminary at Danville, Ky., chiefly to study the Hebrew language. At the last session of the Mississippi Conference he was received on probation, and appointed to Jackson, La. It was a far more important and conspicuous appointment than he expected, and his brethren in the ministry showed the high degree of confidence which they reposed in his ministeral abilities by placing him in a field of labor which men of years and experience might well have wished to avoid.

He entered upon his work with flaming zeal, relying upon Him who hath said to His ministers, "I am with you alway." He soon became a great favorite with his people, and when it was known that he was to fill the pulpit, citizens and students thronged the house of God to hear the words of earnestness and truth from their youthful and accomplished pastor. Whenever he preached there was but one sentiment—that one so young should preach so well. He preached the Gospel—he had no other theme. He studied his sermons with great care, writing them out in full, with prayer to God, both in the selection of the text and in the composition of the sermon, and having presented it as an offering to God that he would bless the fruit of his mind and heart, he went into the pulpit calm and trustful, and spoke as one moved by the Holy Ghost. He was a hard student, and had gathered around him books to the utmost of his means. He was affable and kind-hearted, cheerful and conciliating in his feelings, of great personal attractions, united with the ease and grace of a Christian gentleman. He was eminently popular in his manners—a kind word and look were his greetings for all. I have never known one who combined so many rare gifts of mind and heart and person, and all laid at the foot of the cross. He was full of promise and usefulness, all to his Saviour and to His church.

From childhood his fond parents wished and prayed that he might live to be a preacher. They were not disappointed. They both lived to see their sweet-spirited boy in the pulpit, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, and to receive from his lips the precious Gospel. The gentle mother is gone, and ere the earth had settled over her grave the spirit of her fond son had greeted her on the better shore. Blessed meeting! The father yet lingers, smiling through his tears, hopeful and joyous in his double bereavement and sorrow. J. J. WHEAT.

DONALDSONVILLE AND BAYOU BLACK CIRCUIT AND MISSION.

Dear Bro.—This mission extends from the parish of St. Mary to St. James, embracing the parishes of Terrebonne, Lafourche, Assumption and Ascension, a distance from extreme points of 140 miles, over as productive lands as Louisiana affords, nearly every foot of which along the river and bayous is under cultivation, employing many thousand blacks. Besides five appointments to the whites, there are embraced in this mission eighteen plantations, with an aggregate of 2500 souls; half of these (the largest in size) are preached to regularly every four weeks; the others are left out for want of time to supply them. Hitherto great inconvenience has been felt by both people and missionary for the want of appropriate houses of worship, where planter and manager and families and servants could meet together in the name of a common Saviour, in a temple exclusively set apart for the worship of the living God.

To obviate this, our Conference has very wisely recommended the erection of Methodist mission chapels on the road-side. If this was accomplished, and the views of the Conference carried out, besides the absolute utility of the thing, what a beautiful and convincing chain of argument it would present to our enemies to have our rivers and bayous studded along at suitable distances with these Bethels lifting their glittering spires to Him whose eye watches over this great work—and by the blessing of the Lord this thing will yet be.

For the erection of these chapels our prospects are certainly brightening on this mission, and although self-supporting missions have proved a failure, self-erecting chapels we think will succeed. Allow us in as brief a manner as possible to present our plan. At one of our quarterly meetings during the year, held on Bayou Black, our Presiding Elder, Dr. J. C. Keener, suggested as there is plenty of timber in the country, that the blacks themselves, out of their own time and money, with such aid as the owners may give them, do this thing, and having the co-operation of an excellent Christian manager, Bro. W. H. Mooring, a collection upon the plan was immediately taken up from the colored congregation on Col. Windham Robarteon's plantation, who were zealous in the matter, and highly pleased with the idea of contributing for the erection of a building to be set apart exclusively for God's house—no table—no money changers. The collection amounted to 140 days' work and $13, making in all equal to $153. It would be interesting to give the names of the subscribers here, but as it would occupy too much space, we will not give you the names of the thirty, but of the three mighty men: Ben Ewin, who was the first heard, six days; Charles Black, six days, and Bird Ewin, six days. On the following Sabbath a subscription was taken up on George Jones' plantation, Bayou Lafourche, amounting to forty-eight days' work, and $43, amounting in all to $91. The mighty men here were Daniel, ten days; Julius, seven days, and Lorenzo Fairfax, six days. The master will afford much assistance in the erection of this chapel.

The contest for the first Methodist mission chapel on this mission and this plan is between these two places. It was late in the season when the project was started, or one or perhaps both of these chapels would have been dedicated to the worship of God are this. Though requiring much labor and pains, particularly on so large a mission as this, I find the quarterly lovefeast tickets an important aid in keeping a healthy state of things in the church. It is the thing. A quarterly examination is entered into of the character of every member, and a ticket given or withheld as the case may be. Thus the conduct of the faithful is approved, while that of the unfaithful is censured and disapprobated, at the same time "supplying us with a quiet and inoffensive method of removing disorderly members." Making due and proper allowance for all progress, I have no doubt but the plan is as important and works as well now as it did in the days of Mr. Wesley. Human nature is the same, and it works well with the white members too, and if the brethren will begin and attend to this old system, good and true, a mighty and powerful change for good will be wrought throughout our glorious Zion, before the meeting of the next General Conference.

At Brashear City we have a good congregation, and have been holding our meetings in a large cooper shop, politely tendered to us by Mr. Eugene Daly. Here we recently held a quarterly meeting. Robert B. Brashear, Esq., had already presented to the Methodist E. Church South an eligible site in this city for a church, and remarked to Bro. Keener that he had intended to build a small chapel on his plantation for his servants, but if a comodious church could be built on this lot with accommodations for the blacks he would prefer it; to see what the neighbors were willing to subscribe, and whatever should be lacking on the subscription list he would give.

The plan was presented to the meeting, $530 has already been subscribed, and with such gentlemen as R. B. Brashear and others to back the project the church is built.

Missionary Reports.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South.

MT. CARMEL COLOREN MISSION, Mississippi Conference.

This must serve as my first, second, third and fourth quarterly reports for this mission to colored people. It lies within the bounds of Cole's creek circuit, embracing part of Jefferson and Franklin counties. There are six public appointments, and generally large congregations. I think I can safely say that upwards of two thousand have been preached to this year, and about one thousand have received catechitical instruction. I make it obligatory on the part of the children and members of the church to participate in the instructions given from time to time, and also entreat those who are not members to take an interest in the lessons given. There are 200 members. I have taken on probation 171, and there doubtless have been many conversions. The mission is in a prosperous condition. C. R. GONFREY.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.

EUFAULA, ALA., Nov. 10, 1854.

Mr. Editor—I am requested by the Quarterly Conference of this station, held here on the 5th Nov., to forward the following resolution, adopted at that meeting, for publication.

Yours, respectfully,
Enw. B. YOUNG, Sec'y.

"Resolved, That this Quarterly Conference is of the opinion that a repetition of baptism tends to lessen its dignity and sanctity, and that a submission to and rebaptism by members of the M. E. Church, South, is not consistent with their relations thereto, therefore it is believed proper that any person in good standing in this church, intending to submit to such rebaptism by the ministers of another church, would better regard the relations existing between them and the church by deferring such rebaptism until there might be effected between them and the church a formal separation.

S. F. PILLY, P. E.
J. L. COTTON, P. C.

ED. B. YOUNG, Sec'y."

CAMP MEETING.—Rev. C. D. Nicholson writes, 17th inst: "Our camp meeting commenced 11th Oct. We had a very good time for it, and a happy meeting. It was held near Jackson C. H., Miss. We commenced on Thursday and closed on Monday morning following. There were some twenty conversions, and thirteen accessions to the church. There was a large number of mourners. Our meeting closed with increasing interest. The membership was very much revived. It closed one day sooner than was expected."

New Slave Trade—Frightful Revelations.

It appears from a parliamentary paper, presented to the house of Lords, entitled "Correspondence upon the subject of Emigration from China," that a new slave trade is growing up in the world, and under British auspices. The revelation is frightful. A memorial from certain shipmasters lately returned from the China Islands, details the cruelties practiced on the Chinese laborers employed in the export of guano, under the authority of persons responsible to the government of Peru. These unfortunate men are represented to be carried from China to the Chincas for the most part, if not exclusively, on board of British vessels:

No sooner are they landed from the ships than they see tall African negroes placed over them as boatswains, armed with a lash of four plaits of cowhide, laid up in the form of what seamen call round sennet, five feet in length, and an inch and a half in diameter, tapering to a point. During the forenoons, for regular offences, (or such as the overseers please to term such) this instrument was not much used, but as about four o'clock in the afternoon many of the weakest had not performed task work, the boatswain freely used to start those behind to bring the day's supervision to a close. The slightest resistance was punished by a flogging little short of murder, as on many melancholy occasions we have witnessed, being nearer than we desired.

The first six to twelve cuts stifled the most agonising cries that rang through the fleet—cries we heard day by day, but only then knew the full amount of suffering that called them forth. There was no tying up, the nearest Chinaman being compelled, by a cut of the lash, to lay hold of an arm or leg, and stretch the miserable sufferer on his stomach on the guano. The mere weight alone of the lash made their bodies shake, blackening the flesh at every blow, besides cutting like a sabre; and when a convulsive movement took place, a subordinate placed his foot on the shoulder to keep the quivering body down. Two dozen made them breathless, and when released after thirty-nine lashes, they seemed slowly to stagger over, reeled and fell, and were carried off to the hospital; in most cases, if they recovered, committed suicide, for no human heart, unless elevated by Christian training, could, after undergoing so cruel an infliction, ever have more than two feelings, that is, death to those inflicted from, or to himself. Accordingly, during our stay there, many sprang over the cliffs, many buried themselves alive in the guano, and many hid themselves in the caves to starve to death; their dead bodies floating all around in numbers. In one instance, two, emboldened by pity shown them by a ship-master, hid themselves on board his vessel, one of whom survives, and is now in this country.

Where is the Duchess of Sutherland? Where is Aunt Harriet Beecher Stowe? Where is Greeley? Where is Seward? Where is the whole lot of abolition philanthropists? A most infernal system of slavery is in progress and yet we hear nothing from them.

Ah, we forgot. These Chinamen are free—in name—and are consequently entitled to not the slightest particle of abolition sympathy!

Out upon such "whited sepulchres." They look well enough outwardly, but how full of moral rottenness they are within! Perhaps they will reap the reward of their hypocrisy in due season.

THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.—Rumors have been rife of late respecting a reported sharp correspondence between the two Governments concerning the construction of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, and that serious difficulties and disagreements had arisen. The following paragraph, which we copy from the National Intelligencer, of the 14th, sets forth the matter in its true light:

In our brief paragraph of yesterday referring to recent correspondence between the Government of the United States and that of Great Britain, it was inadvertently stated that the latter had not replied to the request to make known definitely its construction of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. The reverse is the fact. The British Government has made a reply, agreeing to the construction of our Government and submitting a different construction, but leaving the question open for further negotiations. The correspondence has not been angry or unfriendly in its tone on either side. Indeed, from the urbanity and courtesy which is known to characterise the parties entrusted with it, no harshness or diplomatic impropriety could have been expected.

LARGE CARGO.—The splendid Memphis packet John Simonds, Captain C. B. Church, arrived yesterday with 4630 bales cotton, 32 hogsheads tobacco, 221 barrels flour, 114 sacks corn, 223 do. wheat and 284 do. rye.

THE LONDON TIMES—WAR

The recent fulminations of the "Thunderer" against the United States; its war-breathing spirit; its insulting arrogance; and its threatening attitude generally, have not left room for extravagant demonstrations of wrath on the part of the press, this side of the Atlantic, as we at first apprehended. We are very glad such has proved the case. The period has long since passed, in this country, for an extravagant display of indignation on account of anything that may appear in the English press. This nation is perfectly independent of British press, people and government, and a great enough and strong enough to grapple with and overcome them all, in any struggle the exigencies of the occasion may demand.

It is very true that, in case of war, England could inflict tremendous injury upon us, having so vast a preponderance of naval strength on the ocean. But we could inflict more upon her. She could not bring our national existence in jeopardy. We could here. We could get along without a solitary article she manufactures or sells. She could not exist twelve months without our cotton, corn and wheat. Without these great staples, her swarming millions would be out of employment and in a state of starvation. The fearful cry of "Bread or Blood" would speedily be heard in the streets of the mighty metropolis—startling her aristocracy from their day dreams of security, and causing the "fast anchored isle," to its center. The course of supply of "Bread" being cut off, there is no telling the quantity of "Blood" that would flow. The Parisian Reign of Terror might be revived, and the greatest and best of the Empire be murdered by the scum of the gutters and the reekings of the sewers—a process exceedingly fashionable when the people of Paris ruled through Robespierre, Danton, Marat!

In the United States, none of these dreadful consequences could ensue from a war with England. True, cotton would be low; labor idle; the wheels of commerce would revolve sluggishly; wheat and corn, and all other products would command but nominal prices; everything would come to a comparative stop for a time being; but still our country would flow with all the necessities of life, while it could manufacture, within ourselves, every needful article for domestic use. Hence, our condition would be one of complete independence. And, in one year we would have a war or uniform upon the seas than our gigantic adversary.

But, it is simply folly to talk about war between the United States and Great Britain. Unless, indeed, we assume that common sense has fled the two countries in unmitigated disgust. England could not strike us without hurting herself more than she hurt us; and we could not do England an injury that would not fall upon ourselves. Suppose, for instance, that war actually existed, and we should commence ploughing England. What would we have accomplished? Why, the destruction of our best customer, worth more to us than all other nations! And then, assume that England came off conqueror. What then? Why she would have succeeded in destroying a nation the products of which are absolutely indispensable to her greatness, power and prosperity!

To suppose that two such countries—claiming to be the most enlightened, moral and christian on earth—would coolly enter upon the pleasant business of cutting each other's throats, and commit untional suicide at the same time, seems to us the height of absurdity. It would be playing at a game where there was everything to lose and nothing to win. Sensible people and sensible governments never enter upon such foolish hazards.

The course of the London Times has been strongly condemned by the conservative British press, and by the British commercial and financial public. It has also encountered the reprobation of the first men of the kingdom. The Liverpool Times thus alludes to an observation made by the Earl of Ellesmere, which we quote for the purpose of correcting the Earl's or Times' figures. Says the Liverpool Times:

The Earl of Ellesmere, in a lecture which he delivered the other evening on the subject of the Russian war, the persons in his own immediate neighborhood, made a remarkable statement—remarkable, certainly, when taken in connexion with the inflated and bellicose spirit of the articles in the Times, announcing that the British Government had largely reinforced the West India squadron in order to check the filibustering expeditions of the worst portions of American society. "If you ever ask me," said his Lordship, "which was the most warlike nation in the world, I should say the United States of America. They have many thousand miles of frontier, and they have next to no army at all; but they have a large population, accustomed to the use of arms, and ready to volunteer in any military expedition. When the invasion of Mexico was projected, the Government advertised for men, and an army of 20,000 men was forthcoming in a fortnight. This is what I call a warlike nation."

We beg his Lordship's perdon. When war against Mexico was formally declared by Congress, a call for fifty thousand volunteers was made. In a few weeks five hundred and fifty thousand volunteers had enrolled themselves, each one of whom could be transformed into an effective soldier after a few drillings! The difference between the facts and the Earl's figures is rather large—only a few thousand per cent.!

Now, if more than half a million of men would promptly volunteer at the call of their government, to wer upon such a weak nation as Mexico, how many would he likely to volunteer, under similar circumstances, when their country was menaced by such a powerful nation as Great Britain? Not less than a million, at the smallest computation!

Perhaps this is a view of the case never contemplated by our British contemporaries. However, there is something in it, and the more it is considered the clearer will be the conviction.—[Crescent.

EMIGRATION FROM VIRGINIA TO KANSAS.—The Frontier News states that Dr. Somers, of Virginia, was on his way to Kansas, with several other gentlemen, to make arrangements for the location of one thousand persons who purpose emigrating from Eastern Virginia this fall—sixty families being from Richmond, thirty from Staunton, fifty from Rappahannock, and the remainder from the same neighborhood. It is also announced that a large emigration is expected from the western portion of Virginia next spring. Lots at Lecompton, the seat of government, were selling quite high, and it was said that within the next twelve months about three hundred buildings will be erected there.

WEST FELICIANA.—We clip the following items from the Bayou Sara Chronicle of the 14th:

There has been two or three cases of sickness in our town; but every one at the present writing is well. We hear that the fever rages to some extent on the coast above this place. For two days past the weather has been extremely warm. From present indications, we hope we will soon have rain and that cold weather may succeed it.

W. W. Moore.—This gentleman, who has just been elected Sheriff of the parish of East Feliciana, died at the town of Jackson in that parish on the night of the 15th inst., of yellow fever. Poor Willis, he had just commenced a career of usefulness for himself and his family, when the arch enemy snatched him from among his fellow-citizens.

Deaths.

Died, of yellow fever, in Jackson, La., on Friday, the 19th October, in the 36th year of her age, Mrs. Patty A., wife of Rev. A. G. Miller.

Sister Miller was born in Western Pennsylvania on the 19th of April, 1855. When a child eleven years of age, she was brought to the knowledge of the way of salvation. She was the first of her family to embrace the Gospel, taking the lead of father and mother, who have since followed in the way of life, and she has now entered before them the valley of the shadow of death, showing how a Christian can die, and is gone to await their coming, and to welcome them to the bright world beyond. In 1841, when in the 22d year of her age, she was married to Rev. A. G. Miller, then a member of the Erie Annual Conference, and continued with him as an helpmeet in the work of the Gospel for seven years. Sister Miller has lived seven years in Jackson, where, by the excellency of her character and the purity of her life, she has made many friends for the Saviour, and friends for herself of all who know her. In Christian faith she never wavered; in Christian duty she never faltered; but with steadiness of purpose she pursued her noiseless way, diffusing the savor of Christ, awaking reverence for God and love for the Saviour.

Her life was characterized by a faithful attendance upon the public means of grace, careful attention to the private duties of a Christian, trust in God, cheerfulness of heart and tranquility of mind. Making no high professions of piety, she awakened the suspicions of none against her; she discouraged none; yet she was content with nothing less than the peace of God, which passeth understanding, and her testimony in class-meetings and love feasts was clear and refreshing, and never failed to stir the souls of those that heard her; and her prayers in our social meetings and with penitents at the Altar, were full of faith and fervor.

During her illness, though she suffered much, and believed that the time of her departure had come, she was patient and composed—recognized and addressed every friend—exhorted the servants, blessed the children—in the name of the Lord consoled her husband, and triumphed in the God of her salvation. She appeared to endure no agony in death; the grave brought with it no gloom; and she entered its dark portal as if the light of eternal day was beaming about her, while we sang,

And let this feeble body fail,
And let it drop or die;
My soul shall quit the mournful vale,
And soar to worlds on high.

B. Jones.

Died, in Copiah Co., Miss., April 17th, 1855, Mrs. Mary Millsaps, in her 37th year.

She was a woman of many virtues—virtues which grow with difficulty in earth's ungenial clime, choked and dwarfed as they ever are, by the selfishness of an ungodly race. She was a devoted wife, yielding the submission of love to him to whom in early life she gave her hand and heart—a fond and doting mother—a kind and gentle mistress—a neighbor whose influence was ever on the side of God and religion, and who, whether to cheer the sick and minister to their wants and alleviate their sufferings, or to throw the sunshine of gladness around the circle of her friends and relatives, was cherished and loved.

While yet in the bloom of youth and beauty, she chose Mary's better part, and found that religion was the joy and support of her life, both single and married, in youth and in riper years, in sickness and in health, in life and in death. She never suffered the duties and cares of a large family of children and servants to tronch upon her religious devotions. And such was the depth of her religious feelings that she was never satisfied unless she felt happy at each recurrence of prayer—which to her was three times a day. And often when her husband felt unwilling to lead in family worship, would she gather her little ones around the domestic fireside, and pour into the ear of Him who ever heareth the cries of them that love Him, her fervent petitions for herself and those whom God had given her—never omitting, as she said, the servants, whom both in life and in death, she so earnestly desired to be saved. Her sickness was long and protracted; she suffered as much in the latter part of her sickness, seemingly, as she could, to live, but instead of murmuring at her severe suffering, she rejoiced, because her Savior had suffered, and so strong was her love to Him that she would have been glad, she said, to suffer in the same way He did. Though racked by the keenest pain, it was not sufficient to divert her mind from the theme she loved; and through the live-long day and night would she praise the Lord, until worn down and exhausted, she would pause to gather strength, and then resume the strain that will fill her heart and employ her tongue through endless ages. It was the most triumphant death I ever witnessed;—death was not only vanquished, but became the occasion of her deepest joys. To those who looked on it seemed as if she had already joined the sanctified hosts above in giving glory to God. For days before she died, her happiness—rather her rapturous exultation—was uninterrupted and unspeakable. Blessed Jesus! whose disciples die such a death. J. A. W.

Died, in Yazoo City, Miss., on the 13th of October, 1855, William G. Miller, in the 43d year of his age.

Brother Miller was born in Kentucky on the 8th of June, 1812; removed with his parents to Mississippi in 1814; was converted and joined the M. E. Church at a camp-meeting held in Madison County in 1830, and lived a consistent Christian life to the day of his death. The welfare of the Church always laid near his heart, and was the subject of conversation on which he delighted to dwell; and even on his dying bed he ceased not to pray for her prosperity, and the success of his pastor in winning souls to Christ. He suffered without a murmur, and left the world in peace. Light.

Evidence from a Physician.

J. A. Rhodes.—Dear Sir—I have been in the practice of medicine here for about three years, and can conscientiously recommend your medicine, having used it myself, and prescribed it in a number of instances with perfect success. Respectfully, yours,

If anybody desires further evidence, they will find it in every bottle of the "CURE," which is being introduced as rapidly as possible into every town and village in the United States, Canadas, etc. The eminent chemist, Dr. James R. Later from Texas

The steamship Persevorance, Capt. Shepherd, arrived last night from Galveston, bringing papers to Saturday last. We find no news of interest. The Civilian says:

We regret to learn, as we do by a letter from Crockett, that the cotton crop of Houston county has fallen much short of an average, in consequence of the ravages of the worm. Corn is selling in that county at $1 per bushel.

The Matagorda Chronicle states that the picking season is over in that county, and remarks in regard to the crop:

The weather during the past week has been fine, clear and cool—all that could be desired for picking out the remnant of the cotton crop; two or three weeks will close the harvest, although we have not had a frost sufficient to blacken vegetation. The cotton crop of this country, when ginned, baled and numbered, will not exceed half the usual amount—about four bales to the hand.

The Victoria Advocate says the Guadalupe river will soon be in a condition to receive the long wished for boon of steam navigation, and that the pulling out of snags, and removing obstructions have been done in a most thorough manner, so that a boat can now come up to the town landing in the darkest night without feeling her way. The editor descants on the great advantage which must accrue to western Texas, "from the navigation of this new channel of conveyance," notwithstanding the twelve feet water on Matagorda bar.

The Jefferson Herald speaks of a severe storm, which visited that neighborhood on the 2d inst. It says large trees were uprooted, houses blown down, and fences swept away. The cotton also suffered severely from the beating wind and rain.

The Case of the Gen. Armstrong.

The Washington Union, of the 14th, publishes the following letter, which, although it relates to an event now a matter of history, will be found highly interesting:

To the Editor of the Union—Sir: The following is an extract of a letter written a few days after the engagement of the brig General Armstrong, in the port of Fayal, by my father, Wm. H. Watson, who was quartermaster on board said vessel, and fully corroborates the statement made in the letter of Mr. Dabney, which was published a day or two since in your paper:

"Fayal, September, 1814.—We arrived here after seventeen days passage, and had not anchored more than five hours when the Carnation, King's brig, of 20 guns, anchored close to us, and about 8 o'clock attacked us with four boats and 70 men, which we easily beat off, killing and wounding upwards of 30; we had one killed. We then warped in shore, under the guns of the fort, they being joined by the Plantagenet (74) and Rota, frigate, of 36 guns; and at two o'clock in the morning they attacked us (under the guns of a neutral fort) with 14 armed launches and boats, and upwards of 300 men; began to divide into divisions, when a well-directed fire from our guns sunk several of their boats, killing and wounding many of their men. They succeeded in getting under the bows of the brig; but such was the bravery of the crew, not one got foothold but paid his life the forefeit for his presumption. We could plainly hear them cry 'No quarters for the Yankee rascals.' Our men, you may be sure, gave them none. The pivot gun, loaded every time with 120 pounds of balls, swept them off like hail. This fight continued with great bravery about forty-five minutes, when they went off, having lost five boats and about 200 men, most of whom were killed—amongst them were the first and third lieutenants of the frigate. The brig coming in in the morning, we gave her a dozen broadsides, when, finding further defence useless, we deserted, scuttled and set fire to the brig, sooner than to let them have her. They then boarded her with great caution; but finding her of no use, left her to burn. This was the end of the General Armstrong. In our boat I took possession of they had at first 40 men; when I took her there were 17 on board—11 dead, 4 wounded and 2 whole. By this you may guess what havoc we made among them. It is, without doubt, the bloodiest battle that has been fought this war; at any rate, an honor to the nation, for they neither took us nor our vessel. We were maintained here by the American consul, who chartered a Portuguese brig to take us to Amelia Island."

W. H. Watson."

As the case is now before the Court of Claims, the above extract might be acceptable to the readers of your paper.

Respectfully, yours, etc.,
Sam. H. Watson,

The Lower Rivers.

There is but little indication of a rise in the Mississippi river below its junction with the Ohio. The last arrivals from the Arkansas say that the reported rise is that river has run out. From the Yazoo there is nothing to show that boats of ordinary draft can ascend higher than Yazoo City. From Red River a show was made so that a few boats reached Alexandria, and that is about all. From the Ouachita and tributaries the accounts are more favorable, several boats having arrived within the past few days, bringing good loads of cotton

Later from Havana.

Arrival of Steamship Black Warrior.

The steamship Black Warrior, Capt. Bulloch, arrived Monday afternoon from New York via Havana. We are are indebted to her purser for the following memoranda:

The Black Warrior left Havana on the 16th. She brings the California mails from the El Dorado, which steamer arrived in Havana on the 14th—too late to connect with the steamer of the mail line for New Orleans. Nothing new in Havana. The English brig-of-war Eagle arrived on the 16th. There were 35,000 boxes old crop sugar on hand. Quotations are drooping under late advices. Health of the city and country perfect. Among the passengers by the Black Warrior are Judge Lyons of California, and Mrs. Col. John Hays, of Texas. Ship Richmond, Gookin, from New Orleans for Havre, got knocked down in a squall on the 5th inst. The cargo shifted and rendered the pumps useless. She made but little water, but the captain deemed it prudent to put into Havana on the 16th—would sail in about two or three days.

American Party of Alabama.

The Mobile Tribune, of the 18th, says: We are indebted to a friend who arrived last night from Montgomery, for a printed slip containing the result of the labors of the called session of the Council of the American party, convened at the seat of government, as embodied in the following

Resolutions

Adopted by the State Council of the American Party of Alabama, at an Extra Session of the Council, held in the city of Montgomery, on the 15th day of November, 1855.

Resolved, That we regard the Philadelphia Platform as a political compact enlisted into by the North and South with the hope of giving peace and stability to the Union. But the spirit of that compact having been violated by the passage of resolutions trenching on our rights and equality by several of the State Councils of the North, we do now, therefore, declare that we deem it necessary and proper clearly and fully to define the position of the American Party of Alabama; repudiating every construction of the duties and obligations imposed by the constitution and rules of any portion of the "National Organization," violative of, or conflicting with, the principles hereinafter avowed. And that all the pass-words, secret signs and ceremonials, which may heretofore have been observed are hereby abolished. Discarding, therefore, non-essentials, we will but the more effectually adhere to our organization and the holding and maintaining of the following more fully expressed cardinal principles of the great American Party:

First. A strict coonstruction of the constitution of the United States;

Second. Stern and unswerving devotion to the Union under the constitution as above construed; and quenching resistance to all factious and treasonable attempts, no matter whence they may, to weaken its bonds.

Third. Congress has no power to legislate upon the question of slavery in the States where it exists, or to exclude any States from admission into the Union, because its constitution does, or does not, recognise the institution of slavery, or to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia. The fugitive slave law should be maintained and rigorously enforced. No law, or legislation, shall be attempted by Congress touching the question of slavery in the territories; and it shall cease to agitate the question of slavery in any form. We regard a strict adherence to the principles and views of this section absolutely essential to the peace and perpetuity of the Union; and we do pledge ourselves, one to the other, that we will affiliate with no party, nor support any man for office, under the government of the State, or of the United States, who does not publicly and unequivocally avow the principles of this section, without change or abatement.

Fourth. All foreigners who have come to this country, under the guarantees of our laws, and have been properly and legally naturalized according to existing forms, are fully and legally entitled in all the civil and religious privileges conferred by our constitution and laws; and shall be fully and effectually protected in them.

Fifth. A radical change in the naturalization laws is required, by the exigencies of the country, so as to effect all foreigners coming into the country after its enactment, and to prevent the transportation and immigration of paupers and criminals of other countries.

Sixth. Americans should give laws to America.

Seventh. Entire religious liberty—holding that all men have a right to worship God according to their own conscience; we will maintain a strict separation of Church and State, and oppose all higher law men, whether papal or protestant; and that all men who hold or acknowledge a right to violate the Constitution, under any pretence of civil privileges or religious belief, or whose allegiance to the Constitution is subject to be absolved by any foreign power on earth, are wholly unfit to hold office in this republican country.

Eighth. Practical economy in the administration of public affairs, State and Federal.

Ninth. Opposition to old party hacks and demagogues, and the promotion to office of men honest and capable.

Tenth. Purity of the ballot-box and peace at elections; the right of each citizen to his political opinions being inalienable.

Eleventh. No step backward from the Georgia platform.

How the Redan was Stormed.—A New Feature in Gunnery.

From a recent Crimean letter we extract the following:

The English appear to be peculiarly happy in capturing defenceless places. One of their own officers—an unwilling participant in the ridiculous farce—assured me ten hours after the Redan was known to have been evacuated, the absurd order was given to storm the place. Bugles sounded the assault; drums beat the charge; generals gallantly led their divisions; aids de camp hurried to and fro; officers could with difficulty restrain the reckless impetuosity of their troops. "With a shout of defiance," as an English paper hath it, they rushed upon the works and captured them in the most bloodless assault on record. Fortunately a bombshell had divided the wires of a battery which was to explode concealed mines, else few had escaped to tell the tale.

The Russians have showed much ingenuity in their defences, and some of their operations have puzzled John Bull. The same letter says:

The capture of this place has solved a hitherto perplexing mystery to the Allied engineers. Injured cannon were found converted into mortars, by being imbedded in the ground up to the muzzle. Thus protected from bursting, they received a double charge, were fired off by trains, and hurled balls to an incredible distance. Ambulences, for removed from the theater of action, had mysteriously suffered. Gen. Beutiok's kitchen, equally distant, tumbled about the mancuple's ears. In short, while Gen. Markham was visiting his stables to admire a charger belonging to his aid-de-camp, a ball struck his favorite, killing it before his eyes. Where do these balls come from, was the daily cry. They fell from the skies like aerolites, apparently meteoric. Now another lesson in gunnery has been taught by the despised foe.

Yellow Fever.

We have still an occasional case of yellow fever occurring, at intervals of several days. Some of our absentees have returned, and some country people carefully slip into town at odd times. The Board of Police elect, met in the court-house yard, and organized on Saturday. Whether it is safe coming into town or not, we don't pretend to say; let every one judge for themselves; we profess to know nothing about it; we only know in town and vicinity, within the last two days, some half a dozen cases of yellow fever have been taken. [Woodville (Miss.) Repub., 13th inst.

A steam fire engine has been purchased by the city of Columbus, Ohio, and is now there ready for service. Four additional steam engines are also to be built for the use of the city of Cincinnati. Pittsburg has recently had one built on a plan invented by one of her own mechanics. The steam fire engine is thus rapidly making its way over the country. It is now to be found in Cincinnati, New Orleans, Pittsburg, Columbus, Philadelphia and Boston.

Our Government has dispatched instructions to Mr. Wheeler, our Minister at Nicaragua, which of course relate to the present complicated state of things in that quarter. These matters will give special interest to the President's forthcoming Message. It is supposed that on the first day of the session, Gen. Cass will offer a resolution in the Senate for a special committee, to inquire "what has become of our Monroe doctrine?"

Kossuth writes to the New York Times that the Federal Government of Switzerland actually claims the right to decide whether anybody be a bona fide citizen of America or not?—and that they actually advance the principle that the admission to American citizenship does not annul the claims of the government to whom such a person formerly belonged, or the allegiance of the man.

Magnetic Telegraph.

Terrible Accident at Alexandria, Va.

By the Southern Line.

Alexandria, Va., Nov. 17.—A terrible accident occurred here this evening during a fire. The walls of Messrs. Dowell's chinaware store fell in, burying beneath the ruins a large number of persons. Eight dead bodies have already been taken out, besides those of seven severely wounded. It is believed that more are still under the ruins.

Great Telegraph Project.

New York, Nov. 17.—The Herald announces the formation of a gigantic Telegraph Company, with ample capital, whose intention is to purchase or lease all the old lines or build new ones, from New York to all the principal cities of the country. They have already leased the direct lines from New York to Halifax.

New York Market.

Our Cotton market is firm, with sales to-day of 1,000 bales. Flour is higher; sales of straight State at $9, good Ohio at $9 67, and Southern at $9 75 per bbl. Wheat has advanced; sales of Southern White at $2 23 per bushel. Corn is drooping, with sales at $1 per bushel.

New York, Nov. 19.—Flour is a trifle higher to-day, with sales of State at $9 18, and good Ohio at $9 81 per bbl. Wheat is rather higher, with sales of Southern Red at $2 05, and Southern White at $2 25 per bbl. Corn is a trifle lower, with sales of Mixed at 90½c per bushel. Whisky is selling at 39c per gallon.

Cincinnati, Nov. 19.—Flour is unchanged to-day, with sales at $7 90 to $8 per barrel. Sales of Hogs at 6½c per lb.; Fair Sugar commands 7½c per lb. Sales of Molasses at 36c per gallon; Coffee is selling at 11½c per lb.

River Intelligence.

Louisville, Nov. 16.—There are now 9 and a half feet water in the canal, and the river is rising at the rate of half an inch per hour. The steamer Switzerland departed yesterday for New Orleans, and the Humboldt and A. L. Shotwell departed Saturday for the same port.

Cincinnati, Nov. 17.—The river is rising, with ten feet water at this point. Flour is rather higher, with sales at $7 90 per bbl. Whisky is firm at 33½c, per gallon. Sales of fair Sugar at 7¼, and good fair at 7½c. per lb. Molasses is firm at 37 to 38c. per gallon.

Naval.—The U. S. sloop-of-war Saratoga has sailed from New York for Port au Prince to bring home the American schooner Amelia, lately seized there by order of the United States Commercial Agent, together with her crew, some of whom are to be tried for a breach of our revenue laws, if not for graver offences. The United States frigate Potomac, flag-ship of the Home Squadron, Com. Paulding, and the sloop-of-war Cyane, are fitting out with all possible dispatch, and will soon leave the Brooklyn Navy Yard for the West Indies. The two sloops have 180 men each, and the frigate 600 men. The Release has been fitted out for the Arctic Exploring Expedition, and will be fitted out immediately, by direction of the Secretary of the Navy, as an excellent ship for naval apprentices, by which they may be made practical seamen. She will be under the command of Capt. Hartstein. Mr. Steere is making a strong effort to launch the U. S. steam propeller Niagara before the 1st of January.

A writer, dating from Italy, says that two things have peculiarly struck him as characteristic of all that country, viz.: the apparent respect of all classes to any and everything religious, and the democracy of their worship. There are no chapels for the poor, and no churches for the rich, in Italy. The rich and the poor meet together—the prince and the pauper kneel alike side by side on the same cold marble floor. How irreverent, as Protestants, we often are in our places of worship, and how much disposed we are to separate the poor from the rich, and practically to say to the less favored and more unfortunate, "Stand thou there, for we are holier than thou!"

The business men of Cincinnati have been deeply excited and angered at discovering an atrocious and immense swindle perpetrated in keeping into foreign news from the press, and sending private dispatches—for a heavy consideration, doubtless—to individuals, who, being thus privately informed that there would be an advance in the price of flour, amounting to fifty cents per barrel, were enabled to make "a handsome thing of it."

Change of Mail Schedule—A Good Time Coming.—We are truly pleased to learn, says the Mobile Tribune, of the 17th, that after three months humbugging, Postmaster General Campbell has at length condescended to listen to the appeals made from this section of country, and finally consented to authorize a change of the mail route between Mobile and Montgomery, by transferring it back again to the Stockton route. The new arrangement goes into effect on to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock, when the fast and favorite Heroine—of Messrs. Cox, Breinard & Co.'s line of steamers—will commence her daily mail trips between Mobile and Stockton.

The recent attack of the British journals upon the United States, together with their mysterious allusions to the invasion of Ireland, has stirred up a number of prominent Irishmen in this city to consider whether, after all, a demonstration of some sort cannot be made at this crisis, with a view to regalvanize the spirit of liberty at home. The movement is advocated by men of ability, and a fund of some $40,000 has already been secured. Confidential conferences are held every night in the parlor of a distinguished Irish exile up town, and steps have been taken for extending the organization to Boston, Philadelphia and other cities.

A Good Discourse.—The Worcester (Mass.) Spy thus designates a sermon preached last Sunday by a minister of that city, who claimed the right to preach politics. He pointed out various instances "of aggressions which the slave power had made upon the rights of the North, transforming us into mere propagandists of the vile institution of human chattelship." A nice preacher he must be for the Free-Soilers of Worcester, avowing himself a "mere propagandist" of slavery. Or does he only mean to say that all who do not agree with him in politics have been thus transformed? Either way, this method of preaching the gospel is not strikingly in accordance with the example of Christ. [Providence Post.

The Newark Advertiser, speaking of the magnitude of the New York and Erie railroad, and its operations, says:

The whole number of cars and locomotives on this road is 3,108, which, if coupled together in one train, would reach a distance of twenty-one miles, and be able to carry 150,000 persons in one day from New York to Lake Erie. The company has in its employ not less than 5,000 persons, whose pay per month is $125,000, or $1,500,000 per year.

There are single miles on this road whose grading cost not less then $170,000 each, and one bridge, near the village of Susquehannah, built upon seventeen stone arches, at the cost of $320,000. The number of miles from Jersey City to Dunkirk is 459, and is run over by the evening express train in sixteen hours. The company has in its service six printing presses, which are constantly at work printing tickets that are never used but once, blanks, etc.

The Long Ago.

Oh! a wonderful stream is the river of Time,
As it runs through the realms of years,
With a limitless rhythm and a musical rhyme,
And a broader sweep, and a surge sublime,
That blends with the ocean of years.

How the winters are drifting like flakes of snow,
And the year in the ghost—so they come and they go,
On the river's breast, with its ebb and flow,
As it glides in the shadow and sheen.

There is a magical isle up the river Time,
Where the softest airs are playing;
There's a cloudless sky and a tropical clime,
And a song as sweet as a vesper chime,
And the Junes with the roses are staying.

And the name of this isle is the Long Ago,
And we buy our treasures there;
There are brows of beauty and bosoms of snow—
There are heaps of dust, but we loved them so!
There are trinkets and tresses of hair.

There are fragments of song that nobody sings,
And a part of an infant's prayer;
There's a lute unswept, and a harp without strings,
There are broken vows, and pieces of rings,
And the garments that she used to wear.

There are hands that are waved when the fairy shore
By the margee is lifted in air;
And we sometimes hear, through the turbulent roar,
Sweet voices we heard in the days gone before,
When the wind down the river is fair.

Oh! remembered for aye be the blessed Isle,
All the day of life till night—
When the evening comes with its beautiful smile,
And our eyes are closing to slumber awhile,
May that "greenwood" of soul be in sight.

The Central American Question.—The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, under date of the 14th, writes:

In the discussions of the Central American question by Mr. Buchanan and Lord Clarendon, the most friendly intentions were professed, and, probably, were actually entertained, on both sides. But our position is a very awkward one, as the matter now stands. Our extreme demands were positively rejected, and it remains for us to present new terms of arrangement. This cannot be done without a mortifying backout on the part of our government.

It is not at all probable that the present administration will abandon or modify their interpretation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and it is well known that they have positively and from the beginning to the end of the negotiation refused to accept the British interpretation. Still it may be hoped that the British government will adhere to the treaty, according to their understanding of it, which will prevent them from exercising any actual jurisdiction in Central America in virtue of any protectorate, and from taking possession of Greytown—an act which would practically terminate the treaty and prevent future negotiation on the subject.

At the commencement of the negotiations, two years ago, Mr. Buchanan, it is said, was instructed to represent that the present Administration disapproved of the whole treaty, and the policy of joint national action on which it was founded, and that it was the act of a prior Administration holding different views; but that still they would adhere to it and carry it out, upon the condition that the British government would adopt our interpretation of it, and, at once, abandon their claims to the Bay Islands, and relinquish the Musquito protectorate. Thus there is no chance for a recusal of the negotiation, while the present Administration is in power, nor while Lord Pulmerston, (whose peculiar hobby is this very subject of British pretensions in Central America,) remains at the head of the British government. Under these circumstances, the chief burden of the forthcoming President's message will probably be the Monroe doctrine and the means of its practical assertion.

It is believed that Com. Paulding's instructions are of a character that will produce a collision between his force and that of Admiral Faushaw, in case the latter should take possession of Greytown.

Great Sale of Wild Animals.—The Zoological collection of Mr. Seth B. Howe, which has been on exhibition at the Hippodrome in New York, for a few weeks, was sold at auction on Tuesday, the 13th, the proprietor, it is said, having amassed a fortune and intending to retire from business. A number of showmen and circus managers from different sections of the United States were in attendance. The following are some of the prices obtained: Wagon and cage containing a white Polar bear, said to be the only one now alive in America, sold to E. M. Shields for $450; original cost, $1,100. A wagon and cage containing a Royal Bengal tiger, sold to Henry Butler for $225; the animal originally cost $800. Three performing lions, which cost $2,000, brought only $375. Elephant Canada, used for performance in the ring, sold for $1,400. He eats 200 pounds of hay, two bushels of oats, and drinks three barrels of water every day. Two other elephants brought $1,000 each, and another $1,100. All of them originally cost $2,000 each. A lion and a hyena sold for $75, and a Brazilian tiger for $110, a little over one-fourth the cost.

Important for the Shipping Interest.—The important fact is mentioned in a letter from Paris to the National Intelligencer, that the French Government has authorized the purchase by their subjects of foreign vessels, for the purpose of placing them under the French flag, and to enjoy all the attending privileges of national built vessels. This, it is presumed, will open a large and very advantageous field for the enterprise of our ship-builders and shipowners. The writer says:

"The Government has promulgated a decree which will have an important and highly advantageous effect upon our tonnage interest. This decree allows foreign-built vessels to be naturalized, and to take the French flag, with all its advantages, on the payment of ten per cent. on their assessed value. It will be a great opening for American vessels of 600 to 800 tons, and more especially for steamers of 1,000 to 1,200 tons, which will be in great demand, and will meet with a ready sale. They have also admitted timber, lumber, naval stores, etc., free of duty for the ensuing three years. This will open a great market for all those articles, and likewise give profitable employment in their conveyance by our vessels."

A dispatch of the 12th inst., from Rome, N. Y., says:

On the road towards Utica the steam saw mill situated on the hill of that place, blew up about nine o'clock in the morning, killing two persons instantly. One of the killed was Henry S. Roberts, son of Judge Roberts, of this village. The other one killed was the fireman, whose name we have not been able to ascertain.

The Crop.—We are sorry to learn from the most reliable source, that the cane is yielding very poorly at this time, owing to the present warm weather, which has caused vegetation to commence anew. From seven to nine hundred pounds per arpen, is all the cane is now yielding in this vicinage, which it must be admitted is but a trifle over one half the usual yield in ordinary seasons. Cool freezing weather is now very much needed, and improvement cannot take place without it. [Thibodaux Minerva.

The Tulip and the Ladies.—Some one who was at the Crystal Palace Flower Show, asks: What can be the reason that the tulip is so acceptable to the ladies? Its form we know is beautiful, and its colors are lustrous; but as much may be said of a hundred other flowers. Can it be for the sentiment associated with it, and for the language it is supposed to utter? On this subject we confess ourselves largely indebted to the learned research of the ingenious Madame de la Tour. From her we learn that, in the language of flowers, the tulip means "a declaration of love." The rose is beauty—good again; the orange tree is generosity—good again; the strawberry is perfect excellence—better still; but the tulip—oh! the tulip—is the declaration of love! Après cela, la fin du monde, as the French say. On the banks of the Bosphorus the tulip is the emblem of inconstancy; but it is also the symbol of the most violent love. The wild tulip is found in the fields of Byzantium, with its crimson petals and golden heart. "The petals," says Madame de la Tour, "are compared to fire, and the yellow heart to brimstone; and when presented by an admiring swain to his mistress, it is supposed to declare that such is the effect of the fair one's beauty, that if he sees her only for a moment, his face will be as fire, and his heart will be reduced to a coal.—[Life Illustrated.

Attorney General's Office.

The United States not Responsible either to Citizens or Foreigners for the unskillfulness of Public Officers in Private Concerns.

The Washington Union publishes the following as emanating from the Attorney General's office:

1. The nations of Europe and America, while independent each of the other in political sovereignty, are yet associated together in a great commonwealth of States, by the common ties of the religion of Christ, the intellectuality of the Greeks, and the legislation of the Romans, modified by the different usages of race appertaining to the Celts, the Germans, and the Slavonians.

2. In their mutual intercourse, these nations recognize, and more or less obey, certain rules of right, partly natural and partly conventional, which oblige their consciences and control their actions, in war as well as in peace, and which constitute the laws of nations.

3. This law of nations is subdivided into two great parts: one, which treats of the reciprocal duties and rights of nations personified, and is their public relation as nations; and another, which treats of the duties and rights of each nation, in its relation to individuals of another nation.

4. Each of the nations of Europe and America has exclusive jurisdiction within itself to pass laws and to administer them, and to employ its aggregate force to maintain obedience to its local authority, administered primarily for the good of the members of its own nationality.

5. But each nation admits foreigners of other friendly nations to enter its territory for certain limited, peaceful and private objects of commerce, instruction, social intercourse, friendship, or the like; and the legal condition of such foreigners is regulated by the international law private, as distinguished from the public international law.

6. None of the nations of Europe concede to transient, commerant, or dealers foreigners all the advantages of the domestic nationality; nor can such foreigners pretend to any special or exclusive rights or peculiar privileges at the hands of the local government.

7. In its internal organization, each government has public officers, administrative, judicial, or ministerial, which officers are the agents of the community for the conduct of the public or common affairs, and of many private affairs and are individually responsible to their country, and in many cases, to individuals, for acts of political or official misbehavior; but the government itself is not responsible to private individuals for injuries sustained by reason of the acts of such officers, done by them in the private business with which they may be officially connected, though as public agents, yet for individual benefit only; it is responsible only for such injury as individuals as may occur by acts of such officers performed in the proper school and business of the government.

8. Thus Governments hold themselves responsible to individuals for injuries done to the latter by public officers in the collection of the revenue or other administrative acts of governmental relation; but not for the errors of opinion, or corruption even, of administrative, judicial, or ministerial officers, where such officers are administering the public authority in the interest of individuals, as distinguished from the Government.

9. Hence, the State of California is not responsible to a citizen of the United States for injury which his vessel may have sustained by the unskillfulness of a pilot at San Francisco; and a fortiori, that State is not responsible in such case, if the vessel belonged to a citizen of the Peruvian Republic.

10. Hence, also, the United States are not responsible to a citizen of the United States for the failure of a marshal to collect an execution; and a fortiori, the United States are not responsible in such case, if the execution belonged to a citizen of the Peruvian Republic.

11. In such case, our courts of law are open to the individual who pretends himself aggrieved by the act of the pilot or that of the marshal; but the government is not surety for their acts, and the Peruvian Republic has no right of reclamation in the premises against the United States for any imputed default, either of its own officer or the officer of the State of California.

The authorities of Cuba more than a year ago required duties to be paid by citizens of the United States on certain descriptions of building materials and provisions, which, before that period, had been admitted to the island either free, or on the payment of a mere nominal tax. The losses, in consequence, were considerable, and since that time the subject has been brought to the attention of the Spanish Government by the direction of the Secretary of State, through our Minister at the Court of Madrid. The result is said to be that the Spanish Government has signified to this a disposition to refund these duties, improperly demanded by the Captain General, setting apart twelve months during which the claimants are to present their several claims to the Spanish authorities, on the adjudication or verification of which those duties will be refunded.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA

AN INDIAN WAR.

y the arrival on Monday of the Black Warrior, we received dates from San Francisco to the 20th. From the Alta California of that date, we extract the following brief summary of events during the previous two weeks:

Among the events most deserving of notice—certainly the most important—the Indian trouble at the North stand prominent. It is estimated that fifty white men have been killed in Rogue River Valley within the past two weeks. This may be an exaggerated estimate, but the names of many murdered men are given, and the ascertained facts are sufficient to give ground for serious alarm. Two battles are recorded. In the first, forty Indians were killed, together with Major Lupton, who commanded the volunteers fighting against them; and in the other, thirty Indians, and ten U. S. volunteers. Disturbances among the Indians exist throughout the extreme Northern portion of this State, in Oregon and in Washington. It is manifest to every mind that the Indians have combined together throughout the northern sections of this State, in Oregon and in Washington, for the purpose of killing the whites; and that the knowledge of this has driven the whites to a determination to "exterminate" the Indians. The result is easily foretold, but humanity shudders at the blood-shed which precedes it.

The mining news is interesting. Wherever water can be obtained the miners have been unusually successful. Some astonishing strikes are mentioned. The quartz mills are doing better than ever, and much of the tunneling operations in the vicinity of Iowa Hill are too marvelous to be detailed.

Two fires are recorded: In Jamestown, Tuolumne county, where the principal part of the town was consumed; and in Jamestown, near Yreka, which was almost totally destroyed. Both of these localities were small, and the total loss will not exceed $100,000.

A conflict of power exists at the seat of government. The secretary of State, Gen. J. W. Denver, member elect to the 34th Congress, having left the State for the purpose of assuming the duties of the last named office, the Governor appointed Mr. Charles H. Hempstead to the office made vacant by his absence from the State. General Denver's deputy, however, refuses to give up the seals, and so we have, in fact, two acting Secretaries. Considerable confusion may result.

A sale of the State's interest in certain water lots within the limits of this city took place on the 18th inst. The total amount of the sales was barely sufficient to cover the expenses incidental thereto—about $80,000.

Seven Chinamen encamped on State Creek, Sierra county, were attacked on the 8th inst. by a party of Mexicans, who killed five and dangerously wounded two of them.

The gas works are progressing in Sacramento with great rapidity, and it is said that, in another month, Sacramento will be lighted with gas.

Large numbers of Chinese have recently left our border. The increase from four dollars to six dollars per month for foreign miners' licenses, has probably contributed to this.

Within the past fortnight a new daily paper, the Evening Bulletin, has been established in this city, and another is contemplated.

The funding of the city debt, or a portion thereof, is proceeding under the ordinance. The amount which will be funded is but a moiety of the actual indebtedness of the city.

The Supreme Court adjourned on the 17th inst., after rendering some very important decisions—among others, one in relation to the Baldwin estate, that it did not escheat to the State.

The Sacramento Valley Railroad Company has got into a snarl, and the contractors have attached the property of the Company upon a suit to recover $1,500,000. The progress of the work is necessarily impeded by this proceeding.

Several clipper ships have arrived here within the past fortnight. They are all heavily laden with Eastern produce and manufactures.

The Collector of this port has taken up his quarters in the new Custom House, which is decidedly the finest building in this State. Other government buildings are erecting near this. On term-floating one for the Appraisers is rapidly approaching completion.

A deal between Messrs. H. B. Truett and Austin Smith, two well known citizens of this city, was arrested yesterday afternoon by the interference of the police.

An ordinance to increase the police force of San Francisco, compelling them to wear a uniform, etc., has been vetoed by the Mayor.

The Supervisors of this county have contracted with the Sisters of Mercy to take charge of the sick during the term of one year.

The Independence, now lying at Mare Island, is rapidly losing her seamen by desertion. Upwards of 120 have already deserted.

The Vincennes, belonging to the Pacific exploring expedition, has been in port for about one week. The British frigate Trincomalee is also in port.

John H. Smith, a miner, was killed at Columbia, on the 12th inst., by John S. Barclay. The people assembled and hung the murderer, after giving through the form of a mock trial. Other murders in different parts of the State have nothing to distinguish them from the generality of homicides in California.

The Indian War in Northern California and Oregon.

From an extra of the Crescent City Herald, dated the 12th ult., the following particulars of Indian hostilities and murders in Oregon and Northern California are extracted:

As to the leading causes of this outbreak, the massacre of the miners on the Upper Klamath in the latter part of July, the murder of several packers, teamsters and travelers on the different routes near the Oregon boundary line, and more recently the killing of two wagoners and their ex-teams, near Cottonwood, by the Indians—all these must still be fresh in the recollection of our readers. The military at Fort Lane, O. T., seemed to be powerless in either restraining or punishing the marauders, and the goaded population were at last compelled to rise for their own protection. Mr. Galbraith left Jacksonville on Tuesday, the 9th inst., and the following are the main events which happened up to that time:

A volunteer force of one hundred, or one hundred and twenty-five men, had been formed, and after having completed their arrangements they proceeded on Sunday evening, the 7th inst., to the mouth of Butte Creek, in the vicinity of Fort Lane, in several parties, according to the number of the Rancherias, and commanded respectively by Major Lupton, 36 men; Capt. Williams, 14; Messrs. Bruce, Miller and Hays, 11 each; Mr. Harris 18, and Mr. Newcomb 17 men. Early on Monday morning the volunteers approached the Rancherias, and the Indians first fired upon the Harris' command. The fight then became general, and ended in the total defeat of the Indians, forty of whom, left dead on the ground, were afterwards buried by the military from Fort Lane.

Of the volunteers, twelve men were wounded; and of their number, Major Lupton, who had received an arrow in the left breast, died on Monday night, and another named Sheppard, wounded in the abdomen, it is thought will not recover.

Mr. Galbraith also states that on Tuesday it was reported at Jacksonville that the Indians burnt the house of Mr. Jones, while the owner himself was killed, and his wife severely wounded. Dr. Barkwell was called to attend on the lady, but it is thought she cannot recover. Messrs. Wagoner, Evans and Taff are also supposed to have been killed, and their houses and property destroyed.

Dr. Crane, U. S. A., and Dr. Barkwell, were indefatigable in their exertions to assist and relieve the wounded.

One Man Killed and another Wounded at Jewett's Ferry.—On Tuesday noon intelligence was received at Jacksonville of Mr. Hamilton being killed and a Mr. Westfall wounded by the Indians at Jewett's Ferry, about sixteen miles further down the river.

Harbor Defences.—Fifteen volunteers started in pursuit of the Indians who killed Hudson on the Siuslaw, as above reported by Mr. Jackson.

It is hardly necessary to add that the country is represented to be in a general commotion, and that volunteers are called from every section to assist in the extermination of the Indians. As a consequence of this, business and trade is very dull, nor can we look for any material improvement until the Indians are entirely subdued, and the lives and property of the people secured against these savages.

Messrs. Hale & Co. obliged us with the perusal of a letter from W. W. Fowler, Esq., dated at Jacksonville, O. T., 9th October, and which, in its main features, confirms entirely the information above given. The inactivity of the U. S. forces at Fort Lane is commented upon with much severity.

The Herald also gives an account of the finding of the body of Mr. Hudson, a packer, who had started the week previous, in company with his partner, Mr. Wilson, with a train of fourteen mules, from Orescent City. He was shot in the temple with a rifle ball, and had besides some seven or eight arrows in his body. One of the mules was found lying dead, and not far off were scattered the contents of sundry packages of merchandise, together with the old rags which the murderers had exchanged for better clothing found amongst the packs. No clue had as yet been found as to the whereabouts of Mr Wilson, the partner of Mr. Hudson, and at the time undoubtedly in his company.

The Yreka Union of the 18th contains the following additional intelligence:

On Tuesday morning, 9th inst., a large party of Indians collected and started down Rogue River, killing every white man who happened to fall in their way. At Evans' Ferry they found two or three men whom they murdered, and then left the river for Waggoner's on Louse Creek. Just before they reached W.'s, they were met by a party of packers with a large train, who saw from their appearance that there was something wrong with them. Presently the packers looked back and saw Waggoner's barn on fire, and heard the screams of women and children in the house; they then cut loose their packs and run for their lives—the Indians pursued them closely, killing one of their mules.

They counted in their flight the bodies of seventeen white men who had been murdered along the road. Many of these were teamsters, and their loads had been scattered in every direction by the Indians, in searching for ammunition and liquor. From Waggoner's, it appears that the Indians, now nearly all drunk, again started down Rogue River, burning and murdering as they went. On Wednesday they were overtaken by Maj Fitzgerald with eighty men, and a battle fought, in which thirty Indians and ten soldiers are reported to have been killed.

Mrs. Waggoner and child were murdered, and five other families along the route pursued by the Indians are said to have shared the same fate. The whole number of whites who have already fallen, from the best accounts, is between 30 and 50.

The latest dates from Portland are to the 11th ult. General Palmer, the Indian Superintendent, publishes a letter, in which it is stated that the chief of the Wascos report that proposals have been made to all the tribes East of the Cascades to unite in a general war for exterminating the whites, but that many refuse to enter an alliance to fight the Americans.

The Oregon Standard (Extra) of the 9th, under the head of "To Arms," "To Arms," has the following:

The Belle has just arrived, and brings the startling news that the troops under command of Major Haller have been surrounded by the Indians at a point about twenty-five miles from the Dalles. Haller's position is upon a hill with ravines and brush around him. His troops and animals have been without water for forty-eight hours. The Indians are constantly firing upon them.

He was enabled to send a messenger through the ranks of the Indians in the night, and he reached the Dalles Monday evening at 8 o'clock. The steamer Wasco left immediately for the Cascades, and the Belle brought the express to Vancouver forthwith.

She arrived there to-day at 12 o'clock.

Immediately on the arrival of the messenger at the Dalles, Lieut. Day prepared to leave for the seat of war with the remaining force at the Dalles, numbering about one hundred and fifty men. He was to leave this morning about daylight.

Major Haller calls for a thousand men to aid him. We learn that a requisition has been made out for that number and forwarded to the proper officers.

From our informant we learned that several of the besieged had been killed.

Our information was hastily received, and may be incorrect in some of its parts, but we give it as we received it, hoping that it may not prove as disastrous as we understood it. Now is the time for action.

The report of the death of Mr. Bolan, the Indian agent, is confirmed. A letter from Mr. Palmer, the superintendent, says: "He was shot by the son of Show-ah-way, and then by the aid of three others, seized and his throat cut. They then shot his horse, and made a fire over both and burned them up."

Among the current rumors is this: That Mr. Stuart, Capt. Warbass, and eighteen others have been murdered by them, on the White Salmon river, about twelve miles above its mouth at the Columbia, while engaged in exploring a route from the Cascades to Fort Colville—that Dr. Millard, of Portland, has seen and identified some of the bodies. It was said that there were 500 Indians assembled within 15 miles of White Salmon.

A public meeting had been held at Portland for the purpose of taking precautionary measures against the Indians.

The citizens at St. Helens and vicinity, and at the Cascades, fearing an attack from the Indians, some of them sent their women and children to the Williamette Valley for safety.

From Petropaulowski.

We obtain the following intelligence from the Alta California of the 20th:

By the arrival of the U. S. ship John Hancock, this morning, we learn that the Russians at the Amoor were in great force both on sea and land, and were anxious to meet the Allies. They had gunboats in both of the passages. There are two passages to the Amoor, one from the Ochotsk Sea through the Gulf of Saghalien, and the other from the Tartary Sea to the Gulf of Saghalien. The Russians took their fleet through these passages. The English fleet had attempted it, but failed in finding the passages.

The British steamer Baraconta went to Ayan, and found the place deserted. They discovered the secreted goods of the Russian Fur Company, consisting of ivory, crockery and plate. A small steamer on the stocks was burnt, her machinery destroyed, and a lot of chains, anchor, &c., taken from the shore; the Baraconta then left.

It was reported at Petropaulowski that the British steamer Baraconta came into that port with the American flag flying, fired into the town, and then left. The Bremen brig Greta was taken by the Baraconta, off Cape Elisabeth. The brig had 140 Russian officers and soldiers on board. The steamer took her to Hong Kong.

Previous to the sailing of the John Hancock there was a report that the English fleet were in the Gulf of Tartary, and it was supposed they would find their way into the Amoor and attempt the passage. If so, they would be severely handled by the Russians.

Melancholy Effect of Imagination.—During last summer, an estimable citizen, named Theodore Dowling, who resides on Freeman street, near the canal, was bitten in the hand by a ferocious dog. At the time he thought but little of it, but in a few days afterwards he read an account of the sufferings and death of a German from the effect of hydrophobia, and from that period he has been laboring under the horrible impression that he was destined to be seized by that malady. The idea has so affected him that, from a steady, industrious, and hard working man, the pride and support of his family, he has become a constant inebriate, for, during his sober moments, the phantom of hydrophobia is so palpably before him that he flies to the bottle to drown in selfish forgetfulness the frightful nightmare. The consequence is, that his wife and children, who, up to the time of his being afflicted with this unhappy hallucination, were in easy and respectable circumstances, are now suffering from poverty and privation, and, perhaps, the distorted imagination of the unfortunate man may engender the catastrophe of which he has such a horror. History of the Marseillies Hymn.

The Marseillaise presents notes of the song of glory and the shriek of death as glorious as the one, funeral like the other; it assures the country while it makes the citizen turn pale. This is its history: There was then, (at the time of the French Revolution, 1790,) a young officer of artillery, in the garrison of Strasburg, named Rouget de Lisle. He was born at Louis le Saunier, in the Jura, that country of revelry and energy, as mountain countries always are. He charmed with his music and verses the slow, dull garrison life. Much in request from his two-fold talent as musician and poet, he visited the house of Deitrick, an Alsatian patriot, on intimate terms. In the winter of 1792, there was a scarcity in Strasburg. The house of Deitrick was poor and the table was humble, but there was a welcome for Rouget de Lisle. Once when there was only some coarse bread and slices of ham on the table, Deitrick looked with calm sadness and said to him: "Plenty is not seen at our feasts, but what matter if enthusiasm is not wanting at our civic fetes, and courage in our soldier hearts. I have still a bottle of wine in my cellar. Bring it," said he to his daughter, "and we will drink to liberty and our country. Strasburg is soon to have a patriotic ceremony, and De Lisle must be inspired to produce one of those hymns which convey to the souls of the people the enthusiasm which suggested it."

They drank. De Lisle was a dreamer—his heart was moved—his head was heated. He went staggering to his chamber, endeavoring by degrees to find inspiration in the palpitations of his citizen's heart, and on the small harpsichord, now composing the air before the words, now composing words before the air, combining them so intimately in his mind that he could never tell which was first produced, the air or words, so impossible did he find it to separate the music from the poetry, and the feeling from the impression. He sang everything—wrote nothing. Overcome by the divine inspiration, his head fell sleeping on his instrument, and he did not awake till day-light. The song of the overnight returned to his memory, with difficulty, like the recollection of a dream. He wrote it down and gave it to Dietrich, who called together some musicians who were capable of executing De Lisle's composition. De Lisle sang. At the first verse all countenances turned pale—at the last, enthusiasm burst forth. The hymn of the country was found. Alas! it was destined to be the hymn of terror. The unfortunate Dietrich went a few months afterwards to the scaffold, to the sounds of the notes first produced at his fire-side, and from the heart of his friend.

The new song, some weeks after, was sung at Strasburg. It flew from city to city. Marseilles adopted it to be sung at the opening and close of its drama. Marseilles spread it all over France. Hence the name of Marseillies.

De Lisle heard it and shuddered at its sound on his ears, while escaping by the wild passes of the Alps as a proscribed Royalist. "What do they call that hymn?" he inquired of his guide. "The Marseillies," answered the peasant. It was thus he learned the name of his own work. The arm was turned against the hand that forged it. [Lamartine.

Shooting Molten Iron an American Invention.—A notice is going the rounds of the fact that an English engineer has invented a shell which can be fired, carrying fifty pounds of molten Iron. Gen. Lnolus V. Bierce, of Akron, Ohio, through the Ravenna Democrat, claims that this missile of destruction was invented by a Buckeye. Gen. B. says:

About ten years ago, Capt. C. S. Brown, of Akron, Summit county, Ohio, who is now dead, suggested to me the idea of forming a shell that would combine all the destructive properties of cold shot, hot shot and bomb. The idea struck me as feasible, and I immediately turned my thoughts to perfecting the idea. The result was the invention of the missile for which the British engineer now claims credit. It consists of a hollow shot of any given calibre, with a round hole or fuse on its side—on the sides of this fuse are two parallel raised lines, grooved on the inner under sides of them, into which to slide a piece of wrought iron to clean the fuse when the shell is filled. The inside of the shell must be coated with some substance to prevent the molten iron from coming in contact with the iron of the shell.

A furnace inside of the fort or battery would supply the molten iron. The shell can of course be fitted to any sized gun. The shell, when filled with molten iron, has the weight and form of a cold ball; when it strikes a solid body it will burst, and the molten iron is a thousand times more destructive than a hot shot, and by the scattering of the particles of hot iron in millions of directions, far exceeds the destructive qualities of the bomb. With a battery supplied with such missiles at Sweaborg, the allied fleet could never have approached it; or if they had, would have been sunk, burned or exploded.

Near ten years ago, I sent the foregoing specifications of my invention to the War Department at Washington, but as it was an American invention they thought it of no account. When the allied fleet entered the Baltic, I wrote to the Russian Minister at Washington, through Hon. E. Whittlesey, Third Auditor, calling his attention to it; he too, probably, thought it worthless, as he did not answer my letter. I wrote him a second, but got no reply. Determined to bring it into notice, I then wrote to the French Minister at Washington, calling his attention to it, and also wrote to the Hon. Thomas H. Benton on the subject.

By some means, the idea has got across the Atlantic, and as it now comes out as a British invention, probably our government will be ready to adopt it.

Three or four times a couple appeared before a clergyman for marriage; but the bridegroom was drunk, and the reverend gentleman refused to tie the knot. On the latter occasion he expressed his surprise that so respectable a looking girl was not ashamed to appear at the altar with a man in such a state. The poor girl broke into tears, and said she could not help it.

"And why, pray?"

"Because, sir, he won't come when he is sober."

Funny Mistake.—A short time since, a lady took passage in the cars on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad. She put her ticket in her dress pocket, where she had several other articles, and, seating herself, became earnestly engaged in conversation with a friend. The conductor soon came around for the tickets. When he came to this lady, she drew from her pocket what she supposed to be the ticket, and, without looking at it, offered it to the conductor, and continued talking; but, after extending it for a short time, and he not taking it, she looked up, and discovered that she was offering the conductor a fine-tooth comb.

Orfila, the celebrated doctor, being examined as an "expert," on a capital trial, was asked by the President whether he could tell what quantity of arsenic was requisite to kill a fly. The doctor replied, "Certainly, Mr. President; but I must know beforehand the age of the fly, its sex, its temperament, its condition and habits of body, whether married or single, widow or maid, widower or bachelor. When satisfied on these points I can answer your question."

We find the following reply in the Post:

Dear Sir: If the author of the above advertisement is inclined to introduce the 950 lb. lady into public life upon the most favorable terms, I should like to treat with him for exhibiting her, here and before the crowned heads of Europe. She can ride my elephant, and put her things in his trunk. I fear she would not go in any buggy in New York State.

THE PRICE OF SUCCESS.

A boy sat musing by the way-side brook,
With proudest dreams of honor and of wealth;
His eye was scanning Nature's open book,
His ruddy cheek proclaimed life's blessin health.

He sought for knowledge, and he sighed for fame,
With ardent longings in his youthful heart,
That voices of the earth should sound his name
Beyond the sphere where he might act his part.

He bent his will to hope, his hope to will—
And marked with single aim his onward course;
Concentred strength should break down every ill,
The strength of mind with its unyielding force.

And thus determined, from that brook let's side,
That little stream which to the ocean ran,
He dashed forth in the world, and on its tide
He wrestled sternly and became a man.

And with the swift he ran the toilsome race,
And with the strong he battled for the prize,
That with the learned his name should have a place
In some bright niche, whate'er the sacrifice.

He jostled rivals from his way, for room—
His eye grew dim with study ere his prime,
And, frightened from his cheek, fled boyhood's bloom,
And gray hairs came, unlicensed yet by Time.

Dreams, waking dreams, hung o'er his weary life,
And circled round him with bewildering power:
He scorned repose amid the ceaseless strife,
And for the yellow leaf trod down the flower.

And onward still, and upward was his course,
Till he obtained high honor, fame and wealth—
But the bright fountain had a bitter source,
And sapped the springs of boyhood's blessing, health.

The man with reckless waste had spent his powers
In restless toil to reach life's dizzy height;
The way-side brook flowed on through summer hours,
As hope, exhaustless, as ambition, bright.

THE SHIP.

Lo, how impatiently upon the tide
The proud ship tosses, eager to be free!
Her flag streams wildly, and her fluttering sails
Pant to be on their flight. A few hours more,
And she will move, in stately grandeur, on,
Obeying her path majestic through the flood,
As if she were a goddess of the deep.
O, 'tis a thought sublime, that man can force
A path upon the waste, can find a way
Where all is trackless, and compel the winds,
Those freest agents of Almighty Power,
To lend their untamed wings, and bear him on
To distant climes.

A wag thus concentrates his description of a visit to the White Mountains:

"Nine weary nights! nine days we eped
The setting sun to see;
Sulky and grim he went to bed,
Sulky and grim went we.
Seven sleepless hours we tossed, and then,
The rising sun to see,
Sulky and grim rose he again,
Sulky and grim rose he."

From the Rio Grande.—The correspondent of the Central Texian, writing from Eagle Pass, under date of October 30th, says there is considerable excitement there, in consequence of the report that the volunteers are coming in large numbers. All the Mexicans have crossed over to the other side, with one or two exceptions, and there is not more than twenty citizens left to defend the place. Twelve hundred men are said to be under arms within twenty-five miles up and down the river, five hundred having arrived from Monterey with four pieces of artillery. The writer adds:

It is reported the Lipan Indians have carried their families to the mountains, and are now down, ready to fight. There is a party of nine Lipans on this side. They were seen about Mine Creek, a few days ago.

The Mexicans have a party out on this side, spying. They left Presidio Rio Grande eight days ago, and part of them went to San Antonio on the old Woll trail. So, you see, they are taking every precaution not to be surprised.

The bones of the four men lost by Capt. Callahan's command in the fight with the Mexicans and Indians, have been brought to this side and buried. The skull of one bears the marks of the scalping-knife. Prior to removing them to their homes, the body of Lieutenant Devant, drowned at this place last month, was found, down by Laredo, stripped naked. When drowned, it is stated, he had on a gold watch and chain, a six-shooting pistol, and some considerable amount of money; showing too plainly the body had been robbed when found.

There is news at this place that Fleming's train had been attacked, on El Paso road, by Indians; all the mules taken; Captain Carpenter, of the First Infantry, (commander of Post at Live-oak Creek, on El Paso route,) wounded in four places. The Indians were Lipans and Muscaleros.

By the arrival, yesterday morning, of the steamship Nautilus, we received the Brownsville Flag of the 10th inst., which says:

Here we are far advanced into the fall season, and yet we have not had a norther of any consequence, but, on the contrary, the heat, during some of the days of this week, was very oppressive. We hope that the cold will come now pretty soon, to dry the lagoons around our city, or else a great deal of sickness will prevail, caused by the miasma.

The Eco del Pueblo, a paper printed in Guanajuato, has the following:

The Latest.—A friend has written to us from Mexico, assuring us that the proposition for the North American protectorate treaty, have been found in the archives of the National Palace by Lic. Lafragua, and that they are signed by Santa Anna, Laree and Bonilla, and approved by the Minister of the United States. It is fortunate that it is yet time to foil this last piece of rascality of the conservadores, which would have done away with Mexican honor and nationality.

Then follow several paragraphs, commenting on the above, in which the indignation of the writer shows itself in vehement long phrases. There is, of course, no truth in the statement.

Try Her on the Wind!—The following story of an affair at Cape Cod illustrates in an amusing manner the prevailing idea and the mode of expression employed by the people of that enlightened region:

A small, spare boy, who had been guilty of some misdemeanor, was in a fair way to get punished for it by his mother, who was a large square Dutch built person, with a great spread of cloth. With a stout stick in her hand, she was in full chase of the poor boy, who was nearly under bare poles, running right ahead, and the old woman, under her cloud of canvass, was overhauling him very fast, when another boy, a friend of the delinquent, seeing how the chase was likely to terminate, cried out to his friend, "Try her on the wind, Bill, try her on the wind;" when the lad, with the quickness of a Cape boy, was immediately struck with the natural idea, luffed up in the wind close hauled, and the old woman went dead to leeward like a log.

Definition Extraordinary.—At a railway station, an old lady said to a pompone-looking dandy, who was talking big words about steam communication,

"Pray sir, what is steam?"

Dandy—"Steam, ma'am is aw! Why, do you see, steam eh? why, steam, aw! that is, steam, aw! is——"

The luminous explanation was here interrupted by a big raw-boned looking animal, who lent in this:

"I know'd that chap could'nt tell ye—steam is a bucket of water in a darn'd high perspiration!" Dandy eloped from that crowd.

The Marksville Villager of the 12th says:

We hear of several of our citizens preparing to return; we must say that it is yet dangerous. We have several new cases which are considered very serious, and the weather is altogether too warm to anticipate a disappearance of the yellow fever while it lasts. No deaths of yellow fever since our last issue.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 12 miles east of Bayou Sara. Its location is beautiful, retired and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

As this section of the Southwest is but poorly provided with academies and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received for entering College proper.

The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.

Concordat of the Church with Austria.

A concordat has been concluded between the Court of Austria and the Papal See, for the protection of the Catholic Church in that empire. It has not yet been published in full, but the Gazetta di Vienna gives the substance of it. All the rights and privileges of the church are to be secured to it in the provinces of which it now predominates. The right of appointment of vicars, ordaining priests, convoking synods, etc., is guaranteed. All Roman Catholic elementary schools are to be under the supervision of a clerical inspector. The right to prohibit dangerous books is secured to the bishops. Infringements of church discipline are to be punished alone by the bishops. The property of the church is declared sacred and inviolate, and no sale of such property can take place without the intervention of the Papal chair. Placetum Regium is abolished. Oral and written defamation of the Catholic Church, of the holy liturgy, of bishops and of priests, will not be tolerated. The concordat is declared to be a State law for ever, and all laws inconsistent with it are abolished. The Vienna correspondent of the London Times remarks:

"No opportunity of learning what the public thinks of the concordat has yet presented itself, but it may safely be predicted that it will produce an extremely unfavorable impression. Many most exemplary Roman Catholics and good patriots consider the renunciation of the Placetum Regium a misfortune for Austria and the dynasty; but this is a matter on which your correspondent cannot be expected to give an opinion. His Majesty the Emperor has always displayed such conservatism whenever a foreign power has attempted to meddle in the internal affairs of his empire that it will probably excite great astonishment abroad that he should have consented to relinquish rights and privileges which his ancestors obtained from the Papal chair with a prodigious outlay of time and trouble. The passages in the concordat which particularly strike me are as follows: In article 7, the Austrian government seems to recognise the canons of the Council of Trent, which it had never before done without numerous and important reservations. Article 8 gives the lower clergy entirely into the hands of the bishops. Now the Roman Catholic Church has an aristocracy and a democracy, and if the former abuses its power, the latter, which is naturally brought into immediate contact with the people, is likely to prove a far more dangerous revolutionary power than even Mazzini himself. In the same article it is also said that the bishops have the power to inflict punishment on "those" who violate the canonical laws; but it is impossible that the pronoun relates to the clergy, and not to laymen. In article 9, mention is made of the maintenance "of the immunities of the churches," but this can hardly mean that the right of cantinary is to be revived. Article 20 gives to the bishops the right to establish new monasteries and cloisters—a concession which will, to employ a German phrase, make the Emperor Joseph II. "turn in his grave." In the opinion of men learned in matters of State, article 25 is fraught with danger, as it leaves the Roman Catholic hierarchy an infinity of elbow room. The concordat, like most other treaties, is concluded "forever," but this world of ours has seen very strange changes during the last century. As it would hardly be prudent to commit to paper all my opinions in respect to the concordat, you will permit me to condense them into the familiar phrase of "a very pretty kettle of fish Austria has made of it."

BLAMING THE CLERGY.

The September number of Frazer's Magazine closes an article on the "Church among the tall Chimneys," with some sensible remarks on the disposition to hold the clergy responsible for everything:

"The fault of the clergy! Where are the clergy? How glibly do such expressions come from the lips even of the men who, by precept and example, are undoing all that the clergy are attempting to do! There is not a grovelling penny-a-liner who cannot, after rising in the morning with a drunken headache, inquire on any exhibition of popular ignorance, 'Where are the clergy?' There is not a mob-monther, as he mounts his tub after thrashing his wife and starving his children, who cannot ask, 'What is the use of the clergy?' There is not a graceless upstart member of the House who cannot, after leaving his heartless frivolities, exclaim with well-feigned astonishment, on any appropriate occasion, 'What are the clergy doing?' There is not a lazy, negligent manufacturer who cannot, after refusing his five-shilling piece to the national school, wonder in the midst of a national tumult, 'What have the clergy been about?' The clergy have not done everything, it is true, but they have done much."

The same sort of a temper is showing itself in this country. One class of men looking at the evils of society—its ignorance, poverty and crime—until the scene is quite too much for them, launch forth their denunciation upon the clergy for the unarrested growth of these moral deformities. Another class hold the clergy responsible for the infidelity and crime of the day. The opposite extreme censures them for exerting too much influence. So the go. Whichever way the pendulum swings, it is sure to hit the clergy.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE.

ENDOWMENT OF THE FEMALE COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor,—I promised, in a line to you enclosing an extract from the "Centenary Wreath," that I would follow it up with an article on the above subject. Accordingly, I invite the candid attention of your readers, and especially those within the bounds of the Alabama Conference, to the consideration of the views herewith submitted. I have no wish to fill up the columns of your paper with a flourish of words, but I have a burning desire in my heart to see accomplished the great enterprise contemplated in this communication. What I say shall, therefore, be brief, and as near to the point as I can get.

1. Ladies ought to be as well educated as gentlemen: perhaps not precisely in the same way, but as thoroughly educated.

Education has two objects. First, and least important, to prepare us for the relations and active duties of this life; and, second, to prepare us for the life to come.

The first object finds as true an application to our daughters as our sons. Their relations to society are as important, and their active duties are often in a sphere which calls for as high intelligence and as well cultivated minds as over men require.

In regard to the second object, hardly a remark is needed. If we love our daughters as well as we do our sons, we shall be desirous that the former not less than the latter, be disciplined and prepared for the future life. The mind will live after the body dies, and if it is uncultivated in time, it will enter upon eternity under the worst of embarrassments, hampered and clouded and imbecile. This would be a great misfortune even though, morally, it should be secure. He, therefore, who has a daughter, and who refuses to do all in his power to advance her mental as well as moral culture, takes upon himself a fearful responsibility.

2. Ladies are susceptible of as high a degree of intellectual cultivation as gentlemen. It may not be that their mental performances are generally as vigorous and forcible; but they are not less penetrating and comprehensive.

The female mind has always labored under severe disadvantages. Some of them are inseparable from their social relations; but most of them have been the result of meagre and stingy facilities for their education. Men have had, and still have, their great Universities, and their richly endowed Colleges; but you look in vain through the past and the present for similar institution for ladies. Yet, how many of them have risen above these obstacles, and, with graceful ease, passing by men of ordinary minds, have taken their places in the front rank of thinkers, and writers, and investigators. I do not say that there is a Shakspeare among them, nor a Plato; neither is there another Shakspeare or another Plato among men. Such minds fall into no "rank;" they are comets that move in an orbit peculiar to themselves, but which, unlike other comets, never cease, after their first appearance, to display their lengthening splendors to an admiring world.

3. There is not, anywhere, (to the best of my knowledge and belief,) a well endowed and well established Female College. I have remarked this incidentally before, but it deserves a separate notice.

At this moment, when the public mind is waking up so fully to the subject of Colleges—when large sums are subscribed and much larger ones talked of, for the establishment of Male Colleges, on a scale commensurate with our great demand and our abundant means, it would be singular indeed, if the fact should escape observation, that the daughters of our land, or, indeed, of any land, have never been honored with a first class College!

With those who are well informed upon this subject, it requires no argument to prove that the Female Colleges of the present day are Colleges only because they are collections of students, and not because they pursue a course of studies, nor possess those extensive facilities which entitle them to take rank among Colleges proper.

The American Almanac for 1850 reports 121 Colleges in the United States. Not one of them is a Female College. The statistic-makers never once thought of including these glossy ladies' Seminaries in the list of American Colleges!

Dr. Manly, in his "Report on Collegiate Education," in 1852, stated that there were then in Georgia, 4 Colleges; in Tennessee, 5; in Mississippi, 3; and in Alabama, 4. Of course he did not count any Female Colleges, for there were at that very time well nigh a score of Institutions in our own State, that assumed for themselves so distinguished a title, and some of whom, perhaps, were filled with indignation towards Dr. Manly for thus reading them out of the College ring. They are not recognised as Colleges, except in an entirely new, and rather Pickwickian, sense.

The reason is evident. It is not because they are wanting in the number of pupils, nor in the number of teachers. But it is because, in the first place, their curriculum is, comparatively speaking, a mere toy; and, in the second place, because their practice is not half commensurate with their curriculum.

Neither of these deficiencies is the fault of the teachers. They either find a course already marked out for them, or they mark it out in obedience to higher authorities. They do their best to carry the course into practice, but they are cramped and crippled on every side. Pupils present themselves for admission who are very deficient in preparation; yet, being entirely dependent on public patronage, the faculty finds it dangerous to turn them off, and thus alienate an entire family connexion and influence. These cases being very common, such a course, without some important change in the relations of the Institution to the public, would soon prove disastrous. Again; teachers feel in the course, studies which their pupils have neither the time nor the facilities for pursuing, nor they for teaching, except in a most superficial manner. Such are Geology, Chemistry, Botany, Astronomy, &c., &c. What time has a teacher who teaches eight or ten classes a day, to devote to such sciences as these? And what good will the study of the naked text books do without the aid of cabinet collections and apparatus? Yet it is very certain that no Female College possesses these advantages to any liberal extent. Some of them have a tolerable chemical and philosophical apparatus; and the Professor of Natural Sciences in the Centenary Institute, W. C. L. Richardson, has the best collection of Geological specimens in the State, except the one at the State University. This, however, is extra good fortune: but, as it is his individual property, it is liable to be withdrawn whenever the Professor is taken away by some Male College that is able to offer him higher inducements.

Astronomy is one of the most appropriate studies for young ladies in the entire course; and the Professor in that department in the Centenary Institute gives it, as his opinion, that at least one-third of every Senior Class there, have capacity and disposition to pursue it in an extensive and thorough manner. But they have not the means. They want an Observatory, with all of its splendid and expensive paraphernalia.

To make a long matter short, let us compare the Male Colleges of the land with the self-styled Female Colleges, and see if we are not perpetuating a long-standing and outrageous abuse of the female mind.

Without further reference to the curriculum, the meagreness of which is the natural result of the other deficiencies, we will proceed with the comparison in other respects.

A majority of the Female Colleges have but one man in the Faculty. He is President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Sciences, Political Economy, Chemistry, Philosophy, Languages, &c., &c., &c. All the other "Chairs" are filled by young ladies from 16 to 20 years of age, who have been educated by the same shallow process that they are now practising upon others.

A few have three or four college educated men at the head of as many departments. These are the best.

How does this compare with the Faculties of Male Colleges? Harvard University has about 25 Professors, and seven or eight tutors and teachers of Modern Languages. Most of these are distinguished in their several departments. I believe the Faculty of Yale College is still larger. The Wesleyan University, which, though an excellent institution, is one of the smallest of the Male Colleges, has eight Professors, among whom are Dr. Smith, author of an excellent work on Mechanics; Dr. Johnston, author of Chemistry and Philosophy, and other distinguished scholars; besides numbering among its deceased Presidents those great names, Wilbur Fisk and Stephen Olin.

And so we might continue to cite, bringing up Virginia University, Brown University, Union College, Amherst College, and a hundred others; and what a contrast is here in the single item of the Faculty.

Again; most of the Female Colleges have almost no library at all. Some of them have a few hundred volumes. The libraries of Male Colleges vary from 12,000 to 70,000 volumes!

Female Colleges have, in general, no cabinets. Some Male Colleges have "collections" large enough to occupy the whole of a large building.

Female Colleges have no Observatories. The Observatory of Harvard University, together with all of its instruments and fixtures, cost more than the whole of any Female College within my knowledge. The telescope alone cost nearly $20,000.

The value of the Centenary Institute, (Female Department,) inclusive of buildings, apparatus, furniture and grounds, is $30,000 to $40,000. Few Female Colleges are worth more.

Harvard University is worth, all told, more than a million of dollars. I base this estimate upon the fact that two or three years ago it had about $875,000 under its control, independent of buildings, apparatus, libraries, &c.

Several other institutions, as the University of Virginia, Union College and Yale College, are not far behind Harvard in wealth. And, in our own State University there has been money enough invested (endowment included) to buy up all the Female Colleges in the South!

Now, let any father of sons and daughters ask himself the question, if this is a just proportion of expenditure upon their education. But I am met just here by a reply from one, that he has spent more in the education of the latter than the former. Very likely you have; but perhaps this is owing to the fact that your sons have been content with a mere academical education, or that you have not chosen to give them a collegiate course. But if you insist that they have all graduated, and that the diplomas of your girls cost more than the diplomas of your boys, I still reply, very possible; and this is an excellent argument in favor of the establishment of a true Female College.

I have already shown that the facilities offered in existing Female Colleges for an extensive and thorough education, are not one-tenth as great as in Male Colleges. The scientific and classic acquirements of a Valedictorian, for instance, of a female graduating class, will bear no comparison with those of a Bachelor of Arts valedictorian; yet, according to your estimate, they cost more! A poorer article at a higher price! This is, without doubt, in a measure, true; for the reason that, at Male Colleges, the means and appliances are always at hand for more rapid and easy and extensive instruction.

Where, then, is the remedy to be found? Surely not in a larger expenditure in sending your daughters to existing institutions; but rather in a determined effort to elevate the character of Female Colleges. Money enough is expended annually, within the bounds of the Alabama Conference, in the support of a showy but shallow system, to found, at least, one great College.

These remarks are not made to depreciate the merit of our female schools. They are rather utterances from the very heart of an institute that longs to escape from her gilded shackles, and rejoice in the free atmosphere of a sound and liberal principle, one, too, that is doing her unaided best to accomplish this result, and meets with measurable success, but despairs of a complete triumph until a favorable response is given to the call for a magnificent outlay in her behalf.

4. Great benefits would accrue to Female Colleges from a liberal endowment.

In the first place, it would enable them to reduce the tuition, or to embrace within the scope of the regular tuition fee, many branches that are now regarded as "extras," and that so enormously swell the expenses of female education.

In the second place, it would enable them to obtain, and retain, men of first rate ability and reputation in the several departments of instruction. This they cannot do now. A distinguished Governor of Alabama once said to a young and promising instructor, "Never connect yourself with a Female College; always keep in the line of College preferment; when you enter a Female College you are out of that line. That young man is now—contrary to his friend's advice—a Professor in a Female College of as high rank as any other, but he is sought after in more distinguished directions, and will no doubt be induced to leave, unless the institution with which he is identified is very soon elevated to a rank with Male Colleges. First rate men will not remain any longer than they are compelled to, in a position where there is neither much salary nor much reputation. A liberal endowment would enable that institution to enlarge its facilities, to extend its course, to increase its salaries, and to retain desirable men.

In the train of these benefits would follow many others, the mention of which would not fall within the intended scope of this article.

5. Now is the time, and Summerfield is the place, to begin the exercise of this liberality; or, perhaps, more properly, this tardy justice.

Shall the decree of the past never be revoked, that ladies shall not be permitted to tread the higher walks of science, unless they thrust themselves upon the company of men, against all rule and expectation? Shall it be, that those of them who thirst for large draughts of truth may never find a fountain, dedicated to their own especial service, whose gushings shall be as pure, and as plenteous, and as satisfying, as those of any knowledge-fountain in the world? I think the universal response of all right-minded men is, "Let the decree be revoked! Let the fountain be opened and dedicated!"

Well, my brethren, what better time than now? Now, while the public mind is aroused upon the general subject; while it is appreciative of liberal propositions; while it is determined upon doing whatever it does in the true spirit of high-souled enterprise.

And what better place than Summerfield? It already occupies an important niche in the affections and interest of the Methodist public. It is as healthful and pleasant a village as is to be found in Alabama. All desirable influences are concentrated there. The Female College building is truly a noble and imposing edifice since its recent additions. It has a nucleus of several hundred volumes for a library. It has a fair Chemical and Philosophical apparatus, and an excellent collection of Geological specimens. It has also some good material for the Faculty of a first class college. But more than all this, the initiative has already been taken there, towards its endowment and its liberal establishment.

The plan is, to raise an endowment of $100,000, to place it above the reach of contingencies; then to raise of $75,000 more, for the purpose of perfecting the buildings and grounds, enlarging the apparatus, &c., and for erecting and furnishing an Observatory equal to any in the United States.

Its warmest friends have determined upon the accomplishment of this great enterprise, provided they can secure the hearty co-operation of the real proprietor of the concern—the Alabama Conference. To her the property belongs, as truly as my library belongs to me; and I suppose if she were in debt, it might be sold at auction to meet the claim. It would seem, therefore, that her interest and her wishes should be deferred to as paramount to all others.

Let the Conference, then, speak out at its approaching session, and thus give form and authority to the move. Let the individual members of the Conference, in virtue of their part-ownership of the Institute, take a deeper and more active interest in its success. Let those philanthropic gentlemen, who propose to do so much for sound male education, open their hearts, and make room for sound female education; and for every dollar that is advanced for the up-building and endowment of a great Male College, let one be placed by its side for the up-building and endowment of an equally great Female College!

MENTOR.

It is the great duty of Christians to put off anger. It unfits for duty. A little jogging puts a clock out of frame; so a little passion the heart. A man cannot wrestle with God and wrangle with his neighbor at the same time.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

Rev. Dr. Wayland, on retiring from the presidency of Brown University, made an address, in which he indicated the principles by which he traced, under God, all his success. They were in success. They were in substance as follows:

1. A resolute and honest consecration to the work to be done. He had out loose from whatever interfered with that work. He kept himself from amusements—for which he had no taste—and even from favorite studies, and gave himself to the work of building up the University.

2. A dogged instinct to do his duty. He had a fixed determination to go through with what he had begun, and to take up every duty as it came. No doubt, in the matter of discipline, some had thought him a "regular old despot." But God only knew the agony he had endured when called to inflict pain on any student or his friends. But the pain they had suffered was nothing when compared with his. He had tried to avoid discipline, but could not help it. And now, as the rejected suitor appealed from Philip drunk to Philip sober, so he appealed from impetuous and excited young men to the men he saw before him, matured and subdued by experience. They must decide on his acts as an instructor, and there was no pupil of his whom he would not be glad to meet anywhere, for he knew that towards all he had done his simple duty.

3. Never to not for to-morrow or next month instead of to-day. It has been my rule to do to-day what I have to do as well as I know how. The way to prepare for to-morrow, is to do with a whole heart the duty of to-day. Sometimes young men take up teaching as a temporary employment, while preparing for a profession; but their hearts are not in it, and consequently they break down as teachers, and carry with them into their profession the reputation of men who have already failed. Do your present duty, and never be mousing round for something.

4. Adherence to general principles. Have confidence in general principles. Our wisest men—for I presume our politicians are our wisest men—often mistake from want of confidence in principles. Things follow their tendencies. Take a law of right and carry it through, and take the good and bad together. You can't have the good of a principle without the evil. But follow the principle. It will bring you into narrow places, and up steep defiles; but keep on, and you will see a glory beyond that will repay the labor and toil of the ascent. For myself, I ambuilt railroad fashion—I can go forward and, if necessary, I can go back, but I can't go sideways.

5. Whatever of knowledge I have of men or mind, I have got it from the New Testament of the Lord Jesus Christ. Study the Bible, if you would be wise. Count it your highest honor to be useful to your fellow-men

THE TWO HEIRS.

"I remember," says the late Postmaster General of the United States, "the first time I visited Burlington, Vt., as Judge of the Supreme Court. I had left it, many years before, a poor boy. At the time I left, there were two families of special note for their standing and wealth. I was very poor, and these boys were very rich. During the long years of hard toil which passed before my return, I had almost forgotten them. They had long ago forgotten me.

"Approaching the court-house for the first time, in company with several gentlemen of the bench and bar, I noticed, in the court-house yard, a large pile of old furniture about to be sold at auction. The scenes of early boyhood with which I was surrounded prompted me to ask whose it was. I was told it belonged to Mr. J. "Mr. J.! I remember a family of that name, very wealthy—there was a son, too—can it be he?" I was told it was even so. He was the son of one of the families already alluded to. He had inherited more than I had earned, and spent it all, and now his own family was reduced to real want, and his very furniture was that day to be sold for debt. I went into the court-house suddenly, yet almost glad, that I was born poor. I was soon absorbed in the business before me. One of the first cases called originated in a low drunken quarrel between Mr. H. and Mr. A. Mr. H., thought I, that is a familiar name. Can it be? In short, I found that this was the son of the other wealthy man referred to! I was overwhelmed alike with astonishment and thanksgiving—astonishment at the change in our relative standings, and thanksgiving that I was not born to inherit wealth without toil."

Those fathers provide best for their children who leave them with the highest education, the purest morals, and the least money.

Stop that boy! A cigar in his mouth, a swagger in his walk, impudence in his face, a care-for-nothing-ness in his manner. Judging from his demeanor he is older than his father, wiser than his teacher, more honored than the Mayor of the town, higher than the President. Stop him—he is going too fast. He does not see himself as others see him. He does not know his speed. Stop him, ere tobacco shatter his nerves, ere pride ruin his character, ere the loafer master the man, ere good ambition and manly strength give way to low pursuits. Stop all such boys! They are legion—the shame of their families, the disgrace of their towns, and the sad and solemn reproaches of themselves.

You have a place in society peculiarly your own—endeavor to find out where it is, and keep it.

Later from Mexico.

The steamship Orizaba, Capt. Forbes, arrived Monday morning from Vera Cruz, bringing dates from that city to the 22d, and from the City of Mexico to the 17th. The news is not important. The whole country is restored to quiet and appears likely to continue so for some time to come. President Alvarez has taken up his residence in the capital, upon doing which he issued a short address to the people, in which he says:

"For my part, I have no aspirations of any kind, but to guide the nation into that path gloriously marked out by the revolution; and then retire to repair my broken health and pass in tranquility the few days that remain of my laborious life."

Prieto had tendered his resignation from the cabinet. El Veracruzano conjures the President not to accept it, as the country at present stands much in need of his talents.

General Castro had refused to obey the orders of Vidaurri to proceed with the troops under his charge in Matamoras to the defense of the frontier against another expected invasion of Texans. His motives were not known.

Alarming rumors were current in the capital regarding the condition of affairs in Tamaulipas, but intelligent persons were of opinion that there was little foundation for them. It was said that Garza intended to take possession of the stores and munitions pertaining to the garrison in Tampico, and the Comercio de Tamaulipas, of the 21st ult., states that Senor Fraconis had declared the city in a state of siege. Letters of a later date state that no further difficulty had occurred.

El Progreso states that in reparation of the wrongs inflicted by Santa Anna's administration upon Senor Uraga, he has been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to the court of Berlin.

A small museum has been opened in Pueblo, which embraces, among other things, a great number of curiosities of the ancient Aztecs, such as clothes, weapons, idols, inscriptions, etc.

Later from California.

By the steamship Daniel Webster we have dates from San Francisco to the 5th inst. The news is not important. Active hostilities were commenced by the Indians in Oregon and Northern California, and great preparations were being made to subdue the savages. The San Francisco Sun of the 5th says:

We learn that Gen. Wool, commanding the Pacific division U. S. A., leaves to-morrow on the steamer California for the scene of Indian hostilities in the North. He takes with him the company of Capt. Kane, stationed at the Presidio, and also a company at Fort Humboldt. A number of military officers accompany the General from this city. One portion of the force will concentrate at Fort Dallas, and be under the direction of General Wool in person; the other will concentrate at Fort Lane. For operations against the Rogue River and neighboring Indians, says the Herald, there will be concentrated at Fort Lane one company of the Fourth Infantry, under Lieutenant [illegible] who has orders to proceed from Fort [illegible] to that place; one company of dragoons [illegible] Captain Smith, and one company of the [illegible] Infantry, commanded by Captain Judah, who is already in the field. The utmost activity prevails at Benicia in the embarkation of mules, horses, stores, etc.

The same paper also says:

The brig Kingsbury arrived yesterday morning from Puget Sound. The Indian disturbances at the North still continued, and great excitement prevailed at Puget Sound on account of them. It is reported that the U. S. troops had been driven back three times. Gov. Mason, of Washington Territory, had called for one thousand volunteers, and two companies had been raised. The Indians had killed seventeen men on their way to the mines, and a number of others were reported missing.

The Canon City was destroyed by fire on the 30th of October. The loss was stated at $30,000. On the night of the 31st ult., fire occurred in Jacksonville, Oregon, by which several houses were destroyed.

A correspondent of the San Joaquin Republican, writing from Hill's Ferry, under the date of October 20th, gives an account of the execution of four cattle thieves at that place, under sentence of Judge Lynch. Three of them were Mexicans and the fourth was a German named Luskner. "They were all," says the correspondent, "hung in a row at sunset, about a mile from this place. Nothing transpired uncommon to such transactions," he coolly adds.

The harbor of San Francisco was visited with a violent storm on the 2d instant, which did much injury to the shipping in port.

The Nevada and Marysville papers state that Col. Hiney is busily engaged in removing the Nevada, Yuba and other Indians to the Nome Lackee Reservation. The California Express states upon the authority of the Indian Agent, that he has been gathering the Indians from Bear river across to the Yuba, including those at Nevada, Grass Valley, Rough and Ready, and along Deer Creek. Nearly all those scattered along the Yuba, on both sides, for a distance of twenty miles, have been gathered in, together with their chiefs and head men, and on Monday they were crossed over the Yuba, at Long Bar, numbering in all men, women and children, one hundred and sixty-five. This number will probably be increased, between the Yuba and Sewell's Ranch, to two hundred, who will be, in a few days, quietly located at Nome Lackee, where every thing is provided for their reception, and where there are abundant supplies for the winter.

FEVER STILL IN MISSISSIPPI.—The sexton's report announces four deaths in Natchez from yellow fever during the week ending on the 20th.

The Port Gibson Herald of the 16th announces that the fever still prevailed in that village, three deaths having occurred during the previous week.

The Herald of Friday last, however, furnishes the following more gratifying intelligence:

The yellow fever, we are glad to chronicle, has at length subsided. There has been no deaths since our last paper, and no new cases since Saturday last. The severe frosts of Sunday and Monday nights, and the cold and bracing weather since, has most effectually killed the disease, and no more fears need be apprehended from it. There has been but sixteen deaths out of at least two hundred cases, which we confidently believe is less in proportion than in any other town in the country.

A letter of the 19th from Canton, states that several new cases have recently occurred in that place.

THE RIVER, STEAMBOATS, WEATHER, ETC.—The Ouachita is in fine boating order, and several boats have passed up within a few days past. Shippers would do well to avail themselves of the opportunity thus early offered them to get their cotton to market, although the weather would indicate rains above. Yet owing to the reported low stage of the Mississippi river, it will not do to look upon the present rise in the Ouachita as permanent. The past ought to serve as a monitor for the future. If the weather continues warm, unsettled and unpleasant. [Ouachita Register.

Later from Central America.

The steamship Daniel Webster, Capt. Patterson, arrived on Saturday last from San Juan, which place she left on the 19th. The accommodating and intelligent purser of the ship, Mr. Hart, furnishes the following memoranda:

The Webster left the following ships at anchor in port: Royal mail steamer Dee, from St. Thomas via Aspinwall; Her Britannic Majesty's brigs Express and Arab, each mounting 14 guns; also, schooner Dolinda.

The news from the interior is that Colonel Walker's command is still in Granada, and that he is in quiet possession of the entire transit route, and in fact of nearly all of the Republic of Nicaragua, and that he offers all the facilities in his power to expedite the transit of Californians over the Isthmus.

On the 18th of November, our American Minister, Colonel Wheeler, formally recognized his Government. This was done in the presence of the clergy, Commander-in-Chief, and Colonel Walker, and other distinguished functionaries, Mr. Wheeler making a speech, which was replied to by the President, Don Patricio Rivas, after which a salute of twenty-one guns terminated this interesting occasion.

It will be remembered that the newly elected President, Don Patricio Rivas, has always been friendly towards the Americans, and highly popular with the natives, and that before this he has more than once refused the Presidency under the old form of government. He is a gentleman of intelligence and liberal principles. Col. Walker is daily receiving large accessions, both of American and native troops. He has been compelled to shoot one of his allied generals, Minister of War (Ponolano Corral,) who was found guilty of high treason—condemned and shot in the Plaza, at Granada, November 19th. It appears that he was about to sell his command to the enemy; in fact, he had written letters to Gen. [illegible] the effect, and being intercepted, [illegible] found to be proof positive of his guilt. [illegible] demnation and death. [illegible] ished and is on his way to New [illegible] of the West.

Col. Kinney remains in [illegible]. He has gained largely in the good [illegible] tants. He has turned his attention [illegible] to exploration and settlement of Indians upon Ubonialas country, which recent explorations prove is rich in mineral wealth.

About fifty of his men passed up river a few days since to join Walker at Granada. The Kinney newspaper, the Central American, will be issued in future weekly.

The Transit route was never more safe and healthy than at present—it has been over two months since a single case of cholera has appeared on the Isthmus.

The river is in fine boating order, and passengers from ocean to ocean come in nineteen hours.

El Nicaraguense publishes a report of the proceedings of the court martial on Gen. Corral, and gives the following account of his execution:

At a quarter to 2 P. M., the prisoner, attended by the clergy, made his exit [illegible] under an escort of soldiers, and arrived at the Plaza, took a seat in a chair prepared for [illegible] The death warrant was read [illegible] Gilman, [illegible] him [illegible] we understand [illegible] An [illegible] named Parker [illegible] ing to Gen. Walker's orders, has been executed for wantonly killing a native. El Nicaraguense says of the affair:

In an unguarded moment, heated by excessive indulgence in drinking, he recklessly levelled his rifle at one of the servants, at the quarters of his company, whom he observed lying in a hammock at the distance of some thirty paces, and to show his skill, as a marksman, drew upon him and inflicted a fatal wound. He was arrested, tried, convicted, and on the morning of the third day after the commission of the deed, was shot on the Plaza. He was a brave soldier, and met his fate like a man.

The Central American states that the companies of the "Kinney Union" have safely gone up Indian River to carry their tools to the gold diggings in that region. The Central American says:

The specimens received from the gold region up Indian River, are such as to excite the highest anticipations on the part of those who have preferred mining to planting.

Both companies were well supplied with mining and washing implements, and ample provisions for two or three months, and a variety of seeds for planting. They intend to open a plantation at once, and it will require but a few months at that fertile region to have an abundance of corn, beans, potatoes, etc., of their own raising.

We expect in a few months that shipments of gold dust from San Juan to New York, will be as common as from California, and that before another year rolls round, shipments of coin from our own mint will be no unusual item in the columns of our then daily journal.

THE DANISH SOUND DUES.—The Journal of Commerce on this subject furnishes an explanation of what Denmark means by the capitalization of the Sound Dues. It appears that the annual average receipt of the Sound Dues on merchandise (exclusive of legitimate taxes,) amount to 2,103,500 rix dollars, which capitalized at 5 per cent., or twenty years' purchase, would produce 42,070,000 rix dollars, or a little less than $30,000,000 United States currency. Of this sum Russia is expected to pay 29 per cent. or $8,700,000; Great Britain the same amount; Prussia [illegible] per cent. or $3,600,000; France, 8 per cent. or $900,000; Norway, 1 per cent. or $300,000; Hamburgh and Bremen about $250,000; the United States about $250,000, etc. The amount which would have to be paid by the United States is very nearly the same as was actually offered by this Government, some time ago, as a gross payment to Denmark, if American vessels might thenceforth be permitted to pass into the Baltic free from toll. But the Court of Copenhagen replied, to the effect stated in the present circular, that [illegible] arrangement could not be carried [illegible] the simultaneous concurrence of all [illegible] ive Powers. The proposal now made is probably intended to meet the wishes of the United States, at the same time that it leaves the other Powers to join in an arrangement which is may conceive to be virtually the same as was once proposed by our Government.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $2 00 per annum, in advance

NEW ORLEANS:

(SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1855.

Good Luck.—The Advocate office had a wind-fall this week. The printers' fee, in the shape of wedding cake, was round, plump and rich. Then one of the subscribers, Mrs. P., of Attakapas, remembered the editor specially—timely, too, at Christmas is coming. A box full of eggs! They count, by dozens, literally. Fresh, too, as though the hens had just cackled over their advent. Already we have boiled them (hard and soft) fried, scrambled, poached and omeletted—and they are first-rate every way. Say that an editor has no friends after all this.

The Good Time Come.—Now for books—more books—good books in good dresses! Our Book Editor says:

"We have a number of new books, stereotyped and ready for the press, which will be printed as soon as we get paper—our supply, of a particular kind, being unfortunately exhausted. Our binder will now be able to execute orders with dispatch, as he has just taken possession of a large three-story building recently annexed to our main edifice. He will now have room and verge enough for his operations. Heretofore he has been so cribbed cabined and confined, that his hands could not work with any comfort. They were liable, too, to make mistakes in folding and stitching the books, in consequence of the crowded state of the room, not to mention the [illegible] of some of his employees. He has brought with him from Philadelphia two excellent workmen and two women; and the [illegible] done by them at our Publishing House will [illegible] comparison with any of [illegible] done in any house in any part [illegible] We are not ashamed for our [illegible] to appear in the dress provided for [illegible] by Mr. Locken."

Lectures to Young Men.

The Young Men's Christian Association of New Orleans has wisely undertaken to supersede theatre-going, and such like amusements, not by proving their immoral tendency, but by providing a rational substitute. Bishop Hopkins, of Vermont, is engaged for a course of lectures, to begin this week in Odd Fellows' Hall. Tickets for the course are at moderate prices. We trust the Hall will be crowded. It is a glorious and enterprising movement. The Y. M. C. A. is getting to be "a power."

Religious Liberty Abroad.

[illegible] of this country lately considered [illegible] States and the United States, a correspondent of the London News writing from Naples, October 25th, says:

"I mentioned in a recent letter that Mr. Owen, the United States Minister, had endeavored to introduce into the new treaty between the Government and that of the two Sicilies, an article in favor of the extension of the religious privileges of his fellow-citizens. It completely failed; and Mr. Owen, I am told, even asked, 'When was ever a foreigner persecuted in this country for his religion, or even a heretic?' Oh, no, we never mention it. What I have proofs of the most cat-like vigilance on the part of the functionaries of Neapolitan subjects, and of instances of punishment in certain cases."

The Tampico correspondent of the Picayune, writes, Nov. 3, a gloomy account of the ameliorating prospects in South America; where, not paganism, not infidelity, but Romanism, is the main impediment, as usual:

"In Peru, too, things look equally. An English gentleman, just from Lima, tells me the country was never in a worse state than at present. Many of the States, since the abolition of slavery, are partially abandoned by the negroes, and free labor, at anything like reasonable prices, is an impossibility. Provisions of all kinds are consequently high, and will soon be much higher. Castilla, the President, seems to have lost all energy, and makes no effort to free the roads and mountain passes from robbers. Lima is overran with idle liberated negroes, and the streets are getting to be dangerous ground after sunset. The bill granting religious liberty having been defeated in the convention, much angry feeling has resulted among the better classes. From some cause or other the Masonic fraternity and the priests and intolerant portion of the Catholic laymen have become bitterly antagonistic; and, as the Masons are of course among the richest and most intelligent portion of the population, the vote of the convention does not by any means set the question at rest. But the church is also rich; and in the South of Peru, particularly in Arequipa, the fighting portion of the country, the whole people are priest-ridden, and of course fanatically opposed to religious [illegible] as you will see that what little [illegible] of this horribly governed country [illegible] to be devoured by a war of re[illegible] the subject of religious tolera[illegible] was under discussion three weeks since, an [illegible] was made into the hall of the convention by the emissaries of the priests, and the liberal members were pelted with rotten oranges and bananas. One deputy, Matute by name, was assailed in the streets by four priests, who attempted to assassinate him on account, as the papers express it, of his 'opposition to our holy religion,' and his life was only saved by the prompt intervention of some friends with a revolver."

Public measures seldom after they are done, by the event, wise men beforehand, by the rules of reason and right. The former look to the end to judge of the act. Let me look to the act, and leave the end to God.

The Charity Hospital.

A VISIT THERE—ITS ECONOMY—ITS EXPENSE ITEMS—CLINICAL ADVANTAGES—THE ADMINISTRATION—ROMISH AND PROTESTANT REPRESENTATION IN THE BOARD.

If a stranger has not the fear of contagion before his eyes, and is not weak of nerve, he cannot spend a morning hour in the city to more interest than in a walk through the grounds and wards of the Charity Hospital. It covers a square; and we have thought the proximity of the Gas Works favorable, as a disinfecting agent. The foundation of this eminent charity was not, as some suppose, of Romish, but rather individual Protestant beneficence; though its superintendence has been long committed to the Sisters. The Governor of the State appoints a Board of Administrators. It is open to students of the Medical University, and must be of immense advantage in giving our future practitioners a knowledge of local disease. Year before last over 13,000 patients were prescribed for. A secular paper makes these statements, on a late visit:

"An erroneous idea prevails that the Charity Hospital is a source of expense to the State. The fact is quite otherwise. Its principal source of revenue is the tax on passengers arriving in New Orleans from foreign ports, which, in 1854, amounted to $76,961. This item for the present year will be less, as up to the 16th Oct. there had arrived but 13,900 passengers, which, at two dollars and a half each, would be only $34,750; although it is probable that for the remaining two and a half months the number will be proportionately larger. In 1854 the Hospital received for ball licenses $3466. This item for the first eight months of the present year is $5,191, and the receipts for the remaining four months will probably swell it to nearly $7,000. The capacity and executive talent of the Treasurer (Dr. Baldwin) are shown by the amount realized from this source, which in 1851, yielded only $900, in 1852, $504; but in 1853, the first year of his administration, it yielded $2378, and in 1854 the second year, $8,466. For rent of real estate the Hospital receives about $3,500 per annum. For pay patients, the receipts for 1854 were $5,694. Of the total income for 1854, of $117,688, only $20,000 was received from the State, while of the total expenditures of $104,700 for the same year, $43,559 were for repairs and new buildings.

"* * * The economy of the Institution is no less remarkable than its order. Medicine constitutes a heavy item of expense, but this is much lessened by having a chemical laboratory, in which the most expensive drugs are manufactured at a little more than prime wholesale cost of the articles of which they are compounded, which also secures their purity—an object of great importance in these days of adulterated medicines.—Provisions of the best quality are obtained at the lowest rates by contracts with large dealers. Merchandise for bedding, clothing, &c., is also bought at the lowest manufacturers' prices. Some idea of the saving by this system may be formed from the fact that the amount expended per annum for bread is over $60,000; for meat, $12,000; drugs, $6,000; marketing, $7,000; milk, 1,500; lumber for coffins, $900; groceries, about $4,000; ice in summer, $250 per month, and other articles in proportion. Nothing is suffered to be wasted or spoiled. The saving of labor by the employment of steam in washing, cooking and for other purposes, is also great."

Inasmuch as the immediate superintendence of this institution is committed to the Romanists, who live in it, (seperate and commodious apartments and provisions having been made for them,) we are the more concerned for a representation of the Protestant element in the Administrators' Board. The jealousy of the public mind is awake, but we trust will not be hurtful in this direction. Romish priests, of course, are there in their agents, the Sisters. They stand suspected of a disposition in all matters to get the preeminence—to work in their own influence and work out others—to administer every trust to their ecclesiastical advantage. Therefore influences should be balanced, and by a very full representation of Protestantism all evil surmises and fears may be kept at rest.

As far as we know, Protestant ministers are allowed ingress and egress. They are treated with courtesy too; at least, this is our experience. But underneath and behind what is open to public view and visitation, ever lies the management. How are the funds disposed of? Is equal attention shown to the sick of all faiths and nationalities? Are the accommodations—the victualing and house room—provided for the attaches of the Institution confined to them alone? Are the contracts for supplies open to equal competition?

We do not raise these questions, but would prevent their being raised. They are not put for the effect of accusation indirectly. It would be damaging to this noble charity, as well as ungenerous, to worry and annoy those who administer its details. But it cannot be held up too clearly to public confidence. It is not a Protestant or Catholic Institution—not political or ecclesiastical—but CHARITABLE. The present Board, we believe, is liberally constituted, and has given general satisfaction. This is well.

Believing a Part.—The vulgar are apt to conclude that where a great deal is said, something must be true; and adopting that lazy contrivance for saving the trouble of thinking—splitting the difference—imagine they show a laudable caution in believing only part of what is said. This is to be as simple as the clown who thinks he has bought a great bargain of a Jew, because he has beat down the price from a guinea to a crown for some article that is not really worth a groat. [Archbishop Whately.

Methodism and Puritanism.

A writer in the British Banner, the organ of the British Congregationalist church, commenting on the statistics of American Christianity as given by Dr. Baird in his report to the Christian Alliance, gives utterance to the following language:

"Men and brethren, my object in all this is, if possible, in some humble measure to contribute to provoke you to a godly jealousy. Never in my life did my pen deal with facts and figures which gave me more deep and unfeigned sorrow. The churches of New England—so rich in men and so rich in mind, still the eye of the New World and the glory of the United States—have been verily guilty concerning their distinguishing principles, and still more concerning the Gospel of salvation. They completely misunderstood their great and glorious mission, which was to impart, not merely light, but life throughout the great continent in which Providence had placed them. John Wesley alone, a man living, laboring and dying in England, was the instrument of imparting to the religious movements of that boundless region an impulse four-fold greater than was communicated by the Pilgrims and their illustrious posterity. New England was the region of intellect. The culture of mind was in excess, the moral powers were neglected. It was wanting in godly ambition to diffuse the knowledge of salvation, and possess the land; and hence denominations, without a tithe of their intelligence and learning, outstripped them in the race of evangelization, to an extent almost incredible."

And here is another extract; from a different region the testimony comes. A gentleman in Texas writes to the New York Observer, a Presbyterian organ. It is refreshing, when to abuse Methodism is the fashion in certain quarters:

"In regard to religion, no man can but be profoundly impressed with the excellence and usefulness of the Methodist Church when he sees what it has effected in this new State. It has canvassed every acre of Texas with its preachers, and has done immense good towards organising Christian society, and repressing the immorality so natural in a new State. God bless the great Methodist Church! No man rejoices in its labors more than I do, though dissenting from many of its doctrines and practices. It is the most numerous Church in Texas. The Cumberland is probably next in size; then the Baptist, the Presbyterian, and the Episcopal. With the relative strength of the Lutheran Church, and also of the Roman Catholic, I am not acquainted. Many of the Protestant Germans, Swiss and Swedes have united with the Evangelical American Churches, and make pious and valuable members."

ANOTHER RENDING OF THE CHURCH.

Mr. Editor.—From the warm and incessant agitation of the slavery question, north of Mason's and Dixon's line, it is to be feared there will ere long be another rupture in the Methodist Episcopal Church, more fearful in its consequences than the one in 1844.

To every calm and reflecting mind, it must be evident that fanaticism and passion form the basis of such agitation, as well as an imperfect knowledge of the institution as existing in the South. For it appears to my mind a proper interpretation has not been given by Abolitionists to those Scriptures and facts bearing upon the subject, or they would not use the efforts they do to rid the church of slaveholders. Suppose they rid the church of every one identified in any way with slavery, what point would be gained thereby? Would they themselves become more righteous? If so, how much more righteous are they to-day than they were in 1844? Do their works exhibit any greater manifestations of piety now than then? "By their fruits shall ye know them," says a greater than Solomon.

But again, would they, by dismembering themselves from the institution, be in any better position to preach the Gospel to slaveholders, or even to slaves themselves? Let the history of the past and the indications of the present testify.

But I am wandering from the subject proper intended to arrest your attention. I took up my pen to call your attention to a speech made by Rev. Dr. S. B. How, before the "General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church," recently assembled in the city of New York, upon a resolution to receive the "classis of North Carolina" under the care of the Synod. Several remonstrances were offered against it, whereupon the following short and suggestive speech was elicited from Dr. How. Here it is:

"The Rev. Speaker entered into a full exposition of the propriety of receiving Christian slaveholders into the communion of the church. He quoted 1. Tim., vi, 4, and showed therefrom that Paul was very far from being an abolitionist, and that he condemned in the strongest manner such sentiments as are so common in certain quarters. Slavery is not by itself a sin. Abraham was a great slaveholder, and yet God made the great covenant with him, by which the church was established, and that church is the same now that it was then. Even Christ pictured the happiness of heaven, as dwelling in Abraham's bosom. May we lie in the bosom of that slaveholder! Slavery is shown not to be sinful from the prohibitions contained in the moral law, from the provisions of the ceremonial law, and from the judicial code of the Hebrews.

"And it is worthy of observation that these must have been given by anticipation, as at that time they were too poor to own slaves. It is argued that although slavery may be consistent with the Old Testament, yet it is entirely contrary to the New, which is a dispensation of greater light, etc. But our Lord had fellowship with slaveholders; his parables and instructions recognise the institution, and there is no intimation that it is sinful or wrong.

"So the teachings of the Apostles coincide with this, recognising the institution, and defining and enforcing the duties of the relation. Further there is no law against slavery; no definition of sin in the Scriptures applies to it, and all denunciations of slaveholders founded upon this assumption are wrong. We have two cases of fugitive slaves in the Scriptures: Onesimus, whom Paul sent back to Philemon; and Hagar, whom Jehovah commanded to go back to her mistress Sarah. Neither of these would have been done had the relation been sinful.

"There are reasons why slavery is allowed to exist in the world. It is one of the penal effects of the fall, a part of the curse which God has denounced on account of sin, and there is no remedy for it except in the Gospel. And this is foreshadowed in the promise made to Abraham, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." The spread of the Gospel will remedy and mitigate all the oppressions and evils of the curse. Violent means will never eradicate the evils of slavery, for judgments do not change the radical characters of men. Noah and his children brought out of the ark the same dispositions which prevailed before the flood. The Gospel is the only means of undoing the woes of the system. In it God takes the slave into covenant with him, and says to the oppressive master, touch not my servant, treat him as a brother.

The laws which God enjoined upon the Hebrews respecting slavery greatly mitigated the evils of the system as it was found in other nations. And neither in the Old Testament nor in the New is there the least intimation that the relation is wrong.

"The state of the question then is that the Scriptures recognize the lawfulness of the relation, they appoint the respective duties of master and slave, and commend them for fulfilling them. They make the slave a member of the church, take him into covenant, and make him an inheritor of heaven. The course of the Apostle Paul with Philemon throws great light upon this question.

"He discards all his authority as an Apostle, and entreats him as a brother. He knew Philemon had rights, and he respected them, and then descended to persuasion, using motives derived from Christian love. And here the influence of the Gospel is seen. There are Christian slaves and Christian masters now, who together rejoice that they are members of the church and heirs of heaven.

"The influence of the Gospel was seen in the conduct of the first Christian Emperor, Constantine, who abolished the punishment of slaves with death by crucifixion, and made their manumission easy, when before it was difficult and expensive.

"The speaker showed that the influence of the Gospel is the same now, by quoting from the Southern Presbyterian Review, which advocated the instruction and elevation of slaves, and this in South Carolina. We must remember that if we refuse ecclesiastical connection with these slaveholders, we also refuse ecclesiastical connection with the slaves, and if we sin in the one case we do in the other.

"If it is sinful to hold church fellowship with the churches of this classis, it is equally so to hold civil connection with them, and we must dissolve the Union, and what American desires this?

"The speaker hoped that the Synod would extend the hand of Christian fellowship to them."

There now, Mr. Editor, what will Abolitionists say to this—especially those fugitive slave law ones? Paul, being instrumental in converting Onesimus while a fugitive from his master, sends him back to Philemon. Did this inspired apostle combine with some under-ground railroad company, or even advise him to flee to some distant country from his master? Oh, no, but the rather sends him home to his master with a letter entreating him as a brother to forgive and receive him once more.

Did you ever, Mr. Editor, hear of any Abolitionist noting as did Paul upon this occasion? If not, where is piety gone? What their pity for bids the law of the land authorizes, and yet they use their utmost endeavors to thwart the design of those laws. Don't you think the South would rejoice to see an Abolitionist who would follow in the footsteps of good old Paul? Oh, ye men, convert those fugitive slaves you have among you, and send them home to their masters; then will the South believe you sincere in your protestations against slavery.

But, my dear brother, will it not be an amazing piece of business if, after all their fuss about slavery here, and their endeavors to get rid of slaveholders in the church here, they are ever fortunate enough (and many of them will) to get to heaven, the first place they will find themselves will be in the bosom of a slaveholder. The thought here presents itself—please ask Bro. Hosmer and his class how he will like the idea of being transported by the angels into the bosom of a slaveholder when he dies?

When Hagar ran away from her mistress, Jehovah secluded her not, though she was hardly dealt with by her mistress, but the rather directed her to return back again. Would Northerners do such a thing? Jehovah countenances the institution, but Northerners do not. Which shall we believe? "Let God be true, but every man a liar."

J. A. Clement.

Spring Hill, Ala., Nov., 1854.

Solitude.—Solitude, though it may be silent as light, is the mightiest of agencies; for solitude is essential to man. All men come into this world alone; all leave it alone. Even a little child has a dread, whispering consciousness, that if he should be summoned to travel into God's presence, no gentle nurse will be allowed to lead him by the hand, nor mother to carry him in her arms, nor little sister to share his trepidations. King and priest, warrior and maiden, philosopher and child, all must walk those mighty galleries alone.

FACTS IN RELATION TO THE COLLEGE.

Having seen an article in the Southern Christian Advocate, over the signature of W. A. McCarty, in relation to the action of the Commissioners charged with the location of the Alabama Conference College, on the 4th of last July, at Summerfield, I have concluded to state a few facts in relation to that commission.

On arriving at Summerfield, on the 3d of July, one of the Commissioners, interested in Greensboro' as the location, found Rev. C. D. Oliver there. He knew him to be an Auburn man, and stated to him that he did not wish any advantage in the location of the College; that he was authorized to endorse the Greensboro' subscription, and give an ample security for its payment. That he, Mr. Oliver, must get the friends of Auburn together, and guarantee the payment of their subscription, for it would be demanded. The next thing the friend of Greensboro' heard, was that a compromise could be made. Accordingly when the commission met, the compromise was brought to view, and some six or eight Commissioners, half friendly to Greensboro' half to Auburn, were sent out to form a compromise. When assembled, the individual authorized to endorse the Greensboro' subscription arose and declared that the commission had no power to locate more than one College—that Marion wanted the College, Daniel Pratt wanted it. Suppose they were all here with their subscriptions, would the Commissioners permit their sympathy to grant the request of each, and locate four Colleges, thereby destroying all of them? He then stated that one of the competing places must be disappointed; that the committee should return and report that they disagreed, lay the subscriptions of Auburn and Greensboro' before the Commissioners, with the advantages of each place, and take the vote. If Auburn got the College, Greensboro would submit, and that he would give $5000 to help build the College at Auburn. We then returned and reported that no compromise would be made.

Now for action—but behold, in the intense feeling prevailing, and preparation being made for the most favorable presentation of each place, up gets that restive working man, Gen. Scott, from Auburn, and requests that another trial be made for compromise. That he thought they could agree. This motion prevailed and hence the compromise.

Let it now be recollected that not one of the friends of Auburn believed that the action of the commission, recommending a College at Auburn, would be binding on the Conference under the resolutions adopted at Talladega in 1854. All they gained was the recommendation of the Commissioners. Further, if either of the friends of Greensboro' advocated the compromise, the writer does not not know of the fact. Not one believed their action would be binding on the Conference. One stated that he submitted, but if he was a member of the Conference he would oppose the establishment of a College at Auburn.

These facts are given for the special benefit of Mr. McCarty, and those who may read his late article. If these be facts, the question now is, has not Bro. McCarty been misguided? Can he reconcile them with his assertions? I think not.

Diplomacy is mainly a gift of nature, always desirable, and generally profitable. Ahithopol in Israel, Cardinal Richlieu and Tallyrand in France, have been most extolled as diplomatists. There is now living a spare, demure gentlemen, with a small blue or hazel eye, beaming forth with maiden innocence, covered with the blush of the rose, whose countenance, lighted up with the depth and profundity of his schemes, wins you whether you will or not. If the circumstances were calculated to develope his diplomatic capacities, he would not be found inferior to the renowned Ahithopol, Richlieu or Tallyrand. The writer may be mistaken, but thinks the famed compromise originated with him. Under his prowess the community will be wielded, and probably the Conference induced to make an effort to create two Colleges in Alabama, to the detriment of the interests of the State.

Aristides.

A Sleeping Audience Roused.—A correspondent informs us of an incident which occurred at the Congregational Church in Westminster, in this State, last Sabbath. The clergyman, an aged minister, was preaching from the text, "I speak as unto wise men; judge ye what I say." He advanced as far as "thirdly," when he observed that many of his hearers, overcome by the heat of the day, had fallen asleep. Stopping in his discourse, and wiping the perspiration from his furrowed brow, he exclaimed:

"My friends, as the day is sultry and oppressive, I will stop awhile, and request the choir in the meantime to sing the tune of 'Coronation,' commencing, 'My drowsy powers, why sleep ye so?'"

The effect was electrical, bringing the audience to their feet. They remained standing, while the sublime chorus, from the combined voices of the choir and congregation soon filled the house, and effectually destroyed the disposition to sleep. The preacher resumed his discourse at "thirdly." [Lynn News.

Adversity exasperates fools, dejects cowards, draws out the faculties of the wise and ingenuous, puts the modest to the necessity of trying their skill, awes the opulent, and makes the idle industrious. Much may be said in favor of adversity; but the worst of it is, it has no friends.

Notices of New Books.

From the publishers, through J. C. Morgan, whose large and constantly replenished depot of recent publications is kept near the Post Office, we have received the following:

The Lives of the British Historians; by Eugene Lawrence: 2 vols., 8vo. N. York, Scribner & Co., 1855.

The history of the Poets has been written—here is the history of the Historians. Unlike the Poets, they have been generally men of quiet, serene, reflective lives—no startling eccentricities, wine frolics, romances. Yet they are worth studying—their origin, development, troubles, remunerations, and the influences operating on them. The greatest writers of every age have been historians. As an art, its progress is brought under review by Mr. Laurence. Beginning at the monkish records, the noble art is brought down through Raleigh, Camden, Burnet, Robertson, Hume, Rapin, Gibbon, to Fox—with those fragmentary historians, More, Bacon, Swift and Milton. We mention only the leading names on the roll. The plan is striking, and has been worked out by Mr. Laurence in handsome style, and the publishers have done a good part by the volumes in the dress put on them.

Glenwood, or the Parish Boy. Boston, Shepard, Clark & Co., 1855.

Scene laid in a New England village. Tale has the varieties that enter into the silly twaddle of village gossips.

The Physiology of Marriage; by an old physician. Boston, J. P. Sewott & Co.

A book that would do some good, perhaps, if it fell only into right hands. Some of the subjects: "Premature Marriage, and its consequences," "Crimes with no names," etc.

One Word of Scripture.—The Word of God, read cursorily, will be as vapid and uninfluential upon the heart and life as if it were a mere list of names and dates. It must be deeply and constantly and prayerfully pondered. Read over simply the 8th chapter of Hebrews, the 6th chapter of Romans, or the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians, and they will come upon the ear with no more power than would the noise of sounding brass or tinkling cymbal. But take these passages, sentence by sentence, and ponder them with the deep conviction that golden treasure is enshrined in their unattractive exterior, and you will find a beauty and a glory in these passages which, while it refuses to manifest itself to the cursory seeker, waits to bless the laborous and prayerful.

Sometimes a single word contains in itself an amazing depth of meaning. I have by me a hymn written by a lady, who was the sister of the late Archdeacon of Bombay, in which she describes the power upon her heart of the word "freely." (See Rom. iii, 24, or Rev. xxii, 17.)

"When to my inmost heart,
Then didst one word impart,
Mighty in strength,
Larger and larger grew,
On my astonished view,
Its length and breadth."

I would say, then, read! read! Strip the tree of life of its fruits, bough after bough. As you advance you will find one crowding after another; and when you have found a prize, the natural result will be, a desire to run and tell its glories, and induce others to come and share your gladness.

PERHAPS THE TRUE REASON.

A well-informed gentleman in London writes to his friend in New York as follows, which appears in the Express of the 19th. The ideas communicated are interesting and significant:

You will be doubtless surprised at the broadside of the "Thunderer" against the United States, and like ourselves wonder what is coming next. But within the past week it seems to be generally understood in the city that there are two reasons, though not appearing on the surface; one is to cajole the Spaniards into the Alliance against Russia, the other to create a panic that will alarm holders of American securities to such an extent as to induce them to send them home for redemption, for the purpose of piling bullion in the Bank of England. I learn that some stocks and bonds go out by this steamer, but I think when the panic has subsided they will wonder how they have been so easily duped. To this alarm may be attributed the rise in cotton. A war is considered imminent by many who give credit to all they see in print.—We are all sailing very cautiously, as the man is not living who can foretell the future. By next May we may be exporting gold to America, or there may be gold to export.

There may be, and probably is, good reason to credit one of the intimations thrown out above; and in that we may find an explanation of the recent extraordinary conduct of the London Times, in endeavoring to make it appear that war between the United States and Great Britain was imminent. The whole object, very possibly, was to frighten the holders of American securities abroad, in order that they might be sent home for immediate redemption or sale, and the proceeds re-transferred to the other side of the water—all of which, had the amiable plan succeeded, would have aided materially in relieving the money market there, which has been uncomfortably stringent for a considerable length of time, and which bade fair to become painfully so, unless some financial coup d'etat was resorted to. Could the true motive be arrived at, it is very probable that reasons similar to the foregoing would be given.

The idea of a war between this country and England is thoroughly absurd. Nothing could bring about such a result save the last extremity of national disgrace—to which national annihilation, in a last, desperate and noble struggle, would be preferable. Why? Because the United States would suffer damages which hardly a quarter of a century of continued peace and prosperity would suffice to repair, and England would be irretrievably ruined.

These are practical, solvent reasons, which will forever prevent, we trust, the two greatest commercial and maritime nations of the earth from getting actually at loggerheads. If they must have a fight, let them join together and give "all the world and the rest of mankind" a tremendous thrashing, not go stupidly to work and commence cutting each other's throats!—[Crescent.

On the morning of the 18th a letter mail bag for Buffalo was found cut open and rifled of its contents above the Trenton Railroad depot, Philadelphia.

An affray occurred in Charleston on Tuesday last in which a German named Hitsche severely stabbed three men. He was arrested and committed to prison.

What Railroads do for Farmers.

The following paragraph, from the A[illegible] (Tenn.) Post, shows what railways do for [illegible] ors. The farmers of the three counties n[illegible] derive a clear profit this year alone, on the [illegible] gle article of wheat, of more than $200,000 [illegible] the railway. Their 400,000 bushels of w[illegible] soil for $200,000 more than it would [illegible] realized if there had been no railway to [illegible] it off:

Wheat.—The price continues at $1. One hundred [illegible] nineteen wagons unloaded at the depot here on [illegible] day, the 6th. This county will export, of the late [illegible] the harvest, one hundred thousand bushels. [illegible] Other counties along the line of the railroad will [illegible] do as well. The three counties of Bradley, McMinn [illegible] Monroe, from the information now in our possession, have no doubt will sell for export over 300,000 bushels, an average of one dollar per bushel. Here, then, is [illegible] enug sum of between four and five hundred thousand [illegible] lars dilfused among the people of these counties, for a single article of wheat alone; the product of a single [illegible] west. How much wheat did these same counties sell [illegible] before the railroad was built, and at what price? [illegible] more than 25,000 bushels, and that small amount [illegible] sold at an average of fifty cents per bushel. In the [illegible] while lands have quadrupled in value, and the [illegible] have actually become rich by the enhancement, [illegible] without an effort of their own.

The foregoing remarks have the same [illegible] eation to Louisiana that they have to Ten[illegible] see; and, although none of our railroads [illegible] been completed, equally wonderful effects [illegible] been produced. Lands that would not [illegible] brought a dime per acre three years ago, [illegible] not now be obtained at less than five, ten [illegible] fifteen dollars per acre. Large tracts have [illegible] brought under cultivation, and larger [illegible] ars being brought under cultivation, the [illegible] duce of which will find a ready and a remu[illegible] ative market. Smiling villages have [illegible] into life by magic, as it were, and popula[illegible] progress and prosperity now reign, where, [illegible] long since, almost primeval solitude prevailed. All this has been effected by our partially [illegible] pleted railroads. And if such glorious re[illegible] follow uncompleted undertakings, what [illegible] we not anticipate on the completion of the [illegible] grand system.—[Crescent.

STEAMBOATS.

New Orleans, as compared with other [illegible] cities, is peculiarly situated. It might be [illegible] perly called the warehouse of the Great [illegible] and South-West. The products that burden [illegible] ample floors are representative of many cli[illegible] and varied peoples. The sugar of Louisiana and Texas, the cotton of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana and Texas—all of which States come to the elsmente of an old world empire—come pursuing the road pointed out by nature, to the open gates of New Orleans. Then, too, the varied products of the Great West—wheat, corn, oats, lard, bacon, etc., etc., etc.—are to be found upon the groaning shelves of our warehouse.

The Cosmopolitan may find here the [illegible] that gratifies his moment's wish. It becomes, then, a matter of personal interest with those who have their homes in and rest their fortunes upon the prosperity of our city to bear in mind those who have contributed, are daily contributing, by their labor, skill, enterprise, to the advancement of our common welfare. The steamboats that ply the [illegible] Mississippi, which divide the waters of many tributaries contributing to its flood, work their devious way through the bayous of our State and the meandering streams of States; that ask for the riches of the productive soil, and bring to us the food we daily take, the ability to procure whatever may be necessary to satisfy our wants—the steamboats, we say, and those who manage and control them are fairly entitled to our best need of consideration. As New Orleans is now placed, her [illegible] its mercantile communication with other [illegible] pots, almost entirely through the medium of river and lake navigation; owing its livelihood in at least an important measure, to those [illegible] whilst working for themselves, are so largely contributing to our general and common welfare, it is the duty and the interest of citizens to return something of the value they receive by fostering the steamboat interest. By so doing, nothing can be lost, much may be gained. Will our "good folks" take a ride along our levee, note the incongruous but [illegible] valuable heaps of merchandise, witness the [illegible] ertions of those who have toiled in the successful endeavor to deposit upon our wharves the treasures of the West and the South—will they not, after thinking over their own interests agree that the laborer who contributes to the advancement is worthy of his hire, and who to the industrious steamboatman not only pays but substantial reward?

Grass may grow in our streets (we don't believe it) but we are fully convinced that as well as the carriers of our Western and South streams line our wharves, it may fairly be asserted that a good time is coming, nay, has come. Let our merchants make it their business to foster this steamboat interest. Let them look upon it as a most powerful auxiliary in carrying out of their own views. Let those who seek our city for pleasure recollect New Orleans is what she is much through the exertions of this interest. Let all who have any feeling in common with us do what may be in their power to prosper that influence which gives us wealth as a commercial community, celebrity as a city, and the comforts of a home.

The Effects of Fear.—The extraordinary power exerted by fear over the human mind was recently exhibited at Vienna in a remarkable manner. The Vienna correspondent of the London Morning Post, says:

Dr. F——, an eminent physician of Vienna, [illegible] leave from the local authorities to try his experiments on the person of a prisoner who had been condemned to death. Accordingly, an offer was made to the individual in question, holding out the promise of a remission of punishment if he would consent to pass the night in the bed of a patient who, four hours previously, had been carried off by cholera. The prisoner consented and was [illegible] to bed, and after the expiration of some three hours [illegible] less; he was seized with violent vomiting and all the [illegible] ant symptoms of cholera. He was attended immediately by several physicians, and ultimately, being a man of strong and vigorous constitution, was completely [illegible] established. His astonishment was great when Dr. F—— informed him that the bed was perfectly clean and free, and that no cholera patient had ever lain there.

Fear is the most fearful auxiliary of this [illegible] low fever. Hundreds and thousands have died from fright and fright alone. During epidemics here we have frequently heard physicians remark respecting their patients: "So-and-so would be entirely out of danger were he not frightened. His is not a bad case of fever, but he will probably scare himself to death despite all the remedies that may be prescribed."

We have been personally cognizant of cases where strong and hearty men, taken with the mildest symptoms imaginable, insisted from first to last that they were bound to die, and die they did. The mind—or rather mortal fear—exercised such a malign influence over the physical system that the skill of the physician was of no avail.

Such instances were deplorably abundant in 1853, when the epidemic raged with a virulence far more terrible than ever before known. [Crescent.

On the 19th the New York Chamber of Commerce held a meeting with reference to the seizure of the bark Maury, and the course of the British Consul in relation thereto. The Consul was severely denounced and a committee appointed to investigate the facts of the case.

Marriages.

In Thibodaux, La., on the 8th Nov., 1855, by the Rev. Samuel Hawes, Mr. Joseph Dixon to Mrs. Euphrosine Niles, all of Thibodaux.

Married, by the Rev. Stephen J. Daviss, at Pattersonville, La., on the 22d of November, 1855, Mr. George G. Zenor, of the parish of Concordia, to Miss Luchetia Robbins, of the parish of St. Mary, La.

[The printer was remembered in the above captials, and gives his blessing—a blessing withheld from many.]

Married, by Rev. Geo. T. Vickers, at Covington, La., on 21st Nov., Mr. John T. Hall to Miss Virginia Pearl, daughter of Samuel P. Russ, Esq.

[Printer again remembered.]

Deaths.

Wellburn Cook was born in Troup county, Geo., on the 3d of July, 1831, and died at the residence of his brother-in-law, A. D. Pato, in La Fayette, Chambers county, Ala., on the 4th of Nov., 1855.

Our deceased brother was the youngest son of Philip and Elizabeth Cook. For several years he had been a member of the M. E. Church, South. Yet the word member hardly does justice to his memory. He was a jewel of the Church.

His turn of mind particularly fitted him to live the life of an exemplary Christian. His distinctive characteristics were modesty, gentleness and justice. His heart was warm, his affections constant. Timid in his general intercourse with the world, yet bold to do right, he was endowed with far more moral fortitude than most men possess. He was firm amid revivals, and his seat was not vacant when the church grew cold.

We look upon his pious walk and godly conversation, and fondly hoped that we could see in him a futuro pillar in the House of God, when the old man of this generation should be sleeping in Christ. We rejoiced that the stately young oak gave such promise of a mighty prowess amid future storms. All loved him for what he was. The Church hoped in him for what he promised to be.

True, we shall no more hear his earnest voice, trembling because of the heart's fullness, mingle with ours about the throne of mercy, but we all feel it equally true that he now sweeps an angel's harp in the immediate presence of Him who said, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

While the Church on earth are mourning the departure of a Christian pilgrim, the Church in Glory are swelling their anthems, that one more spirit, redeemed through the blood of the Lamb, is pluming its wings amid the trees of Paradise, and bathing its bosom in the River of Life. A Christian has gone! There's a denser darkness on earth, but a more brilliant light in the Home of the Redeemed.

Jesus, when He walked in Judea, said: "Where your treasures are, there will your heart be also." And because of this great truth, in His infinite compassion, He has carried "our Willburn" to Heaven, that the hearts of his father, sister, and brothers might be there also.

Oh, that He, who gave strength to the withered arm—who has given to those that love him, power to "become the sons of God"—may help them that they fail not to perfect this kind design of Heaven! Amen.

B. B. McCraw.

It becomes my duty to announce the death of Bro. Robert Richey, one of the stewards of the Columbus circuit. He died on 23d of September.

Bro. Richey was born December the 10th 1805, and was converted and joined the Methodist church in 1841. During his connection with the church he filled the important stations of leader and steward. The latter he was faithfully performing when the Lord called him to his reward in heaven.

The interest he manifested for the prosperity of the church, and his zeal for the comfort of the preachers, greatly endeared him to the faithful laborers on the Columbus circuit, who have often been refreshed under his hopitable roof and benefited by his counsel.

At our third quarterly meeting he was one of that Conference, but alas! he, with the beloved Presiding Elder, Bro. McLeod, who then discharged the duties of his office, is gone, and ere this time have doubtless hailed each other on the other shore.

Much might be said in his favor as a Christian, but suffice it to say he died in the faith, and has left a wife and a large number of friends to deplore his loss, but we mourn not as those who have no hope.

L. J. SCHOOLAR.

At the fourth Quarterly Meeting, held in the Columbus circuit, Oct. the 13th, the following preamble and resolutions were offered and unanimously adopted:

"Whereas our beloved and esteemed brother, the tried, faithful and efficient steward of the Columbus circuit, Alabama Conference, has been by the mysterious hand of Providence taken from among us to his reward on high.

Therefore Resolved, That this Quarterly Meeting Conference deeply sympathise with his bereaved family; yet while his family and the church mourn his loss, we are confident that our loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That the preamble and resolutions be recorded on the Register of the Quarterly Conference of the Columbus circuit.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be tendered to the widow and children of the deceased, and that they also be forwarded, in connection with an obituary notice, to the New Orleans Advocate for publication.

Nov. 27. Wm. E. Ervin, Sec'y.

Died on the 10th Nov., in the 56th year of her age, after a long and painful sickness, Mrs. Lucy Watkins.

She joined the M. E. Church in 1812, in Jasper county, Geo. She was married to Bro. Bryant Watkins, and therefore became a resident of Green county, Ala., in 1827. In all her relations she closely resembled the model matron whose character Solomon has so beautifully drawn in the 31st chapter of Proverbs. It may as truthfully be said of the one as of the other, "The law of kindness was upon her tongue." Steady, constant and serene was the character of her piety. Of industrious and frugal habits. Charity, that priceless grace, found in her an impressible soul. Thus, possessing herself of the means and spirit, she stretched out her hands to the poor, and rescued them out to the needy. The influence exerted by the loveliness of her character over her family and friends was like a charm that no one wished to be broken. A gifted spirit, yet singularly meek and pacific. Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her. Her end was peaceful and triumphant.

W. E. M. Linfield.

The cold hand of death has robbed the church at Pattersonville of another member, and a large circle of friends and relations of a cherished friend.

Sister Johnston was born Jan. 11th, 1821, about ten years since, under the ministry of Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, joined the M. E. Church, and has ever since lived a blameless life. Since 1853 she has drunk deeply of the cup of affliction, but in all of her sorrow she bowed submissively to the will of God, for she recognized His hand in her bereavements. In 1853 her husband and her two children died of yellow fever; in 1854, a son by the same disease, and this year her oldest son died of typhoid fever; after which time her own health was impaired, until confined to her bed of typhoid fever, with which for two weeks she was a patient sufferer. On the 22d of Oct., 1855, her spirit was called from suffering to rest. She talked freely with me and others on the subject of death, and was resigned to the will of her Heavenly Father. No doubt he entertained of her preparation for her change.

Nov. 21, 1855. N. A. Cravens.

Departed this life on Friday, the 2d Nov., 1855, at 4 o'clock, P. M., aged one year, nine months and fifteen days, Catharine Elizabeth Dowdell, in Chambers county, Ala.

She was the daughter of Wm. C. Dowdell and Elizabeth E. Dowdell, his wife. This untimely death of a dear, bright little child has plunged an amiable and affectionate Christian household into grief. Her aged pious grand-parents, her most estimable parents, and a large number of relations mingle their unavailing tears on this sad occasion. The Gospel of Christ alone affords any consolation in this dark hour of bereavement. May those who loved her on earth, and cherish her memory, meet her in Heaven!

Already her sweet prattle about her prayers is changed into heavenly praise. Even her infant hand shall lift too ponderous bars of the dreary grave, and wave the banner of triumph over death on the holy mount of God in the better land.

"I take this little lamb, said He,
Protection he shall find in me,
In me he ever blest."

Wm. F. Samford.

Another member of the old Franklin street Methodist church, in the city of Mobile, has gone to her reward.

"Thus star by star declines,
Till all are passed away—
As morning high and higher shines
To pure and perfect day
Nor sink those stars in empty night,
But hide themselves in heaven's own light."

Mrs. Abigail S. Buffington, consort of Capt. Thos. M. Buffington, was born June 5, 1813, in Cabell county Va., and was married Sept. 1st, 1842. She came to this city in the fall of 1843, and on the 16th Nov. after suffering for many months with a painful disease, her happy spirit took its flight from earth to rest with God in heaven.

Much might be said of Sister Buffington as a wife, a mother and as a Christian, but I forbear. Suffice it to say, she was a consistent fullower of the meek and lowly Jesus—a humble, patient child of God, made "perfect through sufferings." There were times during her protracted illness when she seemed to be depressed, and was tempted to fear that when she would come to "tread the verge of Jordan" her faith would fail her. These were her fears, the facts were otherwise. On the morning of the day of her death she made every arrangement for her departure, even to the preliminaries of her burial.

A friend coming in, found her sinking, and exclaimed in surprise, "Sister, you are almost home!" to which she replied, "Yes, almost home. Glory to God—I am almost home!" She continued to shout and praise God to the last moment of possible utterance, and when she could no longer speak, she manifested her joy by clapping her hands until they fell motionless in death by her side. Many expressions of rapture and triumph, to which she gave utterance might be mentioned, and would be a source of comfort to her numerous friends who were not privileged to behold her triumphant end, but to do so would extend this notice this notice far beyond the usual limits. Let it be sufficient for them to know that she lived as none but Christians do live, and died as none but Christians can die. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, said the spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Died, in Oktiboha county, Miss., Oct. 17th, 1855, Elizabeth L. Fields, consort of Smallwood Fields, daughter of David and Susan Byors.

Sister Fields was born in Georgia, Butts county. She then moved with her parents to Pickens county, Ala., where she embraced religion, at what is called Hog Branch campground. Also attached herself to the Methodist church, in which she lived a consistent member until she was removed to join the church above.

For several years previous to her death she had been the object of much affliction, which was all borne with Christian resignation. For several weeks before her death she was confined to her bed, during which time she always expressed strong confidence in the Saviour.

The day she died seemed to be the brightest of all days, though suffering the most excruciating pain. She said that the afflictions of this life were not to be compared with the enjoyments of glory for one moment. She exhorted her friends not to grieve for her, and then laid her hands across her breast and fell asleep in the arms of Jesus.

May her bereaved husband and mother and relatives take encouragement, and meet her on the banks of sweet deliverance, where pain will not be felt nor tears be seen.

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

Died, 20th Nov., in Jackson, La., Miss Clara D. Perry.

She died in the peace of Christian faith.

EVIDENCE FROM A CLERGYMAN.

Plymouth, Richland county, Ohio, Sept. 25, 1855.

J. A. Rhodes.—Dear Sir—I cheerfully testify to the value of your Antidote to Malaria. One young lady in the family of a clergyman here has been taking an Ague Balsam for some time without any permanent benefit—a few days since she got a bottle of the Cure, and has not had a chill since. A young man also used the same Balsam some time without relief until he got a bottle of your CURE. So far it works like a charm.

Yours, truly,
Rev. A. C. DUBOIS.

☞ The Circulation of the Blood is justly esteemed the greatest ordination of Divine Providence; by that beating engine, the heart, it is driven to all parts of the system, giving vigor and strength to the complicated machinery of man. This living flood, whether we sleep or wake, sallies briskly through the arteries, and returns softly through the veins. How necessary that it should be kept free from all impurity, and yet how negligent many are respecting this great essential to the enjoyment of perfect health. Derangement in the Liver and Nerves is generally the primary cause of Dyspepsia, which makes life a burden, recall from it. Suicide would rapidly follow suicide, if there was no cure. No one would suffer long, if he is able to obtain a bottle of Hoofland's celebrated German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, Philadelphia; they rarely fail in effecting a permanent cure. Louisiana Items.—The Baton Rouge Comet complains that some unknown individual has been amusing himself by firing bullets into that office. The editor's wrath is fully aroused by the circumstance, and he threatens the author of the annoyance with the contents of a six-shooter. The Comet has the following remarks in regard to the sugar crop:

Early frost in October, and the almost uninterrupted summer weather since, will cut the sugar crop of this State off, at least one-half, if not more.

Apart from the new growth on the cane, the weather has been so warm that the boiled juice will not crystalize into sugar. We know of planters, in this neighborhood, who generally make about 100 hogsheads, who have already finished, and have made only 30 or 40 hogsheads. The present apparently "high prices" for the new crop of sugar must advance considerably before the season is over, for the crop of Louisiana will be fully half, if not less than half, the amount made last season.

The Morehouse Times of the 17th says:

The Ouachita is reported to be in good running stage; a rise of twenty feet is reported at Camden. The largest class boats can now reach Monroe.

The latest advices from Shreveport informs us that the river had risen to a good stage. Heavy rains had fallen above, and high water was expected.

The Thibodaux Minerva of Saturday last has the following paragraphs:

We are delighted to hail the advent of cool, bracing weather, which cannot but materially improve the sugar crop. We have had several white frosts during the week.

The Lafourche is now rising rapidly; and should it continue, we shall soon be favored with good navigation. The steamer Ceres arrived on Wednesday last from New Orleans. The present rise is from Ouachita. Several other Southern rivers are also reported rising; and we trust that we shall be favored with high water for some time to come.

Many of our sugar planters, who had suspended sugar-making in consequence of the recent warm weather, have again commenced grinding. It is to be hoped that they will find a visible change in the yield of the cane; if not, the present sugar crop must fall very materially short of that of the past year. We were yesterday shown a most beautiful specimen of straw-colored tiger sugar from the Leighton Refinery, Geo. Trufant, agent in this parish. The grain of this sugar is large and very firm; we cannot say that we have seen better.

EXCITEMENT IN PLATTE COUNTY, MISSOURI.

RETURN OF GEORGE PARK.

Chicago, Nov. 24.—There is much excitement in Platte county, Missouri, concerning the return of George Park to Parkville. Park was formerly chief editor of the Parkville Luminary. Early last summer the office of the Luminary was sacked, the press thrown into the river, and the editors driven from the county on account of their abolition proclivities. Park has recently returned to Parkville, and ascertaining this fact, a committee appointed by the citizens of Platte City went to Parkville and demanded that Park be delivered up to them. The citizens of Parkville refused to give him up, whereupon threats were made to burn the town. The citizens of Parkville held a meeting, organized a large force, and have resolved to defend themselves. Here the matter rests at our last accounts. The most intense excitement is felt throughout the whole region.

The Sound Dues Question.

Hamburg, Nov. 8.—There is some reason to believe that Russia has accepted the offer of mediator between Denmark and the United States, and re-proposed, that Denmark cede the island of St. Thomas to the United States for five millions of dollars, and, in addition, to exempt American ships from the payment of Sound dues.

Santa Anna's Three Million Drafts.

British Professions of Friendship.

Washington, Nov. 27.—Dispatches state that the English Government is very profuse in its professions of friendship towards the United States, but is at the same time very chary in giving satisfactory replies to our Minister in regard to the recent violations of the neutrality laws. Mr. Buchanan expresses the opinion that this procrastination is resorted to in the hopes that "something will turn up" to relieve the British Government from its present dilemma.

No place was definitely settled upon as capital of the territory.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA AT BOSTON

Boston, Nov. 24.—The Canada has arrived at this port from Halifax. We gather from papers and letters brought by her the following additional items.

English stocks closed ¼ penny higher in consequence of the approaching half-yearly dividend.

The British Government has prohibited the exportation of saltpetre from the East Indies, except to Liverpool or London, and also issued orders directing all vessels loading in English ports with saltpetre or nitrate of soda, to discharge their cargoes.

The losses by the late gale on the English coast amount to over two and a half millions of dollars.

The Wheeling Bridge Case.

The Supreme Court of Virginia has decided in favor of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway company in the Wheeling Bridge injunction suit.

New York Markets

New York, Nov. 24th, P. M.—Our cotton market has been quiet to-day, with sales of only 800 bales. Flour is quiet with sales at $9 87 for State, $9 94 for Ohio and $10 for Southern. Wheat is dull—sales of Southern White at $2 27, and Red at $2 10. Corn is higher and sales have been made to-day at $1 07½.

Miscellaneous News Items.

Sir Moses Montefiore arrived in Alexandria, Egypt, on the 2d ult., from Syria, perfectly satisfied with the result of his visit to Jerusalem, where he is to found a hospital on a large scale for the benefit of the Jews.

Brooklyn Navy Yard.—It is rumored at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, that the sloop-of-war Falmouth, recently arrived, and the unfinished frigate Sabine, are to be immediately prepared for sea. The frigate Potomac, supposed for the West Indies, will probably sail to-morrow. She has been completely repaired, refitted and manned with her full complement of about 500 men.

[N. Y. Eve. Adv., 19th.

A correspondent of the Boston Bee thus hits off the old fashion of hooped skirts recently revived by the ladies:

A fashion has been introduced this fall which, if carried into general use, will endanger the country. The English ladies were obliged to abandon it, as they lacked the necessary room on their little island. There is a better chance for it here, however. I allude to the hoops in the modern garments of ladies. In moving along the street, from the waist downward, they have the charming appearance of a barrel of jelly. They have about them so many different kind of springs, that if a person by any accident runs against them, the rebound sends him either on his back or into the middle of the street. To let one of them pass, it is necessary to turn into the next avenue. If the fashion becomes general, it will be absolutely necessary to obtain both Cuba and Canada for the males, as the females will certainly require all our spare territory.

The new British Commander in the Crimea.

Lieutenant General Sir William Codrington, is the oldest surviving son of Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, the victor of Navarino. He entered the Coldstream Guards in the year 1821, and was connected with them for thirty-three years without seeing any war experience, yet he rose from rank to rank until he became a Major General in 1854, just at the commencement of the war with Russia. He went to the East as an amateur, but on the return of the Quartermaster General, Lord De Ros, on account of ill health, Brigadier General Airey was appointed to succeed him, and General Codrington was appointed over Airey's brigade. He figured at Alma, Inkermaen, and the last attack on the Redan. The latter was commanded by him.

American Ruins in Buenos Ayres.—A recent letter from Buenos Ayres says:

I am not aware that the circumstances of the United States government having no treaty with this is generally known. A circumstance occurred here a few days since which shows the relative positing occupied by a British subject and an American citizen. An unmarried gentleman and a foreigner who had resided in this country many years, died suddenly intestate. As little appeared to be positively known of his birth, both the English and American Consuls claimed to administer to his estate, valued at $300,000. He had been enrolled at the Consulate as a British subject, and in the American as an American citizen. The Buenos Ayrean government notified the Consuls that if he were an American it would interfere in the administration, and claim its perquisites, 5 and 10 per cent; but if it were decided that the deceased was an Englishman, the government, by an article of the treaty, could not interfere. The American Consul at once yielded, as his administering to the estate would cost the heirs $30,000. You thus see the difference between an American and an Englishman in this State.

Shocking Murder.—We find in the Pittsburgh Journal the following account of a murder committed on the 4th instant near Duff's landing, on the line of the Pittsburg and Connellsville Railroad:

"The murdered girl was Mary Madden; the murderer a young man named Linehan. Mr. Madden, the father of the deceased, keeps a grocery shantee. On Sunday afternoon Linehan visited Madden's shantee and asked for liquor, which was refused him. He became enraged, and angry words passed from both sides, when Linehan left, but returned some time afterwards and forcibly entered Madden's shantee with a loaded pistol in his hand, and avowing his determination to shoot Madden if he did not give him whisky. Miss Madden, seeing Linehan raising his hands to shoot her father, rushed in between them, imploring him not to shoot her father. Linehan fired, and the girl received the contents of the pistol, the ball passing through her hand and thence through her abdomen. The unfortunate girl survived but a few hours. The murderer escaped."

The trial of Judge Stuart, in New York, on a charge of corruption and malfeasance in office, was concluded on the 20th. The jury rendered a verdict of not guilty, but recommended that the Judge resign his office, as he had "acted irregularly." The Judge then made some remarks protesting his innocence, and remarking that in regard to the recommendation of the jury he should be governed by his own sense of propriety, by regard for what was due to the public and his own character, and by the advice of judicious friends.

The N. Y. Herald reduces the result of the recent election in that State to figures, by which it appears that the American vote shows a gain of 24,000 since the election in 1854.

A young man named De Witt, in Warren county, New Jersey, says the Newark Advertiser, was accidentally killed last week by two sportsmen, from Easton. They had trespassed on his father's farm, and were ordered off by De Witt, but refused to go, a difficulty occurred, in which one of the sportsmen struck him on the head with the butt of his gun, from the effects of which he died on Thursday.

The English Difficulty.—The N. Y. Herald of the 20th publishes the following from its Washington correspondent. Whether the elements are worthy of consideration, the reader must decide for himself:

The trouble with England is not settled. It is thought that the Administration is a little in doubt about its own position. It is given out that the Pacific brought assurances that the increase of the British West India fleet had nothing to do with the Central American question. This was merely to satisfy the public. The real cause of the increase of the English fleet on the American coast is to be found in the peculiar instructions of Attorney-General Cushing to the District Attorney of Philadelphia. If any one will take the trouble to look at dates and facts, they will ascertain that within twenty-four hours after the receipt of the news in London of the trial of Heffs in Philadelphia, the addition to the West India fleet was under sailing orders. And I have information that when Cushing's two curious letters of instructions reached England, a demand for redress was made by the British government, and that demand is now before the Cabinet at Washington. This is a fact, and an important fact, too. Will England or the United States recede? That is the question—soon, indeed, to be the engrossing question.

A Crucifixion in China.—An American, writing from China to the N. Y. Times, after giving an account of the numerous executions of the rebels, says:

Two weeks since, to vary the scene, they had a crucifixion. A woman was sentenced to be crucified for the crime of having given birth to one of the rebel chiefs. If a father is exiled, his family is considered the same, and the whole family, from the old men of four-score to the child of four years, share the same fate. The poor woman was nailed to the cross while living—a nail made across the forehead to the bone, and the skin pealed down so as to hang over the eyes; after which the breasts were cut off, they then proceeded to break every bone in her body—a large knife was next thrust into the throat and passed down and, cutting the chest open. The executioner then thrust in his hand, and grasping the heart, tore it from its socket, and laid it beside and reeking before the judge. At Shanghai they drown them by dozens.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writes thus under date of the 20th:

The next packet from England will bring us the response of the British Government to our demand for reparation on account of Mr. Crampton's agency in the violation of our neutrality laws. Late events have confirmed this Government in the demand which they made a month ago, and if not there they now are determined that the British Government shall make an apology for the conduct of their Minister. If he be permitted to remain here in a diplomatic capacity. There are signs that no such apology or explanation will be made, and, in that case, this Government is pledged, deeply and irrevocably, to decisive action.

The packet, with the expected dispatches, may arrive to-morrow at Halifax, and they will be received here perhaps on Friday. Their contents, no doubt, anxiously awaited, will not long be withheld from the public. The dismissal of the British Minister will probably cause some excitement here and abroad, and may be even considered as an unfriendly and irritating act. It may, nevertheless, be very proper, as a means of maintaining the dignity and consistency of the Government, and securing it from future aggressions of the character from any quarter. To avoid complication in the war now raging abroad, is the accepted obligation of this Government to the people of the United States.

Ship Cleopatra.—Commodore Salter, U. S. N., has sent to the Department an account of the loss of the vessel named above, in the latter part of September last, about eight hundred miles east of Rio de Janeiro. Her mate or, Capt. Thayer, reached Rio on the 24 of October, accompanied by part of the crew, in two open boats, and reported that he had abandoned his ship (on a voyage home from Callao, with guano), which had sprung hopelessly a leak from running afoul of a set of mooring spars in the night time.

The first and third mate and nineteen others had left the ship in a third boat, and had not been heard of at Rio on the 4th ult. The English Rear Admiral (on that station), Johnstone, at Commodore Salter's request, had sent out a small war steamer in search of the missing boat. Those certainly saved were the captain, second mate, and twenty-four or twenty-five others.

Great excitement prevailed among the whalemen at Princetown, Mass., on Saturday morning, occasioned by a whale being seen off that place. Some fifteen boats immediately put out in pursuit. About thirty minutes after he was first seen he was struck by a harpoon from one of the boats, when he immediately commenced running, dragging the boat, and nearly filling it with water, but in some manner he cleared himself. Several whales of the black-fin species have been seen in that harbor recently, but none have been captured.

Prepayment of Postage to be made by Stamps only.—Important.—It will be recollected that by the act of March 3d, 1855, requiring the postage on all letters not free sent by mail within the United States, and not from or to a foreign country, to be prepaid, it was also enacted that from and after January 1, 1856, the Postmaster General may require postmasters to place postage stamps upon all prepaid letters upon which stamps may not have been placed by the writers.

We learn that the Postmaster General has decided to require postmasters to comply with, and carry into effect, this provision of the law; and if not already done, to supply themselves with postage stamps accordingly by sending their order for them to the Third Assistant Postmaster General. Of course, it is not intended nor expected that this regulation shall throw upon postmasters the labor of affixing postage stamps to letters where the writers might, without inconvenience, have done it for themselves. The main thing is for postmasters to keep themselves supplied with stamps, that all persons having occasion to use may readily obtain them. [Washington Union.

The steamship Pacific brought information from England that when Mr. Buchanan, our Minister at the British Court, had inquired the reason of the late reported increase in the British naval force in the American waters, he was answered by the presentation of a bundle of affidavits from the British Consul at New York and others, setting forth their belief that the bark Maury was fitting out as a Russian privateer. The New York Chamber of Commerce have held a special meeting in reference to this subject, and have appointed a committee to investigate fully the facts in the case, in order that they may be spread before the world in defence of those directly or indirectly assailed. The bark Maury was the second vessel of her kind which her owners had built and fitted out for the Chilean trade. The New York merchants do not like the imputation that they would engage in privateering or piratical pursuits.

Exploration of the River Salado, by an American Exploring Expedition.—A letter has been received by the Secretary of the Navy from Thomas J. Paige, lieutenant in command of the steamer La Yerba, dated Santa Fe, August 7th, at which place he arrived from an exploration of the river Salado on the 6th of the above-named month. The river Salado empties into the Parana at Santa Fe, the principal town of the province of the same name, which is one of the Argentine Confederation.

Rev. Mr. McLaughlin, the Catholic priest of Bath, Maine, has issued a card to the people of that city in regard to the recent disgraceful riot in that city, by which the Catholics were prevented from laying the corner-stone of a new church. He says the Catholics of that city "threw themselves without reserve, on the protection of their Protestant brethren," from the violence of a licentious mob, composed of but a few of the population of the city.

A serious break occurred in the canal at Toledo, Ohio, on the night of the 19th inst. The Columbus Journal says:

A violent rain storm was prevailing at the time of the break. The flood from the canal drove the inhabitants from their houses, which in the locality inundated are mostly small tenements, and thus over seventy families were driven forth exposed to the pitiless storm without. Rafts and boats constituted the only means of visiting the flooded parts of the city.

It is stated in the Friends' Intelligencer, that from statistics recently published in England, while the average duration of human life is estimated at thirty-three years, that among the Friends is an average of fifty-one years. Eighteen years thus added to the average of human life is a fact too remarkable not to challenge medical attention, and lead us to a close investigation of the ays of life.

E. Dehust, an eminent mineralogist of North Carolina, committed suicide by cutting his throat at a hotel in Philadelphia, on the 19th. Pecuniary embarrassments were supposed to have been the cause of the rash act. The deceased was the discoverer of Gold in North Carolina.

The case of the United States vs. the Captain and two of the crew of the ship James Chester, came up in the U. S. Circuit Court in Baltimore, on the 21st. The indictment charges the accused with feloniously casting away and destroying the ship James Chaston, in the mo of February, 1856.

The "Japanese Potato Plant" has been successfully cultivated this season by a florist in New York city. He planted over twenty roots in May last, in pots, in his hot-house, and when he dug them up in October they had, in some cases, grown to the length of two feet.

The loans negotiated by the Rothschilds since the beginning of the European war are enormous. They reach the enormous amount of five hundred and fifteen millions, viz:—To England $80,000,000; to Turkey, $40,000,000; to Austria $120,000,000; a first loan to Russia, $130,000,000; to Sardinia, $10,000,000; to England, in exchequer bills, $35,000,000; and a second loan, just being perfected, $100,000,000.

A young lady named Schaeffer was burned to death in Baltimore on the 20th by upsetting a camphene lamp into her lap. Her dying agonies were awful to witness.

Mr. Simon Rios, an aged citizen of Natchez, committed suicide on Monday evening last, by cutting his throat with a razor. The Free Trader understands that he had occasionally given evidences of an alienated mind.

J. U. Wright, one of the route agents on the Georgia Railroad, was arrested in Atlanta, on the 18th inst., on a charge of robbing the mail. The Atlanta Republican learns that he confessed his guilt. He has been committed for trial.

Fire and Loss of Life.—In the Washington Organ of the 17th, we find the following particulars of the recent destructive fire and loss of life in Alexandria, Va.:

About 12 o'clock last night a fire broke out in the third story of the queensware store on King street, near Fairfax, occupied by J. T. Dowell. The store was consumed with its contents.

About 4 A. M., as the firemen were engaged in extinguishing the embers, the west gable end of the building, which was built of brick, fell in with a great crash, burying under the ruins a large number of the most respectable citizens of Alexandria.

When our reporter left, at 11 A. M., the following persons had been taken out of the ruins, dead and horribly mutilated: George Plain, fireman of the Star Company, and a member of the City Council; John Roach, of the firm of Roach & Washington, wholesale grocery merchants; Carson Green, of the firm of Wise & Green; James Keene, bricklayer; Robert Taylor, street paver; Mr. Evans, gas fitter, and David Appich, son of G. Appich, confectioner.

The following persons were taken out wounded: W. Davis, C. Wise, David Williams, W. Lambert, Robert Henry, G. S. Somers, slightly; and —— Dogon, colored, seriously. Many others, whose names we have not learned, are supposed to be buried in the ruins. The citizens are making the utmost exertions to recover them.

This distressing calamity has cast a gloom over the whole city, and business to-day is suspended.

The unfortunate victims of the accident will be hurried to-morrow.

Mr. Dowell was fully insured, $10,000 in the Albemarle, and $10,000 in the Potomac Insurance Company of Alexandria. The value of the stock was but $5,000.

The fire was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary. Trains of powder were laid from the third story to the cellar, and large bales of cotton, saturated with spirits of turpentine, were found in various places. The most intense indignation exists against the perpetrators of this diabolical crime, which has been attended with such disastrous results. Suspicion rests upon a certain individual, but we forbear to mention names at present.

The warehouse in the rear of the store was also on fire, but was extinguished without much damage.

A passenger train on the Lehigh (Pa.) Valley Railroad was thrown off the track on the 16th inst., near Allentown. One freight car was demolished, and a car containing thirty passengers was thrown off the track. All the passengers escaped unhurt, but a brakesman was fatally injured.

The New York correspondent of the National Intelligencer says: "We shall very soon have a perfect glut of steamships running between the port of New York and Europe. In addition to the renewal of the trips of the Cunarders, he says the New York and Glasgow Company, having their three screw steamers released from service by the British Government, intend to recommence their monthly trips across the Atlantic in January next."

John H. Lyon, of Jersey City, has been re-elected President of the New Jersey Know-Nothing State Council for the ensuing year.

Several of the merchants of New York have determined to fix the minimum passage to Europe as follows: In second cabin, $18 for adults, and $10 for children under 12 years; in steerage, $16 for adults, and nine for children under twelve years of age, including provisions, which, in all cases, will be provided by the ship.

A company with a capital of $500,000 has been formed at Chicago for smelting and manufacturing iron. They have purchased an iron mountain on Lake Superior, which is said will afford an inexhaustible supply of the ore. The mountain was selected for the company by Dr. George Stealy.

U. S. Commissioner Loring, of Boston, has decided that whipping a seaman with a rope's end is not flogging within the meaning of the statute. Flogging is a technical naval act performed by the proper officers, according to certain formalities, and inflicted with an instrument known as a "cat."

Monument to Gen. Taylor.—A dispatch to a New York paper dated Easton, Pa., Nov. 16, says: The monument in honor of Zachary Taylor is to be dedicated here on Tuesday next, (20th inst.,) and a great time is anticipated. Invitations have been extended to Generals Scott, Cadwallader, Patterson and Foster, and Commodore Stockton, and it is hoped that most if not all of them will be present. Twenty different military companies are expected.

No Cause for so much Fuss.—The Washington Union says: "We are satisfied upon such inquiry as we have been able to make, that no cause, inducement, or plausible pretext for war, or even of serious misunderstanding, can be found in any question now pending between the two countries, and that, therefore, no apprehension need be entertained by the friends of peace, either in Great Britain or the United States."

Collisions at Sea.—The British ship Robert Parker arrived at Boston, Nov. 10, from Liverpool, was in contact on the night of November 8th, in lat. 45 30, long. 54 30, with the British ship David Brown, Vaughan, from Quebec for Bristol, England, and damaged her badly. The R. P. lay by her until daylight and took off the captain and crew, twenty-one, all told, who stated that two men had been killed at the time of the collision. The Robert Parker lost her jib-boom and entwater. Arrived, ship Euphrasia, of New York, Mar

AUTUMN IN THE HILLS.

Where the rich vintage ripens,
Where still the golden days,
Red and yellow the grape mellow
Of the Indian Summer hues.

Purple the sun the glory dying,
Where, amid the old hillside lying
That wraps round the splendor flying
O'er the summer's wealth of gold.

Up the distant wood horizon,
Above the cottage in the valley creep,
In fragmentary rolling clouds,
From the fading forest deep.

Purple mingled with the mountain,
Quickened on the valley peak;
Where the hunter's rifle echoes
Crowns the lamp of the birch-tree pale.

Through the golden, hazy weather
Breathes balm of way-light come,
Blending down among the bushes,
Where the wood-grouse rolls his drum.

In the evening light the sparrow
Warbles on the hill-side sad,
Rain-drops of the velvet autumn,
Overlaid with tarnished gold.

On! the dreaming in the gleaming
Of the autumn-dated hills;
Shadowy, darker grows their seeming,
While the hand the picture fills.

Passing is the autumn yellow,
Short will be the golden days
Of the Indian Summer mellow,
And the bright October haze.

For the wild fowl's trumpet ringing,
Overhead the silence breaks,
See the pinions southward winging
From the marshy northern lake.

Clouds are curling, cattle is whirling,
Hasty is the carving caste;
Corner a hound the dead leaves hunting,
Downy boys are on our tracks.

SCHOOL'S OUT.—By Letitia Linwood.

There's a sound of distant laughter,
From the children at early play,
And the echo follows after,
Thro' the rock and glens away:
They chatter as they children!
How I hear my gladness mirth!
Fallow the birds of every wildwood,
In the sunniest spots of earth.

Down from old aisles of fashion,
Are those solitude faces now,
They are singing benediction
Where the dead lie cold below.

Pealing magical into mountain,
Quickened on the valley peak;
Echoes of the Christ-child,
And I hear that thrill of gladness,
Every heart that's not yet dead,
Every child-eye, while you may.

REMEMBER.—Cary.

Remember in prosperity, still and cave,
Remember, &c. Let heart now soft go flow!
Remember, &c. Let the western wave
Remember, &c. Let the sunset glow.
Remember, &c. Let the tear-drop fall,
Remember, &c. Let the fadeless flower,
Remember, &c. Let the dying call,
Remember, &c. Let the closing hour.
Remember, &c. Let the shadows round us lower,
Remember, &c. Let the poet's song above a brighter blaze,
Remember, &c. Let the evening clouds be gorgeous dye,
Remember, &c. Let the hope, our heart, to earth is given;
Remember, &c. Let the star, and lovely to the eye
Remember, &c. Let the heart rove not, or its sky, to heaven.

MEMORY.

By Whittier Ellsworth Prard.

Down on a funeral mound,
Flat, with its face to the ground,
With its arms bent around,
Lieth a child of three:
And the rain pelteth cold,
And the dark clouds scud and fly,
And the moon, with her solemn eye,
Looketh mournfully down from the sky.

Clouds are curling, cattle is whirling,
Hasty is the carving caste;
Corner a hound the dead leaves hunting,
Downy boys are on our tracks.

United States and England.

The following dispatch appears in the New York Herald of the 17th:

WASHINGTON, November 16.—The Secretary of the Navy withheld the instructions to Commodore Paulding until the arrival of the Pacific, with the intelligence of the receipt of official information from England, assuring our Government that the dispatch of a British squadron to the West India station has no reference to American matters or any object hostile to the United States, only one vessel of the squadron will proceed to Nicaragua, and that the flag ship Potomac with Commodore Paulding in charge of the general interests of the United States

Letter from Wm. Smith O'Brien.

The following interesting letter from this distinguished Irish exile, in reply to the address adopted at a meeting held in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, on the 15th of December last, is published in the latest Northern papers. The address, after being engrossed and signed, was sent to Mr. O'Brien, but, by some misdirection, its receipt by him was delayed, which accounts for the length of time transpiring between the adoption of the address and the receipt of his reply. As it is, however, the reply will be read with interest, as everything coming from the distinguished gentleman deserves to be:

Gentlemen:—I have long desired to obtain a suitable opportunity of offering to the American people my acknowledgments for the interest which they have manifested, during the last six years, in regard to the fate as well of myself as of the other Irish prisoners who were consigned to penal exile in consequence of the efforts made by us in 1848 to save our country from ruin. The address which has been adopted by a meeting held at New York, under the Presidency of the Chief Magistrate of that city, gives me this desired opportunity, under circumstances which are peculiarly acceptable to my feelings. I therefore gladly avail myself of it to assure you that, as the sympathy evinced by the citizens of the United States contributed in no slight degree to cheer and sustain me during the season of severest trial, so my present enjoyment of comparative felicity is greatly enhanced by their kind congratulations; and I am convinced that this sentiment is shared by my brother exiles, whose labors you have associated with mine in terms most gratifying to me.

It is not surprising, indeed, that a nation which woe its liberties and present prosperity by successful resistance to misgovernment should regard with favor the efforts made by a kindred people to escape by a similar means from a system of misrule more oppressive, more galling, and more calamitous than that which gave occasion to the American Revolution. But while success, however unmerited, is generally greeted with homage, it seldom happens that justice is done to the acts or the motives of those who fail—more especially of those who fail without the glory of a struggle. The citizens of the United States have not founded their judgment respecting our conduct upon events, but have estimated it by the occasion and by the motives which prompted it. For this generous appreciation I am desirous to offer, on the part of my brother exiles and myself, our unfeigned gratitude. I have been rejoiced to perceive that the meeting at which your address was adopted was attended by native Americans as well as by Irish refugees. There is no point connected with the recent emigration from Ireland to America respecting which I have felt so much solicitude as the maintenance of harmony between the native citizens and those of my fellow-countrymen who have adopted the United States as their home. On the one hand, I trust that the Irish will never forget that when they fled in myriads from their own country in order to escape the manifold disasters which awaited them there—when they fled from famine, from ejectment, from misgovernment, from proscription—they found in the United States a land of refuge, and were received with a fraternal welcome. I trust, therefore, that they will not only evince loyalty to the Government of the Union—that they will not only endeavor to deserve the title of useful and orderly citizens, but that they will even avoid every proceeding which can awaken unfounded jealousies or unworthy prejudices.

On the other hand the Americans ought not to forget that in the early struggle by which their national independence was acquired, Irishmen bore a prominent part; that some of their most illustrious fellow-citizens have owed their extraction to Irish parentage; that by Irish labor their forests have been cleared, their towns have been built, their mines have been worked, their lands have been cultivated, their ships have been constructed, and that if ever the American Union should need for its defence, or even for its aggrandizement, the aid of bold hearts and of strong arms, it will find in the Irish population that hereditary valor for which they have ever been distinguished.

I should trespass beyond the appropriate limits of this answer if I were to give utterance to all that I could wish to say on the present occasion. I shall, therefore, only add the expression of my heartfelt desire that the great Republic of the West may become in each succeeding year more and more deserving of the admiration of mankind, and that its population may enjoy more and more both the happiness of social life and the blessings of national prosperity.

I have the honor to be your very faithful servant,

(Signed) WILLIAM SMITH O'BRIEN.

Brussells, 1855.

British Trade Returns.—The latest monthly returns of the British Board of Trade show a large falling off in the tonnage arrivals at the ports of Great Britain, but a considerable increase in the departures, thus demonstrating an activity in the export trade of the United Kingdom, which is looked upon as encouraging. The following table will show the amount of tonnage entered and cleared for the month of September during three years:

	Tonnage entered.	Ton. cleared.
1853	909 919	819 179
1854	941 966	835 611
1855	807 906	853,492

The export trade, however, has not increased in the proportion of the decline in the imports. The arrivals in 1855 have declined 302 013 tons, as compared with the same month in 1853, while the departures for the same time only show an increase of 36,697 tons. The falling off in the arrivals has been principally in British and foreign vessels other than those of the United States. Of the 302,000 tons, the falling off in United States vessels is less than 10,000 tons. In the export trade, as shown by the tonnage, the amount has largely increased with the United States, while with other foreign countries it has proportionably declined. This is one of the strongest of all arguments in London and Liverpool, Glasgow and Manchester, against war with this country.

Dr. Kane.—The foolish story of the engagement of Dr. Kane, the Arctic navigator, to one of the spirit rapping Fox girls, is thus explained by a Philadelphia correspondent of the Boston Traveler:

Some time previous to the departure of Dr. Kane on his last expedition, a subscription was started in New York by a number of liberal, kind hearted gentlemen, for the purpose of educating one of the Fox sisters — a remarkably bright, intelligent girl, and worthy of a better employment than "spirit rapping." Dr. Kane was applied to, and feeling somewhat interested, from pure motives of humanity, subscribed with a sailor's liberality. On his return, by invitation of the gentlemen superintending her education, he called to witness the improvement of his protege, and from this simple incident has arisen the sugegement story.

The Memphis Eagle of Tuesday last has the following paragraphs:

On Saturday night a man by the name of Tanay, who was concerned in the Louisville riot, shot another man by the name of Domicick McCarmon, with a horse pistol loaded with buck shot, killing him instantly. Several shot entered the side of his head near the ear. Tanay is still at large, although there is very little chance for him to escape. We understand that the only reason for the murderous act, was because McCarmon refused him liquor. This makes three affrays on Saturday night, two of which were fatal, and the other may prove so.

A man by the name of Lance, and another named "Dutch Henry," shot a man by the name of Ringwald, on Saturday night, at Fort Pickering. We learn from an officer that Ringwald is dead. One of the murderers, Dutch Henry, has been arrested; the other made his escape.

Recently a fellow brought suit before a Philadelphia Alderman, for suing on paying some of the cost in advance as he was not known to the officer. He gave him a counterfeit note and a false address, got the change in 'good money,' and of course let the suite go by default. The defendant says he never heard of him before and the magistrate thinks he never will again.

War.—The following remarks by Voltaire will apply very well to the present war in the Crimea:

A hundred thousand mad animals, whose heads are covered with hats, advance to kill or be killed by a like number of their fellow mortals covered with turbans. By this strange proceedure, they want to know whether a tract of land, to which none of them has any claim, shall belong to a certain man whom they call Sultan, or to another whom they call Czar, neither of whom ever saw or ever will see the spot so furiously contended for, and very few of those creatures, who thus mutually butcher each other behold the animal for whom they cut each others' throats! From time immemorial this has been the way of mankind almost all over the earth. What an excess of madness this is! and how deservedly might the Supreme Being crush to atoms this earthly ball, the bloody nest of such ridiculous murderers!

The following is the latest story we have seen illustrative of the sagacity of the feline race:

Mr. Tiedemann, the famous Saxon dentist, had a valuable tortoise shell cat, that for days did nothing but moan. Guessing the cause, he looked into its mouth, and seeing a decayed tooth, soon relieved it of its pain. The following day there were at least ten cats at his door—the day after, twenty; and they went on increasing at such a rate that he was obliged to keep a bull-dog to drive them away. But nothing would help them. A cat who had the toothache would come any number of miles to him. It would come down the chimney, even, and not leave the room till he had taken its tooth out. It grew such a nuisance at last that he was never free from one of these feline patients. However, being one morning very nervous, he accidentally broke the jaw of an old tabby. The news of this spread like wildfire. Not a single cat ever came to him afterwards.

Abernethiana.—Abernethy's mind disqualified him from adopting that affected interest which distinguishes many of the well-bred physicians, and he heartily despised their little arts to acquire popularity. He received a visit from a lady one day who was well acquainted with his invincible repugnance to her sex's predominant disposition, and who therefore forbore speaking but simply in reply to his laconic querice. The consultation was conducted during three visits, in the following manner: First day—Lady enters and holds out her finger.—Abernethy: 'Cut?' Lady: 'Bite.' A.: 'Dog?' L.: 'Parrot.' 'Go home and poultice it.' Second day—Finger held out again.—A.: 'Better?' L.: 'Worse.' A.: 'Go home and poultice it again.' Third day—Finger held out as before.—A.: 'Better?' L.—'Well.' A.: 'You're the most sensible woman I ever met with. Good bye Get out.'

Promising Youth.—Sammy went to see his grandfather, a pious old gentleman, who was wont to discourse much to young Samuel upon divine things. The lad, while one day taking a ride in his grandfather's carriage, after sitting for a moment or two in silence, asked:

"Is God every where?"

"Yes, my child."

"Is he in this carriage?"

"Certainly he is."

"Then all I've got to say is, he's having a splendid ride."

The grandfather lifted his spectacles, looked at Sammy, touched up the horse, and said not a word.

"Villikins and his Dinah."—The Boston Post has the following good one from a correspondent:

It is onetomery in many of our city churches for the congregation to join in singing the last hymn. On Sunday last a gentleman, accompanied by his little girl of some five years of age, strayed into one of the aforesaid churches, and his fine voice materially assisted the choir in getting through "Winchester." Just before the benediction, the little girl, observing the effect produced by her parent on the occupants of the surrounding pews, cried out in an audible voice, "Papa, please sing 'Villikins and his Dinah!'" It is needless to add that the benediction was unheeded.

The Jews.—The San Francisco Sun, in an article upon the present condition of the Jews, closes with the following paragraph:

"The American Jew is only less proud of his country than his religion. To say he is a mere dweller upon the soil because it affords him the means of support, is to libel the most noble traits of his character. The graves of his ancestors are around him. His heaven is no dearer to him on the shores of the Pacific as upon the sacred Mount of Olives, or within the classic walls of Jerusalem. His God is omnipotent, omnipresent and omniscient. He has knelt before that awful presence alike on the deserts of Arabia and the frozen zones of Siberia; and why should he here, where the law recognizes his religion and his political privileges, withhold an affection to which he is impelled by every consideration of prosperity to himself and future happiness to his children? His respect for our laws is shown in the fact that he seldom violates them. His wealth has gone towards building up and enriching our cities. He cultivates the arts, and goes heart and soul with our active citizens in every useful enterprise. He quarrels but little; heeds a mob never. You will find him in our courts of justice—on the bench, at the bar, in the jury box—but seldom ever arraigned for a heinous criminal offence. This is the American Jew. Let his good qualities be imitated; his bad ones should be forgotten."

Dr. Mather Byles.—In a recently published work about oddities, the author tells some amusing anecdotes of this famous tory of the revolutionary era in Boston. Here is a specimen:

In the year 1780 a very dark day occurred, which we long remembered as "the dark day." A lady neighbor sent her son to the doctor to see if he could tell her the cause of this obscurity. "My dear," was the answer to the messenger, "give my compliments to your mother, and tell her that I am as much in the dark as she is."

A Funny Specimen of French-English.—A correspondent of the Knickerbocker gives the following speech of Signor Jullien, in London, when he was compelled to change the programme of performances, after the audience assembled. It is a very funny specimen of French-English:

"Ladees and Gentilmane: I am ver' sorry to comes before you to makes ae apologee, but it was impos' to give ze concairt to-night of ze Mossieu Beethoven, and for zat I av make myself von plen to give it next week; and I av put ze small beet in ze house to tell him about zat. I av sent von leetle boy to ze offesce of ze newepap' to make an publeek know, but ae leetle boy her'r'on hack ver' queek, and zay he voe too late; ae newepap' was go to ze press. So I can say meeel' to any ladee or gentilmans as vill eot like moch ze progrmme for thie evening, he will be eo good as to gives hees moneea back to ae man at ze door, or take teeket for ze concairt of ae nex' week. And if he pref'er not that leetle ar'r'rangemoeg he shall take his hat and go to his home.

[Here a voice from the upper gallery demended: What does the Times say?] "Eh! vot for yen say vot say ae Times? Do you sup-pose I am reesponseeble for vot zay ze Times? My dear anr, it has been two months ze Times tell you Zebastapol vos fall. You believe him, eh?"

Here the triumph of Jullien was complete, as abundantly manifested by the deafenieg applauses of the audience, and he might have profitably connuded; but the fury of eloqueuce was upon him, and he proceeded:

"Ladees and Gentilmane: I av just r'r'r'return from ze Americne, vere I av give a grand concairt from ae New York to ze New Orleang, and I muet zay I av nut aee such commoseb-nng in any place in ae great ti'R'Republiqua as I av see to-night in ae grand metropoiees of ae wnr'r'r'ld."

I need not add that such a peroration, delivered with indescribable energy and aplomb, brought down the house, and that thn Crimean compositions were thereafter received with great enthusiasm.

A couple of horses attached to a wagon ran away near Lonieville a few days ago, and a young man named Carman becoming entangled in the reins, was dragged some distance and killed.

Precautions against Fire.—The Fire Marshal of New York has published a card, suggesting measures of precaution against fires, which may be repeated with advantage. He states that a large proportion of fires are caused by the incautious use of matches, particularly the kind known as wax matches. Rats and mice are apt to seize upon them as a means of immediate subsistence, and, conveying them into their holes behind the lath and plaster, sooner or later the matches are nibbled, ignited, and the building fired. Matches should also be kept out of the reach of children, as their lives are frequently perilled by playing with them, and their homes fired. The practice of crowding large quantities of goods in store windows is another source of frequent fires. The concentration of heat among the goods is likely to produce combustion, and the slightest puff of air among the articles carries a portion nearer the light, when a fire instantly takes place. The use of camphene and burning fluid is adverted to as another prolific cause of fires. The adoption of the rule never to permit such lamps being trimmed after night is recommended as the only preventive against the frequent lamentable accidents resulting from the use of such explosive fluid. Coal and wood ashes should never be placed in wooden vessels. The late calamitous fire in that city, where six persons perished, originated in the careless manner of depositing coal ashes in the kitchen. These suggestions are such as occur to every prudent and thoughtful person; but, though they are not new, they are useful to be repeated as if they were.

Insect Diplomatists.—We have private advices from the Russian dominions, to the effect that the grain-producing districts on the borders of the Black Sea furnish this year a scanty and insufficient harvest. The grasshoppers, the pest which has ravaged the fields of Utah in our hemisphere, have done great mischief to the growing wheat in that region from which the granaries of the Russian Empire are filled, and from which, in past years, large quantities of grain have been exported to Western Europe. So great, it is said, has been the deficiency of the harvests of last summer, that Russia is likely to suffer a distressing dearth, and to regret deeply the state of things which places her ports against supplies from countries where the earth has yielded her fruit with less stint. The ecurce from which we derive our information adds the remark, that in this circumstance alone can be found any reason to expect that the warring nations will agree upon a peace.

If we may rely on the information which we have received, the grasshoppers may possibly prove the most efficient negotiators that have yet undertaken to deal with the differences between Russia and Turkey. In the old fable the money gnawed apart the meshes of the net which the lion could not rend with all his strength. If a peace should follow the dearth of food in Russia, the grasshoppers will have effected what the efforts of the wisest and most experienced diplomatists of England, France and Austria, were unable to accomplish.

More Vagrants from Europe.—The Commissioners of Emigration, we are happy to know, are making efforts to keep European paupers and criminals from our shores. It was stated at the last meeting that a ship had arrived that day, named the Driver, in which were six able bodied men, who were sent by the commissioners. Suspecting that they were criminals from Holstein, they had them sent to the Mayor's office to have the matter inquired into. An effort is also making to keep the emigrants in Europe from the outskirts of those who rob them of their money, and deceive them in regard to the country. They have prepared a memorial, which is to be sent to the different governments of Europe, asking help to protect the emigrants from the fraude perpetrated upon them by runners and passenger agents. A history was given of the efforts of the Commission in the establishment of the emigrant depot, and the passage of proper laws for their protection.

Many of these agents, it was stated, were naturalized citizens, and their deeds placed them outside the pale of all laws. The memorial was ordered to be transmitted, and a thousand copies sent to the State Department, to be transmitted to every Consul in Europe. [New York Express, 17th.

American Authoresses.—The last steamer from Europe brought out an agent from "The London Journal," whose sole business in America was to negotiate with Mrs. Ann S. Stephens and Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth, for the advance sheets of all their writings, without reservation, and on their own terms. The Journal boasts a circulation of five hundred thousand copies.

Rather Far-fetched.—In Cincinnati, a few days ago, a man was fined one dollar for attempting to provoke another man to commit a breach of the peace. Had he succeeded, how would he have been punished?

A dispatch of the 9th from Springfield, Mass., says:

An unsuccessful attempt was made last night to rob the Pynchon Bank and murder the clerk. Two men gained admission during the day, and when the clerk returned at night they stabbed him, but the wound not proving fatal, he shouted aloud for help and the robbers fled.

The Speakership.—The three opposition members who hold most prominent positions with reference to the Speakership are Messrs. Pennington, of N. J., Meacham, of Vt., and Humphrey Marshall, of Ky. The last mentioned is fortunate, indeed, in being without a Congressional record of late.

The O'Blenis Case.—The St. Louis Intelligencer of the 21st says of the result of this trial:

Yesterday afternoon, the jury in the case of the State vs. Robert. McO'Blenis for the murder of Benjamin F. Brand, returned their verdict, which was that the prisoner was guilty of murder in the second degree, and deserved imprisonment in the penitentiary for the term of ten years.

The counsel for the prisoner, having filed exceptions to certain decisions of the court, gave notice of a motion for a new trial. On what grounds they base their claim for a new trial, we have not the means of knowing.

If their motion be granted, we shall have a case again brought up before the community, at the next session of the Court, the whole evidence gone over again, and a new jury impannelled—the prisoner's counsel hoping by this lingering system of tactics, and by means of a more pliant jury, which they hope to obtain, to clear their client entirely. If the motion is refused, they will take the case to the Supreme Court. In either event, we presume the prisoner will be admitted to bail, and turned loose to appear, or not appear, just as he please.

On the 20th, Messrs. Wells, Butterfield & Co., expressmen, paid to the United States Treasury $50,000 indemnity for the boxes of specie belonging to the Government, stolen from the express carrier during the transit from Dubuque to New York, some time since.

The Opelousas Patriot of Saturday last says:

Don Diegue Fontenot, who was stabbed by Adam Tate, in Grand Prairie, died of his wounds on Friday of last week, and was buried in the Catholic Cemetery in this town on the following day. His remains were followed to the tomb by a large concourse of friends and acquaintances.

Tate is still at large. By a card in another column it will be seen that the father of the deceased has offered $3000 reward for the arrest of the murderer.

Sinking of the Steamer Switzerland.—While the steamer May Flower was rounding to at Natchez, about 12 o'clock on the night of the 23d inst., the steamer Uncle Sam, ascending, and the steamer Switzerland, descending, came in collision, causing the Switzerland to be run on the bar opposite Natchez. The Uncle Sam and May Flower went immediately to her assistance, and remained with her until everything was done that could be for the safety and comfort of the passengers nearly all of whom came on board of the May Flower, and were brought to New Orleans; a number of deck passengers were supposed to be drowned, but how many could not be ascertained. The Switzerland lays in three feet water.

We find the following in the Charleston Evening News:

It will be observed from the action of the American Consul here, that the present organization of the American corps at Charleston is virtually abandoned. It is the sad of what has been called Know-Nothingism in our city. The name, and all which has peculiarly distinguished it, apart from the principle that "Americans shall rule America," have been repudiated and consigned to oblivion.

Governor Crittenden, of Kentucky, arrived in Philadelphia on the 19th, and in the evening was serenaded at the Girard House. Mayor Conrad introduced Mr. Crittenden to the crowd, when he delivered a speech returning thanks for the honor conferred. He was received with the heartiest applause.

THE ELABORATE SERMON.

BY E. PORTER DYE.

"Ipse crasse et bene studiosus."—MARTIN LUTHER.

It was a week in summer time,
In August, fifty-three,
A modern pastor sat him down,
He took his pen and scratched his crown
To do theology "up brown,"
So smart a man was he.

A text he chose, a sermon wrote
About the "fatted calf;"
He toiled away the whole week long
To rectify whate'er was wrong,
And make it elegant and strong—
But 'twas too long by half.

He sent it down, he wrote it o'er,
Retouching every point—
Till he was pleased. It read so well,
And pride began his breast to swell,
To think how his brave speech would tell—
So smooth in limb and joint.

The Sabbath came—to-day, thought he,
My people must respect
My talents more than e'er before;
And though they may not cry "encore,"
Will ask to have me preach it o'er,
Because of its effect.

So marching to the sacred desk,
He uttered forth his views—
Proclaimed about the calf so fat,
But Goleh'd, feeling rather "flat,"
For half his congregation sat
And slumbered in their pews.

Returning home, dejected, sad,
He turned aside to pray;
His soul was humbled to the dust—
He prayed, and felt that pray he must,
And exercise a firmer trust,
Or else must "go away."

His strength was spent—he'd done his best—
Yet all had been in vain;
While half his struggling heart within
Reproached him that he did not win
A single soul from guilt and sin—
He ne'er would preach again.

When Monday came, he prayed again,
Then went from door to door—
He saw the sick, the lame, the blind,
And words of blessing left behind.
Till half he thought to change his mind,
And preach one Sabbath more.

But what, and how! he wept and prayed,
Then sat down sore perplexed;
For ah, so busy all the week,
On what theme could he hope to speak?
He took his Testament in Greek,
And searched it for a text.

Before the hook he knelt, and prayed,
For guidance from on high.
Poor man, what sorrow filled his breast—
He felt he needed sleep and rest,
Yet he must try to do his best—
A good text met his eye.

A sermon on it soon he planned,
And sketched its meaning plain.
He could not elegantly write,
'Twas Saturday, and nearly night,
And he was in a woful plight—
He knelt and prayed again.

The Sabbath came—a lovely morn—
The pastor prayed again;
Then humbly forth in fear he went,
With spirit meek and penitent,
To where last Sabbath he had spent
His choicest strength in vain.

He rose and read the opening hymn—
Drew nigh to God in prayer;
But judge of his extreme surprise,
When, closing, he observed all eyes
Suffused with tears, and heard deep sighs,
As if the Lord was there.

He rose to preach, though sore oppressed
And mortified was he—
For oh, his sermon was so slim,
The light it gave so very dim,
'Twas strange all eyes were fixed on him—
What could they wish to see?

His words, they seemed to fall with power,
Though simple words were they;
So simple, he could hardly bear
To utter them; but after prayer
The people whispered every where,
"How well he preached to-day."

The humbled pastor homeward went,
Ashamed to show his face—
To think so smart a man as he Should lower himself full one degree,
By preaching what he deem'd to be
So very commonplace.

That week, abased, before the throne
He mourned, he wept, he prayed;
But ere another Sabbath came,
The pastor, in his prayerful frame,
Discerned a little kindling flame,
Which sovereign grace displayed.

In many a soul, which blazed and burned
With pure revival light—
What could it mean? The Lord was there,
Who scorns the weapons men prepare,
Yet honors humble, fervent prayer;
Who, not by power or might,

Nor by the wisdom of the wise,
His kingdom buildeth up;
But by his Spirit strikes the blow
Which humbles even his haughtiest foe,
And opes, in Achor's valley low,
To faith, a door of hope.

Till he, who oft in wisdom's pride
In vain had preached the word,
Beheld with joy God's work go on,
As day by day some ransomed one
Was built on Christ the corner-stone,
And glorified the Lord.

Where is the scribe, and where the wise?
Hath not Jehovah said,
He'll by wiser in the men?
Yet oh, what thousands still complain
Their labor in the Lord is vain—
Yet tell me how they prayed.

And I will tell you why they failed
Their hearers' hearts to win—
No human voice the dead can wake,
But he who pleads for Jesus' sake,
Impression cannot fail to make
On souls deep sunk in sin.

EARNEST PREACHING.—The following remarks on the importance of earnestness and energy of manner in preaching, are from the ready pen of Rev. Sidney Smith:

The English, generally remarkable for being very good things in a very bad manner, seem to have reserved the maturity and plenitude of their awkwardness for the pulpit. A clergyman clings to his velvet cushions with one hand, keeps his eye riveted on his book, speaks of the ecstacies of joy and fear with a voice and face which indicate neither, and consigns his body and soul into the same attitude of limb and thought for fear of being thought theatrical or affected. The most inexperienced veteran of us all dares no more than show his face with his cambric sudarium; if, by mischance, his hand slip from his orthodox grip of the velvet, he draws it back as from liquid brimstone, or the caustic iron of the law, and atones for this indecorum by such insensibility and more vigorous somnolency. Is it wonder, then, that every delirous lunary who pours forth his animated nonsense with the genuine look and voice of passion should gesticulate away the congregation of the most profound and learned divine of the Established Church, and in two Sundays preach him bare to the very sexton? Why are we natural everywhere but in the pulpit? The man expresses warm and animated feelings anywhere else with his mouth alone, but with his whole body—he articulates with every limb, and talks from head to foot with a thousand voices. Why this hoiloplexia only in sacred subjects alone? Why call the aid of paralysis to piety? Is it a rule of oratory, to balance the style against the subject, and to handle the most sublime truths in the dullest language and the driest manner? Is sin to be taken from men as Eve was from Adam, by casting them into a deep slumber?

LETTER TO A MOTHER.

My Dear Mother—You have told me, and it is so recorded in my Bible, that I was born in the year of our Lord 1814, on the 12th day of Nov., and therefore I am just forty-one years old. You see that your first son, and I shall not flatter the others if I say the worst, has spent two-thirds of the existence allotted to man. I am sorry to say that my spring time was spent without the proper sowing, and that my summer has been spent without culture. But by the blessing of God it is not quite ended, and I trust that the harvest is not yet all over. In the language of the poet, I must confess the painful truth

"Much of my time has run to waste,
And I, perhaps, am near my home,
But He forgives my follies past,
And gives me strength for days to come."

Did you, like Hannah of old, dedicate me to the service of God? If so, would to God that I had been called as Samuel was. But now, how strange it would be to hear such a call, after the summer of life is well nigh spent. Surely my acquaintances would exclaim: "Is Saul also among the prophets?" I have no doubt but that your prayers, whatever they were forty-one years ago, were intended to promote your own spiritual welfare and of course that of your children. I can testify here, and at the bar of God, to the superior, the invaluable worth of a mother's prayers.

We may talk of moral training in schools, church influence, and all that, but the salutary influence of a mother's prayers upon the mind of her child is almost miraculous, and is a thousand fold greater than all the other means of impressing the mind with the sacredness of God's laws and the endearing principles of His holy religion. What an awful responsibility has a mother! Yet how delightful to know that, rich or poor, high or low, she can in a great measure discharge her responsibility to her children. What else of all on earth can so well repay the travail, the toil, the deep, painful anxiety of a mother, as the consciousness that by her prayers she has impressed the heart of her darling child with the love of God, and moulded its immortal mind for heaven. What other being could have done it? What voice can charm like a mother's voice? What love can woo like hers! A father may strictly enforce the rules of virtue, but none save a mother can inspire a true love for it.

Oh, how vivid and pleasing are the recollections of my own poor childhood. How sincerely I thank God that it was blessed with the hallowed influences of a kind mother's prayers. Did you ever know that I watched your devotional exercises? Did you recollect the many weary nights you used to spend to make, mend, wash, cook, and otherwise serve us all, until the cock would crow for midnight, and father and all the children were rapt in dreamy slumbers, that I seldom went to bed until your task was nearly done! When you would say "come W., why don't you go to bed?" and then I would leave you, but seldom would close my eyes until you had retired to rest.

I thought that it was wrong for us all to be resting in slumber when you were hard at work for us, and I did not know how my little sorrowing heart could sympathise better than to share the deprivation of sleep. What curious thoughts I had. I would think—what makes mother take so much trouble? father don't do so. How glad I was when you had finished, and the candle was blown out, and by the dim light of a few smouldering coals I could see the bended form by the bed-side. All is silence, save an audible whisper, and that is my mother's voice in prayer!

I could not comprehend the use and meaning of this wonted practice, but I had read in the Bible (for you had learned me to read the Bible when very young) "Pray to thy Father in secret," etc., and I knew that it was something good, and every whisper fell like sacred music upon my listening ears. I could sometimes distinctly hear most of the words. You first prayed for yourself, then for father, and all of us children, and then for everybody.

I sometimes wondered why you did not pray for me individually, as I was the eldest, and did the most work. But my vanity and covetousness would soon give place to my fraternal love, for, thought I, she is their mother as well as mine, and if the Lord would give me all the good things I want, I would give them all a part. When all this was over, I would at once fall into a sweet sound sleep, just as I ended the little rhyming prayer you taught me at my earliest recollection, "Now I lay me down to sleep," etc.

These impressions have grown with my growth and strengthened with my strength. Like faithful friends and monitors, they have never left me for a day. Oh, there is nothing like a praying mother. When foes hate us, when friends disown us, when kindred neglect us, and affliction distresses and bereaves us, in all these dark hours, next to the love of Christ, is the sweet solace of a mother's love. Next to the grace and help of God, is the efficacy and benign influence of a mother's prayers.

God bless you, my dearly beloved mother, I can never repay you for your care for me; yet I will give all that I can—the reward of a grateful heart. But God will give you the reward of a pious, praying mother—Heaven.

J. W. C.

SUCCESSFUL PREACHING.

In the last number of the Independent, Henry Ward Beecher tells us how and where he learned to preach. It was in the second story of an Academy in Indianapolis, Ind. Mr. Beecher settled in that city as pastor, sixteen years ago, and remained there till his celebrity as a preacher, led to a settlement in Brooklyn. His statement of the first sermon he preached in that city is deeply interesting and will cast light perhaps upon some minds now seeking for greater power and concentration in pulpit efforts. Speaking of the above mentioned academy he says:

"In this room we preached the first real sermon that we ever uttered. We had delivered hundreds before, but till then, the sermon was the end and not the means. We had a vague idea that truth was to be preached, and that then it was to be left to do its work under God's blessing as best it might. The results were not satisfying. Why should not preaching do now what it did in the Apostle's days? Why should it be a random and unrequited effort? These thoughts grew, and the want of fruits was so painful that we determined to make a careful examination of the Apostles' preaching, to see what it was that made it so immediately efficient. We found that they laid a foundation first, of historical truth, common to them and their auditors: that this mass of familiar truth was then concentrated upon the hearers in the form of an intense personal application and appeal; that the language was not philosophical and scholastic, but the language of common life. We determined to try the same. We considered what mortal truths were admitted by everybody, and gathered many of them together. We considered how they could be so combined as to press men toward a religious state. We recalled to mind the character and condition of many who we knew would be present, and then, after as earnest a prayer as we ever offered, and with trembling solicitude, we went to the academy and preached the new sermon. The Lord gave it power, and ten or twelve persons were aroused by it and led ultimately to a religious life.

"This was the most memorable day of our ministerial life. The idea was born. Preaching was a definite and practical thing. Our people needed certain moral changes. Preaching was a method of enforcing truths, not for the sake of the truths themselves, but for the results to be sought in men. Man was the thing. Henceforth our business was to work upon man; to study him, to stimulate and educate him. A sermon was good that had power on the heart, and was good for nothing, no matter how good, that had no moral power on man. Others had learned this. It was the secret of success in every man who ever was eminent for usefulness in preaching. But no man can inherit experience. It must be born in each man for himself. After the light dawned, I could then see how plainly Jonathan Edwards' sermons were so made. Those gigantic applications of his were only the stretching out of the arms of the sermon upon the hearts and lives of his audience. I could see it now, and wondered that I had not seen it before. But having caught the idea, I went eagerly through Edwards to see how he took aim. I found his sermons to be either a statement and establishment of a plain principle, or an exceedingly abundant collection of Scriptural teachings around some great central truth. This was not, however, the sermon; it was only a battery thrown up. The guns were in place. The cannonading was yet to come on. Then from these bulwarks and batteries came a fire upon the life, the hearts, the character, the conduct of living men, just as they lived in Edwards' days, such I think as no uninspired man ever surpassed, if any ever equaled it. It was a kind of moral inquisition, and sinners were put upon argumentative racks, and beneath screws, and with an awful revolution of the great truth in hand evenly and steadily screwed down and crushed. I never could read that sermon, 'Sinners in the hands of an Angry God,' at one sitting. I think a person of moral sensibility, alone, at midnight, reading that awful discourse, would well nigh go crazy. He would hear the judgment trump, and see the advancing heaven, and the day of doom would begin to mantle him with its shroud.

"But we have wandered—not exactly wandered either—for the book of the Acts of the Apostles, and Edwards' Sermons, were the two masters at whose feet we sat while learning that preaching is only another name for taking hold of men and moulding them."

GEORGIA.—A bill has been introduced in the Georgia Legislature providing for the incorporation of a Mining Company, with a capital of $900,000, with the privilege of increasing it to $9,000,000. The object of the proposed company is to work rich copper, silver and gold, said to abound in that State, and particularly in the Cherokee cession. A bill was also introduced to provide for the sale of the State road to create an internal improvement fund. It purports also to aid the construction of the Savannah, Albany and Gulf, and the Brunswick and Florida railroads. A bill is also pending to modify the usury laws.

From the Christian Advocate and Journal.

PREACHING.

Preaching is not to be confounded with teaching. The preacher must of course teach the truths of Christianity; but this is but a part, and commonly by no means the most important part, of his business. The doctrines of our religion are very few, and are very clearly stated in the Scriptures. They require little defence. The mind readily assents to doctrines declared with authority. We have no difficulty in convincing our hearers of the existence and sovereignty of God—of his wisdom, power, holiness, goodness, and truth. We have little more difficulty to get their assent to all we have to say about sin and repentance, or to persuade them to acknowledge Jesus as the Saviour of mankind, the Lamb of God, the only Redeemer and Mediator, or to believe in the mission and offices of the Holy Spirit. A judgment to come is expected by almost all men, Christians and Pagans, whose expectations reach beyond the present world. Were we missionaries to the heathen, we would be much occupied with doctrinal expositions and vindication; but as preachers to people who acknowledge the authority of the Scriptures, and are not ignorant of their teaching, our business is very different. We have often heard a preacher spend an hour in endeavoring to prove the historical fact of the resurrection of our Lord to a congregation, every one of whom was of the same opinion as himself. The only consequence of stirring up a question which nobody mooted, must have been to excite doubts. Possibly the preacher succeeded in allaying them again; but unfortunately it is much easier to awaken suspicion than to put it to sleep. If a man has a title to property, about which nobody troubles him, he never thinks of calling his neighbors together to prove to them its validity. He knows that his course would only weaken confidence. So it is very common to preach sermons on the divinity of our Lord to people who never doubted the doctrine. The opportunity for preaching is lost. Nobody is the better for the sermon and nobody the wiser. The congregation go away precisely as they come, unless indeed they go away perplexed and distressed with doubts suggested by the preacher. For it often happens that the objections quoted are the product of strong minds; are shrewdly put, pithily expressed, and, from the very nature of objection, can be presented fully in a very small compass. The preacher may be a man of very ordinary ability, and even if he be otherwise, the argument for the doctrine is too extensive to be fairly presented in a single discourse. It is never complete, and therefore must often be unsatisfactory. In the meantime the hearer naturally enough supposes that the preacher has said all that could be said on the subject, and the truth, instead of being sustained, is weakened by the voluntary and unnecessary defence. Unfortunately these doctrinal sermons, as they are called, are most apt to be preached by those who are least qualified to preach them. We remember once to have heard a preacher discourse for more than an hour to a large Sunday morning congregation in a Methodist meeting-house on the Divinity of our Lord. The sermon was evidently unstudied, though delivered with great self-complacency. It was badly conceived, badly prepared, and wretchedly delivered. We could but ejaculate, "Save the truth from its friends!" On leaving the church a gentleman asked us why it was that when a Methodist preacher did not know what to say he always preached on the divinity of Christ? We could only explain the proclivity by supposing that a certain familiarity with the argument, as presented in Watson's Institutes, enabled them to fill up the time without any mental effort but that of memory. But what was the probable consequence of a sermon like this? It is possible that all the hearers who came to the church thorough Trinitarians went home with the same opinion; but if there happened to be a Unitarian there, it was of the Lord's mercies if he was not confirmed in his error, for nothing so permanently fixes a wrong opinion in the mind as a weak and unsuccessful effort to dislodge it. To people who believe the Bible, our business is to preach practical obedience to the truth. Life is short; Sundays are few; sermons are necessarily brief. In the conflict of ages Christianity has gained something among the people with whom we have to do. It has established its authority as a divine system, and now it is our part to press its truths upon the understanding and heart. Those who have gone before us have beaten down the outworks of unbelief; we are close upon the garrison and must close with them and take them by storm. The allied armies before Sebastopol have, with great labor and perseverance, worked their way into the southern side of the place. What would we think of the generals if they should every few days call off the troops from the ground they have won, lead them back to their old lines of defence, and set them to firing away with vigour upon the unoccupied space before them? To be sure they might accidentally knock down a straggling Russian; but they would be quite as likely to hit one of their own men, and after all, to say the least of it precious time would be wasted.

The great purpose of preaching, as Jonathan Edwards said, is to make a present and effectual impression on the hearers, so that they may repent and be converted to God. It is also eminently necessary that the Lord's people be comforted, directed and admonished. To do this will keep a preacher busy. Let him present his doctrines upon the authority of Scripture, and then illustrate their application and enforce obedience to them in every way he can. Such a preacher will not find heretical opinions much in his way. They are commonly the mere out-croppings of a stony heart. They are the intellectual contribution to the carnal appetites of the natural man. Nothing so suddenly converts a man to orthodoxy as the conversion of his heart to God. Unitarianism dissolves rapidly under repentance. The sorrow and dread that humbles the sinner mightily oxalts the Saviour. Make a man feel that he is a condemned sinner, let him get a sight of hell, and the whole Trinity will hardly suffice for him. So the Deism of the present day has very little of the intellectual about it. It is commonly a mere overall for a vicious heart and an unquiet conscience. The unhappy Deist is very willing to enter into a controversy with us for his external wrapping. He is pleased to keep our attention off of his heart. But let us ask him about his life; inquire whether he lives as a holy man before God; ask him about his prospects for the world to come; make him say whether he is a sinner because he is a Deist, or a Deist because he is a sinner; press upon him the truths of sin and righteousness and a judgment to come, and his opinions will not trouble us long.

There are occasions when it is right to defend our doctrines in set discourses. When we find that the minds of our hearers have been prejudiced against the truth we should endeavor to disabuse them, but we ought not to contend as for sectarian victory. If we should be challenged to a controversy, we ought to weigh carefully the question whether the good of souls requires us to enter into it. Sometimes this may be the case. But whatever we preach or defend, we should never leave our hearers without endeavoring to bring them to the practical knowledge and obedience of the truth. Other discourses may be proper, but this is preaching the Gospel of the kingdom.

THE OREGON INDIANS.—Private letters received in Washington recently, represent the condition of Oregon and Washington Territories as most deplorable through Indian outrages. It is said that they do not make indiscriminate war on the whites, but on the Americans only. The subjects of Britain there remain almost entirely unmolested by them. This is accounted for by the fact that their arms and ammunition are procured from the Hudson's Bay Company, which still has stations in that quarter of our country. By the treaty, they may retain their posts and trading houses on our side of the line until this Government pays them a valuation for them. Having availed themselves of the privilege (no provision having been made by Congress to dispossess them as provided) their commerce with the hostile savages is really at the bottom of most of the murders and robberies the latter are committing on our people.

THE REAL OBJECT OF THE BRITISH WEST INDIA SQUADRON.—The Washington Union of the 25th contains the following information, derived from the State Department, in regard to the real purpose of Great Britain in sending an additional naval force to the West Indies. It appears plausible enough, in view of the naval accuracy of British information touching affairs upon this side of the water:

In consequence of the publications in the London journals of the 23d, 24th and 25th of October, Mr. Buchanan requested an interview with Lord Clarendon for the purpose of asking explanations on the subject. They held two interviews—one on the 29th of October, and the other on the 1st of November. At these interviews Lord Clarendon declared that the proposed naval expedition originated in no purpose unfriendly to the United States; that its object was a defensive one, to protect British commerce against Russian privateers, three or four of which were said to be fitting out in New York, and one of them nearly ready for sea; that this particular one was a large and fast vessel, specially intended to intercept British ships from Australia conveying gold to England, with purpose in the first instance to capture one of the Cunard steamers; and, in justification of the general statement, he referred expressly to the case of the barque Maury, as represented in affidavits communicated by Mr. Barclay, the British Consul at New York, to Mr. Crampton, and by the latter transmitted to his Government, and at the same time laid before the Government of the United States.

We have already stated that the investigation instigated by Mr. Barclay resulted in showing clearly that there was no truth in the allegation against the barque Maury.

ABSOLUTION.—Bishop Timon, of Buffalo, is imitating Leo X. in his desire for building and in his use of means to obtain money. The pastoral letter, it is stated by a Buffalo paper, thus begs and promises: "On Sunday next, or on any day more appropriate for that purpose, before the 5th day of November, each pastor shall receive donations, either by a collection in the church or by visitation, as might be considered most proper. And according to the power invested in us, we grant absolution for forty days to any one who, from zeal for the holy Catholic unity, and for the embellishment of the house of God and to the honor of the holy St. Joseph, will contribute one shilling or more." Forty days absolution for a shilling! Cheap sinning that! [Portland Advertiser.

One Day Later from Europe.

The steamship North Star, from Havre, arrived at New York on the 21st, bringing intelligence one day later than the Pacific, but nothing from the seat of war. The following is a condensed translation of a long (Russian) letter of 19th inst., received by the Ost. Deutsche Post from Odessa:

By advices from Simpheropol we learn that there is a great movement in that city. Many of the inhabitants are moving to the north, and all the hospitals are being removed to Perekop, Nickolaieff and Cherson. The sick in those places are sent to Wosnersensk and Elizabeth-Grad. The prices of provisions at Simpheropol are enormous. Since the cavalry action at Kongyll, the enemy makes simple excursions from Eupatoria into the interior. The Russian corps of observation before Eupatoria consists of 60,000 (?) men, 20,000 of whom are cavalry. Intelligent military men are of opinion that an advance from Eupatoria and Simpheropol and Baktchiseral would be a bad move, unless the Allies had a powerful cavalry force and plenty of artillery at their disposal.

The opinion of the Anglo-French press that Prince Gortschakoff is in a critical position is positively ridiculous. His whole army is now mobile, which naturally was not the case as long as he had to defend south Sebastopol. It is a mistake to believe that Sebastopol was the arsenal from which the whole army drew its materiel. Between the 1st of March and the 15th of August, the fortress of Kieff alone sent 2,700,000 bombs, grenades, and 48 lb. and 96 lb. balls to the Crimea. The State paid 5 roubles and 30 copecks in silver for the transport of each pud (about 35 lbs. English,) from Kieff to Sebastopol. During the last few days, the famous engineer, Major General Todleben, has been here. The headquarters of the Southern army are to be removed from Odessa to Nickolaieff. General of Cavalry von Helfreicht will succeed General Luders here; his staff arrived yesterday. Lieut. General Grosenjheim has left, with the Third Division of Light Horse, for Ozakoff. The commercial harbor of Ozakoff, which all ships coming from Nickolaieff, Cherson and Odessa enter, is of some importance.

A circular from a commercial firm of Southampton contains the following paragraph:

"The question of war between the United States and Great Britain has been a leading topic of conversation and discussion for the last ten days, though few believe in the actual realization of such a direful event. An uncertain apprehension is felt on all sides; nobody knows what is going on, or where the first blow will fall, and even the absurd idea of an American invasion of Ireland is gravely discussed at Lloyd's and on 'Change."

The Paris correspondent of the Times makes no allusion to the war question as regards the United States.

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland had visited, on the 2d inst., the public institutions of Belfast. His reception was a brilliant one.

In France an imperial decree had been published confirming the promotion of fifty-seven persons belonging to the army in the East to the rank of officers, and the nomination of 572 to the honor of Knight of the Legion of Honor, as well as the grant of 1284 military medals conferred by Marshal Pelissier. The list comprised persons of every grade from colonel down to private.

From China.

Shanghai dates are to the 7th September, but they contain no important political news. Canton is quiet.

A large and heavily armed piratical fleet has been destroyed or dispersed, by Her Majesty's brig Bittern, to the northward of Shanghai. Nineteen piratical vessels have been destroyed.

The Taoutae of Shanghai has issued a proclamation ordaining that from and after the Chinese new year, (February, 1856,) all dollars or foreign coins of the kind assayed at the custom-house in the presence of the consuls, shall be taken at par with the old Carolus dollar, with reference to their intrinsic purity and weight in silver. This is an important step towards doing away with the fictitious value of the Carolus dollar, but the authority of the Taoutae is limited to his district, and the reformation of the currency must be a matter of time.

Prices of tea at Shanghai show a decline of 2 to 3 ts. per picul. The remaining stock and expected supplies are of the inferior kinds. During the month four vessels had sailed for America.

Freights had declined. The passenger traffic between Shanghai, California and Port Phillip has been almost entirely annihilated by the restrictive measures lately adopted against Chinese immigration.

The United States steamer Powhatan and the sloop Vandalia were at Hong-Kong, and the United States sloop Macedonian at Shanghai.

From Fort Pierre.

Capt. Van Vliet, of the Quartermaster's department, arrived in St. Louis on the 23d from Fort Pierre, the present head-quarters of the Sioux expedition. We extract the following from the Republican, which contains all the news of interest brought by the Captain:

Capt. Van Vliet left Fort Pierre on the 27th of October, with sixty men and twelve wagons, crossing the Missouri near the Fort, and coming down the north side of the river to the frontiers of Iowa. He measured the road between the Fort and the boundary line of Iowa, and found the distance to be 260 miles. Here settlements and towns commence, and the extent and rapidity with which farms are opened and towns built up, in that region, is a matter of astonishment. In a little while, as the Indians can be dispossessed of the title to lands which they own, and upon which they reside, and lead a precarious life, settlements will be extended to Fort Pierre.

Gen. Harney marched across the country from Fort Laramie to Fort Pierre, passing between the Cheyenne and White Earth rivers, but found no Indians. He is now at Fort Pierre, having placed his troops in winter quarters at that post and Fort Laramie. Every arrangement was making for the comfort of the troops, though the quarters were somewhat limited, and very good health prevailed throughout the command.

The Indians had committed no depredations recently, and seemed to be anxious to make peace. The Minneconjou, and some of the tribes inhabiting the country about the Little Missouri, were said to be hostile, and it is possible that an expedition will be sent against them next spring. The Yanoton Sioux, through whose territory Capt. Van Vliet passed on his way to the frontier, were very friendly, and professed a great desire to remain at peace with the United States. They had crossed the Missouri into Iowa, and gave some uneasiness to the settlers, but they committed no other depredations than to steal a little corn for their subsistence.

Capt. Van Vliet represents the country through which he passed as one of the most fertile in the world.

STEAMBOAT BURNT.—The officers of the steamer W. W. Farmer inform us that on Monday last the steamer Summit, from Ouachita river, bound for this city with a full cargo of cotton, between 1 and 2 o'clock, P. M., when in Old River, took fire and both boat and cargo were totally destroyed. No lives were lost. The quantity of cotton on board could not be ascertained, but is supposed to be near 500 bales.

Later from Texas.

By the steamship Perseverance, which arrived yesterday afternoon, we have received dates from Galveston to Saturday last and our files from interior Texas, but they contain no news of consequence.

The Brazoria Planter, of Nov. 27, says that the weather for a week previous to the 20th had been rather too warm for the season—the thermometer indicating at several times as high as eighty-five degrees of heat. On the 26th a dry norther sprung up. Sugar making is progressing finely; planters have generally got about half their crop secured—producing a superior article. Cotton planters are winding up their picking. The corn crop is abundant, and shipments continue to be made to Galveston. Corn is now worth, at Columbia, from 50 to 75 cents, an average price being 62½ cents.

On the night of the 13th ult. the Court-house in Corsicana was destroyed by fire, together with a great many valuable papers.

The San Antonio Texan, Huntsville Item and several other papers, express the opinion that the Legislature of Texas should instruct Gen. Houston to resign his seat in Congress, on account of his anti-Southern sentiments. Meetings have been held in several counties and resolutions passed strongly condemnatory of the course he has pursued, and instructing their Representatives in the present Legislature to move resolutions in that body, instructing him to resign his seat as Senator.

We learn from the San Antonio Texan of the 22d that the Indians have recently been stealing horses and cattle near Fort Clark, on Las Moras. The Texan has the following paragraphs:

"Another company of mounted soldiers arrived in our city a few days since, armed and equipped as the law directs." Our citizens are already having much more confidence in the prospect for future defence on our frontier. When the news came to our town on Tuesday evening last, of Indians that had been seen some eighteen miles from the city, in twenty-five minutes a company of U. S. Mounted Riflemen left our city in pursuit.

On Tuesday last, some twelve Indians were seen in the vicinity of the Medina, some eighteen miles from our city. It seems that they came upon a party of Mexicans, who were some distance from their rancho, and upon seeing them the Indians pursued them a short distance, but they evidently had no idea of overtaking them. A short time after they were seen by another party of Mexicans, one of whom brought the news to our city. We are informed that a small party started in pursuit, and soon struck the trail; but whether they succeeded in overtaking them we are not informed.

We are informed that the lower country, in the vicinity of the gulf has had a large fall of rain, of late, while in our vicinity, for the last month, we have had much less than our usual supply for the season of this year.

A bill has been introduced into the Texas Legislature for organizing a regiment of Rangers for the protection of the frontier.

From Havana.

The steamship Cahawba, Capt. Smith, arrived yesterday afternoon from New York, via Havana, bringing dates from the latter place to the 2d. We are indebted to the intelligent purser for the following memoranda:

Nothing new in the Island. The sugar market is active, and contracts have been made for 60,000 boxes, new crop, at $19 to 20 and 20½ per box of 16 arrobas, nett. The steamship Philadelphia, Capt. McGowan, is at Havana. The Captain reports that he ran within a quarter of a mile of Double Head Shot Key, and that there was no light displayed from the tower, nor any to be seen on the building. He displayed rockets and made signals without eliciting any attention from the shore.

The Cahawba arrived at quarantine at 11 o'clock, P. M., on Tuesday. The captain boarded the quarantine boat, and found no health officer in attendance; he was therefore compelled to let go his anchor and remain till this morning, when the deputy officer boarded, and, to the remonstrance of the captain against the detention, replied that "he was not obliged to remain there at night." So, as at Havana, no vessel can enter the port of New Orleans after sundown.

The Cahawba brings from New York $100,000 in specie, and a fine cargo of assorted merchandise.

FURTHER FOREIGN ITEMS BY THE CANADA.—In addition to the very full telegraphic accounts of the Canada's news already received, we find the following paragraphs in dispatches from Halifax to Northern papers:

It is reported from Berlin that Russia recently made a confidential communication to Prussia and Austria of her wish to renew negotiations; and that Bourgeney would go to Vienna with fresh instructions to meet the contingency of proposals from Russia. It was also further reported that Prince Gortschakoff and the diplomatist from Vienna, with all the Russian Ministers from the other German Courts, were certainly to meet the Czar at Warsaw about the middle of November, when the question of a renewal of negotiations will be settled. It is also stated that the Emperor of France is favorable to a renewal of negotiations.

The misunderstanding between Sardinia and Tuscany remains unsettled, and the departure of the Anglo-Swiss Legion from Genoa for the Crimea has been countermanded. The correspondent of the London Post says that no doubt a revolutionary movement has broken out in Sicily. Several insurgents had been captured and shot. Arrests have also been made at Palermo.

From Sebastopol accounts say that the Russian projectiles reach almost every part of the city. A desultory fire was being kept up on both sides. The Allies say that the Russians are making preparations for a retreat.

A French camp of 50,000 men is being formed in Silistria.

The rumored battles near Simpheropol turned out to be false.

Advices from Persia mention the departure of the Ambassador for St. Petersburg.

Vienna, Nov. 9.—Dispatches received at the Turkish Embassy state that the bombardment of Nicolaieff was commenced on the 20th ult., and continued the whole of the following day. The result was not known.

Constantinople, Oct. 20.—The Sultan has announced his intention of visiting London and Paris in the spring.

Dantzic, Nov. 9.—Nargan dates to the 6th have reached here. The cruisers of the Baltic fleet along remained—all the other vessels are on their return. The weather is rough and snowy.

The Collins mail steamship Adriatic, which will be ready for launching in March next, is to be commanded by Capt. James West. The Adriatic will measure 4,150 tons custom-house, and 5,000 tons of carpenter's measurement. Her length, over all, is 354 feet, by 50 feet breadth of beam. Her engines are building at the Novelty Works. Capt. Briggs is to succeed Capt. West in the command of the steamship Atlantic.

The Richmond (Va.) Dispatch recommends that the law of that State, in regard to negro stealing, be amended and the punishment of death awarded, as in North Carolina.

Ouachita Conference.

The second session of the Ouachita Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held in El Dorado, Ark., commencing the 7th of Nov., 1855.

Bishop George F. Pierce was present at the opening of the session, and presided with becoming dignity.

Dr. Hamilton, General Agent for the Tract Society, was also present, and preached very much to the edification of the preachers and the congregation. Bros. R. Randle and J. Sanders, of Louisiana, and Bro. Shook, of the East Texas Conference, among others, were in attendance.

Four were received on trial, and one re-admitted. Only one was located, two superannuated, and one who has hitherto sustained a supernumerary relation, was made effective.

The missionary collections were very large, considering the great pressure in the money market, and the general hard times complained of throughout the whole of the western country.

The Conference resolved to co-operate with the citizens of Camden in establishing a Methodist Female College at that place. Bishop Pierce delivered an address there on the night of the 4th inst., on the subject of education, and made a collection for said college, which amounted to over six thousand dollars.

NORTHERN METHODIST MISSIONS.—At the last meeting of the Board, the Missions were reported generally prosperous, and the contributions are increasing. The superintendent of the mission in Germany recommends the formation of a Mission Conference in that country. In South America, there is a remarkable religious improvement. The missionary in Buenos Ayres writes that religious meetings have been held in that city, similar to the protracted meetings of this country, with gratifying results; a second house of worship will probably be built. The Rev. Mr. Horne, of the African Mission, who returned to the United States for the benefit of his health, has so far recovered as to report himself ready to return to his field of labor. He will probably return by the next vessel to Liberia. From New Mexico the accounts justify the belief that the missionaries now in that country will be enabled to prosecute their work with success. A committee was appointed in reference to sending a missionary to Central America.

POPE ON THE PONTIFF.—The Pope has lately been engaged spiritually in the sort of work that other European powers are doing in a material sense. He has been letting off his artillery particularly at Spain and our allies, the Sardinians. The ordnance of his Holiness is, however, of a small description, and makes but little noise: in fact it is an almost childish species of artillery, consisting of mere Pope guns. [London Punch.

EXTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

TALLADEGA DISTRICT, Ala. Conference.

Mr. Editor.—As I have sent you nothing this year from my work, now that it is done for the Conference year, I send you a hasty report for a part of the year.

We have had revivals on all of the circuits and missions in the bounds of this district; in some portions there have been extensive revivals. On the third round there was an accession of 286 members. On the fourth round there was added 659 members—making 945 for the two last rounds, which includes the protracted and camp-meeting season for this section of the country.

The above report was taken at the time of holding the fourth Quarterly Conference. On a part of the district there has been some increase since this report was taken, which would swell the number to over 1000 members.

Our preachers have not all met with that support (temporally) which was desired, and in some instances necessary. This is mainly accounted for from the fact that money is very scarce in this part of the country, but little of the present crop has as yet reached market. From the abundance of the present year's crop, we may hope for better things next year. Our collections for different objects, owing to the same cause, are behind what they should have been. We have done something, notwithstanding all our discouragements.

L. B. MCDONALD.

GLENVILLE CIRCUIT, Ala.

Bro. McTyeire.—We have had some success on this circuit the present year. There has been a marked interest in the preaching of the word and in the regular services of the church, and there has also been an evident growth in grace among some members, and occasionally an accession to the membership. We had more than a week's services at Villula, of deep interest, resulting in an accession of eight members. In July and August we labored some weeks at Smyrna and Midway, and fourteen persons at the former place and two at the latter joined the church. Some time in the month of August I was taken down with bilious fever, followed by chills, and I have been able to do but little efficient work since; but the work of the Lord was carried on through the instrumentality of the local preachers. Our last Quarterly meeting for the circuit was held in Glenville, Nov. 15. Our Conference Tract Agent was with us, and the meeting was protracted over a week, and proved quite a blessing to the community. Several were converted, and some ten or twelve persons joined the church.

I have just parted with my brethren and friends of the Glenville circuit, after being associated with them for two years, and it is enough to touch the heart of any minister to part with such people. They are interesting, clever people. They want for their preacher a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, and such an one may feel assured that he will have their affections, their prayers, and that they will "pay him up" at the end of the year.

I am now on my way to Conference, in feeble health, but strong enough, I think, to take work another year.

JAMES W. SHORES.

The fountain of content must spring up in the mind; and he who has so little knowledge of human nature as to seek happiness by changing anything but his own disposition, will waste his life in fruitless efforts and multiply the griefs which he proposes to remove.

CHINA CORRESPONDENCE.

SHANGHAE, Sept. 5th, 1855.

Dear Bro. McTyeire.—In the Advocate of June 2d, under the head of "New Publications," there is a notice of a book called "A Journey through the Chinese Empire, by M. Huc." This is a book of which I am extremely anxious to get a copy, as it is doubtless one of the best accounts of the interior of China extant. I have not yet seen it, and do not think there is a copy of it Shanghae, having only heard of it through Dr. McGowen, one of the Baptist missionaries at Ningpo, who gave a good account of it, concerning the source whence it came. He spoke of publishing some strictures on that part which treats of the Romish and Protestant missions in China. Whether he has done so, or not I have never heard, but if he has, he is capable of presenting the matter in its true light, as he is as well acquainted with the history of missions in this empire as any man in it.

I imagine there is little danger of your being misled by his notion of the source whence the Chinese have gained their ideas of the Deity, since he seems disposed to attribute it to any other cause than the distribution of Bibles "by the Methodists." (The whole body of Protestant missionaries.) Aye, there is the tender point. Had he made his statement without reference to this one cause, he might have done so with a plausible show of impartiality. But as it is, such is the knowledge which every child has of the relation of Popery to the Bible, the tale is told, and we see through it all. In this he has given us much encouragement. Heretofore we have had fears lest the multitude of Bibles and tracts which have not only been "prudently deposited on the seashore," but also scattered broadcast in the interior, may not have met with their hoped for success in instilling the great truths of the Gospel into the minds of the people. But when we find our success has really been such as that a Jesuit, one of whose most cherished means of success is silence, is induced to notice, acknowledge, and endeavor to account for it by adducing another and notoriously inadequate cause, we thank God, and take courage. Of one thing, however, our reverend father may be well assured—that the knowledge of God and Christ has not been gained from Bibles which they have distributed. For although two hundred years have elapsed since the establishment of their mission, and although there are among their order the finest foreign Chinese scholars in the world, yet they have translated neither the Old nor New Testament, and are to this day without it.

But there is an insinuation contained in the passage quoted in the Advocate, which you doubtless appreciate, but which has before this been thrown into the teeth of Protestant missionaries, and has led some good people into error in viewing the policy pursued by them in their labors among the Chinese. After a frequent and free intercourse with the large body of missionaries at Shanghae, and occasionally with those from other stations, I am confident there is a general and burning desire to leave the "seashore," and penetrate far and near into every province, district and village in this vast empire. And I believe their desire is not to gratify an idle curiosity, or to be able to publish a "journey," but to preach Christ, not only with a living voice, but as far as possible by a free distribution of Bibles and tracts. Herein I am happy to say the whole body of missionaries are inspired with the true aggressive spirit of Methodism. Among these you find not only the camp-meeting-loving Methodist and the fiery-spirited Baptist, but also the decent, order-loving Presbyterian, the self-complacent, high-minded Episcopalian, the strict, steady Congregationalist, and even the severe old Scotch Presbyterian—all having laid aside their peculiarities, and in this respect become Methodists, and it is hard to tell who are the most thoroughly Methodistical. The fact is, my dear brother, whenever a man gets his consent to become a devoted missionary, he becomes ipso facto a Methodist. So your Jesuit is right.

But then the zeal of all is restrained by the terms of the treaty under which we live, and under whose protection we are able to carry on our work. Here is a clause of said treaty: "In the places where the people of the United States anchor their vessels, the merchants, sailors and others will only be permitted to walk about upon the neighboring ground, and will not be allowed to go far into the villages and hamlets of the inner land, and wander where they please; still less may they go to the markets and military stations, and privately carry on trade. The boundaries will be consulted upon and fixed with the Consuls by the local officers of the five ports, each according to the people's feelings and the situation of the place, and they may not be passed over, in order to fix the period for eternity, and for the mutual quiet of both." Now the distance to which the regulations of this port allow free passage is a day's journey, but custom has extended this somewhat, and a man is not regarded as having trespassed unless he exceeds the limits unreasonably. Within these limits the most prudent and conscientious missionaries feel free to go, and they have gone, and preached among people of other districts and even other provinces.

Some deem it wrong to exceed these limits, or at least will not take upon themselves the responsibility of doing so without being authorized by the churches, and in this case I think few, if any, would refuse, and most would rejoice. Others think no human laws should restrain the embassador of Christ from preaching the Gospel to every creature, and we find them breaking through these difficulties, wandering here and there, in and about Nankin, and a number of unheard of places, preaching and distributing Bibles.—These are facts which you can depend upon, and you see what goes with the hint about "Bibles prudently deposited upon the seashore by the Methodists."

These remarks, Mr. Editor, have been elicited, not by any controversial spirit, or desire of meddling with things which do not concern me, but because the Romanists, who, next to the devil, are the greatest enemies to Christ in China, are constantly exulting over what by misrepresentation they call the timidity and want of zeal among Protestant missionaries.

Since I wrote last our mission has not been in good health. Several of us have had ague and fever, and Mrs. Belton is now confined with an attack of diarhœa, which is one of the most common and most dangerous diseases of this climate. Her attack, however, has not been very severe, and I hope she will soon be up. Otherwise we are doing very well.

I think the day is dawning upon us in our labors. Our preaching-house in the city is still attended by large congregations, and there seems to be some real interest. Many people come (not trembling) and ask what they must do to be saved, but the task is too hard for them, and they go away. At our next quarterly meeting (who is the preacher in charge?) we propose receiving a member on trial—a woman—one of Bro. Cunnyngham's servants. We think she is a good women and a true Christian, though a weak one. She has been in our mission as a servant for several years—first for Sister Taylor and then for Sister Cunnyngham.

Nothing at all of Tae-Ping-Wong.

Yesterday received six copies of the Advocate. Thank ye—thank ye, sir.

My love to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and especially to yourself.

I remain, as ever, your brother in Christ.

KANSAS CORRESPONDENCE.

LEAVENWORTH CITY, Oct. 30, 1855.

Mr. Editor.—I have not the disposition to distort facts or the imagination to picture things that do not actually occur, and hence probably my correspondence will be devoid of that interest which would attract attention. Especially is this remark applicable to Kansas correspondence, for scarcely a newspaper abroad, that makes any comments upon the affairs in the territory, gives a correct idea of either the morals or politics, but on the other hand gives a most wofully unjust picture of the disposition, habits and conduct of the people here. To read the newspapers about Kansas, one would think that the wildest confusion prevailed here, and that scenes of riot, bloodshed and murder were of daily occurrence. And this is the kind of news furnished by correspondents purporting to be in the territory to papers in the States.

So much injustice ought not to be done to any country as has been done to Kansas by newspaper letter-writers. It is true the country is new—very new—just beginning to settle, and things happen that are worthy of notice, and many to be condemned, but not sufficient to justify all the abuse that is heaped on it. It is true also that there is some excitement on the slavery question that may place the people of the territory in some difficulties, and retard their prosperity for awhile, but no overt acts have yet been committed that amount to anything like disorganization. To read the falsehoods relative to the days of election here one would suppose Kansas was worse than Bethesaida or Chorazin, and that Leavenworth City was a Sodom or Gomorrah, whereas it has been the experience of nearly all here that more quiet and order has prevailed than on similar occasions in the old States. It is all an imposition upon the credulity of those abroad, and an outrage upon the people of Kansas Territory, a people who find difficulties enough at home to contend with in their efforts for a support in (a wild country, for something to shelter them from the storm, and protect them from the blasts of the coming winter, without devoting their time to fend off outside attacks upon their character.

After this long dissertation upon letter-writing, I am loath to make any comments upon the actual state of affairs in the territory. There has not been the expected amount of imigration this fall, owing, as is supposed to the want of correct information in reference to the political excitement which it is thought exists here. A gradual improvement however is visible in the country. On the 14th of November next a meeting of the friends of law and order is to come off at this place, when it is proposed to recommend obedience to the laws of the territory, and to take some efficient means for their execution. When it is hoped that by a mild and conciliatory but firm course on the part of the pro-slavery party, under whose banner these laws have been made, a stop may be put to the tongue of calumny abroad and confidence restored to the friends of Kansas, let them be in whatsoever section of the Union.

The corner-stone of the capitol was laid on the 24th inst. at Lecompton City, a beautiful town site on the Kansas river, about thirty miles from the Missouri river. The building is to cost eighty thousand dollars, and be finished by next January twelve months, at which time there is to be the next regular session of the Legislature. Provisions will soon be made there for the establishment of schools and churches. The country around Lecompton is the richest and most beautiful I have seen in the territory; on the north side of the Kansas river is low bottom-land of unsurpassed fertility for several miles in width reaching from above to the Missouri river, and on the south side is a rolling prairie country well watered and timbered, adapted to almost any productions, but more particularly to stock-raising. A charter has been granted for a railroad from this point to Lecompton, which will be constructed in a few years, by which means the rich productions of the Kansas river valley will find their way down the Missouri to St. Louis, and probably to your great and growing city. This road is to be extended to Fort Riley, which will be the main outfitting depot for the government in the Rocky Mountain country for the next forty years, and will eventually connect with that branch of the Pacific Road which is now finished to Jefferson City, and is in progress of execution to Independence.

Very respectfully,

B. F. SIMMONS.

Four lines more beautiful than these are rarely written. The figure which they involve is exquisite:

"A solemn murmur in the soul
Tells of the world to be,
As travelers hear the billows roll
Before they see the sea."

A wise man knows his own ignorance; a fool thinks he knows everything.

Book Editor's Department.

An elegant copy of the HOLY BIBLE—the first edition, so far as we know, ever published this side of the Ohio and Potomac rivers—has been laid on our table. It bears the imprint of Nashville, and will hereafter be printed in our Publishing House. Our copy, bound in antique, presents a fine specimen of the binding done by Mr. Locken, who, by the way, is the publisher of the work. It is in quarto size, containing the text in good type, the stereotype plates being new; the Apocrypha in smaller type than the canonical books; a preface in the place of the "great and manifold" dedication; double columns of references and various readings; an index; several tables; a dictionary of proper names, with their signification; John Brown's Concordance; Rous' version of the Psalms; a number of beautiful engravings, and richly illuminated pages, printed from steel plates, for a family register. The powers that be at our house have formally adopted Locken's Quarto as our Family Bible. We counsel everybody else to do likewise. Our agents will furnish copies at prices varying from $1 25 to $30.

THE ACTS AND MONUMENTS OF THE CHURCH. Containing the history and sufferings of the martyrs; wherein is set forth at large the whole race and course of the Church, from the primitive age to these late times. With a preliminary dissertation on the difference between the Church of Rome that now is and the ancient Church of Rome that then was. By John Foxe. With a memoir of the author, by his son. New York: Carter & Bro. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855.

This is a magnificent edition of old Master John Foxe. The Book of Martyrs is here complete in a ponderous octavo of 1082 pages. Besides the original work, it has five Appendices, containing accounts of the Massacres in France, the destruction of the Spanish Armada, the Irish Rebellion in 1841, the Gunpowder Treason, and a tract showing that the executions of Papists in Queen Elizabeth's reign were for treason, and not for heresy. The whole is carefully revised, corrected and condensed by the Rev. M. Hobart Seymour, author of a "Pilgrimage to Rome." The typography (double columns) is beautiful, and the illustrative engravings are excellent. John Foxe, like John Bunyan, will never die. He is by eminence the martyrologist of the Church. No matter who writes about martyrs, or how eloquently others may write, the quaint, painstaking, veritable old chronicler and historian will never be superseded. The present edition is a book for the times. Let it circulate. It costs only $4.

Now that the editor has overtaken time—the December number being in type—we shall take occasion to say a word or two about the Circle. We like the work. We cordially congratulate the accomplished editor on the success of his first year's operations. His editorship is no longer an experiment. He no longer is to be considered an apprentice—he is master of his profession. We admit him to the guild with full accredited prerogatives. We shall expect nothing from him short of the best workmanship—such as evinces the highest grade of skill, judgment, taste, in his department of science and art. He intends to enlarge the Circle—that's right—to secure the contributions of an able staff of litterateurs—that is also right—to winnow the chaff out of the current periodical literature and give us the grain, saving us a great deal of labor and expense—that, too, is right—and to furnish us a due proportion of articles of his own manufacture—that is emphatically right—and then we know not what else is wanting except good engravings, and the agents are devising liberal things in regard to that matter. As to typography, let Mr. Stitt keep up to the present point, and we have nothing more to ask in that line. Let all our ministers secure the wide circulation of the Home Circle. We plead for it from high moral considerations. Let it be so patronized that, without loss to the publishers, they may, in artistic as well as literary excellence, keep it abreast of the best works of its class in the world. We want no two-penny affair. Were the Circle to fall from its pride of place to a subordinate rank, we would wish the church well rid of it. As it now is, and as it promises to be, we congratulate the church, especially our lady friends, that among our publications, and abreast of the foremost, stands this Magazine, "devoted to Religion and Literature," an able advocate of the one and a beautiful illustration of the other.

THE MOUNTAIN. Edited by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo. Price 25 cents.

This little book contains a vast amount of interesting and reliable information concerning some of the most attractive objects of nature—"the everlasting mountains." We hope the smallness of its size will not induce any one to think it is not worth perusal. It may be read with profit by the old as well as the young. The contents are as follows: "Distinction between Hills and Mountains; Origin of such eminences; their signal use in the economy of Nature; English, Scotch and Irish Mountains; the Alps; the Pyrenees; the Swedish Mountains; the Caucasian Range; American Mountains; Sacred Mountains." "The Valley" accompanies "The Mountain," also "the Desert," "the Prairie," "the River," "the Sea," and "the Ball we live on." All these are interesting books, costing only 25 cents each.

OLD HUMPHREY'S WALKS IN LONDON AND ITS NEIGHBORHOOD. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D.

A great walker was Old Humphrey; and he kept his eyes and ears open when he walked. The result was, his tongue and pen were set to work after his tours to tell what he saw and heard. He has done this to good purpose in the present volume, which takes rank with our edition of those other works of Mr. Mogridge that we have noticed, including his "Memoir," to wit: "Pithy Papers, Pleasant Tales, Owen Gladdon's Wanderings in the Isle of Wight, Thoughts for the Thoughtful, Ephraim Holding's Homely Hints, and Country Strolls." They cost only 10 cents each, in muslin gilt, with 30 per cent discount to wholesale cash purchasers. The whole set can be procured not only from Stevenson & Owen, Nashville, but from the Depositories in Richmond and Charleston, and H. D. McGinnis, New Orleans.

THE END OF THE APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION. A Debate between Messrs Yorger and Smedes, Editors of the Church Herald, Vicksburg, and Rev. R. Abbey. In which the High Church doctrine of a chain of successive ordinations is clearly and specifically surrendered. Abridged, revised and improved. By the Rev. R. Abbey. 18mo, pp. 174. Price 30 cents.

Mr. Abbey meets the absurdity of "Succession" on its own ground, and deals it some sturdy blows. Whether or not this book, as its title indicates, will give it the coup de grace, may be doubted, not because the arguments employed are not cogent and well applied, but because the schismatical and arrogant dogma is marvellously tenacious of life.

THE VARIATIONS OF POPERY. By Samuel Edgar, D. D. A new edition, corrected and enlarged by the author. Revised by T. O. Summers. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855.

This masterly work is so well known, and occupies so high a place in polemical theology, that it is scarcely necessary to prefix to this new edition a commendatory introduction.—One feels inclined to thank Bossuet for writing his sophistical "Variations of Protestantism," as it suggested the idea which is so finely drawn out in "Variations of Popery." The reader will find this work full of learning, logic, satire and wit—in a word, absolutely unanswerable. It is a library in itself. It was carefully revised, corrected and enlarged by the late venerable author shortly before his death. It was dedicated by him, "with profound gratitude and respect, to his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Armagh, Primate and Metropolitan of all Ireland." Without endorsing every paragraph of the book—as the author did not view every point from our position—we recommend it as one of the ablest defences of Protestantism and most demolishing refutations of Popery in the English language. It ought to have a universal circulation. It is a noble octavo of 600 pages. It is sold for $1 75 retail, with 30 per cent. discount to wholesale purchasers.

THE SOUTHERN METHODIST PRIMER. Containing Elementary Lessons in Spelling and Reading, with Hymns and Prayers, original and selected. By Thos. O. Summers, D. D.

This book corresponds precisely with its title. It is printed on good paper, and ornamented with a number of illuminated initials and engravings. It contains 36 pages, 18mo, and has been gotten up expressly for Southern children. It is sold at 50 cents per dozen, with ten per cent. discount to wholesale purchasers.

TRADES CARRIED ON BY ANIMALS.

The fox is a dealer in poultry, and a wholesale dealer, too, as the farmers and farmers' wives know to their cost.

Not satisfied with chickens and ducklings, he must needs push on his trade among the full-grown cocks and hens, and many a good fat goose is conveyed to his storehouse in the woods:

"A wily trader in his way
Is reynard, both by night and day"

The otter and the heron are fishermen, though they neither make nor use a line nor a net. It is not very often that we catch sight of the otter, for he carries on his trade for the most part under water; but the heron is frequently seen standing with his long, thin legs in the shallow part of the river, suddenly plunging his lengthy bill below the surface and bringing up a fish. You cannot deny that the heron and otter are fishermen.

Ants are day-laborers, and are very industrious ones, too, in their calling. They always seem in earnest at their work. Catch them asleep in the day-time if you can. They set us an example of industry.

"Ants lively work without disguise;
Their ways consider, and be wise."

The swallow is a fly-catcher, and the number that he catches in a day would quite astonish you. Often have you seen him skimming along the surface of the brook and the pond.

The beaver is a wood-cutter, a builder and a mason, and is a good workman at all these trades. He cuts down the small trees with his teeth, and after he has built his house, he plasters it skillfully with his tail.

The wasp is a paper-maker, and he makes his paper out of materials that no other paper-maker would use. If ever you should examine a wasp's nest, you will find it all made of paper.

Singing birds are musicians, and no other musician can equal them in harmony. Hardly can we decide which has the advantage, the lark, the blackbird, the throstle, or the nightingale.

"On feathery wing they freely rov
And wake with harmony the grove."

The fire-fly and the glow-worm are lamplighters. Fire-flies are not seen in this country, but abroad they light up the air, just as the glow-worms do the the grassy and flowery banks in country places here.

The bee is a professor of geometry, for he constructs his cells so scientifically that the least possible amount of material is formed into the largest spaces with the least waste of room. Not all the mathematicians of Cambridge could improve the construction of his cells.

A SUPPOSED DESECRATION.—A letter from Rome, in a Russian journal, says that on the occasion of the Te Deum in that city in honor of the fall of the Malakoff, the French wished the flags of Sardinia and Turkey to be fixed in the church, but the Papal authorities refused—the one excommunicate, the other Mussulman—they could not admit of such a profanity! The French minister telegraphed to Paris for instructions, and received for reply the order to insist upon the appearance of the flags in the church. "Happily," says the letter, "the reply did not arrive here until the religious ceremony was over."

Mr. Yorger, in a late number of the Herald, thus speaks of St Thomas' Hall, Holly Springs, Miss:

"We are truly gratified to state that this institution is now in a most flourishing condition. It numbers about seventy pupils, and parents could not select a better ordered home for their sons."

Louisiana Items.

An additional mail line has been established from Opelousas to St. Martinsville. The Courier says:

It traverses throughout nearly its whole extent, the lovely and fertile valley of the Teche, unsurpassed for its magnificent sugar estates and superior cultivation, by any other portion in South-western Louisiana.

The establishment of this line is, in fact, the inauguration of a daily mail by railway, steamers and stages, from New Orleans to this point, on alternate days by this, and that through Vermillionville, thus affording to the inhabitants along both lines, almost daily intelligence, and to the public increased facilities of travel with a view of both sections of our beautiful prairies.

From the Opelousas Patriot of Saturday last we extract the following:

We have had awful weather for some days. Rain has fallen in torrents, and the roads are almost impassable. The little streams are bayous are very high, and the bridges in many places are swept away.

The weather is quite changeable at times, and nature seems unwilling to visit us with a specimen of wintry days. As yet we have had no really cold weather, in consequence of which vegetation is still exhibiting itself in the bloom of fruit trees.

We understand that the parish of Avoyelles is still afflicted with yellow fever—that there are yet several cases of it in the prairie near the town of Marksville.

Owing to the lightness of the cotton crops, the farmers have pretty nearly completed their labors in gathering it about here. Higher up the bayous there is still much of it in the fields remaining to be gathered. The corn crop in the aggregate is abundant.

Cane is not doing well anywhere. From what we are able to learn the yield is very light, while the quality of the sugar anything but first rate. On an average the yield is not more than a hogshead per acre.

The Alexandria Democrat, of Wednesday last, says:

The water here has risen steadily for ten days past, and we are assured that rivers in five feet water on Snaggy Point, the worst part of the river between this point and the mouth. The Mississippi being high and rising rapidly, we may retain this stage of water, which will give us fair navigation to New Orleans, and be a considerable benefit to all parties concerned.

It is now absolutely certain that the sugar crop of this parish will not amount to half the usual yield in good seasons. Many of our planters will not get more than a third, and will be through rolling operations in a few days. The crop was very short in the field, and the yield has been very poor. The weather, since operations commenced, has been most propitious, warm and wet, producing a second growth or sprouting of the eyes, and the experiment of winrowing to stop this has not been successful.

ANOTHER REVOLUTIONARY TESTIMONY TO THE JUSTNESS OF OUR PRINCIPLES.—In an oration delivered at the request of Congress, by General Henry Lee, on the death of Gen. Washington, December 26, 1799, that Revolutionary patriot used the following eloquent language:

Methinks I see his august image, and hear falling from his venerable lips these deep sinking words: Cease, sons of America, lamenting on separation! Go on and confirm by your wisdom the fruits of your joint efforts, and common dangers! Reverence religion, diffuse knowledge throughout your land, patronize the arts and sciences. Let liberty and order be inseparable companions. Control party spirit, the bane of free governments. Observe good faith to, and cultivate peace with all nations. Shun every avenue to foreign influence; contract rather than extend national connexion; rely on yourself only. Be Americans in thought, word, and deed. Thus will you give immortality to that Union which was the constant object of my terrestrial labors: thus will you preserve undisturbed to the latest posterity the felicity of a people to me most dear; and thus will you supply (if my happiness is now aught to you) the only vacancy in the round of pure bliss high Heaven bestows.

LATER FROM THE PLAINS.—The St. Louis Republican publishes the following telegraphic dispatch from Independence, dated the 7th ultimo:

The Salt Lake mail arrived to-day. On the outward trip it reached Fort Kearney on the 13th, but an escort not being furnished, the parties fearing the dangers of the road, was deemed prudent to return. On the 30th snow fell to the depth of six inches, and that time until its arrival the weather was very unpleasant.

Mr. R. H. Dyer came as passenger. From him we learn that it was rumored that companies of General Harney's command had returned to Fort Laramie to winter, and that the remainder would come to Kearney for the same purpose. The Sioux Indians had brought into the fort three or four of the murderers of the mail party, but Col. Hunter would not receive them unless all were delivered, and the proffers of friendship were accordingly rejected.

The New York Journal of commerce says there were only about 4,500 bags of saltpetre in that city, and 1200 bags in first hands at other ports. Only 2000 bags are known to be on the way to New York from England, and Calcutta 20,000 bags are known to have been cleared, and on shipboard at Calcutta, September 6, 13,974 bags. Whether these shipments will be allowed to clear under the recent order of the British Government, to prevent the export, is not known. The fact that two vessels for New York had been obliged to discharge their cargoes of saltpetre—one at Liverpool and the other at London—has been made the subject of earnest remonstrance to Secretary Marcy, as it is a most arbitrary interference with our commerce, to issue an order which should extend to goods on shipboard, to be unloaded or cleared.

THE MEMPHIS NAVY YARD.—We learn from the Memphis Eagle of the 29th that an application was granted by Judge Caruthers, yesterday morning, against the city authorities, restraining the sale and execution of title to the Navy Yard property.

☞ A REPRIEVE.—We do not refer to a reprieve from a capital punishment. There is a slow torture from which complete relief is equally desirable. We refer to dyspepsia—a word which calls to the horror of its victims a name summed up. To the sufferers from the painful and harassing disease, we can hold out not only well-founded hopes, but the certainty of immediate relief and permanent cure. These are tonic, cordial, and alterative principles in Dr. Hoofland's German Bitters, which inevitably creates and energizes the whole action of the stomach and the secretive organs, removes the cause, and restores to health. They are the best children's books ever published. They wisely unite the instruction or discussion of religious topics; for none such are Christians may unhesitatingly place in their children's hands. The price is marvellously low. Twenty-five cents a number makes a neat 16mo volume, containing from one hundred to one hundred and twenty pages of print and two excellent engravings in each cent of the money. The engravings alone, without the letter-press, would be cheap at the price. One thing these Story Books will certainly accomplish; henceforth inferior, unreadable, and dear-up, worthless publications cannot be palmed off on children. They have samples here of what is best for them, and they are shrewd enough not to put up with anything of lower quality.—N. Y. Daily Times.

THE FARMING SYSTEM.

Since the farming of the wharves resulted so unsuspiciously to the city, bringing into the treasury about $170,000 per annum, where only a few beggarly thousands had been received in previous years, the system of farming out other branches of the revenues and other portions of the machinery of municipal government, has become excessively popular. This is no matter for wonderment. It is the besetting sin of the age, and the especial idiosyncrasy of our people to carry matters to extremes. Mediums do not suit them. They must be far ahead or away behind, or else they incontinently fly off the handle. Because, forsooth, the wharf contract sold well—surprising the most sanguine anticipations of its able and far-seeing originators—all other contracts must sell well, also!

Shortly after the wharves were farmed out, a proposition was made in the Board of Assistant Aldermen to farm out the liquor licenses. What became of the proposition we cannot now call to mind. We presume it is quietly sleeping in some nook or corner of the Secretary's desk, where it will probably remain undisturbed until the trump of a new election superinduces a general rummaging.

Then came up the proposition to sell the contract and management of the Fire Department, embodied in two ponderous columns of nonpareil, almost as long as the constitution of the United States, for a term of five years, to the lowest bidder. It was argued that economy and efficiency would both be subserved by the consummation of the confract; and public expectation was on tip-toe to learn the result. After a protracted advertising of three days, the Comptroller proceeded, in compliance with the requisitions of the ordinance, to sell the contract, when lo and behold! two bidders appeared to contest for the prize, and it was accordingly knocked off, (the city being knocked down at the same time,) to two estimable and experienced gentlemen, at the rate of $100,000 per annum.

Here the farming system and economy did not work well together—in fact, did'nt work together at all. They traveled in opposite directions. We have no doubt that efficiency would have been secured, but at what a cost? Why, $200,000 in five years, over and above the estimated expenses of a volunteer organization! This was paying too much for an experiment which has been stimulated into life by the captivating words, economy and efficiency. So the people thought, and so the Board of Assistant Aldermen thought, when they rejected the adjudication of the Comptroller by an almost unanimous vote.

We have alluded to this incident simply to show that because the wharves sold well in the highest bidder, it did not necessarily follow that the Fire Department would sell equally well to the lowest bidder. There is a wide difference between two kinds of farming. With the same purity of reason might our government order that, because the Russian soldier revels on black bread and tallow, the American soldier should have nothing to eat but black bread and tallow—as for our municipal rulers to imagine that, if one contract brings a good price, all contracts will bring good prices.

Not abashed, however, by the enormous price at which the fire contract was sold, Alderman Durell, (who is the putative author of the Fire Ordinance,) proposed in the Board of Aldermen on Tuesday evening, to farm out the entire Police of the city! He was sustained by Alderman Lugenbuhl; and both criticised severely the inefficiency of our present meagre police, the members of which would have to multiply themselves ten-fold to perform the duty which is expected at their hands. Alderman Tompkins suggested an improvement; that of farming out the Police Board. This was an excellent suggestion; for, under the administration of the Police Board, the police are continually becoming more incompetent and unfit for the places they pretend to fill. Ald. Bailey sustained Ald. T., and finally the whole subject was laid on the table.

The proposition to farm out the Police Board meets with universal commendation, so far as we have been able to learn. Were it possible to take a vote to-day on the question, we doubt not it would carry by a majority of ten to one. The sentiment prevails generally that the Police Board is a nuisance, that it ought to be abolished, and that the Mayor should be invested with the exclusive control of the police, and be held directly responsible to the people for the good or bad management thereof.

A wicked wag at our elbow suggests that, while farming-out projects are popular, it would be a first rate plan to lease the whole city government to one or more capable and honest men, if such can be found in this poor and much maligned corporation, to take charge of and put its affairs in proper shape, paying them for their services at least $100,000 per annum salary. It is supposed that if these lessees would attend to the city's business as they attend to their own private business, that at the end of five years New Orleans would be in a comfortable financial condition, with taxes reduced fully fifty per cent!

Now, here is a proposition worthy consideration. It is none of your picayune propositions. It is a veritable mammoth. Who bids? Going! going! going!—[Crescent.

A couple of men, named Lowe and Smith, were arraigned in Hawesville, Ky., a few days ago, for having been concerned in a street affray. They no sooner met in the court room than they drew revolvers and commenced firing at each other and at every one else who offered to interfere in their sport. No harm was done.

CHANCE FOR A GOOD INVESTMENT.—Professor Robert Hare, of Philadelphia, has received from a spirit the following information in regard to the financial peculiarities of the other world:

"Hence it will appear that we have no occasion for gold or silver, which perisheth with the using, but the currency of moral and intellectual worth, coined in the mint of divine love, and essayed by the standards of purity and truth. Our bank, whose charter is eternal, and whose notes are never subject to fluctuations and always payable on demand, is none other than the great bank of heaven, whose capital stock consists of an infinitude of divine love, mercy and benevolence, of which our Heavenly Father is president and director, and in which his beloved children, the whole human family are shareholders.

BUSINESS.—The levee, and particularly that part devoted to internal commerce, presents a most extraordinary and lively scene at this time. We doubt if its counterpart or equal is to be found in this confederacy of States, or any other locality, at this particular moment. Forty-six thousand two hundred and eighty bales cotton have arrived since last Saturday morning, which, with scores of loads of other produce, and a fleet of some of the finest vessels that ever spread sail, furnishes a theme on which we can, with pleasure, dwell. If Mr. President Pierce would just step in on us he might forget some of his constitutional scruples and recommend some appropriation for the improvement of the Western rivers.

On the evening of the 26th a locomotive exploded on the Worcester and Nashua Railroad, killing the engineer and badly injuring the fireman.

THE COMMERCE OF THE WEST.

Under the foregoing head the St. Louis Intelligencer contains the following table, designating the number of steamers employed on the Western rivers and lakes, their tonnage, and their value. We quote it for the information it conveys, and with a view of subjoining some observations of our own:

	No.	Tonnage.	Cost.
Boats on Western rivers	816	326,513	$19,210,00
Do do do	493	156,220	10,120
Steamers on lakes	120	48,400
Propellers do	118	41,000
Barks do	46	11,850
Brigs do	61	21,212
Schooners do	98	18,320
Sloops and scows on lakes	30	14,110
Total tonnage		677,353
Coal			$16,168,441
Amounting in the aggregate to			$35,387,617

The steamboat and marine interest of the West, it will be seen, is enormous, reaching, according to the foregoing figures, in the sum of $35,387,617. Such an interest—contributing, as it does, materially to the development of a vast extent of fertile country; to the convenience, wants and prosperity of millions inhabiting nearly half a continent, and conveying from point to point a commerce worth $300,000,000 annually—would, in any other nation under heaven, be fostered, encouraged and promoted, by the watchful care and generous liberality of government.

Unfortunately, however, for this great interest, and for the millions residing on the banks of the Mississippi and its tributaries, and along the margins of the great lakes of the Northwest, the policy prevails at Washington, and has prevailed for many years, that Western commerce, being internal commerce, and Western rivers internal streams, there is no reason why the one should be protected, and the navigation of the other improved and made safe! Any number of millions may be spent on the Atlantic coasts, and all is proper and right and constitutional. Presidents sign such bills with little or no scruple; but speak of appropriations for the Great West, and constitutional bristles at once erect themselves, and Executive vetoes usually follow. And all is done, too, with the most complacent air imaginable, in face of the immovable fact that the internal commerce of the country is of infinitely more importance than its foreign commerce, and, consequently, deserves a larger amount of protection.

There would be precious little foreign commerce but for domestic commerce and production. Then, why protect the one and neglect the other? We can see neither sound sense nor justice in the pursuit of such a contradictory policy.

Of this thirty-five millions of dollars invested in the steamboat interest, it is estimated that two millions, or about one-seventeenth of the entire capital, is annually sunk as a sacrifice to snags, sawyers, rocks and other obstructions, which might be saved were the aforesaid snags and rocks, etc., removed! This, too, without taking into calculation the annual loss of human life, more valuable than all, nineteen-twentieths of which might be saved if the Federal Government would only perform its plain duty in the premises.

But it is idle to expect relief from these heavy ills during the present or the coming session of Congress. No matter how well Congress may be disposed, there is little doubt President Pierce would veto any general bill of internal improvement that could be passed. He has always been a bitter opponent of internal improvements. As Representative and Senator in Congress he voted against bills that received the sanction of Gen. Jackson, and as President he vetoed a most admirable bill, which, if it had become a law, would have done an immense amount of good.

These facts, all the parties directly or indirectly interested, should bear in mind at the next Presidential election. No matter what the politics of the individual, let us have a man not opposed to Western commerce, Western improvement and Western development. Let us show the world that there is a West as well as an East.—[Crescent.

THE FIRE CONTRACT.

As will be seen, by reference to our local column, the Comptroller yesterday sold the contract for supporting and managing the Fire Department of the city of New Orleans, for a term of five years, to Messrs. John Youennes and John Adams, at the rate of $100,000 per year.

This was the lowest and only bid, we understand, with one exception. This was, perhaps, owing to the limited period during which publicity was given to the ordinance. Three days was altogether too short a time in which to advertise so important a contract, for the very obvious reason that it cut off any thing like a general competition, such as should always exist when sales of the kind are made. Ten days' publicity, at least, should have been given to the ordinance. In that time all parties, by being industrious, could have compared notes, made calculations, and entered into such arrangements as would have enabled them to consummate their contract, in case their bid or bids proved successful, within the specified time.

Under this contract the expenses of the Fire Department will reach a higher figure than ever before known in the city of New Orleans. As a general thing, the expenses have averaged about $60,000 per annum, heretofore. The last year or two the expenses have been larger, but the increase was mainly owing to extensive repairs, and building of engine houses. But, as we speak of the average, we will be understood.

This will be a very considerable increase in the expenses of the Fire Department, in case the Common Council approves the contract, at a time, too, when the city is ill-able to bear up under additional burthens. We have ever favored a Paid Fire Department, but we have always understood that economy and efficiency accompanied the adoption of the system. We may have labored under a misapprehension of facts, yet still such was our understanding.

But, if anything could reconcile us, and the community, to the increased expense, the character of the contractors certainly would. Under their superintendance the system must, necessarily, work well. They are capable, energetic, practical men, who thoroughly understand the work they have undertaken, and it will be as much a matter of pride as of duty with them, to render the Fire Department of New Orleans, under their control, the most efficient and useful of any in the United States.

P. S.—Since the foregoing was written and put in type, the Board of Assistant Aldermen have passed a resolution rejecting the adjudication of the Comptroller by a vote of 2 to 1. For full accounts, see report of proceedings of the Board of Assistants last evening, under the proper head. [Crescent.

On the night of the 25th, a party of five young men entered the Washington Hotel, in Baltimore, and drank some liquor, which they refused to pay for. The proprietor's brother, Eugene Bronder, attempted to help the barkeeper put the party out, when one of them, named John Turring, drew a pistol and shot Eugene, killing him instantly. They then made an unsuccessful attempt to murder the proprietor. They were afterwards arrested and committed to prison.

WITHDRAWAL OF THE FIREMEN.

Pursuant to previous notice given, the Volunteer Firemen on Saturday last surrendered to the Mayor all property in their possession belonging to the city, and formally resigned their commission. It was an unusual and extraordinary spectacle, and swallowed up all minor excitements. Throughout the day scarcely anything was looked for or thought of, save the unhappy condition of things that impelled this gallant band in such a course, after having bravely stood by the city for so many years. The affair partook in some sort of the character of a gala, as the firemen turned out in full uniform, and the day being bright and pleasant, all the town was out to see them.

It is with pleasure that we record the great event as having taken place without any of the noisy excitement or turbulence that many people apprehended. Everything was conducted with a dignity and decorum befitting the features of the occasion; and whatever may be the future judgement upon the merits of the act, it is quite certain that the manner in which the act was performed can always be heralded to without shame. There were, of course, abundant manifestations of the sentiment that actuated the firemen, but they were altogether of a quiet kind, and on that account the more impressive.

During the afternoon the firemen assembled with their machines in Canal street, and prepared for the formal march to Lafayette Square, where the apparatus were to be surrendered to the Mayor. At length the march commenced. Twenty-four engine and hose companies and three hook and ladder companies filed slowly up Camp street, to no other music than the solemn tolling of Louisiana Hose Company's bell—without banners—every man with his hat reversed and left inverted—and a lot of crape fluttering from an engine or hose carriage here and there. We did not recall that was painted on the different machines for that particular occasion; but on the front panels of Engine No. 13, we noticed this: "Organized 1837. Rusted 1855;" and over the splendid truck of Hope Hook and Ladder Company the sign, "Justice is our wish."

Arrived at Lafayette Square, the procession centered and rested their apparatus around the walks. The foremen of the different companies then repaired to the reception room in the City Hall, and, through Mr. Salomon, formally tendered to the Mayor the property in their possession belonging to the city. Mr. S. stated, among other things, that the companies would continue their drill regularly as heretofore, but would not be active firemen henceforth; also that the department designed petitioning before the public, at an early period, a full explanation and vindication of its course. To the address of Mr S., the Mayor responded in a brief and appropriate manner. He regretted that such a sorry state of affairs had come to pass; explained his reasons for approving the new ordinance; hoped that in the event of fire, before the organization of the new department, the seceding firemen would not refuse to lend a helping hand; and concluded with a very proper and handsome tribute to their past services.

This being made known in the Square, the firemen made a last farewell to their machines, leaving them in charge of Mr Wingfield, the Fire Chief, and Officer Dan Rushy, the guardian of the Square. Several companies had bands of music in waiting, and marched off to lively airs; one band, however, playing the not very lively but very appropriate air of "Love Not;" and then, for the first time in its existence as a metropolis, New Orleans stood without an organized Fire Department.

Subsequently, an act was perfected which arrested the attention of a large crowd of people, and imparted sad feelings to those who entertained any reverence for old city features. We allude to the dethronement of the wooden fireman, who, for fifteen years, with arm extended and trumpet to mouth, has defied the gales from the cupola of Columbia engine-house, on Orleans street. After unfastening his feet, a rope was passed around his waist, and he was let down as carefully and respectfully as if he had been a real flesh-and-blood veteran of the fire-wars. For the first time in his life he was housed—shut up in a dark, silent room; and there he still extends his arm and points his trumpet—a fit type of the humorists purpose that led to his dethronement. The adjacent hook and ladder house had its sign painted out, and over it painted the word "Buried."

During the afternoon the various machines were hauled from the Square to the places assigned by the Mayor; large crowds of spectators still hanging around, absorbed by the extraordinary nature of the occasion. In the evening the Mayor issued a proclamation, calling upon all good citizens to rally to the rescue, in the event of calamity by fire, and advertising the localities of the different engines and other apparatus.

Many of the firemen made a holiday of it, keeping their equipments on till night; and at night, or rather at an early hour yesterday morning, the last gleam of the red-jackets was seen in Armory Hall, where Philadelphia Fire Company No. 14 gave a ball.

We learn from Mr. Wingfield that the enrollment of firemen under the pay system will be progressed with to-day, sufficiently far to ensure the city against calamity; and that the Young America, not being a secessionist and being kept in special readiness, may be expected to do her share in any emergency that may arise within her reach. We are also informed that many of the companies feeling satisfied that they have vindicated themselves from what they believe to be unjust treatment, are now ready and prepared to give their best exertions for the protection of the city, in case of any fires before the new organization goes into effect. As fires in they have ceased to exist, but as good citizens they tender their experience and knowledge for the protection of the city.—[Crescent.

A HORRIBLE TRAGEDY, PROBABLY.—A schooner named Eudora, Capt. Palmer, of Deep river, Conn., had been lying at anchor several days in Long Island Sound, near Hart Island, and on the evening of the 23d she was seen by persons on shore suddenly to keel over and sink. A negro had just previously left the vessel in a yawl, and the inhabitants, thinking the affair mysterious, captured him. He had a large number of articles belonging to the schooner, and on his person were found three pocket-books containing about $300. It was known that the crew consisted of three persons besides the negro, who was the cook, and it was considered certain that he had murdered them and scuttled the vessel, which had sunk in three fathoms of water. With the aid of boat-hooks a quantity of bedclothes and other articles were drawn up, some of which were saturated with blood. The negro would confess nothing, and he was taken to White Plains and secured in jail.

THE "PATRIOTS" AT LOGGERHEADS.—M. Louis Blanc, the leader, we believe, of the Socialist section of the Republicans, has written a manifesto, dissenting from the means and end proposed by Messrs. Kossuth, Mazzini and Ledru Rollin. He advocates "discussion" before the Revolutionists are called on to fight. He adds:

The Republican form of government is not the object; the object is, to restore to the dignity of human nature those whom the excess of poverty degrades, and to enlighten those whose intelligence, from want of education, is but a dim, vacillating lamp in the midst of darkness; the object is to make him that work enjoy all the fruits of his work; the object is to enfranchise the people by endeavoring gradually to abolish this double slavery—ignorance and misery. A very difficult task, indeed, the accomplishment of which requires long study, deep meditation, and something more than discipline! As to the republican form of government, it is a means, most valuable certainly, and which we ought to strive to conquer, even at the cost of life, but which it is very imprudent to mistake for the aim, the consequence might be to make us take the shadow for the substance, and run through a heap of ruins to fatal delusions.

LOUISIANA.—The Plaquemine Sentinel, of Saturday last, states that the sugar and molasses crop of the present season, will be the shortest experienced for eight years. Bayou Plaquemine is in good navigable condition.

The Farmerville Enquirer, of Thursday last, has the following paragraphs:

The Ouachita river is in fine boating condition; already have several boats come up, and we think from present appearances the rise is a permanent one, and that our planters will have an opportunity of early shipments this season.

We have heard much complaint by the farmers of this parish, that the worms are destroying the corn both in the field and crib. It appears to be a small red worm about the size of a skipper, and when it is full grown webs up and comes out a small bug, like union wheat weavil. Our farmers are much alarmed as to the result of these little vermins.

The story of a man who had a nose so large that he could not blow it without the use of gunpowder, is said to be a hoax.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE

SWEDEN TO JOIN THE ALLIES.

DOUBTFUL RUMORS OF PEACE.

BY THE SOUTHERN AND NATIONAL LINES.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The royal mail steamship Asia arrived at Halifax on the 4th inst., last night. We have nothing to us the Seat of War of importance.

Sweden and Denmark.

It is rumored that Canrobert has concluded a treaty with Sweden. In this provided, that Finland is to be restored to Sweden, and that Sweden is to join the Western Powers against Russia.

It is also rumored that Denmark will follow the example of Sweden.

Peace Rumors.

There are numerous rumors concerning peace negotiations, but all are looked upon as doubtful. Among others there is a report that the Prussian Envoy had met the Czar at Nicolaieff and extracted from him authority for Prussia to inform the Western Powers that he was willing to treat for peace.

The Crimea.

We have nothing from the Crimea of importance, except the report that the Allies intend to commence soon a grand bombardment of the north side of Sebastopol.

Greece.

The difficulty between Greece and the United States is entirely settled.

Commercial Intelligence.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 21.—Cotton—Brown & Shipley quote the market as dull, with very little speculative demand. Fair qualities have declined from ⅛ to ¼, lower qualities have declined ¼d. The sales of the week amounted to 35,000 bales, of which speculators took 1,000, and exporters 5,000 bales. Orleans Fair is quoted at 6¾d. Orleans Middling 5¾d, Uplands Fair 6¾d, Uplands Middling 5¾d. Stock of American in port 200,000 bales.

Breadstuffs.

Richardson, Spence & Co. quote a slight decline in Breadstuffs, and the market dull. Wheat has declined 2d. Flour has declined 1s. The market for Ohio Flour closed dull at 40s to 40s 6d.

Provisions are generally unchanged, and the market closed steady. Lard has advanced. Prices are still higher but not positively higher. Mullgan & Evans quote the advance in Lard at 2d @ 3d.

The Money Market.

The Money market is more stringent, but Consols have advanced, owing to the favorable rumors from the Continent. Consols for money are quoted at 88¾.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The Senate met this morning, elected a Chaplain, and swore in several members. Senator Bradbead gave notice that he would soon introduce a bill providing a right of way for the Pacific Railroad.

In the House, there were nine ballots for Speaker, the result nearly the same as yesterday. It is thought that Fuller (Whig) will be the most prominent candidate to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Senate.—Senator Adams gave notice to-day that he would offer a bill proposing an amendment of the naturalization laws.

House.—The House balloted six times to-day for Speaker without success—the last ballot stood as follows: Campbell, 80; Richardson, 74; Fuller, 10; Banks, 8.

The House adjourned after the sixth ballot.

ADDITIONAL FROM KANSAS.

The Excitement Continues.

LOUISVILLE, Dec. 4.—The excitement in Kansas still continues without abatement.

At the City of Lawrence there is an organized force under the command of Gen. Lane of about one thousand men, armed with rifles, who are throwing up earthworks and burning houses. Gen. Lane bids defiance to the Governor and harangues the populace, urging them to fight.

Governor Shannon, who is at Franklin with two or three hundred men, has, by authority from the President, called to his aid troops from Forts Leavenworth and Riley.

The most intense excitement prevails in the upper part of Missouri, and overwhelming numbers are pouring into the Territory from every direction.

A later dispatch says that an attack by the Free State men on the city of Atchison is anticipated, and that the inhabitants have sent to Weston for armed men.

New York Market.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Our cotton market was quiet to-day, and nothing was done after the steamer's news was received. Flour opened to-day, but closed heavy. Sales of State at $9 25. Wheat is improving; sales of Southern fled at $2 15.

Steamers Mayflower and George Collier Burned---Loss of Life.

The Evening Picayune of yesterday published the following telegraphic dispatches:

MEMPHIS, Dec. 3.—A fire broke out at the wharf here, by which one of the most shocking disasters that have occurred at Memphis for a long time, has taken place.

Both the splendid steamers, George Collier and Mayflower, were destroyed, and most lamentable to have to announce, not less than twelve lives were sacrificed.

The whole boat was consumed.

Abolition Riots in Kansas.

LOUISVILLE, Dec. 3.—Seventeen houses have been destroyed by fire and several citizens shot, we learn here to-day, at Hickory Point, Kansas, in an Abolition riot.

The Abolitionists are assembling in armed force in the endeavor to carry out their aims, but many citizens are going over from Missouri to aid in repelling them, and the Governor has ordered out the militia to suppress their rioting.

Abolition Trimmings in Oregon.

In Oregon, three armed Abolitionists went to Coleman's house and ordered him to leave the place in ten minutes. He did so, but presently returned armed. One of the Abolitionists aimed to shoot him, but the rifle missed fire, and Coleman then shot him dead.

OUR RELATIONS WITH ENGLAND.

THE SOUND DUES AGAIN.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Our affairs with England are unchanged, so far as the Government dispatches by the Atlantic throw any light upon the subject. Mr. Buchanan says that the British Cabinet is endeavoring to patch up a reply to our Government in reference to the violation of the neutrality laws.

The proposal of Denmark to substitute an ad valorem taxation on cargoes for the present Sound dues, is rejected by our Government.

The Kansas Difficulties.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The President received a telegraphic dispatch yesterday from Gov Shannon, of Kansas Territory, calling for aid to suppress the serious outbreak between the pro-slavery and anti-slavery parties in Kansas. The President immediately ordered troops from the nearest points to preserve the peace. Affairs in Kansas have assumed a very serious aspect. Both parties seem determined to fight it out.

YELLOW FEVER.—Notwithstanding the frosts and occasional cold snaps of the last month or so, the yellow fever—or a fever closely resembling it—is still lurking about, rendering every one more or less uneasy.

Reports reach us of some six or eight cases, in all, within the past two weeks, at Mr. Donahoe's, two mile from Raymond, on the Cooper's Well road. Two deaths have occurred. The remaining cases are doing well.

[Hinds (Miss.) Gaz., 28th.

CENTRAL RAILROAD.—The track has been completed to the temporary depot, a mile and a quarter from the public square, and the passenger train came through to that point on yesterday, the 21st inst. The first train of cotton, 300 bales, went off to-day. Quite a large amount has already accumulated there for shipment, and hundreds of bales are daily coming in. Freight is regularly coming through, and a warehouse is nearly completed for its reception. Altogether, things exhibit quite a bustling and business appearance out there, in the daily arrival and departure of cars and wagons. The company, we understand, are expecting twenty freight cars, platform and box style, which were shipped by flatboat from Cincinnati last month. [Holly Springs (Miss.) Times.

A man in Mount Vernon, Me., has raised in the open air, for the last three years, the coffee plant, the seed of which was brought five years ago from Cuba. It grows about two feet high, and produces its berries in pods something like peas. The plants, he says, have matured, even this season, and the berries ripened without injury from frosts.

PAUPERISM.—From a report made to the governors of the Alms-houses of New York recently, and which appears in the Express, we clip the following extract:

This department are paying $100,000 per annum at least for foreign paupers, which, under the present law, they cannot get any return for whatever.

A lady advertises in the Glasgow Herald that she wants a gentleman for breakfast and tea. The cannibal.

HORACE GREELEY SNUBBED BY A LAMP-TRIMMER.—A friend who recently happened on the same car with Horace Greeley, tells the following: Mr. Greely was trying to read a newspaper by the "dim religious light" of a car lamp. In order to see, he raised the wick; but hardly had he done so, before the lamp-trimmer came along and turned it down. The moment his back was turned, Greeley raised it up again. The Knight of the "Dark Lantern" presently came along again and partly shut off the light by which the Philosopher was reading. Greeley remonstrated. The official thrust his lantern to his face, surveyed him with a contemptuous air a moment, and coolly replied: "Old fellow, you talk too much." [Utica Herald.

VICKSBURG AND SHREVEPORT RAILROAD.—Mr. N. D. Coleman, agent and collector of this road, addressed the following note to the editor of the Vicksburg Sentinel, which appeared in that paper on the 20th ult. We are glad to see that the prospects of an important work of internal improvement are indeed flattering:

I beg leave, through your paper, to inform the stockholders of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company, that another call of 10 per cent falls due on the 1st of December, now at hand. I would also inform the friends of the road, that about eighty negroes, under Messrs. Heard & Eaton, and twenty under Mr. Haines, have arrived from Georgia to work on our road, and that ninety more under Mr. Swanson and others, are expected this week. Those that are here came round by water. The others are coming through by land. Messrs. Burke, Yates, Bigner, Gordon and Searcy have about two hundred and fifty white men on their respective sub-contracts. These laborers must be paid by monthly estimates, and ten or twenty miles of iron are to be paid for. I hope, therefore, that the friends of the enterprise will be prompt.

THEORY ON THE ASTEROIDS.—Prof. Alexander, of Princeton, has recently prepared a paper on the subject of the asteroids, which is ingenious. His conclusion is, that between Mars and Jupiter there once revolved a planet with an equatorial diameter of 70,000 miles, and a polar diameter of only eight miles, thus being shaped like a wafer. Having a great velocity on its axis, it burst as some grinding stones do, and its fragments formed the asteroids. This theory of the asteroids is brought in to support that of the Plationists and nebular hypothesists.

THE PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

I can see that I grow older,
And I make it day by day;
I can feel my heart grow colder,
As the pleasures pass away.
At the toll tale glass I linger
As with tardy step I pass,
And I count the silver finger
Has engraven on my face.

But one moment can restore me
To my boyhood and my prime,
And sweet memories come o'er me
Of that brief and blessed time:
Then I hear a mother's blessing,
And I feel a mother's kiss,
And again I am caressing
The wife whom I call mine my bliss.

Who shall say the Past must perish
Saith the Future's coming wave?
What the real delights to cherish,
From Oblivion's depth it saves?
Looking backward, on I am all-hung,
Till I reach that final shore
Where the Present is abiding,
And where Change shall come no more.

ECHOES.

Still the angel stars are shining,
Still the rippling waters flow,
But the ancient voice is silent
That I heard here long ago!
Hark! the echoes murmur low
Long ago!

Still the wood is dim and lonely,
Still the splashing toys at the play,
But the past and all its beauty,
Whither has it fled away?
Hark! the mournful echoes say
Fled away!

Still the bird of night complaineth—
Now, indeed, her song is plain—
Violence of my happy home,
Do I call and call in vain?
Hark! the echoes cry again—
All in vain!

Come, ye loved, your mournful echoes!
Once I loved your voices well;
Now my heart is sick and weary,
Days of old, a long farewell!
Hark! the echoes, sad and dreary,
Cry farewell, farewell!

"SINE QUA NON."

The gladiator first enters the scene of commotion,
York popult lied he chinks all the loot;
The Freedom's the theme of his tongue, "chief flavolion, Conjunction's ton often his "sine qua non."

The Soldier next rushes—his noble eye beaming
With vengeance against the proud Briton or Don;
His lord wheres the "Star-spangled Banner" is streaming,
And glory is always his "sine qua non."

The Dancer comes; what is his greatest pleasure?
O'er scenes where the spotlight in question to run;
In it is his hope, its life's greatest treasure,
His spirit's vade mecum, his "sine qua non."

Hark away! 'tis the buck from the jovial board springing,
To rouse all his natives, astonish the town.
His spot where the glasses are gallantly clinging,
Pour in haud, double dash, is his "sine qua non."

Dear Woman comes next, with her tender heart beating—
A theme I forever could linger upon;
Her joy where the life of affection are meeting,
And love is dear woman's "sine qua non."

Agricultural.

From the Mobile Daily Tribune.

ON DEEP PLOUGHING.

The first step in a good system of agriculture will be to place the plantation in a state to receive improvement, and this is said to consist in deep ploughing. Let us ascertain if this be so. Those who advocate shallow ploughing say, that all plants receive their nourishment from the surface or within six inches of it, and that the earth below that is principally used as the medium in which the top and other deep roots are made to sustain and hold up the stalk. That the food of the plant is through the combined agency of air, water and manure, and these are most active within that distance. That all excrementitious deposits and vegetable decompositions, with guano and the sulphates are lighter than clay, and the earthe and their tendency is not to sink but to rise to the surface by the action of the plough and the hoe; and all these are obtained by the order and condition of the pulverization of that amount of depth. That where the surface is completely turned under by the plough and the subsoil made to lay over it, that it covers futility with a "caput mortuum," and places it less acceptable to the air, and moderate shower, and will be injurious to the soil, unless combined with manuring. That any grain may germinate at six inches under the ground; but will push out its system of roots at about the same distance below the surface that seed planted only three inches. This shows that its food is only to be found near the surface and within the easy penetration of the air. This is very manifest in seeing that the great mass of fine roots that make the ear of corn and the boll of cotton, are barely under the surface. Perhaps nine-tenths of our planters practice under this belief, and many fear injury from the substratum covering all the vegetable matter of the surface. Admitting this to be correct, and it is certainly entitled to much weight, may not the objection be removed by the subsoil plough following in the furrow made by the turn over plough. You get great depth of loose earth, and leave the surface soil where it was.

The advocates of deep ploughing say that the depth of the soil gives the same advantage from a light shower, and sinks better the greater rains that might make too much water immediately in contact with the roots, and preserves the land better from washing, and the air has a larger source of moisture to abstract from. It may be uncertain whether the pulverized soil draws its moisture from the atmosphere or the atmosphere draws it from the soil. It is very certain that the plant gets it, and the source whence has not been made the subject of inquiry. Corn is often seen nipped by frost to the very furrow ploughed and no farther, and this from the moisture at the plant whether it came up or down to it. It would require a very hard rain of two hours and more to make an inch of perpendicular water, and this would find ample room percolated through and intermixed with the earth within the space of one foot's depth. With the ordinary ploughing of four inches it would soon saturate that depth and have to run off perhaps two-thirds of it with all the mischief of removal of vegetable surface, and perhaps making wasteful marshes or gullies in the field. Probably the highest value of deep ploughing is in this particular more than in the greater depth given for the roots to search for nourishment. I think the great class of plants get their supplies from within six inches of the surface, and get little if any below that. If this latter practice be proper and the reason for it what is above supposed, it gives to the small ploughs a preference over a large four mule plough which seeks to get its depth at a single furrow. I should try with a mould board plough drawn by one or two mules, according to the hardness of the ground, and turn over the soil completely; a bull tongue, or five inch shovel following in the same furrow with one or two mules to drive down to one foot more depth. If on examination I doubted whether all the subsoil was pulverized, I would cross it with a coulter or bull-tongue, made narrow where it comes in contact with the surface and somwhat broader below, so as to disturb it as little as practicable.

If well done you will have a depth of loose soil for 12 or 16 inches, and the top soil where it was. I have seen the usual subsoil plough which saves some time, as it requires but one ploughing; but taking into consideration the usual condition of our plantations, with the chance of a grub, stump, and certainly some strong cotton stalks, I see no reason for giving them a preference over the ploughs now in general use.

I am aware that the gardener will say that the spade is best for all this, and I am also aware that the sugar in Demarara is cultivated with the spade, making the hip the fulcrum, but these are not our planters' tools.

A PLANTER.

PRESERVATION OF POTATOES FOR SEED.

Mr. J. N. Chandler, a correspondent of the Patent Office at Washington, speaking of the preservation of potatoes for seed, says the potato, when first obtained from its native mountains, was a small, watery, and even bitter tuber, but by cultivation it has been brought into so high and refined a state, that most of the countries of the civilized globe look at it as one of the most important articles of food. In answer to the question, by what means has it been made a chief article of food, he says, by violating the laws of nature:

"Every one who has ever noticed the difference between the flavor of a potato in the fall when first dug, and one in the spring which has been kept in a dry cellar, has observed that the flavor becomes much impaired—much more so than those which are buried in hills in the earth, where they retain nearly all of their freshness and vitality. It has also been observed that farmers who have small and inconvenient cellars, keep their potatoes in better condition than those who keep them in large cool ones. Hence storing them in the latter, and letting them wilt before planting, they become weakened in their nature, and are subject to degeneracy, and finally to disease.

"In order to obtain good potatoes, for seed, make choice of a small spot of arable land on which water will not stand—an eastern locality and new ground are the best—ploughed early in the spring, and furrowed four or five inches deep, two and a half feet apart. Select middling-sized potatoes, which have touched the ground during the winter previous but do not cut them. Drop one every seven inches along the furrows and cover them by filling the furrows with earth. Then cover them with a top-dressing of forrest leaves or straw, two inches deep. As soon as the tops of the young plants are two inches high, pass between them with a shovel plough, follow with a hoe, destroying the weeds and leveling the ground; do not hill. This is all you have to do until fall. When the ground begins to freeze, cover with straw chaff, or forest leaves, six inches deep, to keep them from frost. Your potatoes will now have a chance to ripen and rest during the winter. In this way, you will have the greatest yield and best quality. Continue this course from year to year, and the rot will not only disappear, but your crop will increase from twenty-five to one hundred per cent. The third year you may increase your field crop by ploughing in fine manure. You will now have had nature's course."

THE ERIE RAILROAD DIFFICULTY.—A dispatch of the 27th ult. from Pittsburgh says:

The question of the railroads through the town of Erie has been before the Supreme Court sitting at this place. The history of the present proceedings is as follows: On the 7th of October, the Governor signed the bill passed at the last session of the Legislature, and on the 3d of November he appointed Joseph Casey to take possession of the Erie and Northeast Railroad. On the 19th of November the Railroad Companies, (Erie and Northeast, and Cleveland and Painesville, and Ashtabula,) appeared before Judge Woodward, at his chambers in Philadelphia, and made a motion for an injunction to restrain the agent Casey from taking possession. Judge Woodward granted the injunction, with an admonitory order, commanding Mr. Casey not to proceed until hearing of the rule.

On the 24th, the case was argued before all the Judges of the Supreme Court, in this city, on a motion of the defendant, to quash the admonitory order. Yesterday the opinion of the Court was given by Chief Justice Lewis, to the following effect: Judge Woodward's jurisdiction was unanimously sustained, but the order was amended by submitting the words "be cautioned" for "be commanded" The question will be argued in Philadelphia, in January.

A Washington dispatch in the New York Harald of the 28th says:

The question as to the legality of the drafts drawn by the Mexican Government, in anticipation of the three millions payable under the Mesilla Valley treaty, came up in the Cabinet to-day, without being formally discussed, was indefinitely postponed. It is not true that the Attorney General has given any opinion whatever on the subject, except ons in regard to the validity of Salazar's proceedings, as a member of the Boundary Commission on the part of Mexico. It is probable that no future action will be had until after the arrival of Salazar, who is expected here in April next, for the purpose of completing the papers necessary to define the survey.

FROM CHINA.—The English overland mail, which arrived at Southampton on the 9th instant, brings the "Friend of China" of September 15. This paper contains some news of great slaughter among Chinese Crets in the Gulf of Pechili by the British Government sloop Bittern and merchant steamer Paoushun. The vessels destroyed were reported to be pirates; but the Friend of China says that it does not appear to have been ascertained whether they were assembled for piratical or for political purposes before the destruction commenced, although Captain Vansittart, who commanded the expedition, delivered over to the Mandarins, to certain torture and death, forty-six Chinese who surrendered to the British flag.

An account is given of the defeat by the rebels of an army of forty thousand imperialists led by Chun, a judge of Canton, and Whoo, a military officer, in the district of Wai-choo, north-east of Canton. The Governor of Waichoo also, at the head of an army of ten thousand strong, met the rebel chief Pak-too-koo, who, with three thousand female combatants, gave him battle and defeated him. In the engagement a red button and four white button officers were killed. Accounts are given of horrid butcheries in Canton, which seem incredible.

The steamship Erin, from Shanghai, arrived at Hong Kong August 15th, bringing news of much sickness being prevalent in the river. The United States ship Macedonian was reported as having fifty-five men on the sick list.

LOUISIANA ITEMS.—Robert McHatton and Samuel Marks were tried on Monday last before the Sixth District Court in Baton Rouge on an Indictment for betting on the election. The jury acquitted them on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to convict. The Advocate says:

The principle points for the defence, and which appear to be sustained by the verdict—were:

1st—No money was staked.

2d—The bets were made after the closing of the polls and consequently not embraced in the policy of the law.

The Court however, charged against both of these points.

The Bienville Times announces that heavy rains have prevailed recently in that region.

The Bayou Sara Ledger selects seven plantations of that parish and estimates their yield of sugar for the present season at but little more than one-fourth of what it was last year.

The Clinton American Patriot of Saturday last informs us that the late trial in the case of the contested election in St. Helena parish has been dismissed from Court. Hatch and Strickland will contest the seat in the House of Representatives before the lower branch of Legislature which is the proper tribunal to decide the case.

MR. BUCHANAN AND THE LONDON TIMES.—The following is a copy of the contradiction forwarded by Mr. Buchanan, the American minister at London, to the editors of the London Times, in refutation of the article which appeared in that paper, charging him with having made certain assurances to the members of the British Ministry on the subject of the war with Russia, and especially in relation to the British enlistments in this country for the Crimea. Its mild and temperate tone contrasts admirably with the violent and vituperative character of the charges of the Times; and yet, notwithstanding it was forwarded to the editors of that journal nearly a month ago, they had refused to make any correction up to the period of the departure of the steamer Canada:

The American Minister presents his compliments to the editors of the Times, and assures them that they have been "misinformed" with respect to the expressions and conduct attributed to him in their leading article of this morning. Always mindful of the neutrality of his government, which he fully approves, it was with deep regret he learned, as he first did from Washington, that attempts were made in the United States to recruit soldiers for the British army; because he felt confident that these attempts would tend to weaken the friendly relations between the two countries, which it has been his ardent desire, ever since his arrival in England, to cherish and promote.

The American Minister can, of course, enter into no discussion in the public journals of questions between the two governments, or state what is or what is not contained in any correspondence which may have arisen out of these questions; but he has felt it due both to the Times and himself to make this prompt correction.

56 HARLEY STREET, London, Nov. 1, 1855.

Mr. Cadwell, a conductor on the Chicago and Burlington Railroad, has been convicted of embezzlement, and sentenced to a year's imprisonment in the penitentiary. Motion has been made for a new trial.

More Fact than Fancy.

Speaking of the statutes of the State, and the various attempts to revise, codify, condense and put them in an intelligible shape, as well as the enormous expense that has hitherto attended abortive endeavors in that line, the Baton Rouge Comet, of the 4th, indulges in the subjoined observations, which smack infinitely more of fact, than of fancy:

THE STATUTES AT LARGE.—It is painful to reflect that notwithstanding an annual expenditure on the part of this State—of say, at a low figure, $15,000 to revise the statutes—that every succeeding attempt to do the work only confounds confusion. A gentleman remarked the other night, in company with several gentlemen, that the voluminous work from the pen and scissors of Mr Phillips, for which the State has paid the modest sum of $10,000, is such a medley of contradictions—that that paragon of lawyers, who resides in Philadelphia, might take the book and strain his eyes out their sockets to find what the law is, and come off no wiser than others, who, with their eyes open, are yet in the dark

The last Legislature ran over this volume, as it did all things else out of which nothing could be made; and as the book is already bound in calf, to lay on the library shelf with King & Co.'s Digest—which only cists about $40,000—of course the next Legislature will consider the propriety of having the laws revised, and give some other tahidit-partisan lawyer a job. The same gentleman above referred to, (who is a lawyer) said that, in company with an experienced member of his profession, they spent a whole day in a fruitless effort to find the law governing successions.

It is well known, in reference to this matter, that the laws of the land are not intended for the comprehension of the common mind; but for heaven's sake—we say it in behalf of the tax ridden people—do let us have the statutes at large solated in some fashion intelligible to those who live by them.

PAID FIRE DEPARTMENTS.—We have lately read, says the Washington Evening Star, every thing within our reach likely to inform us reliably upon the question of the success or failure of the new system of relying, for the protection of property from fire in cities, on the services of a paid fire department. The conclusion to which we have come—and we have carefully conned English, French and Prussian, as well as American, (Boston and Cincinnati,) statistics bearing on the subject—is, that in most cases the decrease in the value of property destroyed by firs, brought about by the change, has been nearly one-half; while the increase of the cost of the maintenance of the fire departments (where the system has been adopted) has been in all cases inconsiderable, when the services rendered by the paid firemen, as auxiliary policemen, etc., are taken into consideration.

KAINTUCK AND THE FIDDLER.—On board the steamer Indiana, on one of her trips down the Mississippi, were a large number of good natured passengers. They were seeking to while away hours according to their several notions of pleasure, and would have got on very well but for one annoyance. There happened to be on board a boosier from the Wabash, who was going to New Orleans, and he had provided himself with an old fiddle, fancying that he could fiddle as well as the best man, and planting himself where he would attract notice, scraped away.

The fellow could'nt play any more than a setting hen, and the horrible noise disturbed his fellow passengers. A Frenchman of very delicate nerves and a very fine musical ear, was especially annoyed. He fluttered, fidgeted and swore at the fiddle. The passengers tried various expedients to rid themselves of the Hoosier and his fiddle; it was no go—"he would musis just as long as he pleased."

At last a big Kentuckian sprang from his seat, saying, "I reckon I'll fix him," placing himself by the fiddler, he commenced braying with all his might. The effect of this move was beyond all description. Old Kentuck brayed so loud that he drowned the skreechinge of the fiddle, and amid the shouts of the passengers the discomfited Hoosier retreated below, leaving the victory to the unequal contest with the Kentuckian and his singular impromptu imitation of Balaam's friend. The delight of the Frenchman knew no bounds, and quiet was restored for the day.

During the night the Kentuckian left the boat. The next morning, after breakfast, the passengers were startled by the discordant sound of their old tormentor. Hoosier had discovered the coast was clear, and was bound to revenge himself on the passengers. Loud and worse than ever screamed the fiddle. The Frenchman—just seated to read his paper—on the first sound, rose and looked anxiously around, shrugged his shoulders and then shouted—"Vare is he?—Vare is he? Queeck! Queeck! Mon Dieu! Vare is Monsieur Kontuck, de man vat play on the jackass?"

SINKING OF THE STEAMBOAT SWITZERLAND.—In the Concordia Intelligencer of Friday last, we find the following statement in regard to the collision between the steamboats Switzerland and Uncle Sam, on the 24th ult., by which the former was sunk. The statement is made by the officers of the Switzerland:

When the Switzerland came in sight of the Uncle Sam, the latter was crossing towards the wharf-boat at Natchez, as if she was going to land. But, for some reason or other, she did not land, but turned angling across the river towards the Louisiana shore, and blew her whistle for the larboard side, which was promptly answered by the Switzerland and her wheels stopped. The Uncle Sam, instead of continuing her course, when directly across the bow of the Switzerland, turned straight up the river and held directly for the bow of the Switzerland, which boat was immediately backed strong, but it was now too late to avoid the collision on our part, but we believe that even then had the officers of the Uncle Sam used the same means to prevent the collision, it would not have occurred.

The Switzerland, at the time of the collision, was near the middle of the river, and consequently le deep water; but she was rounded towards the Louisiana shore, where she sunk, and now lies in about twenty feet water

The Uncle Sam came alongside and lent us some assistance; and in a few minutes the May Flower, bound for New Orleans, also came alongside and took our passengers on their destination.

The loss of life, we think, did not at the farthest exceed four, and possibly no lives were lost. The confusion was so great, it was impossible to learn if any were missing from the deck. The cabin passengers and baggage were all saved.

The Switzerland left Cincinnati on the 16th inst. A large number of passengers were on board; and the cargo, at the time of sinking, was about 800 tons, about 100 tons of which was baled hay, about one-fifth of which was saved without damage. The balance of the cargo, a large proportion of it, freight not easily damaged, being made up of whisky, beef, star candles, etc.

GIGANTIC PROPOSITION.—At a meeting of the Pittsburgh Board of Trade, a gentleman submitted a proposition on the subject of improving the Ohio river, by converting it into a slack-water canal. The suggestions were unanimously approved by the Board, and were earnestly recommended to public consideration. The distance from Pittsburgh to the month of the Ohio is nine hundred and seventy-seven miles, with an aggregate fall of four hundred and twenty-five feet. It is assumed that to convert the entire river into slack water would require only fifty locks, of an average lift of eight and a half feet, which would create pools of an aggregate length of one hundred and thirty-two miles.—The average cost of the work is from seven to ten thousand dollars per mile, which is supposed to be about half the expence of an ordinary canal, or about one-third the average cost of a railroad.

A number of letters, mailed from and registered in the Philadelphia Post-office were missing on the 29th. There was quite an excitement among the parties interested and the Post-office clerks. Two letters mailed by Thos Biddle & Co., contained $12 600 in Pennsylvania coupon bonds, and $45,000 in Westchester railroad bonds. Messrs. Gaw & Macallister miss $2,000 in the last named bonds.

The Sioux Warrior's Race for Life.

During the summer of 18—, soon after the difficulties with the Winnebago Indians had been amicably adjusted by a visit of one of their chiefs to Washington, accompanied by Governor Cass, a Sioux Indian, while out hunting by the mouth of the Root river, shot and scalped a Winnebago, which act he attempted to justify by saying that the Winnebago had wrapped around his person the blanket of an Indian, who, a short time previous had murdered his brother. The Winnebagoes became indignant at the act, and two thousand of them assembled at Fort Crawford, and demanded of Col. Taylor the procurement and surrender of the murderer.

The officers of the fort, apprehensive that difficulties might arise with the factious tribe if their demands were unattended to, concluded to make an effort to obtain the murderer. Accordingly an officer was dispatched to demand him of the Sioux nation, who immediately gave him up, and he was brought down the river and confined at Fort Crawford. Soon after his arrival at the Fort, the Winnebagoes again assembled and insisted on the unconditional surrender of the prisoner to them, which Col. Taylor refused to make, but dispatched Lieut. R. and Dr. Eluise, the surgeon of the garrison, to have a talk with them upon the subject. At length Lieut. R. proposed that the Indians should have a chance for his life in the following manner.

Two weeks from that time he was to be led out upon the prairie, and in a line with him, ten paces off, was to be placed on his right and left twelve of the most expert runners of the Winnebago nation, each armed with a tomahawk and scalping knife.

At the tap of the drum one Sioux should be free to start for the home of his tribe, and the Winnebagoes free to pursue, and capture and scalp him if they could.

To this proposal the Winnebagoes acceded at once, and seemed much pleased with the anticipation of great sport, as well as an easy conquest of the prisoner, whose confinement in the garrison during two weeks they believed would prostrate whatever running qualities he possessed. Their best runners were immediately brought in, and trained every day in full sight of the Fort. Lieut. R., who had warmly enlisted in the cause of the Sioux, determined to have his Indian in the best possible trim. Accordingly Eloise took him in charge; prescribing his diet, regulating his hours of repose, and directing the rubbing of his body with flesh brushes immediately before he went on the parade ground to perform his morning and evening trainings. In fact so carefully was he trained and fitted for the race of life and death, that he was timed upon the parade ground the fourth day before the race, and performed the astonishing feat of forty-one miles in two hours, apparently without fatigue.

The day at length arrived. Thousands of Indians, French, Americans and others had assembled to witness the scene. In fact, it was regarded as a gala-day by all except the avenger of his brother Sioux. Lieut. R., on the part of the prisoner, and the celebrated war-chiefs Warkon-shutes-tee-and-Pine-Top, on the part of the Winnebagoes, superintended the arrangement of the parties on the ground. The point agreed upon for starting was on the prairie, a little to the north of Prairie du Chien; and a few rods from the residence then occupied by Judge Lockwood, while the race course then ran along Nine mile Prairie, stretching to the north and skirting the shore of the Mississippi. The Sioux appeared on the ground, accompanied by a guard of soldiers, who were followed by the twenty-four antagonists, marching in Indian file, naked, with the exception of the Indian breechclout. Their ribs were painted white, while their breasts were adorned with a number of bisroglyphical paintings. Across the face alternate stripes of black and white were painted in parallel lines, extending from the chin to the forehead.

The hair was plaited into numerous thongs, fringed with bells, and tasseled with a red or white feather, while their moccasins were corded tightly around the hollow of the foot, as well as around the ancle, with the sinews of the deer. In the right hand each carried a tomahawk, while the left grasped the sheath that contained the scalping knife.

The prisoner was about twenty-three years of age, a little more than six feet in height, and of a muscular and well proportioned contour, and manifested, in the easy movement of his body, a wiry and agile command of his muscular powers. His countenance presented a wan and a haggard appearance, as he stood upon the ground, owing partly to the rigid discipline he had undergone in training, and partly to his having painted his face black, with the figure of a horse-shoe in white upon his forehead, which denoted that he was condemned to die, with the privilege of making an effort to save his life by fleetness. Around his neck he wore a narrow belt of wampum, to which was appended the scalp which was taken from the Winnebago.

Soon after they had formed in a line, Lieut. R. came up and took one of the moccasins off the Indian, and showed the chief that he thought it contained a thin plate of steel, and asked if he objected to it, to which he replied he might carry all the iron he pleased. Lieut. R. having noticed at the same time that the countenance of the Indian presented a downcast and melancholy appearance, requested Dr. Eluise to come forward, who, after examining his pulse, reported that he was much excited, and that his nerves were in a tremulous condition.

Lieut. R. immediately took him by the arm and led him out some distance from the line, when he asked him through his interpreter if he was afraid to run; to which he replied that he was not afraid to run with any Winnebago on foot, but that he was afraid he could not outrun all the horses that were mounted by armed Indians. The Lieutenant saw at once the cause of his alarm, and informed him that they should not interfere. He intended to ride the fleetest horse upon the ground and keep near him, and as he was well armed would see that no horseman approached with any hostile intention. At this announcement the countenance of the Indian brightened up with a smile; his whole person seemed lifted from the ground as he turned to his position in the line with a stalwart stride. The chiefs and Lieut. R soon after mounted their horses and took a position directly in the rear of the prisoner. Spectators were removed from the front, when Lieut. R. gave the signal: the blow had scarcely reached the drum when the prisoner darted from his antagonist with a bound that placed him beyond the whirling tomahawk. When the race was under way many of his antagonists ran with great fleetness for a mile, when the distance between them and the Sioux began to widen rapidly, showing the superior bottom of the latter, acquired by the discipline of the white man.

At the end of two miles the last of the contending Winnebagoes withdrew from the chase; there was not an Indian horse on the ground that could keep up with him after he had gone the first half mile. Lieut. R., finding his steed much fatigued, and the prairie free from enemies resigned up. The Indian did not look behind nor speak as far as he was followed or seen, but kept his eye steadily fixed upon the white flags that had been placed at distances of a half mile apart, in order that he might run upon a straight line.

It was soon reported by the Winnebagoes that he had been killed by one of their boys, who had been secreted, by order of War kon-shutes kes, beneath the bank of the river, near the upper end of the prairie. This, however, proved not to be true. The boy had shot a Winnebago through mistake, who, like himself, had been treacherously secreted for the purpose of intercepting the Sioux, who, a few years ago, was present at a treaty made by Gov Doty with the Sioux nation. He had then but recently acquired the rank of chief. He requested Gov Doty to inform him where Lieut. R and Dr Eluise were at that time, and was told that both had died in Florida. He immediately withdrew from the convention, painted his face black and departed to the woods; nor could he be prevailed upon to come into the convention until he had gone through the usual ceremony of fasting and mourning for the dead.

EXPLOSION.—On the night of the 26th an explosion of fire-damp occurred in the Black Heath Mine, near Richmond, Va, by which three persons were instantly killed and three others severely injured, one of them having since died. The men were each supplied with a Davy Safety Lamp, one of which was found with the top off. It was supposed that the man had unscrewed it to light his pipe, and thus caused the explosion.

A Memoir of John Huss. Translated from the German. Edited by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. Pp. 106, price 30 cents.

In the history of the Reformation, John Huss and Jerome of Prague deservedly occupy a conspicuous position. The Bohemian Gemini were bright precursors of Luther, Zwingle, Latimer, and others, who constituted that constellation of bright particular stars which adorned the firmament of the Church in the 16th century. A monograph should be devoted to every hero of this noble army of martyrs; and it should obtain a place in every Christian library. The present volume, translated from the German, is a work of this class. We feel assured that the reader will consider it a valuable addition to our biographical literature.

Memoir of Richard Williams, Surgeon; Catechist to the Patagonian Missionary Society in Terra del Fuego. By James Hamilton, D. D., author of "Life in Earnest," "The Mount of Olives," etc. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, pp. 255, price 40 cents.

This is one of the most interesting biographies we ever read. The account of the fated mission to Patagonia is of thrilling interest. The character of Mr. Williams, catechist to the mission, is truly unique—it deserves to be studied. Though a Wesleyan Methodist himself, his biographer is a distinguished minister of the Presbyterian Church—a man of deep, earnest, Christian piety, and broad, catholic views. The picture of Richard Williams is not, of course, exactly what it would have been had it been drawn by William Arthur, who was first chosen as the artist. For obvious reasons he might have spared here and there a touch of particular hue, and brought out here and there a feature with a little more vividness; but we have no occasion to regret that the work was performed by James Hamilton. We love to see sectarian walls of separation broken down once in a while, in deference to the paramount claims of the common Christianity. For this and other reasons which will appear in the perusal of the volume, we take pleasure in giving it our most hearty recommendation.

...e Valley. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen, 1855. The title of this little book is suggestive of pleasant associations—its perusal will scarcely fail to interest any one, young or old. Familiar as readers are with some of the most beautiful and fertile valleys on the earth, it will be both entertaining and profitable to read of other valleys, and note the points in which they agree with ours, and those in which they differ. The comparison will cause us to feel that the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places, and that we have a goodly heritage. We must be permitted to suggest that there is one valley in which we should always abide—"the valley of humiliation"—

"Lead me to the mount above
Through the low vale of humble love."

There is another—a gloomy one, too—through which we must all pass; but if we take Christ with us, we need have no anxiety about it: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." May such a contemplation of earth's pilgrimage be realized by all the readers of this little book, as well as by their friends. "The Valley" belongs to a series of books, bearing the titles: "The Mountain," "The Sea," "The River," "The Desert," "The Prairie," "The Ball we live on"—all together making a beautiful little cabinet library for a child. They are illustrated with engravings, bound in gilt cloth, and cost only 25 cents each.

...team Engine. Edited by Thomas O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, pp. 188, price 30 cents. This is a most satisfactory book on the Steam Engine—a subject interesting to every one in these days, when there is so much moving by land and by water, in the steamboat and the railroad car, no one should be ignorant of that powerful agent by which we live almost succeeded in annihilating time and space. In view of this, we have carefully revised the present work, which is admirably adapted to the Family, or Sunday School People's Library, and may be profitably put into the pocket to be read when in the train or car.

The Bible in Many Tongues. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, pp. 193, price 30 cents.

The history of the Bible is full of interest particularly to those who love this blessed book. Such persons will read with no little pleasure the following work, which contains, so far as our knowledge extends, more information on this subject than can be elsewhere found in the same compass. We think its perusal will intensify the reader's love for this Book of books. To promote this end, it has been carefully revised by the editor. The contents are as follows: The Biography of Books in General, and of the Bible in Particular; The Bible in the Ancient East and at Rome; The Bible and the Reformation; The Bible and Christian Missions. "Our English Bible"—a well-written work—is designed to accompany the present volume.

Our English Bible. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, pp. 185, price 30 cents.

In the preface to this excellent book the author says: "This little volume supplies a succinct account of English translations and translators, derived from original authorities. The author has before written on the subject, and has availed himself of materials collected for previous publications. This notice is given simply to prevent the charge of plagiarism. If any coincidences of arrangement or style should be noticed between this volume and the introduction prefixed to the second edition of 'Bagster's Hexapla,' it will easily be accounted for by the fact that they are written by the same person. Where any extracts have been made from that publication, or any other written by the author, they are acknowledged at the foot of the page. Yet it is not to be inferred that this book is a mere abridgment or compilation framed out of the former. It is a perfectly distinct and independent work, and contains the result of the author's latest researches. He begs particularly to acknowledge the assistance derived from Mr. Anderson's 'Annals of the Bible.'" The reader will more clearly see the value of this book by the table of contents, which is as follows: Anglo-Saxon Fragments; Wycliffe, and his Translation of the Bible; Tyndale, and his Translation of the Testament; Coverdale, and his Biblical Toils; The Great Bible; The Genevan Exiles and their Version; The Bishop's Book; Our Translation in common use. "The Bible in Many Tongues"—an exceedingly interesting volume—accompanies the work.

The Coal-Pit; or, Light in Darkness. A True History. By James Bridges, Esq. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, price 25 cents.

This is a thrilling narrative. The author, in his preface, says Mr. Leigh Richmond's tract of "The Collier-boy and his Candle-box" contains an account of the destruction of seventy-five persons in the Heaton Main Colliery, near Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on the 3d of May, 1815. Of these sufferers, a portion remained alive for a time after the occurrence of the accident. But of their experience during their confinement in the bowels of the earth no record remains save the candle-box of William Thew, on which were found scratched these interesting words: "Fret not, dear mother, for we were singing while we had time, and praising God. Mother, follow God more than ever I did." "It is probable, however," adds Mr. Richmond, in speculating on the occupations of these imprisoned souls, "that the pious men would employ their time in exhorting those who were irreligious to repentance and faith in Christ." What in that instance was considered probable, we shall find in the event here related to have actually occurred; for here the sufferers, after thirty-six hours' burial in the pit, were delivered from that death of which they had been, during this long period in continual expectation, and their actual experiences are accurately known and set down. Peter Hay, one of their own number, and the leader of their religious exercises, has given an account of them, which is verified by all the rest. He still lives in the village of Millerhill, where he is now an elder of the kirk; and it is interesting to add, that by the choice of the people he has recently been set apart as a catechist of that village, and some adjoining ones. Should this record of his subterraneous teachings prove useful to any one suffering under affliction or exposed to danger the collier will be recompensed for his hardships and the writer for his trouble.

The Inquisition in Spain and other Countries. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, price 35 cents.

The Inquisition! What horrible associations are called up at the mention of this hateful word! What "a world of iniquity" is contained in this diabolical institution! The "holy office" is, indeed, professedly put down in Europe and Asia, as well as in America; but is it really extinguished? The Jesuits have been repeatedly expelled from various nations, but the Protean fraternity was never really suppressed, and at this day it is more vigorous and more extended in its range of operations than at any former period. And who can say that the Inquisition, with all its "instruments of cruelty," may not again be revived? Nothing but favorable circumstances are wanted to secure its establishment in our own country. It certainly is the duty of every Christian, every freeman to make himself acquainted with the history of "the man of sin," and some of the most fearfully interesting passages of that history are those which detail the operations of the Inquisition. This book contains a concise and reliable account of the rise, progress and decline of the execrable institution, as will appear from the table of contents, as follows: Origin and first establishment of the Inquisition; Apparatus and Processes of the Inquisition; The Inquisition in Portugal and Goa; The Modern Inquisition in Italy.

Remarkable Escapes from Peril. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, pp. 158, price 30 cents.

This is a book of facts illustrative of a special providence. This great doctrine is denied by some and doubted by others—partly, perhaps, because many who have written on it identify it with the unscriptural dogma of absolute predestination, with which it has not the remotest affinity. Those who wish to see the theory of Divine providence discussed in a rational and scriptural light, are referred to Sherlock's admirable treatise on that subject, published by our agents. The present volume contains a multitude of most interesting and remarkable escapes from peril, through the intervention of Him in whom we live and move and have our being. Its perusal will afford pleasure and profit to the general reader, for whose benefit it has been carefully revised by the editor.

Home Truths. By the Rev. J. C. Ryle, B. A. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, pp. 324, price 40 cents.

These pungent discourses are from the pen of an estimable clergyman of Suffolk, in England. He belongs to the Evangelical class of ministers in the Established Church. He is a zealous, laborious and faithful pastor. Not content with the usual routine of ministerial services, he endeavors to edify the people by the publication of little books of a hitting, practical character, of which the present volume is a specimen. The author's style is lucid, plain and vigorous, and a beautiful vein of piety, enlightened, sincere and earnest pervades all his writings. As might be supposed, from the school in theology to which he belongs, he occasionally presents a doctrinal point not agreeing with our views of Holy Scripture, or with the general tenor of the discourses themselves. For the sake of adding to the usefulness of the work, we have omitted the passages containing the points in question. We have also adapted it for circulation in our own country, without materially affecting its style or its size. In placing this volume of Home Truths into our catalogue of Sunday-school and tract publications, we cherish the hope that, by the Divine blessing, it may be made instrumental in the quickening, conversion and edification of thousands. Let no one into whose hands this little book shall be placed put it down before giving it a serious, a candid, a careful perusal. The contents of this book are as follows: Living or Dead; Are you Forgiven; Only one Way; Christ and the two Thieves; Assurance; The Cross; Remember Lot.

A Full Refutation of the Doctrine of Unconditional Perseverance. In a Discourse on Heb. ii., 3. By Thomas Olivers. Edited by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, pp. 171, price 30 cents.

The author of this masterly treatise was one of the first generation of Methodist preachers. He was a man of remarkable intellectual strength and extensive literary acquirements, of solid piety and great moral force. His poetical powers, too, were quite respectable. The sublime judgment ode, beginning "Lo! He comes, with clouds descending," has been attributed to him, though that was written by his more gifted friend, Charles Wesley—and that fine hymn, "Guide me, O thou great Jehovah," has also been erroneously accredited to Mr. Olivers—showing that his lyrical capacities have been estimated at no mean rate. Nor ought they to be—as all will admit who have read that immortal poem, "The God of Abraham," of which he was the undoubted author. For some twelve years he was employed by Mr. Wesley in the capacity of editor, though he does not appear to have been specially adapted to that vocation. Controversial divinity was perhaps his forte. His distinguished friend had a high opinion of his reasoning powers. Speaking of Mr. Toplady's work on predestination, Mr. Wesley says, "I have not leisure to consider the matter at large. I can only make a few strictures, and leave the young man to be further corrected by one that is fully his match—Mr. Thomas Olivers." We should think no one who has read this Discourse on Unconditional Perseverance can consider that an undue compliment. We do not hesitate to say that it is impossible to take up this book with an unprejudiced mind and give it a serious perusal, without being convinced that the Calvinistic doctrine of the inadmissibility of grace is unscriptural, absurd and pernicious. The author's exegesis of the Epistle to the Hebrews is most masterly, and the reasoning based on it is singularly exhaustive and triumphant. In preparing the work for this edition, we have transferred the Latin and Greek quotations to the margin, letting the translation alone remain in the text. This will prove an accommodation to the general reader, and others, it is presumed, will take no exception to the arrangement. Numerous errors of the press disfigured the old edition; we have taken considerable pains to make this unobjectionable in that respect. We bespeak for it a prompt and extended circulation, and invoke upon it the blessing of Heaven.

Remarkable Delusions; or Illustrations of Popular Errors. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, pp. 186.

We have no fear that this book will be considered dry and uninteresting. We doubt not it will be read without drowsiness—we hope not without profit. The original work was issued by the Religious Tract Society of England; but we have carefully revised it, and made such additions to it as will adapt it to our own age and clime. It costs only 30 cents, bound in gilt muslin.

The Lives of the Popes. From the Rise of the Roman Church to the year 1855. Edited by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855.

The Lives of the Popes! What a suggestive theme! Though the bishops of Rome can hardly be considered members—not to say supreme governors—of the Church of Christ, yet their history is so connected with that of the Church, that the knowledge of the former is necessary to an acquaintance with the latter. All that one needs know of those pretended successors of St. Peter will be found in these volumes. They were written by an able pen, and have been carefully revised and adapted to a place in our Sunday-school and Family Libraries. A few slight additions, bringing the history down to the present year, have been made by the editor. The work is bound in four volumes, for Sunday-school libraries, price $1 40; and also in two volumes, 789 pages, price $1 30.

The Commandment with Promise. By the author of "The Last Day of the Week." Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. 1855. 18mo, pp. 235, price 40 cents.

This excellent work has passed through many editions on both sides of the Atlantic. It is admirably adapted to impress on the youthful mind the importance of duly regarding the obligations pertaining to the filial relation. Parents, too, will find in its perusal many valuable suggestions in regard to their duty to their children. We have given it a careful revision, in order to adapt it to a new career of usefulness; and we bespeak for it a place in every Sunday school and family library in our land.

NEW TRACTS.

Yielding to the importunity of our enterprising Tract Secretary, Dr. Hamilton, we have added several capital tracts to our list. They are twelve in number, and contain twelve pages each. They are of a higher grade than is common in tract literature, and ought to have a wide and prompt circulation. The first in the package—on the New Year—is a seasonable issue, and an extra number will be printed to meet the orders which are confidently expected and respectfully solicited. These tracts are put up in a package and sold for ten cents. Their titles are as follows: the teachings of time; the new year; ineffectual repentance; the first great duty, or confessing Christ before men; religion, secret but not hidden; sin and its remedy; the rock or the sand, which is it? religious responsibility within doors; religion, the great business of life; are you a member of the church of Christ? a Sabbath spirit, its nature and advantages; how did you like the sermon? who has the better reason?

Feejee—Destruction of a Wesleyan Mission Station.—The late arrivals from Australia have brought very extraordinary news from the Feejee Islands. The Rewa station, which was abandoned, of necessity, some years ago, has been re-occupied by the Rev. H. Moore, who for some months had to witness the most horrible cannibal practices of the chief and his people. On the 26th January the chief died, just as he was about to carry on war against Tui Viti, the Christian king of Bau. On the 9th February, Mr. Moore's house and store were fired in the night, and totally destroyed, the loss to the Society and Mr. Moore being from $3500 to 5000. A plan appears to have been formed for the murder of Moore and his family; a club was lifted at the head of Mrs. Moore during the conflagration, but the murderous plot was happily frustrated, and an escape to Bau was safely effected by Mrs. Moore, without bonnet or shoes, and the children in their night clothes. Mr. Moore returned at once to Rewa, and continues his labors among that nation of murderers.—London Watchman.

Foreign News by the America.

The New York papers of the 6th inst. have full dispatches by the steamship America, which arrived at Halifax on the previous day. We extract the most important particulars:

THE WAR.

The correspondent from the Allied camp on the Tchernaya is to the 10th of November, and relates solely to the hutting of the armies, the Russians and the Allies being both then under cover.

There were still apprehensions of a Russian attack.

Paris correspondence of the London Globe (Ministerini paper) says that, although winter stops field operations in the Crimea, it is intended to bombard the northern side of Sebastopol, to permit the fleet to winter in the harbor.

Letters state that the town of Marianopol, on the north coast of the sea of Azoff, was bombarded by the Allies on the 31st of October. One hundred shells were thrown, and the town set on fire, till Austrian merchants hoisted the Austrian flag over the warehouse, when the firing ceased. It was rumored that Gen. Wrangle menaced the Allied position at the Straits of Yenikale. The Allies had, however, 30,000 men there, and expect to be re-inforced by 15,000.

The Invalide Russe announces that large numbers of the Allied forces embarked at Eupatoria on the 14th inst., and sailed westward.

Trezibond advices of the 5th say, that during the past fortnight, no news has reached Erzeroum from Kars. Omar Pasha's vanguard had reached Okuin.

The Smyrna Hospital has been evacuated and converted into barracks for Swiss and German Legions.

Admirals Dundas and Penaud, with their flag ships and part of the fleet, are in the Bay of Kiel. A steamer is detailed to watch for an American clipper, supposed to be in the Baltic with a cargo of revolvers.

Sweden Joins the Alliance.

Respecting Canrobert's mission to Sweden, we have only a Paris rumor; but the rumor is important, and is as follows: That terms of a military Convention are agreed to; that Sweden will furnish a contingent to act with the Allies next spring, if peace be not previously restored; and that an army of French, English and Swedes will be sent to Courland to force Prussia and Austria to declare themselves, and in return for her alliance the Allies will guarantee Finland to her.

Canrobert has been overwhelmed with honor. His mission to Denmark is now the great point of interest. Want of success there might neutralize the advantage gained in Sweden, as it is not believed that these two powers could adopt different lines of policy.

The London Morning Post, however, contradicts the Times with regard to the alleged Swedish alliance, and says that the Times' details of a military convention and its assertion of the adhesion of Denmark are without foundation.

Peace.

Rumors of a disposition on the part of the Russian Government to make the first advances to negotiate for peace continue to prevail, but excepting reliable information that the mercantile classes in Russia are weary of war, there is no apparent ground for the rumors. It is, however, confidently reported that M. De Munster, Military Envoy of Prussia at St. Petersburg, had visited the Czar at Nicolaieff with a view of inducing him to recognize certain conditions of peace such as would be laid before the French and English Cabinets. The Czar listened favorably to M. De Munster's propositions.

The Prussian Cabinet is now in possession of the views of Emperor Alexander, and is empowered to make them known to the Western Powers, who, on their part, have not refused to listen to them, though at the same time they have declared them to be insufficient. The great fact is that negotiations between Russia and Prussia are still proceeding.

The Court of Berlin is making the greatest efforts to induce the Czar to consent to such terms as will really lead to a pacific result. As the Prussian Cabinet is sufficiently well acquainted with the firm resolution of the Allied Powers, the continuation of the negotiation affords some ground for hoping that there is at least a chance of peace.

Turkey.

Constantinople correspondence describes a bad state of affairs there. Murders and robberies were taking place in the open streets, with a great and increasing fanaticism against the Christians—especially the French. The allied commandants have called on the Turkish Government to prevent farther outrages, under a threat of the Allies taking immediately the police of the city into their own hands. Several of the Tunisian mutineers have been condemned to death, and the rest of them will be sent to Batoum and Souchum Kale.

The number of French killed in the recent riot was more considerable than at first reported.

The London Times publishes elaborate editorial calculations showing that the total available strength of Russia is 83 per thousand souls; and that she has already used 58, which allows only ten months more, at the present rate, to exhaust her last man, her last cash rouble being already expended. A general armament of the Russian Empire is talked of.

The Maritime Administration at Nicolaieff is placed under the orders of Gen. Luders, to whom, in this respect, Gortschakoff is to be subordinate.

It is believed the Congress of Russian diplomats that was to take place at Warsaw will be held at St. Petersburgh soon.

A dispatch from Berlin of the 10th says the Russian loan with German capitalists has been concluded.

The Czar arrived at St. Petersburg on the 19th in good health. He has extended the inducements to poor nobles to enter the army.

Great Britain.

Prince Albert laid the foundation of the Birmingham Institute. At the great banquet given on the occasion nothing was said respecting the war or politics.

The Parliament of England will meet about the usual time, namely the end of January or the beginning of February.

The death of Lady Emeline Stuart Wortley is announced. She died at Beyrout on the night of the 29th ult.

At the expiration of his well-earned leave of absence, Sir Colin Campbell will return to the Crimea, to resume the command of the Highland division.

Henry Labouchere has been sworn as Secretary of State for the Colonies. The Duke of Argyle is now Postmaster-General, retaining, in the meantime, the office of Lord of the Privy Seal, which office, rumor says, will be given to the Duke of Newcastle. The number of Manchester operatives on a strike is 3,400, of whom 1,700 are thrown out of work by the stoppage of the other hands. They all conduct themselves peaceably.

There was every chance that the Sound Dues Conference would be opened at Copenhagen on the 20th of November; Russia was the only power that would send a special envoy, the other Governments accrediting their resident ambassadors, assisted by persons conversant with the subject. It had been settled that Russia might take part in the Conference simultaneously with the power with whom she is at war.

King Otho opened Parliament on the 12th. He promised the maintenance of neutrality, preserving at the same time the friendship of foreign powers. A slight difficulty with the United States has been settled to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Latest by telegraph from London,

London, Nov. 24—9 A. M.—It was stated with confidence in Downing street yesterday that Lord Palmerston has determined upon an immediate dissolution of Parliament, that the announcement will be made public in a few days, and that the new Parliament will be called together early in February.

The Times' city article, dated Friday evening, says: "The English funds opened with firmness this morning at final quotations of yesterday, and for a short time exhibited a tendency to further improvement, but ultimately a gradual decline took place, the market closing with a general appearance of dullness. The occurrence of sales, in the absence of any announcement, tended to confirm the reports circulated during the past day or two of new and important political arrangements, was the principal cause of the reaction, coupled with a less favorable appearance of the continental exchanges.

The Moniteur publishes the following, dated Constantinople, Monday, Nov. 12, 1855.—According to the last accounts Omer Pasha was expecting battle. Gen. Mouravieff had detached a division from his army, which was advancing by forced marches on Kutars, by Akaiska road. About eight thousand Turks, under Musha Pasha, had left Batoum to try and cut off this detachment. Early in the month they had reached Osurgathi, and the Commander-in-Chief hade them meet him at Kutars, which will become the theater of some important engagement, unless the Russians intend entrenching themselves in the defile, which protects the advance on Tiflis.

The steamship Promethus left New Orleans on Monday, 26th November, at 9 A. M., and anchored in the harbor of San Juan del Norte on the night of Saturday. Passengers and crew all well and in good spirits. She left again Monday, 3d October, at 9 A. M., with passengers by the Uncle Sam from California, and reached this city on Saturday morning last.

The Uncle Sam arrived at San Juan del Sur on Saturday evening, 1st December, having left San Francisco on the afternoon of the 20th November, with two hundred and fifty passengers and $350,000.

The Northern Light arrived at San Juan del Norte, with three hundred passengers from New York, at 8 A. M. on Monday, and was to leave same day.

Foreign Items by the Atlantic.—There is nothing of much interest from the Crimea. The Turkish Minister in London had received the following dispatch:

Constantinople, Nov. 15—On the sixth of November the troops under the orders of Omer Pacha forded the river Asakara, or Ouilour, in Georgia, under a terrible fire. The river was defended by sixteen thousand Russians, and our soldiers were 10 water to their armpits.

The Sultan's troops attacked the Russian redoubts with the bayonet, and carried them, notwithstanding the desperate defence made by the enemy.

The Russian troops were completely routed and took to flight. We have taken five guns, seven powder carts, and forty prisoners.

The Russians have left more than 400 dead on the field of battle, among whom are two superior officers and a hundred subalterns. Our loss is sixty-eight dead, and two hundred and twenty wounded.

On the 1st inst. a fire occurred in Richmond, Va., which destroyed property to the value of about $20,000.

Fifteen days later from California.

By the steamship Prometheus we have received dates from San Francisco to the 20th ult.

We find that the Indian War in Northern California still continued, and that trouble is apprehended from the Indians in the Southern part of the State. Another terrible battle had taken place between the whites and Rogue River Indians, of which the Yreka Union of the 5th ult. gives the following particulars:

Capt. Pierce communicated the startling intelligence this morning of a pitched battle having been fought at Cow Creek Canon, Rogue River Valley, on Wednesday last, between about 300 Indians and 400 regulars and volunteers, under Capt. Smith, U. S. A., of Fort Lane. The fight commenced at 1 o'clock, P. M. and continued till 10—the Indians retreating all the while, and firing back upon the whites. At length it was deemed necessary that steps should be taken to provide for the wounded, and a halt was ordered, when the Indians rallied and commenced firing upon the men; to whom prudence dictated the course of retiring to an open space where a more effectual stand could be made, which they accordingly did. It was then ascertained that eighteen of the Captain's men had been killed and twenty-five wounded, some mortally, others dangerously, and a few slightly. A message was then despatched to Capt. George, at Althouse, who started immediately with eighty volunteer recruits. He would join Capt. Smith on Thursday, at an early hour, when it was expected that a renewal of the encounter would take place. On Thursday last, a scouting party of six brought intelligence that about two hundred and fifty Indians were in the vicinity of the heads of Antelope and Butte Creeks. Capt. Thos. Smith, with about one hundred men, immediately started out, and it is feared that a serious encounter would take place. The attack, it was expected, would be made on Saturday or Sunday last. News of the result is hourly expected.

On Thursday last, a party of sixteen men under Mr. Tupper, of Shasta Valley, fell in with a large body of Indians in the mountains dividing the waters of Klamath and Shasta rivers. After a brief engagement, and losing one man, the whites were compelled to retreat.

On Friday, a body of Indians were seen crossing Shasta Valley from the neighborhood where the fight occurred, and shaping their course for Scott river, by the mountain trail from Scott to Shasta Valley.

It was rumored that two men named Snow and Scott were killed on the trail leading from the Mountain House of Doty and Doyle to the Klamath river. A party had gone to look for them. The Union says:

It would appear that there is to be no end to the assassination by Indians, unless they are removed, exterminated. There was never before known to exist such a universal spirit of hatred and hostility towards the whites on the part of the Indians in Northern California and Oregon. The facts seem clearly proved by the dire intelligence daily received from all quarters, that there is scarcely an Indian to be found between Scott Mountain and Puget Sound, who is not intent on outrage and murder whenever an opportunity presents itself.

The following additional particulars are taken from the Shasta Republican of November 6th.

The bodies of the men murdered on the mountain were found yesterday. Each had received some six or seven wounds in the body. At the fight on Cow Creek Canon ten men were killed and thirty wounded. Lieut. Crooke came from the scene of action this morning, with a dispatch from Capt. Smith to ——Judah, who immediately leaves with his men.

From Southern California, dates had been received in San Francisco to the 7th ult. The information is interesting and important. The settlers at San Gorgona, fearing a rising on the part of the Indians, had taken measures of defense. They asked the Superintendent of Indian Affairs for aid. They also petitioned the commander of the San Diego garrison for assistance, which would of course be accorded. A public meeting had been held in Gorgona, the secretary of which writes thus to the Southern Californian.

From the late movements of these Indians, there is reason to believe that they are meditating some evil. Several weeks since a Council of Chiefs was held here—for what purpose no one knows; but it was attended by warriors from all the neighboring tribes. They kept their proceedings a profound secret.

The squaws are now moving into the mountains, leaving the "fighting men" behind. As this is the first time such a thing has ever occurred here, it causes great uneasiness among the residents.

There has been much dissatisfaction of late, and within the last few weeks they have made various threats against the whites. They are apparently preparing for war, and the mountains are filled with them.

As the settlers in this Pass are scattered through a space of from 20 or 25 miles, they will be almost without protection in case of sudden difficulty.

We have just received news from the Surveying Party of Col. Washington, by a person coming immediately from him. The Indians of the Colorado would not allow him to approach the river, and he was obliged to leave there, without completing his line. He was encamped at a spring about ten miles from the river, when the Indians told him they would not allow him to drink their water or eat their grass. That before the next day at noon he must be gone. He left and traveled until out of their reach, leaving his animals scattered along the road. The Indians said his party was too small to fight; but if a larger party came they would fight them.

These rumored Indian disturbances are in close proximity to the Tejon Reservation.

The boring of an artesian well at Los Angeles is progressing slowly, averaging 8 inches per day, without any indications of a nearer approach to Artesian water than at the commencement.

Alex. E. Higgins, who was tried and convicted in September, of the murder of David C. Goodwin, at Horsetown, was hung on the 9th of November, at Shasta.

A few days ago, says the Union Democrat, three diamonds were found in the Scorpion Gulch, near Byrne's Ferry, and on the slope of Table Mountain. The claim has for sometime been worked for gold, and the diamonds were picked up merely out of curiosity, as pretty pebbles. Upon one of them being exhibited to an eminent jeweler of the city, it was pronounced fine, and valued at sixty dollars. The claim is now called the "Diamond Claim," and the precious stones will hereafter be saved.

Mr. F. A. Bee, informs the Placerville American that upon his South Fork river claim, where the bed of the river had previously been kept comparatively dry by pumping, that on removing a large boulder that appeared before removal to be a portion of the bed rock, a stream of water burst forth from a hole in the rock, directly in the bed of the boulder, nearly six inches in diameter, that continues to flow to the present time, discharging a large quantity of water, rendering it difficult to work this portion of the claim. But a singular fact connected with the discovery is this, that on the first flow of the water it was as cold as that from numerous springs in the vicinity, but after a few hours flow, it was found to be warm water, and so continues. From experiments made it seems to be bottomless or of great depth. It is very evident that we have a warm country below us.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

VICKSBURG, MISS., Dec. 4, 1855.

The forty-second session of the Mississippi Annual Conference met in this city Nov. 28. Some confusion as to the time of meeting caused the attendance of the first few days to be thin. By Saturday the members were generally on the ground. Bishop Kavanaugh being detained on the river, did not arrive till the second day. Dr. Drake episcopated the first day. W. H. Watkins and his assistant, H. J. Harris, took their places at the Secretary's table, and I am indebted to them for courteous facilities in making up items.

Thursday being the Thanksgiving day of the State, by the Governor's proclamation, Conference adjourned to 11 o'clock service in the Methodist and Presbyterian churches. In the former place Dr. Drake, in the latter Rev. Wm. H. Watkins, delivered able and appropriate discourses. I say appropriate, meaning rather to the place and time than the occasion. The Methodist pulpit is in mourning. Crape hangs on the door. Many people are in black. Graves are newly heaped. The foot of the ladder has been planted on these hills and sainted spirits have ascended. This prevailing feeling was thrown over the thanksgiving day observances, notwithstanding its name. The shadows are deep, but there is some brightness. The dead died well—and many a solemn pulpit appeal has been driven home to this people by the memory of those whose memory is blessed. There have been few brighter witnesses than the venerable John Lane and his two children, whose funerals were preached by Dr. Drake on Monday. On Sunday night Rev. W. C. Robb alluded in his sermon to the life and death of E. F. Gibbs, a valuable member of the Vicksburg church. The vast congregation was stirred—the fountains of its deeps were broken up. Mr. Robb's shafts take fire as they fly. In the old effective style, C. K. Marshall followed in exhortation, and fastened the nail in a sure place.

Bro. Marshall has been preacher, pastor, friend to the bereaved church here. The calls upon his freely rendered services have been and continue to be so numerous and pressing as to testify the highest appreciation. It is my happiness to be quartered upon the delightful hospitalities of his family. At breakfast this morning he was called out three or four times, and after the first meal of the day a buggy was in waiting to take him to a funeral a few miles out in the country. This is but a sample of the last three months' history.

The Missionary Anniversary was held on Saturday night. Bishop K. made the speech of the occasion, and magnified the office by taking up the collection. It was a thoughtful, quiet and satisfactory time. The amount raised $500. The report of the Treasurer of the Conference Missionary Society falls $600 below that of last year.

The Tract Society is getting under way. E. Abbey's agency having expired, the society ask for the appointment of H. H. Montgomery. They want this work done well and pushed on, and signify their estimate of its importance by the man they have asked for.

ADMITTED on trial into Conference: Thos. L. Magraw, Sam'l Swaney, E. M. Smally, Wm. G. Millsaps, R. W. Lambuth, Thos. M. Ward, John W. Shelton, David Watson, Andrew J. Smith, John Boyet, D. M. Wadsworth, J. D. Willis, Kenneth A. Jones and Jopthe S. Collins.

READMITTED in elder's orders: Ransom Jones, L. Ermenbrack and John H. Massey.

Bishop Kavanaugh preached with much power and unction on Sabbath morning.

Dr. Winans' feeble health does not allow his presence at Conference. G. M. Rogers and P. E. Green superannuated, on account of failing health. Others may be added to this list, than which none is cherished more by the Church they have worn themselves out in serving. Before this goes to press it is likely more complete information will have reached you, and the appointments. The numbers in society have not yet been cast up.

I leave here to-day—across the country, to reach Eutaw, Ala., where the Alabama Conference meets to-morrow. I regret to say that collections for the Advocate, like all other collections of the Conference, have been comparatively small. Drouth in summer, yellow fever in autumn, and the very early session, before the country recovered from these embarrassments and realized upon crops, have operated most unfavorably. The only remedy has already been suggested in the Advocate—holding our Conferences two or three months later. I trust the subscribers of the Advocate will improve the good season, now beginning, and put into the hands of the preachers, who will soon be on the various circuits and stations, the amounts already due upon their accounts, and at the same time pay up in advance for another year.

The next session is to be held in Kosciusko. Ira and Natchez were put in nomination.

H. N. McTYEIRE.

A correspondent of the Jackson Mississippian, speaking of the wonderful charm which the Rector of St. Thomas' Hall, Holly Springs, seems to hold over Southern boys, says:

"Would we have true men, and great men for the coming storm, they must be educated in such schools as St. Thomas' Hall, the present hope and glory of Mississippi."

CANONS IN THE WAY.

A writer in the Church Journal, referring to the lack of episcopally ordained and educated ministers in California and Oregon, speaks very plainly on the subject in this wise:

"It is wonderful, and, at the same time painful, at least to those who take your view of this matter in relation to the extension of the Diaconate, to see how the very best minds, both of bishops and clergy, are hampered and bound by the traditions and customs descended to us from the English Church. How utterly impossible it seems to be for our bishops, and especially the missionary ones, to leap the fearful gap between us and the primitive Church—to cut away all the traditions of the middle ages, and dip once more at the fountain head. Our country presents many features of similarity, in a religious point of view, to the times of the first announcement of the Gospel, with this immense advantage to us, however, that the people believe already in the Saviour, and stand ready to be brought to the fold.

"Now let us see how the matter stands in California and Oregon. Bishop Kip concludes his report by saying, 'It is strange to me to witness the insensibility displayed toward the ultimate interests of the Church in this country. A few years hence California will have expanded into a power with which none of the Western States can compare. By that time other forms of faith and error—or worse, infidelity itself—will have occupied the ground. But let the Church concentrate some generous efforts on the State for only three years, and the Church here will be able to stand alone.' This is precisely what I say. Bishop Kip, his clergy and laity, constitute the Church there. By all means concentrate your efforts.

"But that remark is intended for us. Are we wholly responsible in this matter? Let us see—and in doing so, I propose to view the question from 'primitive ground.' What said St. Paul to Titus—'For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I appointed thee.' Here is the whole secret of success in apostolic times. The ministers were selected directly from the people to whom the missionary bishops were sent. Ah, yes, but the Californians are a dreadfully bad set. Well, what were these very Cretans? One of themselves says, 'the Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, slow-bellies.' Are the Californians worse than these? The bishop says, 'The town of Coloma contains between six hundred and seven hundred inhabitants. * * * There is no place I have visited where there seems to be more interest felt in the Church. Its services have never been performed here, nor is there a single place of worship of any kind in the town. There is however a little band of churchmen from the East, who are showing here the happy influence of their early training, having raised a handsome sum for a church * * * Could they obtain a clergyman?' Now just here is the point—why have they not one? Do you suppose that if St. Titus had the field he would have left these saints without an elder? Could not the bishop, from this 'little band,' have found at least a deacon? Ah, but the canons will not permit the ordering. Then let them go—a greater authority than the canons is here—the constitution of the Church. The sole rule of faith is above canons. But it will be said, if the canons were not in the way, yet you cannot make a preacher so quickly. Just so—here comes in the miserable tradition again. Now I do not believe I can be gainsayed when I assert that there are at this moment, and have been any time these three years, at least five hundred devout laymen in California and Oregon fit to do the Church's work as deacons, after the primitive pattern. Nay, I will say more. Every principal city could have long ago had its presbyters and deacons, provided Scriptural qualifications only had been demanded of them. Now I am by no means averse to a highly educated clergy; but that the whole body of the clergy were classical scholars, in any national church, from the apostles' day to the present, I deny. It was not required in the apostolical church, and is not necessary now."

MISSIONARY MEETING.

The Mississippi Conference Missionary Society held its anniversary Dec. 1st, at 7 o'clock.

After singing and prayer, an abstract of the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were read.

The missions, both at home and abroad, under the care of this society, were reported as being in a very flourishing condition. New fields of labor were opening on every side. The only lack is of men and means to take possession, and make them bud and blossom like the garden of the Lord. Planters are calling for men to instruct their people in the ways of righteousness. They are learning that the preacher's influence in promoting good order on the plantation is greater than the best overseer that can be procured.

H. N. McTyeire of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, was then introduced, and spoke for thirty-five minutes. He argued for the missionary enterprise, first from its practicability. We believe in utility, in taking hold of something that can be done. We turn away from visionary enterprises. Our object is to send the Gospel through the world—send the Bible and the living expounder of its truth everywhere. It can be done: First, because the world is round. There is more in this idea, he argued, than one would suspect from its simple announcement. It gives us, at once, the length and the breadth of the field to operate in. And when we fully see our work laid out before us, we can make our calculations accordingly. Were the earth one vast extended plain, reaching indefinitely into the misty regions of space, like that unknown ocean over which Columbus passed in search of a new world, we should be seized with the same discouragement and despair, as that which so unnerved his followers. But, blessed be God, it is round! The one farthest off, the Chinaman, is only eight thousand miles from me. Straight through the earth, he is my next door neighbor. We set our watches by the same sun. We gaze enraptured on the same jeweled firmament of heaven. We breathe the same air; and the breeze that fans my cheek refreshes him also. We are indeed in such close proximity, that the steaming flavor of that herb which exhilarates but not intoxicates, almost reaches us. Men pass out of the eastern gate of the world, sail on and on, till they have made the circumference of the earth, and come in at the same door without having changed their course.

This round earth has been fully investigated. We know the length of its mighty rivers, the height of its lofty mountains, and the extent of its wide-spread oceans, and the fertility of its sun-lit vallies. Having our work thus surveyed and mapped out, we may consider it half done.

Second—We have the means to accomplish this desirable work. All the tremendous powers of nature are being subdued, and are becoming the servants of man. Time and space are almost annihilated. The lightning has become man's errand boy, to breathe or copy his thoughts everywhere—in one sense making man omnipresent. The days of the antediluvians have returned, and man, in the short life of three-score years and ten, by using those tremendous powers of nature which science has placed within his grasp, can accomplish far more than the Methusalahs of antiquity.

A short time since our beloved Bishop would have been obliged to have left Memphis three or four weeks before the session of this Conference to have been here in time. But now, he hardly bids his friends there farewell, before loving hearts welcome him here, without fatigue or loss of strength by the journey. Paul, with his burning zeal and anxious desire to preach Christ everywhere, was constantly retarded by physical obstacles he could not overcome. Months were passed in his voyages on the beautiful Ægean sea—creeping with favoring winds and tides from headland to headland—now enveloped with fogs or storm clouds for weeks—no friendly sun or star appearing to guide them o'er their watery way—now aground upon some sand-bar, or dashed upon unknown islands not laid down in their imperfect charts. Those distances are now passed in a few hours and in safety by those fire-breathing monsters with which the Allies, for their terrible work, have covered that classic sea. On they dash, leaping proudly and madly from wave to wave, in storm and darkness, and only laugh at the fury of the elements.

The haughty and ambitious Czar, who had let slip the dogs of war, and fired a train which may set all Europe in a blaze, wraps his military cloak around him, and on a hard, soldier's bed, lies down to die in his northern capital; and before the fact is hardly known to the sentinel who keeps sleepless watch at the doors of his palace, it has been authentically announced in the halls of Parliament—a few days more, and the world is apprized of the fact. Such is the onward march of science, the handmaid of religion.

Again—The Saxon is bound to take possession of the earth. With him is "manifest destiny." As with the ancient Hebrew, the soles of his feet are the seals of his inheritance, and wherever he sets his track he becomes an owner of the soil. His tongue becomes the language of the people, and his ideas command attention and soon reign over the territory.

This boundless continent is theirs—from the frozen Arctic to the Isthmus of Darien. And if the sword, to "conquer peace," is in one hand, the blessed Bible, which more than balances it, is in the other.

It is a blessed fact, that no sooner does the flag of Kinney and Walker float peacefully over conquered Nicaragua, than the pure Gospel of Christ is proclaimed in the place of one of dead forms and ceremonies; and a vast field is there opening up, calling loudly for Methodist preachers to enter and take possession, as they most assuredly will.

Not only northward and westward, but with emphasis we may say, southward the star of empire takes its conquering way.

Finally, our main hope and dependence is upon the special pouring out of the Holy Spirit; such manifestations as were seen and felt on the day of Pentecost, when under the first sermon preached after the ascension of our Saviour, by Peter, that rude fisherman of Galilee, three thousand were awakened and converted. That Spirit has power to slay and make alive. And when the church shall return from her backslidings, get low in the dust before God, pray, as they prayed in that upper chamber previous to the day of Pentecost; then will there be a shaking of this wicked earth, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ.

The Bishop followed in one of his characteristic, eloquent speeches, in which, for one hour, he held the audience spell-bound—moving them alternately to smiles and tears with the hand of a master. We shall make no attempt to report him. Can one report or fix on paper the chain lightning as it leaps from cloud to cloud when the storm rolls through the midnight sky, or the deep echoing thunder that causes the stoutest hearts to tremble? As well attempt to report the rush, the whirl, the terrible leap of the flashing waters of Niagara's unequalled cataract, or the tramp of that earthquake along the sides of the mountain, which awoke the prophet as he slept in the cave on the Mount of God, after that forty days' fasting and flight across the burning sands of Araby, that he might escape the officers which the haughty Jezebel had sent out to bring him dead or alive before her, for having caused the slaughter of four hundred of those lying priests that feasted on her royal bounty. Suffice it to say, that at the call for money, it appeared that the right chord had been touched. Bank notes, gold and silver flowed into the treasury, till all hearts were made glad with true Christian joy, as they felt from experience that it was more "blessed to give than to receive."

VIATOR.

THE CHURCH AND QUARTERLY REVIEW.

In the interval between the conclusion of the ninth, and the commencement of the tenth volume of the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review, the editor would make an additional appeal to the church in its behalf. Strictly speaking, perhaps, he is not required to do this. Having accomplished his editorial task for the present year, and about to resume it for the next, he might very reasonably leave to those whom he serves, in this capacity, the duty of promoting its circulation and of improving its financial condition. The observance of this course would be far more congenial with his feelings. But the actual necessities of the case, and something like a tacit understanding on the subject, devolve on him the responsibility of not only speaking through its pages, but also of speaking in its advocacy. To this, then, we briefly address ourselves.

1. At the exceeding low subscription price of the Review, we must, in order to sustain it without cost to the church, speedily have a considerable increase of subscribers. Unfortunately, periodicals of this class have succumbed to the demand for cheap literature, and have fallen to terms upon which they cannot possibly exist, without a vastly increased patronage. Only think of a Quarterly Review, of six hundred pages, elegantly printed; furnished with articles by able contributors, nearly all of whom must be paid; containing quarterly notices of the principal publications of the country, and summaries of intelligence prepared with great labor and care; four fine engravings, worth twenty-five cents, each; and then an editor, whose time, talents and attention must be given to the work, and who must be supported; think of all these, and then, that the subscription price is only two dollars per annum, when it ought to be at least three. Any one can see that its existence depends upon a proportionably extensive circulation.

2. Can an adequate number of subscribers be obtained? Undoubtedly they can; with absolute certainty. Four thousand, at $2, will afford it an ample support, after allowing for the ordinary losses in collections. But what are four thousand to not less than two hundred thousand white members in the Southern Church, whose intelligence and wealth will equal those of the membership of any other church on the continent. Were only moderate efforts employed, we should soon have five thousand upon our books; and we ought to have twice that number. Nothing would rejoice our hearts more, except the conversion of sinners, than the privilege of sending out, quarterly, a richly freighted issue to at least five thousand readers. And what a credit it would be to the church and her ministers, thus, side by side with our weeklies, to supply intellectual food to such a number. It is idle to imagine that it cannot be done. It can, and one would think, with comparative ease.

3. A vital question arises here. Does the benefit of such a publication justify the effort to extend its circulation? The answer depends wholly upon the character and the tendency of the work. Provided it be such as it ought to be, the question is settled, and its circulation becomes an imperative obligation, which all, who have enlightened views, must perceive. The diffusion of useful knowledge, as a duty, is not a matter of question at all in this age of the world. That class of periodical literature contemplated by a Review, is a demand which cannot be withheld. Readers will have it, good, bad or indifferent. Again, even where there is no inclination to read such a species of literature, it is the solemn duty of our preachers to cultivate it. Our people ought and must read more for their own good and that of their children. Besides, our periodical literature is necessarily a subsidiary to our great publishing interests, especially at this time. It excites the desire to read, and it gives information of our publications.

Now, our Quarterly, if not all it should be, is fully endorsed, as to its general character, by the most competent judges. We fearlessly challenge the examination of its contents, as a whole; and we believe, that it is eminently calculated to do good, and to promote the interests of Methodism; and that upon the ground of its merits, it deserves a wide and cordial support. Thus much we feel constrained to say on this point. We could not say less in justice to our vocation.

4. It is no private enterprize that we plead. It has no personal convenience in view. It was designed to benefit the whole church. It is the constituted organ of the General Conference, having been in operation, under its auspices, now nine years. Its publication is authoritative, and its patronage ought, as a church measure, to be general. Can any lover of the church entertain a doubt of the correctness of this conclusion? And we take occasion to say, that the church ought not, in its highest judicatory, ordain and establish a periodical of the kind, and leave its circulation wholly to what personal favor the editor may acquire. Irrespective of this fact, the whole body should rally to its support. It were cruel thus to throw the burden of its circulation upon the exertions of the editor. We speak plainly. We are striving to do our duty, in the fear of God; and we solicit the co-operation of all our brethren in this deeply interesting and important work.

We are just entering upon the tenth volume. We need a large increase of subscribers and prompt payments at the very commencement of the year. Will the brethren go to work immediately, with a copy in their hands, and endeavor to increase our list? Will they forthwith faithfully collect and promptly remit the funds, either to Nashville or to Richmond? Come, brethren, one and all, let us unite and resolve, by God's blessings, upon the prosperity of the Quarterly Review.

A State Teachers' Association.

We notice in the Thibodaux Minerva, a call upon the male and female teachers of Louisiana, signed "Many Teachers," to assemble in the town of Thibodaux on Friday and Saturday, 28th and 29th days of this month, for the purpose of forming a State Teachers' Association. The object of the meeting is to elevate the standard of the profession, which can only be done by a thorough co-operation on the part of all of those engaged in the cause of education. To accomplish this end, an earnest invitation is extended to every parish in the State, to every college, seminary and academy, to the managers of city schools and originators of school systems, to send as many representatives as may be thought needful. From such a convention as this, there is little doubt good results would flow. The teachers could compare notes, hear arguments, and investigate the various plans and systems which might be urged forward by different advocates, and all might result in a projet for the re-organization of our present school laws, such as would meet with favorable consideration at the hands of our Legislature, and eventually redound to the improvement and moral elevation of thousands of children.

At all events, no harm can be done; and all we have to say, is to express the hope that the meeting may be largely attended by fitting representatives from all quarters of the State. Anything calculated to advance the cause of true education will receive from us a cordial support.

The State Department received a dispatch by the America from Mr. Buchanan, to the purport that England positively declines giving any explanation in answer to our demands concerning alleged violations of the neutrality laws. All the Central American Governments have protested, through their diplomatic agents, against our recognition by Wheeler of the present Nicaraguan Government. These Governments state the opinion that the present Government of Nicaragua will not long continue, and declare their intention to exterminate all foreign adventurers who invade their soil for revolutionary purposes.

The commerce between Europe and the West Coast of America, via the Isthmus of Panama, seems to increase with every opportunity. We learn by the Atlantic, that the Panama Railroad Company, having occasion to ship some building materials from Liverpool to Aspinwall, chartered a vessel of four hundred tons to expedite the delivery, when the whole of the spare room was immediately taken up by merchants having goods to send to the West Coast. Thus nearly four hundred tons of freight were secured to the road, and evidence afforded that the trade in that direction is only waiting the proper facilities to become large and important.

DIED, on the morning of the 13th Nov., at the residence of her mother, Mrs. Lane, Mrs. SARAH EUGENIA KING, wife of Dr. J. W. King, of consumptinn, aged 27 years.

This estimable Christian lady leaves hohind a sorrowing husband and eno ohild to monrn their irreparable loss. Her honored and sucrable father and estimable brother preceded her only a few weeks to the silent grave and the mansions of the blest. Surely the sup of her mother's sorrow is full and bitter, and deating brethere--now sistorless--low in the weeping cirole, and feel the angoish of that void which must remain to the end of life.

Religion was with her not merely one of the lessons of eduoation, but it was heaven-born principlo and the vital powor of her spirit, tho daily employment of her hands and heart, tho pervading temper of her soul, a part of habitual life. Her death was in happy unison with suoh a lifo. Mere peaceful, more heavenly, it eonld not have been. The sacred songs of Zion, which in other days she had warbled with a sweetness almost unrivalled, now seemed to fill her soul with ecstatic joy, as they were sung at her request from time to time.

"On Jordans stormy banks I stand,
And cast a wishful eye—" is the beginning of one of her favorite hymns, every line of which is like a step in Jacob's ladder—stretching from earth to heaven. When the final hour oame, she slept, but only to realizing the great declaration, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

"Friend after friend departs!
Who hath not lost a friend?
There is no unlou here of hearts,
That finds not hese an end.
Were this frail world our fiuel seat,
Living or dying, none were blest.

"Beyond the flight of time,
Beyond the reign of death,
There surely is some blessed clime,
Where life is not a breath,
Nor life's affections transient fire,
Whose sparks fly upward and expire.

"There is a world above,
Where parting is unknown,
A long eternity of love,
Formed for the good alone;
And faith beholds the dying here,
Translated to that glorious sphere.

"Thus star by star declines,
Till are passed away;
As morning high and highes shines
To pure and perfect day.
Nor sink those stars to empty night,
But hide themselves in heaven's own light."

OBITUARY.

REV. WILLIAM HYER.

During the late epidemie we have lost many a good and useful member of our community, many whose decease is keenly felt and deeply regretted. Of one in particular would I wish to make honerable mention, the Rev. Wm. Hyer, Paster of the Methodist Church in this place. Mr. Hyer was a native of Pennsylvania, and was born Feb. 14, 1807. At nbout the age of twenty years he experienced that change of heart "that gives life to the dying," and from that time he felt inwardly moved to preach the Gospel. Being fully persuaded that God had a work for him to do, he left a lucrativo business and entered upon a course of study to qualify him for the important duties of the ministry. He graduated at the Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., then under the Presidency of that able divine and good man, Dr. Wilbur Fisk, whom Mr. Hyer, without being a servile imitator, took for his great model in sermonizing. In the fall of 1837 he came to the South, and located himself at Summerville, Tenn. Owing to pecuniary circumstances he did not feel able to join the traveling connection, and consequently engaged in teaching. After two years residence in Summerville, he removed to Memphis, where he continued to teach until 1851, when he joined the Memphis Annual Conference, and was stationed for the following two years at Aberdeon, in this State. Here, during the last year of his ministry, his labors were owned and blessed by the Great Head of the Church——for a great revival in religion (the result of faithful warning and expostulation) took place, and more than one hundred and twenty were added to the church.

In the fall of 1853 he was transferred to the Mississippi conference, and stationed in Vicksburg. Here he labored indefatigably in the vocation of his office, and to the satisfaction of the church. As a sermonizer, he had few superiors--methodical in the arrangement, clear in the argument, precise in his language and persuasive in terms, his discourses showed that they were the result of study and care, and that he himself felt the importance of his work. Not as the preacher only, will he be remembered. In whatever concerned the church, he took a deep and abiding interest; in the class-room, at the prayer-meetings, in the singing school and Sunday-school, he endeavored to make himself useful. Memorials of his short stay amongst us are many and lasting, and his memory will he oherished by those who were acquainted with him.

At the approach of the late epidemie,

"When nature sickened, and each gale was death"

he was urged by many of his friends to depart—to go to the country, as one likely to save the yellow fever, being lately come to this place. He did not immediately decide, but after a few days, when a decision was made, there was a calmness, a decisive confidence in the Providence of God that characterizes the faithful christian. He assidnously nursed by the sick bed of his wife and the two children that were at home, and hardly seeing them safely through their illness, he himself was attacked by the insidious enemy. All skill of medicine and attention of kind friends could have saved life, his certainly would have been spared.

On the third day of this month he terminated his useful career, after an illness of ten days. During his sickness, he manifested a firm and unshaken confidence in God. About the seventh day after he was taken, he began to entertain doubt about his recovery. For a day or two following he had great concern for the temporal welfare of his family, deprived of its head. Being assured by the premise that God would provide for the widow and the fatherless, and that they could trust in that premise, he said, "Then all is well." And upon being reassured, he seemed to give up all into the hands of God, bowing with humble resignation to His will.

The day before his death he called for a Bible. It being brought, he took and pressed it to his bosom, saying: "Precious Bible! that hath revealed such precious truths to dying man. It hath brought light and immortality; precious book." After this he requested that the friends should come into his room and sing, when he joined them with all the strength that he was able, in singing several hymns. After they had retired, he began to sing,

"Jesus! lover of my soul."

but ceased soon, his strength being exhausted, saying, "I cannot sing," and repeated the words through. To his children he addressed himself, asking them "to meet him up yonder, where the flowers never fade." By these present that morning, that season will never be forgotten. Truly,

"The chamber where the good man meets his fate
Is privileged above the common walks of life."

Rev. Wm. Hyer is dend; he is numbered with the silent gone; he rests sweetly now, regardless of the tongue of calumny or the voice of pretended friendship. His death was peaceful—was that of the good man, who

"Draws the drapery of his couch about him,
And lies down to pleasant dreame."

☞ A REPRIEVE.—We do not refer to a reprieve from a capital punishment. There is a slow torture from which a respite is equally desirable. We refer to dyspepsia—a word in which all the horrors of indigestion are summed up. To the sufferers by this painful and harassing disease, we can hold out not only bright hopes, but the certainty of immediate relief and permanent cure. There is a tonic, cordial, and alterative principle in Dr. Hoofland's Germen Bitters, which inevitably arrests and changes the morbid action of the stomach and the secretive organs, removes the disease, and restores to health. FROM TEXAS.—By the arrival on Tuesday of the steamship Louisiana, Capt. Place, we have received Galveston papers to Saturday last; but we find no news of importance.

The Methodist Conference was to commence its session in Galveston to-day (Wednesday.) The News says:

Over one hundred clergymen are expected to be present from all parts of Texas, and some from other States. The Rev. Mr. McNeil, Secretary of the American Bible Society, and Bishop Pierce, of Georgia, are looked for here during the Conference.

The Victoria Advocate says the Rev. Wm. D. Jones, D. D., formerly President of the Odd Fellows' Female College, at Rogersville, Tennessee, has been engaged as President of Aranama College, at Goliad. Mr. Jones is spoken of as an accomplished scholar and a great acquisition to that flourishing institution in the delightful town of Goliad.

A letter from Senator Potter, dated Austin, Dec. 1st, says that the report of Tipton Walker, Esq., on the Galveston Bay and Brazos Canal, "is satisfactory, and the company can get their scrip on demand by their agent."

Private letters from El Paso state that several daring robberies had been committed in Franklin, opposite that town, by a gang of desperadoes, led by a fellow named Gordon. The San Antonio Herald says:

It appears they entered the office of the custom-house officer, pried the brass knob from the safe, filled the hole with powder, and touched it off, blowing the door nearly open. The robbers finished the work with crow-bars, and took $2000 from the safe, $800 of which had been deposited by D. J. H Lyons' agent. The report of the explosion aroused the citizens from their slumbers, but none ventured out to ascertain the cause. The next night some of the party entered a grocery establishment and took everything they could carry and decamped with two fine horses to parts unknown. They left a note written on a slate, giving their reason for taking such liberties.

The man Gordon was about El Paso in 1850-'51, when he was accused of being in league with the Apaches, and orders were sent to the military commanders for his arrest. But he got wind of it, and left for California. A short time since he and some of his party were arrested at Durango for killing a Mexican. By some means they effected their escape and came to Franklin, where they behaved themselves tolerably well until they perpetrated these robberies.

A letter has been received by Com. Thomas Crabbe, Commander-in-Chief of the American Naval forces, coast of Africa, from Antonio Joaquin Martens, United States Vice Consul at St. Vincent, Cape de Verdes, hearing date Oct. 23d, 1855, in which it is stated that the poor of St. Antonio are in a dreadful state of famine. The rains have quite failed, and the crops have all dried up, so that the people have been compelled to eat banana stalks. Little or no communication is to be had with vessels in the harbor, which makes the matter worse. He says that numbers have died from want of food, and craves assistance from the Americans, who, he says, "are always ready to relieve the wants of the unfortunate."

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION OF POWDER.—The Hartford (Conn.) Times of the 20th ultimo, says:

"As a teamster, James Murphy, with a two-horse wagon, was carting powder from one building to another on the 20th instant, at Hazard's powder mills in Enfield, the load exploded, tearing wagon, horses and driver to atoms. There was about a ton of powder on the wagon, and so powerful was the explosion that an arched bridge over a canal, on which the wagon happened to be when the explosion took place, was depressed about three feet. The powder was in half barrels without any heads to them—so that it was exposed?

On the 2d inst. the house of Mrs. Spillman, in Albany, N. Y., was destroyed by fire, and her three small children perished in the flames.

BISHOP HOPKINS' FIFTH LECTURE.

Bishop Hopkins delivered his fifth lecture last evening at Odd Fellows' Hall, taking for his subject the connection of Christianity with the choice of Government officers, the government of Territories, and the admission of new States under the Federal Constitution.

As on previous occasions, the audience was large and of the most select character.

The Bishop set out by observing that he thought the topics he had chosen for his remarks would not be considered unbecoming to the circle of his duties as a clergymen, as he claimed the right, in common with other citizens, to discuss freely any question of public interest.

He then proceeded to lay down the proposition that the Federal Constitution directly recognises a necessary connection between the numerous branches of our Government and the Christian religion, by the nature of the oath of office which it requires to be administered, and by the fact of its enjoining the application of the common law of England in issues by jury. The very highest authorities decide that that common law is based upon and inseparably entwined with christianity. The fact that a clause of the Constitution forbids any religious test as a qualification for office does not alter the fact that it recognises christianity by implication. If it was not the intention of the framers of that instrument to require some religious belief on the part of persons taking the oath of office, why is an oath demanded which calls upon God to witness, and whose is the legal or other propriety of a person taking such an oath, when he repudiates the very basis upon which it stands, and which gives it its binding force?

What would be thought of a President who should, previous to taking the oath of office, profess his willingness to do so, but at the same time inform his fellow-citizens that he had no religious belief which would make the obligation sacred to him and no respect for it whatever in that light? Would not such a disregard of the evident intention of the authors of the clause be met with a storm of indignation from every part of the land. And yet, if it was not the intention to impose the oath as a religious obligation, why should the man be censured for frankly declaring such to be his opinion in regard to it?

With respect to the government of the Territories, no one would doubt the power of Congress to regulate them by passing laws for their temporal and moral welfare. There was a right of legislation vested in the Territories, but their powers must be subordinate to those of Congress, whose duty it was to exercise due vigilance and discretion in enacting such laws as might conduce to their safety and prosperity. And if, for want of such legislation, the Territories should become exposed to evils and dangers, Congress would be morally responsible for whatever might befal them.

In such position, continued the lecturer, stands the Territory of Utah at the present time. Left entirely to themselves, the deluded people now inhabiting that region had built up a government and institutions of their own, and initiated a state of things never before seen upon this continent. On the infidel construction of the Constitution (that it repudiates affinity with Christianty) there is nothing to prevent Utah from obtaining admission into the Union, so soon as she can produce the requisite population. In a short time the breaking up of the Chinese Empire may bring to one shores millions of the benighted pagans of that country. What is to prevent them, under this construction of our Constitution, from setting up the worship of idols among us? The Japanese may colonise our country and establish their peculiar religion—The Turks may find it convenient to plant and propagate Mahomedanism among us, and what obstacle are we to oppose, if we concede that our Constitution extends to them the privilege.

It might be said that England holds dominion over millions of pagans and experiences none of these evils, but there could be no analogy between her case in that respect and our own; her system of representation was different—they were allowed no voice to the government, no privileges as citizen or subject. It had been asserted that, as the Constitution and the laws of Congress permit the free exercise of any religion, we cannot interfere with Mormon polygamy, it being part and parcel of their faith. This might indeed be so if we separate all religion from our government and laws, and the Hindoos themselves might come among us and roll the Car of Juggernaut and be crushed beneath its wheels. There was but one remedy, one safeguard against these evils—the liberal and enlightened construction of the Constitution as based upon Christianity.

Let the Mormons proclaim their figment of Latter Day Saints—it is at least harmless. But let them not set up their foul abomination of polygamy, if but for the sake of our fair fame among the nations of the earth.

In regard to the question of State sovereignty, the lecturer thought these was great danger in the doctrine when carried to extremes. The admission of a new State should he looked upon as a mutual compact between itself and the Federal Government; its Constitution should form a portion of that contract, and should not afterwards undergo great and radical changes without the consent of both parties. No true republican would advocate the sovereignty and welfare of one portion of one great country to the prejudice of the prosperity and safety of the whole.

The learned Bishop concluded his lecture by remarking that, in a party point of view, he was no politician, and that the privilege of an old man, who held most dear the welfare of his country, must excuse his efforts in behalf of what he considered the true policy of our Government touching the topics of which he had treated.

For our part, we considered his ability and eloquence quite a sufficient excuse for the discussion of any subject.

LOUISIANA ITEMS.—The Baton Rouge Comet says:

In the North-eastern part of this parish, an old band of thieves and murderers, routed some year or more ago, seem to be again reorganized, and are at work stealing the property of citizens there, who are entitled to and should receive aid from town, and elsewhere, where men can be found, to scour out that region, and bring the villains to justice. Our citizens have not forgotten the many acts of violence and bloodshed which have taken place in that region, and the vengeance of an outraged community, may soon be looked for—summary, and without the legal forms of delay.

The same paper has the following accounts of two suicides in that town:

On Tuesday last, Sotein Haitman, a convict in the Penitentiary hung himself in his cell. He was supposed to be laboring under an aberration of mind, for several days previous. Heitman was from the parish of St. Martin; sentenced under conviction of manslaughter, on the 30th of June, 1855, for twenty years. It is supposed that the small piece of rope used by the suicide, was obtained from the factory, and that the prisoner had, on going into his cell at night, secreted it under his clothes.

On Thursday night Sergeant Hanneman, of the Ordnance Department, at the Barracks, was found in the basement story of the captain's residence, hanging by the neck—dead. The room in which he was found, being very low in the ceiling, he had obtained a bucket, upon which he stood to fasten the rope to a beam in the upper floor, and then kicked the bucket from under him. No other cause is alleged for the act than some trifling family difficulties.

The Pointe Coupee Echo, of Saturday last, says:

The yield of the cane, in the early part of the grinding season, was very small, owing no doubt to the inclemency of the weather, but later it improved somewhat, not sufficient, however, to indemnify the losses already sustained. The quality of sugar being made in the parish is very fine, but we feel safe in saying that the crop will fall short fully one-half.

The Natchitoches Chronicle says:

The rise in the river, which has opened navigation and enabled boats to travel from Alexandria to Grand Ecore, has imparted new life and animation to our trade. Our merchants are all receiving large supplies of goods, and our streets wear an air of business to which they have long been strangers.

By a vote of 125 against 67 the people of Shreveport have decided in favor of granting license for retailing spirituous liquors in that town.

The charts of the late Arctic Expedition in search of Sir John Franklin, the Washington Union states, show a larger range of discovery than had been anticipated from the preliminary report. Many have been exhibited to the Secretary of the Navy and subjected to the National Observatory and Coast Survey. Dr. Kane has evidently material in reserve. The area of the open sea, by a careful revision of the work, has been found to exceed four thousand miles, or more than one thousand in excess of the original estimate. This large body was absolutely and entirely free from ice. The scientific materials of the expedition will be published under the direct charge of Dr. Kane, who has been detailed for that duty by the Navy Department. The Smithsonian Institution and Coast Survey have both volunteered their aid in furtherance of this object.

BISHOP HOPKINS' SIXTH LECTURE.

The sixth lecture of Bishop Hopkins—and last of the series—was delivered last evening at Odd Fellows' Hall. The usual large and respectable audience attended. The subject chosen by the Bishop upon this occasion was, the true character of the temporal power claimed by the Pope of Rome.

He had been glad, the lecturer said, to learn that the Papal power had been a subject of consideration by the last American Congress; the time had arrived when it had become recognised as an element in our politics and an influence of the greatest importance upon our elective franchise. He had considered with some attention the questions involved in the idea of Papal supremacy, for he himself—although adopted in early childhood—was a citizen of this great Republic, and held it a duty to make himself acquainted with a subject of such vital importance to his country.

The lecturer then proceeded, by quoting from the Roman Catholic creed, as proclaimed by the Council of Trent, to show the true character of the temporal power claimed by the Pope. The book of Charles Butler—recognized by Roman Catholics in this country and in Europe as a faithful interpretation of their creed, defined the spiritual and temporal powers of the Pope as the highest on earth. The convert to that faith must acknowledge the Roman Catholic the mother of all churches and of all apostolic powes, and must swear true obedience to the Pope, who held supremacy of rank, supremacy of jurisdiction, and supremacy over every matter in which a decision was to be rendered; so that the final conclusion must invariably be—"Rome has spoken, and the matter is determined." According to the faith, as expounded by this author, the head of the church is the only recognized final tribunal in the world, and if a question could arise regarding its powers, the Pope, who is that head, would be the only judge to decide it. How can a power more despotic be imagined than this, where the potentate is his own judge?

In regard to the extent of these powers, and to the question of what is true obedience to the Pope, a difference of opinion had existed among Roman Catholics—the one side claiming them in the most unlimited sense—even to the right of depriving a sovereign of his crown—and the other dissenting therefrom; but practically the difference amounted to nothing. The convert in all cases swears obedience to the creed of Pope Pius IV, and that creed asserts the supremacy and infallibility of the head of the church. Therefore, if the Pope be personally infallible, who shall say that his decisions are ever wrong?—If he is above all laws and oeneons, how can it be said that temporal sovereignties are not subject to him, or that bounds may be set to his power on earth? From the time of Pope Gregory VII, the founder of the Romish Church, down to the time of Pope John, who excommunicated King Louis of France, the Popes had arrogated to themselves this extreme supremacy; each one had in turn steadily maintained the doctrine that all earthly power must be subject to his own, as the vicegerent of God on earth, and that empires and sovereignties must be dependent upon his will. After a struggle of nearly four centuries for complete spiritual and temporal power; the creed of the Council of Florence had been enacted, reaffirmed and establishing these assumptions.

Can it be said that these powers are not now obtained? From the time of that Council up to the present day, events have proved that Papacy has no idea of surrendering this supremacy, and this opinion the learned Bishop sustained by citing numerous instances in which it had been arrogated and pertinaciously adhered to in later years.

What reply, then, should be made to those French, English and Irish Catholics, who assume that the head of their church does not now interfere with temporal affairs, or at least not with the attributes of temporal sovereignties? The claim to the right of doing so has never been abandoned. True, it has not been exercised, for the season that political expediency would not warrant it, and the inability to do so was well understood. Who then would say that, were it expedient, this claim would not be enforced, and where do ecclesiastics and writers obtain their authority for asserting that the Catholic creed has in this respect undergone a change? France had adhered to that construction of the creed which refuses to the Pope these powers, and had not fallen under the papal interdiction; this was because it was feared that she might follow the example of England and shake off the yoke; but the fact had led multitudes to believe that the construction which did not recognise the Pope's political power was authorised by the church itself. This was a great error. Never yet had one Pope been found to admit that he yielded one iota of the ancient prerogatives, and the only reason why the Popes of later years do not assert and urge them, was that they dared not.

He had no doubt that such of our American prelates and statesmen as are Catholics would deny to the head of their church this temporal and political supremacy, but that was merely a personal opinion, which concerned only themselves; they might indeed resist any attempt to establish it; history furnishes numerous precedents of resistence to it by men whose oath to this Church had acknowledged it. A few hundred years ago the Pope was universally recognised the great sovereign and spiritual and temporal head of the world; but times had changed—that tremendous power had declined—but the full light of history, the assertion in their creed of its unchangeables, the fact that no Pope up to the present time has ever renounced his prerogative, proved that the claim to the right of exercising supreme jurisdiction still existed.

And who might undertake to foresee the consequences that may result to this country from a blind indifference to the future of this question? Let Europe continue to pour her millions among us, let the papal power continue to increase here, aided by foreign Catholic governments, who instinctively hate republican principles—and who shall say that a few years may not see one country deluged with the blood of civil war, brought about by bigotry and intolerance, and carried on with the sanguinary fury characteristic of Roman Catholic persecution?

He did not think such a war probable, but it might be possible. The power of the Romish Church was by no means to be looked upon as not dangerous, when wielded for temporal harm; it held absolute dominion over the souls and bodies of 18 000,000 human beings.

Want of space compels us to to omit the concluding portion of this able and interesting lecture.

Later from Mexico.

The steamship Texas, Capt. Forbes, arrived yesterday afternoon, bringing the mails from Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico. We have files of papers from the latter city to the 3d inst., and from the former to Saturday last.

El Veracruzano of the 8th states that, according to its correspondence from the capital, the best understanding does not exist between the President and his Ministers, and that the programme from the Cabinet of their course during the interregnum previous to the time when the nation shall be regularly constituted through its representatives, was looked for with much anxiety.

At last dates from the capital a law regulating publications was under consideration of the Supreme Council of Government.

Senor Jose Duran has been appointed Consul at New York.

Don Manuel Robles Pezuela has been appointed Ambassador to the United States in place of Senor Almonte.

The supporters of the project of erecting a new State, to be called Itnrbide, have abandoned the idea.

The Trait d'Union—the French paper published in the capital—recommends Senor Rothaud, commander of the Mexican naval forces in the Pacific, for Consul at New Orleans—"principally," it says, "because Mexican interests have for a long time been deplorably neglected in that city, and they require a man like Senor Relhaud, with a knowledge of the things and the people of the United States; but more particularly, as in that city are organized all the operations of the filibusters." Very complimentary to our spirit of enterprise, indeed!

In accordance with the decision of the Supreme Council, the order reducing certain Government employees to half pay has been abolished.

In regard to the troubles in the State of Tamaulipas, between Generals Garza and Traconis, we have nothing very definite. The papers state that in consequence of the latest news received by the Government from that State, Garza has been ordered to proceed to the capital and the hope is fervently expressed that this step may produce the re-establishment of peace in Tampico and in the Department. A letter from General Traconis to Vidaurri, dated the 19th of November, is published. The General prefers many charges against Garza and against other persons in Tampico, professing his fidelity to the Government of Alvarez, and his readiness to submit his course of conduct during the troubles to his commander-in-chief, Vidaurri.

At the time this letter was written, Tampico was in a state of siege, declared by Traconis for the defence of the town against an expected attack by the forces of Garza. In his letter, Traconis stated that to defend himself he had but 500 men, more than 200 of whom were in the hospital, and he asked a reinforcement of 500 or 600 men, expressing the assurance that with that aid he could put an end to the difficulties by which he was surrounded. It is probable that the demand for Garza's presence in the capital brought the question of his loyalty to the Government directly to issue.

Our Minister, Mr. Gadsden, had written a letter to Vidaurri, denouncing the recent invasion from Texas, and pronouncing Capt. Callahan and his men a band of vandals.

An organized band of robbers, said to number not less than fifty, were committing many excesses along the roads between Puebla and Orizaba.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

SENATE.—The Senate was called to order at 12 o'clock on Monday, the 3d inst., by Jesse D. Bright, of Indiana, President, pro tem., thirty-one senators appearing in their seats, in addition to Messrs. Collamer, Fitzpatrick, Higgs, Seward, Foster, Pugh, Iverson, Slidell, Bell of New Hampshire, Crittenden, Butler, Trumbull, and Harlan, who were severally qualified and took their seats. In the omens of the two latter gentleman, protests against their election were received; and when the committees are organised, the matter will undergo the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary. After a short session, without transacting any business, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—The House met at 12 o'clock. The Clerk of the House then proceeded to call the roll, when two hundred and twenty-five members answered to their names, leaving nine absentees. On motion of Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, the House proceeded to the election of a speaker. The first ballot resulted as follows: Richardson, 74; Campbell, 55; Banks, 22; Pennington, 7; Marshall, 30; Fuller, 18; scattering, 13. After four ballots, with a similar result, on motion the House adjourned to 12 o'clock of the following day.

From the Washington Evening Star we extract the following report of the proceedings on the 4th:

In the Senate, to-day, after Messrs. Hale, of N. H., Durkee, of Wisconsin, Yulee, of Fla., and Pearce, of Md., now members, were duly sworn in; they proceeded to elect a chaplain by ballot, with the following result, viz:

Whole number of votes given, 45; necessary to a choice, 23.

Roht. C. Dean received 23, W. Hodges 8, J. G. Butler 10, Henry Ward Beecher 2, T. Parker 1, David (Paul) Brown 2, H. H. Chapin 1, Leonidas Kosser 1, Wm. H. Holcomb 1, Archbishop Hughes 1.

The Senate then adjourned.

In the House, the Clerk of the last House (presiding in the Clerk's desk) having read the journal of yesterday's proceedings—

Mr. Jones, of Tenn., moved that the rules of the last House be enforced so far as they exclude persons not admitted under them within the chamber while the House may be in session.

Mr. Morgan objected.

The Clerk put the affirmative of the question, and announced the motion carried.

On motion of Mr. Boocock, they next proceeded to a fifth ballot for a Speaker, with the following result:

Whole number of votes cast 220. Necessary for a choice, 111.

Mr. Richardson received 74; L. D. Campbell, 68; Banks, 28; H. M. Fuller, 20; H. Marshall, 19; Pennington, 8; Wheeler, 1; Walker, 2; Nichols, 1; Haven, 2; Oliver, of New York, 1; Howard, 2; Lindley, 1; Williams, 1; Thurston, Zollicoffer, 1; Mace, 1.

No choice being made, the House proceeded to the sixth ballot, with the following result, viz:

Whole number of votes cast 223; necessary to a choice, 112. Mr. Richardson received 75; Campbell, 57; Pennington, 9; Banks, 25; Fuller, 22; Marshall, 18; Walker, 1; Nichols, 1; Haven, 2; Oliver, of New York, 1; Howard, 2; Lake, 4; Thurston, 2; Zollicoffer, 1; Mace, 1; Carlile, 1; and one or two others received scattering votes.

No choice having been effected, they proceeded to the seventh ballot, with the following result:

Whole number of votes cast 223; necessary to a choice, 112.

Mr. Richardson received 74; Campbell, 54; Pennington, 10; Banks, 28; Fuller, 20; Marshall, 20; Wheeler, 1; Walker, 1; Haven, 1; Oliver, of New York, 1; Howard, 2; Washburn, of Maine, 1; Zollicoffer, 2; Thurston, 2; Etheridge, 1; Carlile, 2.

No choice having been effected, they were engaged in taking the eighth ballot when our report went to press.

SENATE—Washington, Dec. 5, 1855.—Mr. Hale submitted a resolution requesting the President of the United States to inform the Senate whether he has received any evidence of such resistance to the execution of the laws in Kansas, as to require the intervention of military for the preservation or restoration of law and order in that Territory. If so, to lay the same before the Senate. Also, copies of any order he may have issued for the employment of a military force in that Territory. The resolution lies over.

Mr. Adams submitted a resolution, which also lies over, for the election of officers.

Mr. Bell offered a resolution referring all the private claims and private bills on the calender to the Court of Claims.

Mr. Adams gave notice of a bill to amend the naturalization laws.

HOUSE—The House resumed voting for Speaker immediately upon being called to order. The first vote stood: Richardson, 72; Campbell, 48; Fuller, 21; Marshall, 25; Banks, 62; Pennington, 9; Thurston, 2; Howard, 2; Messrs. Haven, Mace, Andrews, Oliver, Wheeler, Benson, Giddings, Jones, of Pennsylvania, Valk and Ready, had each one vote.

One hundred and eleven votes being necessary to a choice, there was of course no election.

Further from Kansas.

We find the following telegraphic dispatches in the Memphis Bulletin:

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Dec. 3.—The excitement is increasing. The Abolitionists have rescued prisoners from the Sheriff. He refused to give up any concerned, unless to the Governor, or the United States officers. This resolution was sustained by Gen. Lane, an editor at Lawrence, and several others of the same stripe, who are continually making speeches arguing preparation. The militia are slow to obey the Governor's call. A party numbering 200 or 300 at Franklin, a few miles distant, are arming a large force. Reports reach us that there are 1,100 men organized in Lawrence, armed with Sharp's rifles, entrenching themselves as fast as possible. The Governor has called on the president for assistance from Forts Riley and Leavenworth. Until it is obtained, probably nothing will be done, unless parties bring it on themselves, in which case, many lives will be lost.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The Abolitionists have taken Atchison. They tried to eat the papers, but were prevented. They contained secrets of a midnight order. Atchison was to be burned. Pat Langhlin has been murdered. A party left here last night to defend Atchison.

NEW POST-OFFICE.—The post-office at Grand Ecore Natchitoches parish, La., has been re-established, and J. H. Stevens has been appointed postmaster.

HALLOWED BE THY NAME.

OF FIFTY YEARS.

List to the dreamy tongue that dwells
In rippling wave or sighing tree;
Go, hearken to the old church bells,
The whistling bird, the shissing bee;
Interpret right, and ye will find
'Tis "power and glory" they proclaim;
The chimes, the creatures, waters, wind,
All publish, "Hallowed be Thy name."

The pilgrim journeys till he bleeds,
To gain the altar of his sires;
The hermit pores above his beads,
With zeal that never wanes nor tires;
But holiest rite or longest prayer,
That soul can yield or wisdom frame,
What better import can it bear
Than "Father, hallowed be Thy name?"

The savage kneeling to the sun,
To give his thanks or ask a boon;
The raptures of the infant one,
Who laughs to see the elves round moon;
The saint well taught in christian lore,
The Moslem prostrate at his flame—
All worship, wonder and adore,
And and in "Hallowed be Thy name!"

Whate'er may be man's faith or creed,
Those precious words comprise it still:
We trace them on the blooming mead;
We hear them in the flowing rill;
One chorus hails the Great Supreme;
Each vested breathing in the same—
The strains may differ, but the theme
Is, "Father, hallowed be Thy name!"

BE OFF WITH YOU NOW!

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

Be off with you now—don't I know
That it's only cajoling you are;
With cheeks like the rose's soft glow,
And glances more bright than the star?
'Tis true that my waist is but small,
And my ringlets may curl like the vine;
But I'm not like an angel at all,
Nor am I the least bit divine!
So be off with you now—don't I see
You're deluding from eve until down?
My step may be bounding and free,
But I'm not the least like a fawn!
But 'twas ever the method, we know,
Since Adam and Eva began,
That heaven were sure to be snow,
And necks woes, of course, like the swan!

Come, be off with you now, till you learn
To woo like a plain-hearted youth;
Let your mind, if you love me, discern,
To win you must woo me with truth!
I would rather—instead of these Sewers,
In which you are ever so rife—
That you promised to love me all hours,
As long as each other had life!

LONG AGO.

When at eve I sat alone,
Thinking on the Past and Gone—
While the clock, with drowsy finger,
Marks how long the minutes linger—
And the embers, dimly burning,
Tell of Life to fast returning—
Then my lonely chair around,
With a quiet, mournful sound—
With a murmer soft and low,
Come the Ghosts of Long Ago.

One by one I count them o'er,
Voices that are heard no more,
Tears that loving cheeks have wet,
Words, whose music lingers yet—
Holy faces, pale and fair,
Shadowy locks of waving hair—
Happy sighs and whispers dear,
Songs forgotten many a year—
Lips of dewy fragrence—eyes
Brighter, bluer than the skies—
Odors breathed from Paradise.

And the gentle shadows glide
Softly murmuring at my side,
Till the long unfriended day,
All forgotten, fades away.

Thus, when I am all alone,
Dreaming o'er the Past and Gone,
All around me, sad and slow,
Come the Ghosts of Long Ago.

SUGAR.

Its Consumption in the United States—Crop of 1856—Prospects of Prices—Advice to Sugar Planters.

Messrs Editors—Permit me to speak, through the medium of your paper, to the sugar planters of Louisiana of what concerns them. Recent events have clearly shown that the interest of the planter is not properly cared for in your city. The very decided stand taken by those in whose hands this important staple of our State is confided, in an unprejudiced mind, prejudicial to the interest of those whom they undertake to serve, advocating, as they do, the system of forced sales upon the levee, they advise shipments as fast as it is (and frequently before) ready to leave the sugar-house, when it is frequently the case that a steamboat load will glut, and consequently depress the market to actual decline in price. Now, it has been the custom of planters, generally, to speak hard of those whom they term "gimlet speculators." Speculators are necessary; indeed, with the present system of disposing of sugar, they are absolutely essential—even those who go in between the factor and real buyer. It is perfectly natural that they should favor a system which gives them an advantage in a trade, or business, to which they devote themselves; and as long as the "gimlet man" proper does what is fair and right, blame should not attach to either.

The writer is well acquainted with most of the operators in sugar on the Levee and knows them to be clever gentlemen. The blame, if any there be, and the planters think there is, should attach where it properly belongs. Until a different system is tried, the planters will not be satisfied, and it is perfectly useless for them to attempt to effect a change in the present system unless they can obtain the entire co-operation of the factor. It is for them to fix the thing up, and a price upon sugar commensurate with the law of sup

THE ROT IN COTTON.

[From the American Cotton Planter.]

Dr. Crum—Dear Sir: Your inquiry of me about the rot in cotton, is rather too difficult a problem for me to solve. I cannot arrive at any conclusion. No opinion yet advanced but has stronger reasons to make it questionable than to confirm its truth. A friend of mine advanced the opinion that it was water, throwing off that quantity of fruit which it was not able to perfect. This I cast by saying that the stalks which had but few bolls, but one-third of a crop, rotted too. Another thought it was a disease of the plant; this will not do, for all bolls are not destroyed, nor frequently are the third. Another says it is an insect that stings the plant. This suits me best, and for the want of a better, I endorse it, though before I enter on this subject, allow me to say, I at first objected to it, because the rot has heretofore begun on particular spots of the field, and this inclined me to think that the soil had something to do with the matter.

My reason for inclining to the insect are as follows:

I have examined a multitude of bolls, and find the spot indicative of the rot so small, that I cannot detect it with the naked eye, up to the time the boll is destroyed. I have cut out the diseased part, and through the boll, and again have seen it where the boll was barely injured through; again where the cotton showed disease; then seed; again where the disease had only destroyed a pod. I have several bolls with disease cut out, which may show whether I am correct, yet the cause, or what, may not have been eradicated.

I own a powerful microscope, and upon examining the spots, I see the disease, marked, wave only to the eye a needle point; the edge quite reddish, marked with internal black and sunken, as if the edges had grown on and the diseased part had sank and decayed.

If a cancer or ulcer form the sting, the boll may perfect a part of the cotton before the whole would be implicated in disease.

Again: on a dark day, threatening rain, upon examining bolls, I find a very timid bug, about three-elevenths of an inch long, on the boll, under the involuns, (I forget,) where it lies close to the boll; they are as wary as the boll worm fly—unless care is taken, they fall to the ground, and secrete themselves in the earth; they are a winged insect, of the beetle tribe, and like what we, when children, called hominy beeters; place them on their back, and they spring over; or hold an end of one in the hand, and it snaps by a joint in the middle. By being very careful, I have found them sucking the juice. I am not certain these bugs do the mischief. I find no other bug in sufficient numbers, for it takes quite a number to probe as many bolls and as many spots. These bugs are at this date procreating.

In one of the above I find an egg oblong, and quite transparent. I have also found a small worm, which my naked eye could not discover, in the cancerous portion. Again, the juice in the dark spot before the part becomes dry, is black, whereas that almost in contact in the green part of the boll, is colorless. These you have the result of my observation.

We need powerful instruments, more costly than my means admit of. My instrument cost $20 in New York, and made specially for me; and the maker, Mr. J. Rosch, let me have it at cost of manufacture, on account of the use I make of it. I need instruments to examine large and small objects; to have the advantage of reflection; to have the advantage of magnifying and reflection, I suppose some $200 would purchase. But should the cost be $500, some public spirited man should buy, and let the curious use. I have found several bugs on the boll, but none that satisfies it is the one. Certain, it is not the boll-worm. I can show thousands of rotted bolls, and have seen only one boll-worm, and as yet not a boll bored.

Important from Antigua.—Capt. Little, of the American brig Loango, writes from Antigua under date of the 12th of November, to the New York Herald, stating that the British authorities of that place had boarded his vessel and forcibly taken therefrom the negro cook, under pretence that he was held as a slave and should have his freedom.

The letter says:

"Although the cook protested over and over again that he was a free man, he was by force removed on shore, and, with $150 in double eagles and some small gold, is now taken care of by his friends.

The matter is now in the hands of Mr. Higginbotham, our commercial agent, who intends to see me through in my demand for satisfaction to the flag of which I was at that time the guardian.

I will say, also, that every merchant, and others not connected with the government, declare the act to have been a most flagrant outrage to the American flag.

The crew were also offered the glorious protection of the British mail; but they told the officers they knew what they were well off.

The St. John's Times has the following in regard to the outrage:

It having been ascertained yesterday that there was on board of the brigantine Loango, from Philadelphia, a fugitive slave by the name of John Ross, who was anxious to set his foot upon British soil; where the inestimable boon of freedom would be instantly realized, but who by some means was debarred from doing so, although he offered five dollars for his conveyance ashore, the superintendent of police, Mr. Shoreditch, was made acquainted with the circumstance, who, with his usual promptitude, as we are told, associated himself with Mr. Price, the Colonial Treasurer, and having obtained the sanction and authority of his excellency the Governor, at once removed the man from the vessel and placed him among freemen. We understand that the narrative of his escape from slavery is graphic and interesting. It may hereafter find a place in our columns.

The man is now at the police office pending an investigation into the circumstances, which we regret our inability to report in our present issue.

A dispatch of the 24 inst. from Springfield, Mass., says:

At all 1,700 votes were cast at our municipal election to-day. Amos Phelps, Jr., Democrat, late Whig, was chosen Mayor by 200 plurality. The ticket for Aldermen and School Committee is made up by the Republicans is elected. It is made up of all parties. The Aldermen are—Seven Republicans, two Democrats, two Americans and one Whig. Joseph Ingraham is re-elected City Clerk and Treasurer by nearly a two-thirds vote. The Republicans divided the strength part of their vote for Mayor between the Democratic and American candidates, though they gave about 500 votes to George Ellis, the independent candidate.

From Texas.

The steamship Mexico, Capt. Lewlen, arrived on Saturday last from Galveston, but brought no news of importance.

The Galveston News of Thursday last has the following paragraphs:

The brig Bittsett, Capt Grist, and the schooner Tiger, Capt Collet, both from Bangor, Me., arrived in port yesterday, loaded with cross-ties for the Galveston, Houston and Henderson Railroad. We understand that there are some ten or twelve other vessels now on their way, all loaded with materials for the above railroad, which is now graded between eighteen and twenty miles from Virginia Point beyond Dickinson's Bayou. Mr. Hooper has taken the contract to bridge all the streams on the track of said road, and is now employed on that work.

At the recent term of the District Court in Richmond, John Barrett was tried on the charge of murder, for shooting Mr. Glasscock last summer, and a verdict of acquittal was rendered.

Capt. Callahan and Capt. Benton, of the late expedition across the Rio Grande, were in Austin at last accounts. The State Times says Capt. Benton has not entirely recovered from the wounds he received in the fight with the Mexicans and Indians.

We learn from the Austin State Times that it has been resolved to hold an American party State Convention in Austin on the third Monday in January next, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President, and for such other purposes as may be deemed important to the party.

On the 1st inst. a Mexican killed one of his countrymen in Corpus Christi with a knife. He also stabbed two women. He was arrested, and it was thought he would be lynched.

From Santa Fe.

From late Santa Fe papers we extract the following paragraphs:

It affords us pleasure to announce that Brevet Brigadier General John Garland, military commander of the department, has appointed Lieut. W. Craig, third infantry, his aid-de-camp. Lt. C. is a graduate of the class of 1853, and has served one year in New Mexico, much of the time in the most arduous service to be found in the military life. During the campaign of six months among the Rocky Mountains, against the Utah and Jecarilla Apache Indians, he was Adjutant of the mounted battalion of New Mexican volunteers, and discharged his duty in such a manner as to receive the commendation of his superior officers.

Four Mexican boys were brought into Santa Fe last Wednesday by a small escort of dragoons, having succeeded in making their escape from the Camanche Indians, a short time since. Their names are Luis Martinez, Feliz Bonoiege, Teodoro Garcie, and Jenaro Salgado, the two former being about seventeen, and the letter about twelve years of age. Two of them, Martinez and Bonoiege, were captured five years, and the other two about two years ago; and they were taken from the Mexican States of Chihuahua, Durango and Coahuila. The Superintendent of Indian Affairs will send them to El Paso, to be delivered to the Mexican authorities at that place, in accordance with the treaty of Guadalupe de Hidalgo; General Garland furnishing them with transportation and rations.

His Excellency, Gov. Merriwether, accompanied by his son, O. R. Merriwether, left Santa Fe for the States, on Monday morning, the 1st inst. He goes in on a leave of absence, and will return to the Territory some time next spring. At his request, General Garland furnished him an escort of dragoons, under the command of Capt. Ewell. The reason for having an escort was, that he desired to have a talk with the Camanche Indians, if he should meet them on the way, and the presence of a small military force seemed necessary.

The same escort conveys to Fort Leavenworth three soldiers of Maj. Blake's company, who were tried by court martial for mutiny, and sentenced to be shot, but the sentence was commuted by the President to three years hard labor on the works at that post.

The Kansas Troubles.

The Jefferson City (Mo.) Inquirer publishes the following dispatch, which contains some further particulars in regard to the circumstances which produced the present threatening condition of things in Kansas:

Independence, Nov. 29.—Near Hickory Point, on the Santa Fe road, three Abolitionists, with Sharp's rifles, went to the claim of Mr. Coleman, a pro-slavery man, and ordered him to leave. He was allowed ten minutes to leave, or he would be shot. He left for a short time, but returned well armed. He met with one of the three men, who renewed his threats and attempted to shoot Coleman, but his gun missed fire. Coleman then shot his assailant, who died immediately. Coleman gave himself up for trial. A mob of Abolitionists, armed with Sharp's rifles, repaired to Coleman's house, driving his wife and children off, burned his house, and ordered other pro-slavery men to leave, and burned their houses.

Deputy Marshal Jones arrested the leader of the mob, and obtained the names of twenty others. Jones is now at Lecompton with two prisoners and fifteen or twenty assistants. The Abolitionists are gathering at Lecompton, demanding the release of their comrades and the surrender of Coleman. The Governor has issued a proclamation calling the militia to the assistance of the officers. Last night and this morning many persons from this city and county started to Lecompton for the purpose of placing their services at the disposal of the Governor. A letter from one of the editors of the Western Dispatch dated at Shawnee Mission to day, states that the writer has learned that a number of citizens are missing at Hickory Point, and that sixteen or more houses had been burned. The Governor calls on the law abiding fellizens to suppress the outbreak. Dispatches from Weston and St. Joseph last night state that large meetings of the citizens have been held, and companies formed to go to Kansas.

The St. Louis Republican publishes the following later dispatches:

Independence, Nov. 30.—A messenger arrived at Shawnee Mission last night, who states that Marshal Jones had fifty-two men with him at Lecompton; that Lawrence is up in arms, drilling constantly, and have five pieces of artillery. Our cannon left this morning in the hands of Kansas men.

Weston, Nov. 30.—The outlaws in Douglas county have burnt a number of houses and driven a number of families, women and children to Missouri for refuge.

Latest accounts represent that the law-and-order people of the Territory are rallying in large numbers to the assistance of the Sheriff of Douglas county in the execution of the law. He has by this time an overwhelming force. Sheriff Jones is acting as U. S. Deputy Marshal for Douglas and Johnson counties.

Shawnee Mission, Nov. 30.—The Marshal has a requisition from the Governor to arrest forty-two men in Lawrence, and they refuse to deliver themselves up, and he calls for volunteers. The people of Lawrence say publicly that they will take Coleman and Jones and hang both of them.

Large numbers of the law-breakers were seen crossing from Delaware and Leavenworth yesterday, going to Lawrence. A member of the Legislature was from there yesterday morning for guns. We can only send them twenty. Jones also sends for a wagon load of ammunition and for cannon, immediately.

Spain and the European Allies.—A correspondent of the London News, writing from Paris under date of the 14th of November, professes to transmit the exact sense of a declaration recently made by Gen. Espartero to a gentleman who had asked him whether there was any truth in the rumors of a projected alliance between Spain and France and England. The answer of Gen. Espartero, thus communicated, is as follows:

"There is not at present any alliance. But Spain is a Latin nation, and if the war goes on she will certainly take part in it ultimately on the side of France and England. I incline to think that the war will become general in the spring. Should events compel Spain to draw the sword in this quarrel, you may be assured that the manner of her doing so will be such as to sustain the old Castilian glory, and that she will not accept a ship, a man, or a crown piece from any Power in the world."

PEOL; OR, WOMAN'S HEROISM.

AN INCIDENT IN THE WAR OF 1812.

In the last war with England I was, as you know, a very little girl. I was old enough, however, to remember distinctly the preparations made one time at our house for a substantial baking.

The supper things were removed, and on the table stood brown loaves, their tops made glistening smooth with Peggy's wet hood, the smoking pot of pork and beans, the little white loaves rising as fast as they could, a cake of ginger bread and turnovers for the children.

It was dark, for the brown bread and beans were destined to remain in their hot quarters all night, and serve us with a steaming breakfast on the morrow.

The logs in the large kitchen fire-place burned merrily, the great oven was all a-glow; and mother, who was superintending, said it only needed to burn the embers, which it was fast approaching, to be ready for the first instalment of our baking.

Just then, the door at the left of the fire-place opened, and Peol entered. He was an Indian of notoriously bad character, but had always behaved himself with propriety in his frequent visits to our house. It was so much a matter of course for an Indian to come in without ceremony, that by the time he was fairly appropriating the supper Peggy placed before him, we had almost forgotten his presence.

Peol finished his repast, and then came and stood with his back to the fire. Physically he was a noble specimen of humanity—more than six feet high, and in figure between Heronies and Apollo. He wore a black sealskin cap, turned up an inch or so in front; a flap fell upon his neck behind. On the top two round peaks ran up, something like the mitre of a bishop; it was covered with heavy embroidery of beads, gaily dyed porcupine quills and moss-hair, wrought with singular skill and neatness.

His tightly fitted scarlet sash was embroidered in a border an inch deep, with white beads, and fastened at the belt with an engraved beguile of polished silver, as large as a breakfast plate. In his open breast appeared a chiefs shirt of large figure and gay colors; the huge ruffles were fastened with brooches of burnished silver from the size of a dollar to that of a saucer.

Below his short skirts appeared copper-colored tights of nature's finest workmanship; still lower, leggings of broadcloth, sewed to fit his leg loosely, the flaps outside the seam being richly embroidered to match the cap.

Beautiful soft moccasins of embroidered buckskin covered his handsome feet. Around his waist was wrapped two or three times a wampum sash in a rhomboidal pattern of black and white shell beads, from this depended two undressed skins of the musk-rat, I think from the scent; one contained a knife, the other money and tobacco.

There was nothing like foliage, or, indeed, the likeness of anything in heaven or earth, or under the earth, so far as I am acquainted, in his patterns or those of his tribe, with which I was twenty years familiar. Their designs were grotesque, geometrical figures, always symetrical, and often quite beautiful.

There he stood in the red fire-light, huge, brawny, elastic, lightly balanced on his pretty moccasins, with toes a little introverted, and the look altogether of a sleek panther, ready for a spring.

He surveyed me awhile in silence, and then he said: "Me stay here all night. Me sleep here," pointing to the kitchen floor.

"No, Peol," said mother kindly, "we cannot keep you."

He repeated, with fierce authority, "Me stey here to-night."

Mother knew, by sad experience, the consequence of benevolence to the copper-colored vagebonds. She knew that after we were asleep, Peol, if he remained, would open the door to some of his brethren, who were always lounging about the groceries, and usually more or less intoxicated. They would fight, making night hideous with their grunts, yells and curses; twisting their hands into the unshorn lock of hair upon each other's heads, they would crack the vertebræ with a sound that could be heard some distance—a horrible, indiscreet performance. She remembered that the snow in our yard, as in those of our neighbors, had often been hard-pressed by the rolling sculls of these screeching serenaders; while people within were passing a wretched night. She well knew the danger of offending them and arousing their revenge.

While deciding upon her course, mother was stirring the hot embers, and drawing them to the mouth of the oven with the long-handled iron shovel. Peol stood at her left hand, nearly half-way from the oven to the door where he had entered, and which remained open. His face was turned towards her as if waiting her answer.

Her decision being made, she said firmly:

"Peol, I cannot and will not let you stay here to-night."

Instantly he bared his knife. It glittered, but not so terribly as the wicked green light that shot out from under the shaggy brow of its enraged owner.

"It is war time," he growled. "I would scalp you for a ninepence!"

The instant the knife flashed in the fire light, mother, with a dexterous movement, drew out the red hot shovel, full of glowing coals, and without moving a step suddenly swung it close under his chin, calling out—

"Run! run Peol! or I will put them in your bosom! I will burn you to death!"

He hesitated and stepped back. She followed. He could not touch the shovel without being burned. It was useless to dodge, for he had watched from infancy the little, swaying form before him; slender and graceful, but tough as a white oak sapling—his equal in agility, if not in strength. He knew the power and passion in that light form, which now made her cheeks crimson, and made her eyes glow and sparkle almost like the burning coals before him.

He wavered a moment, and sprang into the entry. In the same instant the shovel and its contents flew into the fire-place, and mother, braced against the door, was holding the savage at bay alone, pressing down the latch with both hands. Peggy, with quick wit, caught a fork from the table, and pinched it over the latch. Mother held it while Peggy placed her stout shoulder against the door.

The Indian tugged, grunted and swore fearfully, but the door was true to its trust.

Silence reigned within. Frank was asleep in the cradle; Annie, too frightened to cry, and I, with eyes wide open, was watching to see how it would end.

Mother whispered to Peggy:

"What if the latch breaks?" As she spoke Peol ran out of doors to a window that was fastened. Mother had been hoping for this, and drawing the fork, she darted into the entry and bolted the outside door. Her castle was barely secured, when back came the Indian, desperately furious at finding himself foiled.

Mother returned to the kitchen, and poured a pail of water on the fire. Peggy at the same time blew out the lamp and shut the oven door.

The darkness of the room enabled us to see the great black Peol at the window, making frightful gestures, and uttering awful imprecations in his broken language.

Meanwhile mother, aware that an Indian and his gun were never far separated, took us noiselessly into the parlor, and seated us on the floor beneath the only window looking upon the street. Straightening our limbs, she placed the cradle over them close to us, and whispered, "Now sit still as mice. If Peol should fire into this window, the bullets will go over your heads and strike the ceiling—he cannot hurt you here." You see as I was, I knew from mother's manner that our troubles were not ended.

Our house was situated upon a hill-side. The kitchen had its entrance upon the ground, though really in the second story, having a basement beneath. The parlor window where we were sitting was inaccessible, while in the kitchen there was no escape from Peol's observation.

Father's place of business was several rods opposite ours, and his light sent its rays across the yard, partially illuminating the parlor. By this I could see mother, with clasped hands and pale as marble, cautiously peering from the window.

Directly she clasped her hands, exclaiming: "He is safe! Oh, children, your father is alive and safe! I thought Peol would go and murder him. I could see him sitting there so calmly posting his books, when Peol went straight towards him. I cannot think what saved him. Peol went past up the hill toward Blane's. Oh, Peggy, I might have run out and given my husband warning, but I knew Peol too well—he would have returned and butchered you all. It was a dreadful choice to make, but I would not sacrifice so many lives for one, though that one is the dearest to me." And she cast down by the door, leaned her head on the cradle and cried heartily.

Peggy now relighted up, rekindled the fires, and made mother comfortable. She was preparing to put Annie and me to bed, when father, much agitated, came home to tell us that Peol had just killed Blanc at the hotel. He had gone there intending to pass the night. He was much excited and very insolent. Mr. Blanc ordered him to leave the house. Peol refused, and he struck him a light blow with a stick. Strange that Mr. Blanc should do this when he knew so well that an Indian will not bear a blow—that Peol, least of all, would brook such an indignity. Peol retreated out of the door—Mr. Blanc followed him. Finding the savage disposed to leave the premises, he attempted to re-enter. Peol drew that bright knife, and pinned it to the handle in Mr. Blanc's back. The wounded man staggered and groaned out: "Oh, Sarah, I'm a dead man. Draw out the knife." With horror and despair she obeyed; her husband fell dead at her feet.

Peol was apprehended and escorted by a strong guard to the old fort. After his trial he was imprisoned there to await his execution. Before the day arrived the British captured the fort, and under pretence of exchanging prisoners, they set Peol at liberty.

We never saw Peol again. What finally became of him I do not know. [Arbuta.

The Burned Steamboats at Memphis.

From the Memphis Whig of the 3d inst., we learn the full particulars of the burning of the ill-fated steamers Geo. Collier and Mayflower at the Memphis landing during the night of the 2d inst. The fire broke out on the Geo. Collier just as she was landing, and before the lines were fairly made fast. The fire first appeared from a small closet immediately under the forward steps, and in a few moments the large boat was almost entirely envsloped in flames.

We now quote the Whig's account:

Capt. Burdett, who was in command, left the roof and went below to the cabin, and gave the alarm. He immediately went into the ladies' cabin to save the ladies, all of whom were asleep, and tried to get them out forward, but the flames and smoke drove them back, leaving them no chance to escape but by a small flight of steps near the water closet at the rear of the boat. By almost superhuman efforts he succeeded in saving all of them and getting them off on the wharf-boat. The male passengers and a portion of the officers and crew had to save themselves by jumping off, some into the river, and others to the lower deck of the wharf boat.

The George Collier had landed on the inside of the magnificent packet Mayflower, her bow extending about midship of the latter, and soon that steamer was also enveloped in flames. The flames also extended to the bow and cabin of the fine wharf boat, Mary Hunt, and in less than ten minutes from the first outbreak of the flames, the three boats were one mass of fire, the flames towering high above the tall chimneys of either boat.

The most mournful part of the disaster is the fact that some last or twelve human lives are supposed to be lost, some of them by being burned, and others by drowning after jumping into the river. The George Collier had some forty cabin passengers, most of whom were asleep in their rooms, and in the hurry and confusion of the moment, hardly knew what they were about. Several of those who were saved are considerably injured from jumping off the boat. Many of the saved were taken to the Gayoso in their night-clothes, where they were kindly provided for by the gentlemanly proprietors.

Neither the officers nor passengers of the Collier saved any thing but what they had on, and the books and papers of both boats were lost.

The entire loss is estimated at not less than $250,000. The Collier was valued at $35,000, and insured for $15,000. The Mayflower cost fully $100,000, and was insured for about $50,000. Wharf-boat Mary Hunt was valued at $16,000, and Messrs. Duval, Algee & Co. had a stock of goods amounting to some $20,000, and had insurance for only $5,000. A larger portion of the insurance will fall upon offices at St. Louis, New Orleans, and elsewhere, yet it is quite probable that the offices here will suffer materially on the cargo of the Collier.

The Geo. Collier had just landed from New Orleans, and had some four hundred tons of freight, mostly groceries, for this place and Nashville on board, not a pound of which was saved. The Mayflower had some 4000 sacks of corn on board, which she had taken in at Bradley's landing. Her cargo from New Orleans, except some sugar and molasses on the levee, had been delivered on Saturday. There was also a considerable amount of forwarding goods on the wharfboat. In addition to their wharf-boat, Messrs. Duval, Algee & Co., lost their bakery.

The scene last night was awfully grand, and beggars all description. The sparks blew to a great distance over the southern part of the city. At one time Howard's cotton shed was in imminent danger, as was also the wharfboat of A. L. Davis & Co. The Fire Department were cut, and rendered all the assistance they could. We are unable to give any further description at this late hour—3 o'clock, A. M.

Louisiana Items.—A steam ferry is about to be established between East and West Baton Rouge.

From the Comet of Tuesday we extract the following paragraphs:

Powers' Statue of Washington.—The statue has at length been placed on the pedestal designed for it, in the "Pagoda" near the Capitol. The box and covering will be removed from it this week—as soon as the iron railing can be placed, which is the only work on the inside of the building remaining to be done. This painting on the rotunda and the walls, reflect great credit on the artist. As before said, we only regret that it is on perishable material.

On Monday morning, the 10th inst., there was another white frost—the second of the season. The cold weather comes rather late to benefit the sugar crop, as most of our planters have finished.

From Greenwell Springs, we have received through Mr. Crenshaw, some fossil remains of the primitive forest, dug up at the distance of forty feet from the surface, out of a solid strata of red oley, water-worn pebbles and sand. One sample is a limb of a tree, in a state of petrifaction, and the other is a mass of leaves and small twigs firmly embedded in a solid black mass of great weight, and when cut with a knife, susceptible of a fine polish. Louisiana is as rich in its fossil remains as any State in the Union, and a proper geological survey of the State would contribute much to this interesting branch of inquiry.

A number of years ago, the State made a small appropriation for a survey, and a corps of scientific gentlemen volenteered their services to do the work; the means, however, were not sufficient and the enterprise was still-born. We have been told by Judge Carrigan, who was of the party, that on a small bayou, in the parish of St. Mary, they found the remains of a Mastodon or Megatherium, one of the early giants of the time when man "was not." The party obtained one or two of the bones of this monster, and left the balance as they found it, not having means to make further exavations.

The Kansas Troubles.—The Kansas Herald of Freedom gives, in substance, the following account of the origin of the difficulties in Kansas:

A young man, named Dow, 22 years of age, while at a black-smith shop, where several border ruffians had congregated, was deliberately shot by one Colemen. An attempt was made to arrest the murderer, but through the assistance of his abettors, he escaped to Missouri.

A meeting of citizens, held on the spot where the affair occurred to enquire into the case, pronounced the act a cold blooded murder on the part of Colemen, and charged four men, Hagus, Burkley, Moody and Wagner, with being accessories. A series of resolutions were passed, and a committee appointed to investigate still farther, to search out the offenders, and to devise the means to bring them to justice.

Sheriff Jones arrested Jacob Bronson, at whose house Dow lived, for the purpose of having him give security to keep the peace, but, while proceeding to Lecompton, Bronson was rescued by a party of his neighbors. Jones sent to Pawnee, Missouri, for aid, declaring that the Governor of Missouri had assured him the assistance of 10,000 men if required.

In answer to Governor Shannon's call for aid, the President replied, by telegraph:

"Your dispatch received. All the power vested in the Executive will be exerted to preserve order and enforce the laws. On the receipt of your letter the preliminary measures necessary to be taken before calling out troops will be promptly executed, and you will be fully advised. FRANKLIN PIERCE."

A letter writer from Portsmouth to the Petersburg Express, says that the contributions for yellow fever sufferers, in Norfolk and Portsmouth, reached $310,000, of which Portsmouth received $80,000.

AN AUTO DE FE BEFORE PHILIP II.

FROM PRESCOTT'S FORTHCOMING HISTORY.

The auto de fe—"act of faith"—was the most imposing, as it was the most awful, of the solemnities authorized by the Roman Catholic Church. It was intended, somewhat profanely, as has been intimated, to combine the pomp of the Roman triumph with the horrors of the day of judgment. It may read coo quite as much of those bloody festivals prepared for the entertainment of the Romans in the Coliseum. The religious import of the auto de fe was intimated by the circumstance of its being celebrated on a Sunday, or some other holiday of the Church. An indulgence for forty days was granted by the holiness to all who should be present at the spectacle; as if the appetite for witnessing the scenes of human suffering required to be stimulated by a bounty—that, too, in a clime, where the amusements were, and still are, of the most sanguinary character.

The scene for this second auto de fe at Valladolid was the great square in front of the church of St. Francis. At one end a platform was raised, covered with rich carpeting, on which were ranged the seats of the inquisitors, emblazoned with the arms of the Holy Office. Near to this was the royal gallery, a private entrance to which secured the inmates from molestation by the crowd. Opposite to this gallery a large scaffold was erected, so as to be visible from all parts of the arena, and was appropriated to the unhappy martyrs who were to suffer in the auto de fe.

At six in the morning all the bells in the capital began to toll, and a solemn procession was seen to move from the dismal fortress of the Inquisition. In the van marched a body of troops, to secure a free passage for the procession. Then came the condemned, each preceded by two familiars of the Holy Office, and those who were to suffer at the stake by the friars, in addition, exhorting the heretic to abjure his errors. Those admitted to penance wore a sable dress, while the unfortunate martyr was enveloped in a loose sack of yellow cloth—the san benito—with his head surmounted by a cap of pasteboard of a conical form, which, together with the cloak, was embroidered with figures of flames and of devils fanning and feeding them; all emblematical of the heretic's soul in the world to come, as well as of his body in the present. Then came the magistrates of the city, the judges of the courts, the ecclesiastical orders, and the nobles of the land, on horseback. These were followed by the members of the grand tribunal, and the fiscal, bearing a standard of crimson damask, on one side of which were displayed the arms of the Inquisition, and on the other the insignia of its founders, Sixtus the Fifth and Ferdinand the Catholic. Next came a numerous train of familiars, well mounted, among whom were many of the gentry of the province, proud to act as the body-guard of the Holy Office. The rear was brought up by an immense concourse of the common people, who were stimulated on the present occasion, no doubt, by the loyal desire to see their new sovereign, as well as by the ambition to share in the triumphs of the auto de fe. The number thus drawn together from the capital and the country far exceeding what was usual on such occasions, was estimated by one present at full two hundred thousand.

As the multitude defiled into the square, the inquisitors took their places on the seats prepared for their reception. The condemned were conducted to the scaffold, and the royal station was occupied by Philip, with the different members of his household. At his side sat his sister, the late regent, his son, Don Carlos, his nephew, Alexander Farnese, several foreign ambassadors, and the principal grandees and higher ecclesiastics in attendance on the court. It was an august assembly of the greatest and the proudest in the land. But the most indifferent spectator, who had a spark of humanity in his bosom, might have turned with feelings of admiration from this array of worldly power to the poor martyr, who, with no support but what he drew from within, was prepared to defy this power, and to lay down his life in vindication of the rights of conscience. Some there may have been in that large concourse who shared in these sentiments. But their number was small indeed in comparison with those who looked on the wretched victim as the enemy of God, and his approaching sacrifice as the most glorious triumph of the cross.

The ceremonies began with a sermon—"the sermon of the faith"—by the Bishop of Zamorah. The subject of it may well be guessed from the occasion. It was no doubt plentifully larded with texts of Scripture, and unless the preacher departed from the fashion of the time, with passages from the heathen writers, however much out of place they may seem in an orthodox discourse.

When the bishop had concluded, the Grand Inquisitor administered an oath to the assembled multitude, who on their knees solemnly swore to defend the Inquisition, to maintain the purity of the faith, and to inform against any one who should swerve from it. As Philip repeated an oath of similar import, he suited the action to the word, and rising from his seat, drew his sword from its scabbard, as if to announce himself the determined champion of the Holy Office in the earlier autos of the Moorish and Jewish infidels, so humiliating an oath had never been exacted from the sovereign.

After this, the Secretary of the Tribunal read aloud an instrument reciting the grounds for the conviction of the prisoners, and the respective sentences pronounced against them. Those who were to be admitted to penitence, each, as his sentence was proclaimed, knelt down, and with hands on the missal, solemnly abjured his errors, and was absolved by the Grand Inquisitor. The absolution, however, was not so entire as to relieve the offender from the penalty of his transgressions in this world. Some were doomed to perpetual imprisonment in the cells of the Inquisition, others to lighter penances. All were doomed to the confiscation of their property—a point of too great moment to the welfare of the tribunal ever to be omitted. Besides this, in many cases the offender, and by a glaring perversion of justice, his immediate descendants, were rendered forever ineligible to public office of any kind, and their names branded with perpetual infamy. Thus blighted in fortune and in character, they were said, in the soft language of the Inquisition, to be reconciled.

As those unfortunate persons were remanded, under a strong guard, to their prisons, all eyes were turned on the little company of martyrs, who, clothed in the ignominious garb of the san benito, stood waiting the sentence of their judges, with cords around their necks, and in their hands a cross, or sometimes an inverted torch, typical of their own speedy dissolution. The interest of the spectators was still further excited in the present instance by the fact that several of these victims were not only illustrious for their rank, but yet more so for their talents and virtues. In their haggard looks, their emaciated forms, and too often, alas! their distorted limbs, it was easy to read the story of their sufferings in their long imprisonment, for some of them had been confined in the dark cells of the Inquisition much more than a year. Yet their countenances, though haggard, far from showing any sign of weakness or fear, were lighted up with the glow of holy enthusiasm, as of men prepared to seal their testimony with their blood.

When that part of the process showing the grounds of their conviction had been read, the Grand Inquisitor consigned them to the hands of the Corregidor of the city, beseeching him to deal with the prisoners in all kindness and mercy—a honeyed but most hypocritical phrase, since no choice was left to the civil magistrate but to execute the terrible sentence of the law against heretics, the preparations for which had been made by him a week before.

The whole number of convicts amounted to thirty, of whom sixteen were reconciled, and the remainder relaxed to the secular arm. In other words, turned over to the civil magistrates for execution. There were few of those thus condemned who, when brought to the stake, did not so far shrink from the dreadful doom that awaited them as to consent to purchase a commutation of it by confession before they died; in which case they were strangled by the garrote before their bodies were thrown into the flames.

Of the present number there were only two whose constancy triumphed to the last over the dread of suffering, and who refused to purchase any mitigation of it by a compromise with conscience. The names of these martyrs should be engraven on the record of history.

One of them was Don Carlos de Seso, a noble Florentine, who had stood high in the favor of Charles the Fifth. Being united with a lady of rank in Castile, he removed to that country, and took up his residence in Valladolid. He had become a convert to the Lutheran doctrines, which he first communicated to his own family, and afterwards showed equal zeal in propagating among the people of Valladolid and its neighborhood. In short, there was no man to whose untiring and intrepid labors the cause of the reformed religion in Spain was more indebted. He was of course a conspicuous mark for the Inquisition.

During the fifteen months in which he lay in its gloomy cells, cut off from human sympathy and support, his constancy remained unshaken. The night preceding his execution, when his sentence had been announced to him, De Seso called for writing materials. It was thought he designed to propitiate his judges by a full confession of his errors. But the confession he made was of a different kind. He insisted on the errors of the Romish Church, and avowed his unshaken trust in the great truths of the Reformation. The document, covering two sheets of paper, is pronounced by the Secretary of the Inquisition to be a composition equally remarkable for its energy and precision. When led before the royal gallery, on his way to the place of execution, De Seso pathetically exclaimed to Philip, "Is it thus that you allow your innocent subjects to be persecuted?" To which the king made the memorable reply, "If it were my own son, I would fetch the wood to burn him, were he such a wretch as thou art!"—It was certainly a characteristic answer.

At the stake De Seso showed the same unshaken constancy, bearing his testimony to the truth of the great cause for which he gave up his life. As the flames crept slowly around him, he called on the soldiers to heap up the fagots, that his agonies might be sooner ended, and his executioners, indignant at the obstinacy—the heroism—of the martyr, were not slow in obeying his commands.

The companion and fellow-sufferer of De Seso was Domingo de Roxas, son of the Marquis de Poza, an unhappy noble, who had seen five of his family, including his eldest son, condemned to various humiliating penances by the Inquisition for their heretical opinions. This one was now to suffer death. De Roxas was a Dominican monk. It is singular that this order, from which the ministers of the Holy Office were particularly taken, furnished many proselytes to the Reformed religion. De Roxas, as was the usage with ecclesiastics, was allowed to retain his sacerdotal habit until his sentence had been read, when he was degraded from his ecclesiastical rank, his vestements were stripped off one after another, and the hideous dress of the san benito thrown over him, amid the shouts and derision of the populace. Thus apparelled, he made an attempt to address the spectators around the scaffold; but no sooner did he begin to raise his voice against the errors and cruelties of Rome, than Philip indignantly commanded him to be gagged. The gag was a piece of cleft wood, which forcibly compressing the tongue, had the additional advantage of causing great pain while it silenced the offender. Even when he was bound to the stake, the gag, though contrary to custom, was suffered to remain in the mouth of De Roxas, as if his enemies dreaded the effects of an eloquence that triumphed over the anguish of death.

The place of execution—the quemadero, the burning-place, as it was called—was a spot selected for the purpose without the walls of the city. Those who attended an auto de fe were not, therefore, necessarily, as is commonly imagined, spectators of the tragic scene that concluded it. The great body of the people, and many of higher rank, no doubt, followed to the place of execution. On this occasion, however, there is reason to think, from the language—somewhat equivocal, it is true—employed by Philip's biographer, that the monarch chose to testify his devotion to the Inquisition by witnessing in person the appalling close of the drama, while his guards mingled with the menials of the Holy Office, and heaped up the fagots around their victims.

Such was the cruel exhibition which, under the garb of a religious festival, was thought the most fitting ceremonial for welcoming the Catholic monarch to his dominions! During the whole time of its duration in the public square, from six in the morning till two in the afternoon, no symptom of impatience was exhibited by the spectators, and as may well be believed, no sign of sympathy for the sufferers. It would be difficult to devise a better school for perverting the moral sense and deadening the sensibilities of a nation.

On the 11th inst. a young man named Sumner died in Boston, from injuries received some time previous at the hands of two men named Dalton and Coburn, who had, it appears, accused him of improper attentions to their wives, enticed him to the house in which they lived, and then kicked and pounded him until tired of the fun. They are both under arrest. The stories circulated in regard to the matter are to the effect that Madames Dalton and Coburn, who are sisters, invited the addresses of the young man, and that through their indiscretion two or three other persons were punished by their husbands. Coburn, a few days before the death of Sumner, was arrested on a charge of robbing the firm of which he was a clerk. Altogether, it is an interesting chapter of Boston morals.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.—On the 11th a young man named Ashley had both legs cut off by a train between Boston and Waltham. He lived but a few moments. A man named Johnson was run over and killed at the Hinsdale station, Mass., on the same day.

A young man named Laird was killed at Olney, Ill., on the night of the 7th, by throwing himself from the night express train, between the tender and the baggage-car. The car wheels passed over his head, cutting the skull entirely off just above the eyes. He was, it is supposed, in a fit of delerium from fever, having just had a severe chill.

The Boston Courier, in a notice of Mr. Ketteil, late editor of that paper, whose death has been announced, says that "many of those historical compendiums which came out under the name of Peter Parley, were in fact the work of Mr. Ketteil. He is the veritable Peter Parley."

EAST MISSISSIPPI FRAGMENTS.

"Gather up the fragments," was the command of the blessed Jesus to His disciples after the feast of loaves and; and if this was appropriate in regard to bread and meat, it must be more so in relation to those facts and incidents which contribute to the amusement, instruction and improvement of society.

A residence of several years in East Mississippi, occupied in frequent journeyings from one portion to another, could not but furnish many such facts and incidents. With the view of husbanding these, and at the same time extending the circle of our usefulness and enjoyment, we shall proceed to collect together some of these "fragments" and, with your leave, Mr. Editor, spread them before the more than "five thousand" readers of the Advocate, "besides women and children," hoping to minister at least to some whose appetites may be a little keen.

The political storms and commotions which preceded the elections in November last have been followed by a great calm. One would have thought, judging from the zeal and clamor of the parties, that destruction awaited the country if either succeeded, or at least, that this was the opinion on both sides. But the alarm seems to have subsided. But sad traces are left behind it—guilty consciences, broken friendships, bruised faces and broken noses. Things really looked lowering for a while. A minister had to be careful how he coked out his politics, or he ran the risk of being shut out of the pulpit. Some brothren left the church, but they'll come back, I think.

We are thought to be a very gullible people—that is, we Americans—and I half believe it. Barnum seems never to want dupes upon whom to play off the endless tricks of his invention. And if he were to pass through East Mississippi, I am sure it would create an era in the history of the country. Some who are vastly his inferiors in the art of humbugging have tried their hands rather successfully. A low necromancer and ventriloquist, passing round from neighborhood to neighborhood, attracts interested crowds (among them religious people) and pockets a handsome profit. A circus attracted the largest concourse, I think, that I have seen in the country. Many of them were old, good members of the various churches, class-leaders, exhorters, stewards, deacons, preachers and pastors mingled indiscriminately with the eager crowd.

Thousands of dollars in a few years have gone from the pockets of the pious in this country for these worthy purposes, while matters of less importance, such as the missionary cause, bible cause, the support of preachers, etc., must go begging. Seriously what ought to be done with people in the church that will go to the circus, and other places of a kindred nature? Do they not bid such things God speed? Are they not partakers of the evil?

Intemperance prevails to a very alarming extent. Groceries are still extant in Kemper county and some parts of Lauderdale, though the late laws upon this subject have done much to remove these sinks of iniquity—these moral dead-falls—and it is to be hoped that the good sense and principle will utterly abolish this abominable liquor traffic.

In this connection, it has been somewhat dangerous for a preacher to venture upon a plain, out-spoken rebuke of this practice. Some Christians make money by selling liquor to make men drunk! This they do by the gallon. And you had better be careful how you talk about this matter, or you'll fall under the ban of these beloved brethren. A regular old fashioned doggery keeper will call you to a strict account for an attack upon his craft, and flog you if you do not make apologies. Such a thing actually occurred during the past year. The preacher did not return evil for evil, and the community almost unanimously reprobated, in the strongest terms, the abominable insult. The aggressor lost caste, even with his own patrons, and became rather an object of pity than of hatred.

So much for the evils. I have much good to say of this country, but must reserve it for another time. I must close by telling that it abounds in dogs. These animals consume much of the produce of the country, but produce nothing. A brother out west keeps seven. "Seven," said I; "they ate enough food last summer, when some of the people were almost starving, to have fed three or four children." "Yes," said he, "seven of them, or seven grown people." "Do you think it was right to take the children's bread and give it to dogs?" Well, but I had them here, and I am too humane to let anything about me starve." It seems to me that it was rather too dog manc!

EAST MISSISSIPPI, Dec. 4, 1855.

Bermuda papers of the 27th ult. announce the arrival of seven British war vessels from England and Halifax, as reinforcements to the West India squadron. One of the steamers will run as a mail boat between Halifax and Bermuda during the winter.

REUNION OF SAINTS IN HEAVEN.

The following extract from the sermon of Robert Hall, on the death of Dr. Ryland, is of rare eloquence even for Robert Hall:

"If the mere conception of the reunion of good men in a future state infused a momentary rapture in the mind of Tully; if an airy speculation, for there is reason to believe that it had little hold on his convictions—what may we be expected to feel who are assured the event by the sure word of God. How should we rejoice in the prospect, the certainty rather, of spending an blissfull eternity with those whom we loved on earth; of seeing them emerge from the ruins of the tomb, and the deeper ruins of the fall, not only unimpaired, but refined and perfected, with every tear wiped from their eyes, standing before the throne of God, in white robes, with palms in their hands, crying with a loud voice, 'Salvation to God that sitteth on the throne, and to the lamb, forever and ever.' What delight will it afford to renew the sweet counsel we have taken together; to recount the toils of combat and the labors of the way; and to approach, not the house, but the throne of God in company, in order to join the symphonies of heavenly voices, and loose ourselves amidst the splendors and fruitions of the beatific vision. To that state all the pious on earth are tending. If there is a law from whose operation none are exempt, which irresistibly conveys their bodies to darkness and the dust, there is another, not less certain and powerful, which conducts their spirits to the abodes of bliss, to the bosom of their Father and their God. The wheels of nature are not made to roll backward—everything presses on toward eternity. From the birth of time an impetuous torrent has set in, which bears all the sons of men towards that interminable ocean. Meanwhile heaven is attracting to itself whatever is congenial to its nature, is enriching itself with the spoils of earth, and collecting within its capacious bosom whatever is pure, permanent and divine, leaving nothing for the last fire to consume but the objects and slaves of concupiscence. There everything that grace has prepared and beautified shall be gathered and selected from the ruins of the world to adorn that eternal city 'which hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it, for the glory of God doth enlighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.' Let us obey the voice that calls us thither; let us 'seek the things that are above,' and no longer cleave to a world which must shortly perish, and which we must shortly quit, while we neglect to prepare for that in which we are invited to dwell forever. Let us follow by the track of those holy men, who have taught us by their voice, and encouraged us by their example, that laying aside every weight, and the sin that doth most easily beset us, we may run with patience the race that is set before us. While everything within and around us reminds us of the approach of death, and concurs to teach us that this is not our rest, let us hasten our preparation for another world, and earnestly implore that grace which alone can put an end to that fatal war which our desires have waged with our destiny. When these move in the same direction, and the will of heaven shall become our choice, all things shall be ours; life shall be divested of its vanity, and death of its terrors."

RELIGION WITHOUT THE CROSS.—Reader, as long as you live beware of a religion in which there is not much of the cross. You live in times when the warning is sadly needful. Beware, I say again, of a religion without the cross.

There are hundreds of places of worship in this day in which there is everything except the cross. There is carved oak and sculptured stone. There is stained glass and brilliant painting. There are solemn services and a constant round of ordinances. But the real cross of Christ is not there. Jesus crucified is not proclaimed in the pulpit. The Lamb of God is not lifted up, and salvation by faith in Him is not freely proclaimed. And hence all is wrong. Reader, beware of such places of worship. They are not apostolical. They would not have satisfied Paul.

There are thousands of religious books published in our times, in which there is everything except the cross. They are full of directions about sacraments and praises of the Church. They abound in exhortations about holy living, and rules for the attainment of perfection. They have plenty of fonts and crosses both inside and outside. But the real cross of Christ is left out. The Saviour and his dying love are either not mentioned, or mentioned in an unscriptural way, and hence they are worse than useless. Reader, beware of such books. They are not apostolical. They would never have satisfied Paul.

Paul gloried in nothing but the cross. Strive to be like him. Set Jesus crucified fully before the eyes of your soul. Listen not to any teaching which would interpose anything between you and Him. Do not fall into the old Galatian error. Think not that any one in this day is a better guide than the Apostles. Do not be ashamed of the old paths, in which men walked who were inspired by the Holy Ghost. Let not the vague talk of men, who speak great swelling words about catholicity, and the church, and the ministry, disturb your peace, and make you loose your hands from the cross. "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

Foreign Items by the Ariel.

The steamship Ariel, with dates to the 23d ult., arrived at New York on the morning of the 9th. She left Cowes on Sunday morning the 25th, and brings the second edition of the London Times of the day previous, which contains some items later than received by the Amazon. Consols on Saturday morning were quoted at 88¾. The money market was better.

Some trifling engagements have taken place at Kertsch between the advanced posts of the Russians under General Urangel and the Anglo-Turkish Contingent. The latter were hard pressed and had sent to Balaklava for reinforcements.

Kinburn was protected by a squadron of frigates and floating batteries in addition to the permanent fortifications. The Allies fear that the Russians may make an effort to retake it as soon as the river freezes over.

The London Times' Vienna correspondent states positively that preliminary steps towards the realization of the first of the four guarantee points are about to be taken. The first point relates to the principalities, and the second to the future position of the Christian population in Turkey. Conferences relative to the reorganization of Moldavia and Wallachia would begin at Constantinople as soon as the Austrian Envoy reaches that city.

The Times' Berlin correspondent states that it was rumored that the Swedish alliance was doubted there; and that the failure of the harvest in Russia was confirmed. Large quantities of corn were being imported by the Russian Government from Prussia.

Gen. Simpson and suite arrived at Marseilles on the 23d of November. The French squadron, under Admiral Bruat, with the Imperial Guard, was spoken in the Archipelago on the way home.

A writer in the London Times suggests the employment of the fugitive slaves in Canada on the cotton plantations of Jamaica, as a partial remedy for England's dependence on America for cotton.

According to the last advices from Soochum Kale, of the 27th of October, Omer Pasha's army had reached Tchimtchura, a town situate on the river Galisga, within twenty leagues of Kutais. His advanced guard was at Ohum, four leagues further on.

The garrison of Kars had received some provisions from a convoy intended for the Russian army. The conductors of it, Persians, allowed themselves to be bribed, and for a certain sum of money consented to deliver up to the Turks what was intended for their enemies. Some supplies were also expected at Kars, which had been sent from Erzeroum and Trebizond, but no one knew exactly where they were. Letters received by the Government at Berlin say nothing to confirm the report of the mandy of General Monravieff. It is said that the report was purposely put in circulation by the Greeks, in order to have an opportunity of refuting it, and thus throw doubt on other facts of proved authenticity.

The Paris Moniteur of November 23, publishes the following, dated Constantinople, November 12:

According to the last accounts, Omer Pasha was expecting a battle. General Monravieff had detached a division from his army, which was advancing by forced marches on Kutais by the Akhiska road. About 8,000 Turks, under Mustapha Pasha, had left Batoum to try and cut off this detachment. Early in the month they had reached Ozurgethi. The commander-in-chief had them meet him at Kutais, which will become the theater of some important engagement, unless the Russians prefer intrenching themselves in the files which protect the advance to Tiflis.

A dispatch from Marseilles, dated November 23, says:

The steamer Telegraph, Captain Nicholson, which left Kazatch on the 12th and Constantinople on the 14th inst., has arrived, with Gen. Simpson and suite. The Telegraph passed the French squadron, under Admiral Bruat, with the Imperial Guard on board, in the Greek Archipelago.

The Dublin correspondent of the London Times, of November 23, says:

Of the 300 emigrants who landed a few days since at Liverpool from America, it is stated a considerable portion were Irish, and chiefly from the county of Cork. They allege as the reasons of their return the great scarcity of employment and the efforts of the Know-Nothing party in the United States to discourage the Irish immigration.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times, writing on Nov. 22, says:

The government of the United States of America has lately given considerable orders to a Rhenish house, for delivery next spring, of bullet-proof steel suits.

From the South Pacific.

The steamship Lima arrived at Panama on the 20th ult., bringing dates from Valparaiso to October 31; Lima, November 10, and Paita, November 15. From a Valparaiso letter in the Panama Herald, we extract the following:

"News here, there is but little. We have in port the same French fleet as when I last wrote, save the steamer which has gone home; English men-of-war none; American none; but we have an American Revenue Cutter, the Joseph Lane, Captain Nones, Lieutenants Hunter, Key and Mason. The Lane is by far the handsomest vessel of her class that has ever graced these waters, and sails 14 and 15 knots.

"An affair, illustrating American 'spunk,' came off on the 28th inst., (Sunday,) at the railroad depot. The engineer of the steamer Peytona, being out of patience at the slowness of the train, which was just arriving from Vine del Mar, jumped off before the cars had fully stopped, for which presumption the Chief Superintendant caned him. As soon as the crowd had left and matters were quiet, the engineer walked up, and 'striking from the shoulder,' dropped the Superintendent, then quietly turned on his heel and walked away. But offended dignity could not stand this, so he was put in the lock-up for the night. Quite a little stir was made among the Yankees."

PERU.—From the Lima papers it is almost impossible to glean any news of interest, but from a private source we learn that, on the day of the Lima's departure, rumors were in circulation that Arequipa and some of the Southern cities had declared in favor of General Vivanco. This report, our informant adds, wanted confirmation, but was not considered improbable.

The newspapers report the death of Mr. Compton, for many years H. B. M.'s Consul at Islay.

BOLIVIA.—The revolutionary movement in this Republic under Avila, has been put down, and order is once more restored. Beyond this, the papers report no other news of importance.

THE HILLOTYPE.—A few years since a great deal was said about a discovery made by a Mr. Hill, who resides in some secluded place in Ulster Co., N. Y., of a method of taking daguerreotypes with all the natural colors of a landscape, dress, or person. Some time since, the announcement was made that the discovery was after all a failure, and could not be rendered of any practical value. But the Sangerfield Telegraph states that the indefatigable experimenter has been constantly at work in bringing his new thing to perfection, has at length succeeded, and seems likely to reap a handsome pecuniary reward, in addition to the fame which belongs to the persistent artist. He has already received an offer of $30,000 for the Hillotype, says the Telegraph, provided he will go to Europe and obtain foreign patents. This offer he has declined, deeming it insufficient.

From California.

The mails received by the El Dorado yesterday furnish no later dates than previously received by the Promethens, but we find in our files some additional items of interest. From the Alta California we extract the following:

Gen. William H. Richardson, U. S. Marshal for the Northern District of California, was basely assassinated in the streets of this city on the evening of the 17th inst., by a desperado named Charles Cora. Excepting a trifling difficulty in a bar-room on the previous evening, (so trifling that it gave rise to no apprehension that anything serious would grow out of it,) there was no manner of misunderstanding between Richardson and Cora; and even the difficulty alluded to was quieted and settled to the mutual satisfaction of the parties concerned. Just after explanations, and perhaps apologies, which took place at the "Bine Wing," on Montgomery street, Cora and General Richardson walked down Clay street together. They stopped near the corner of Leidesdorff street, where they were observed by at least two witnesses, and where Cora placed a pistol at Gen. Richardson's breast and shot him through; the ball entering just above the left nipple. Gen. Richardson fell dead upon the sidewalk, scarcely breathing after the fatal shot. The excitement which arose when these facts became known was widespread and intense. The Monumental bell was tapped, and many of the members of the old Vigilance Committee rallied to the call. Although there was some talk of lynching, yet wiser counsels prevailed, and it was conceded that the murderer was safe in the custody of the officers of the law. Fifty men were selected from the Vigilance Committee to guard the county jail, where Cora is now confined. Gen. Richardson was 33 years of age. He had been Quartermaster General of the California militia; was a member of the Democratic National Convention in 1852; and since March, 1853, has been U. S. Marshal for the Northern District of California. He was a faithful and efficient officer, gentlemanly in his deportment, a good citizen, and a warm friend. He leaves a young wife, who, in her delicate situation, is brought to the point of death by this sudden and melancholy bereavement.

Hon. Isaac B. Wall, Collector of the port of Monterey, and T. S. Williamson, an officer of the county of Monterey, were murdered on the 10th inst. The first reports were received here by express and telegraph, and produced an intense sensation throughout this community. Messrs. Wall and Williamson were on the road from Monterey to San Luis Obispo, and were assassinated when about 25 miles from the former place. They were both shot through the head, from behind—the wounds being apparently made by rifles. Wall had upwards of $1,000 in a belt upon his person, and Williamson $150, also in a belt. None of this money was taken—from which an inference is drawn that revenge was the motive of the assassination. It may be, however, that the murderers intended robbery, but were alarmed when they accomplished their object, and to this hypothesis there is some evidence, to-wit: that Wall's saddle bags were opened and his papers strewn about; his pistol was stolen, as also was a ring which was taken from his finger. Mr. Wall was a member of the Legislature in 1852 and 1853, and in the session of the latter year was Speaker of the Assembly. When President Pierce came into power, he was appointed Collector of the District of Monterey, which office he held up to the time of his death. He was well known throughout the State, and had a host of ardent friends. At present there is a mystery hanging over this tragic occurrence, which time only can clear up. A party of outlaws, presumed to be connected with the murder, were traced to the Salinas river, where they made a stand to resist an arrest from a company of men who were in pursuit of them. A fight ensued, in which two of the pursuing party were killed and two wounded, according to the accounts received by telegraph from San Jose, although subsequent advices represent that but one was killed. The whole country round about Monterey is in a state of great excitement, and determined to arrest the murderers. They cannot possibly escape.

Lt. Archibald McRae, commanding the U. S. surveying schooner Ewing, committed suicide on Saturday evening, on board of his vessel in this harbor, while laboring under temporary insanity. Deceased was thirty-five years old.

Three miners—Arthur P. Haven, Robinson Dane and Nathaniel Block—were killed by the caving in of a bunch of earth at Ridgeville, Trinity county, a few days since.

From the Isthmus.

The steamship El Dorado, Capt. Ludwig, from Aspinwall and Havana, arrived yesterday morning at 8 o'clock. She brings the California mails from the 5th to the 20th ult., no later, however, than previously received.

The El Dorado left Aspinwall on the evening of the 5th and reached Havana at mid-day on the 11th.

The Crescent City, from New York, due at Havana on the 8th, had not arrived there on the 12th, and as is supposed, some accident has happened to her. The El Dorado left Havana at 5 o'clock, P. M., on the same day for New Orleans.

The Aspinwall Courier says:

It is amusing to hear those passengers who are detained here, on account of the non-connection of the Havana steamer, threaten how they will score the Company when they reach home, when we reflect how much their predecessors have threatened and how little they have ever done when in the same predicament. When they arrive at New Orleans, they cease to brood over their detention, except as "lost time," which they have "to make up" by traveling faster. We hope to hear, per next arrival, of a change in the Company's arrangements, which will enable them to keep up this connection or abolish it altogether. As matters now are and have for some time been, if the passengers do not complain bitterly, it certainly is not for lack of cause.

IMPORTANT TO MARINERS.—The Washington Union publishes the following notice from the Hydrographic Office, Admiralty, London, to our State Department, under date of the 24th of October, 1855:

"The harbor authorities at the port of Pernambuco have given notice that a white buoy has recently been placed to mark the outer edge of the shoals off Olinda, on the coast of Brazil.

"The buoy is a cone-shaped, or can buoy, 8 feet high above these a level, and 7 feet in diameter above its base; it is painted white to distinguish it from the two buoys on the Banco de Ingles, or English bank, (which lies about 4 miles to the south-westward,) the more northern of which has red and white vertical stripes, and the southern is a red buoy.

"The Olinda buoy is moored in 5 fathoms at low water, at about 2 miles E. S. E. of Olinda point, with the following approximate bearings: St Antonio tower W. N. W. ½ N., the flagstaff of Fort Bursco W. by S. ½ S., and the tower of the naval arsenal in Pernambuco S. W. by W. In clear weather it may be seen at from 5 to 6 miles distance.

"Vessels not bound to the port of Pernambuco should not approach the shore on this part of the coast of Brazil nearer than 8 miles, keeping in a depth of 10 fathoms, as within that depth the soundings are irregular, and the reefs in many parts steep to."

All bearings are magnetic. Variation 9 degrees west.

This notice affects the following Admiralty charts: Pernambuco roadstead, No. 535; Maranhoa to Pernambuco, No. 528; Pernambuco to Victoria, No. 529.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1855.

Editorial Correspondence.

Eutaw, Dec. 14, 1855.

I write in Conference room, at night. The bishop will soon read out appointments—a list of which I send you. The citizens of Eutaw have extended towards the members and visitors of Conference the most refined and generous hospitality. It has been my good fortune to have a home, for the time, with the family of Col. Womack—Let Eutaw come visit Lagle, as soon as they please have another session here! Our friend, D. C. B. Conaway, the stationed preacher, has catered well to the occasion, accommodating all—parlors and quarters.

I am sorry to record, as one of the effects of this absorbing College interest, a comparative barrenness of pulpit labors—though congregations have been very large and attentive. On sabbath Dr. Summers, by request, delivered a sermon in commemoration the of life, labors and death of the late P. Elder of this District—Rev. C. McLeod. At the same hour, in the Methodist Church, the writer paid a tribute to the late Rev. T. H. Foster. He was once stationed in this place, and his memory is as a sweet savor.

The largest and best Church is the Presbyterian—of which Rev. Mr. Bowman is pastor. The Methodists here and hereabouts, and their friends, are numerous enough, and strong and good enough to have a better one than they now worship in. Eutaw is worthy of it. Some talk there is, of a commodious brick Church—with adjoining ground for a grave yard or parsonage. Why may it not be—before a year rolls by? Rise up and build!

The next session is to be held at Tuskegee. News comes up that Levi Moore, a faithful itinerant had died on his mountain circuit. For painful and sufficient cause, on his own confession, a young man—once promising, has been expelled—W. M. Lovelady. Alas, death were better.

I was deeply interested in a meeting held Thursday night, presided over by Rev. R. A. Bullock—the Ministerial Education Society. Its object, to aid young men, who feel called of the Holy Ghost to the ministry, to avail themselves of scholastic benefits. Some are helped to the extent of tuition—others of tuition and board—as need is. They come up, on the recommendation of the Quarterly Conferences, where they live and are locally known. There are now eleven of these, being educated for and in the ministry, at Summerfield. No object is more willingly contributed to by our friends and members. Formal collections are not made. Aid is taken, here and there, as offered. Is not this a germ of the plan for the ministrial education, of which there is a general and felt want? Let these brethren work it out. Their work may hereafter be matter of history. Thus far, it has grown upon them—by class meetings and other characteristic institutes of Methodism, grew up—took form and position, wisely, without design. I trust this Society will put its anniversary meetings more prominently forward. These things ought not be done in a corner. Coming events cast shadows before. Something is to be done—will be. We are in motion. What remains for us is to determined where we shall bring up.

Bishop Paine presided over this tedious session with marked patience and ability.

H. N. McTyeire.

Are You Tempted?—Has Satan folded his pinions in your path, in the guise of an Angel of Light just sent from the mercy seat? Has he then ventured upon your admiration, and shaken pearls from his plumes, like dew drops from the fringe of an eagle, and offered you all, and more, for one vow of allegiance and service? Has this world drawn near, as a mother to her first born, throwing roses at your feet, holding the sparkling chalice to your lips, and claiming, in blandest tones, a share in your affections? And, more to be dreaded than either or both, have you heard the silence and solitude of your soul startled by the tones of your own seeming, prompting you, with all earnestness, to take the pearls, and drink the wine, and live as your temptors bid? And have you been troubled by day, and terrified by night, until you are almost ready to yield—but still resisted, looking toward heaven? If so, I beseech you, turn not away from the sublime contemplation.

Blessed be God! I have "good news" for you from that "far country." There is no tempter in heaven! On earth, every land, every city, every house is open to the visits of this fruitless solicitor. Even Eden—the garden of the Lord—and the heart of Eve—the purest that ever beat in the bosom of woman—were not safe from the foul incursion. Alas for us that the tempter succeeded! Hence all our sin and shame and woe. But in heaven the eye never sees, the ear never hears, the mind never knows, and the heart never feels the form or voice, the thought or sense of any temptation. "Fear not!" says he who was made "tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." "Fear not!" says the Saviour, and his joyful people march along on the hilltops of glory, singing as they march.

So of good courage, therefore, oh tempted one! Say to your soul, "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear; the Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?" Only resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Only neglect the world, and the world will soon resign you to the company of religion. Only deny yourself, and the Spirit of Christ will safely conduct you to the bowers of perfect peace.

SANCTITY OF THE CONFESSIONAL.

A case involving the right of priests to withhold facts imparted to them at the Confessional, recently came before the Criminal Court of Richmond, Va. A man named John Cronin, was on trial for causing the death of his wife, by beating; and in defence it was brought forward that the prisoner had found deceased in company with a man under circumstances which fixed upon her the crime of adultery. The prosecution then called, as a witness, Rev. John Teiling, a Catholic priest, who testified that the deceased had declared to her husband, and in the presence of witness, that she was innocent of the crime charged upon her by the prisoner. The witness was further questioned by prisoner's counsel as to what Mrs. Cronin disclosed to him at the Confessional concerning her guilt or innocence. This the witness refused to answer, it being a fundamental tenet of the Catholic Church to hold all matters, disclosed at the Confessional, strictly secret. The counsel for prisoner insisted that the Court should compel witness to answer, but the Judge decided that confession being made in view of forgiveness for the sin disclosed, should be held sacred and inviolable. He said that:

"In this country, where the free exercise of religion is tolerated, it would be violative of its fundamental law to infringe upon any tenet of any religion, and the confessional being held by Catholics as one of the fundamental tenets of their church, could not be encroached upon without hazarding a violation of that law with guaranteed freedom to all religious persuasions in the exercise of their opinions; and concluded with the opinion that the witness was exempt from any obligation to disclose a declaration made to him at the confessional."

The case was one that exercised a great deal of interest in Richmond.

Among other questions put to the Priest while on the witness stand, was the following:

"By Counsel for the Prisoner: If, in her sacramental confession to you, Mrs. Cronin admitted her guilt in a hundred instances, could she, in the declaration made to her husband in your presence have referred to her confession, and made statements contrary to it."

"Witness: "She could have referred to any sacramental declaration which she previously made if she thought proper, and have even contradicted in declaration before her husband and myself any statements made at the confessional; but I could say nothing."

And yet the priest is allowed to state to the Court assertions made by the woman, which he may know to be contrary to the truth, and the Jury may thus receive as false that which is true, and as true that which is false. In other words, the Priest is acknowledged as a power higher than our Courts of Justice and his absolution as a sufficient cause for the commission of perjury and the concealment of crime.

Path of the Just—Its Radiancy.—The path of the sun is a radiant path. It is not only glorious. That expresses but half the truth. It is glorious because it is radiant. The sun is not like the moon—a mere reflector, glittering with his borrowed light. God has given it light in itself, and therefore it shines, and cannot but shine. If the mountains could be lifted up, until they should enclose it like a wall, and the clouds, ascending from the mountains, should concentrate their masses, and overarch it like a roof, it would shine still. Nay, made the more intense by the confinement, it would turn the mountains into diamonds, and the clouds into crystals, and flash through them all, and fill them all with new splendors.

So with the path of the just—his glory is from within. It is a radiation. Put him where you will, he shines, and cannot but shine. For instance, imprison Joseph, and he will shine out on all Egypt, cloudless as the sky where the rain never falls. Imprison Daniel, and the dazzled lions will retire to their lairs, and the king come forth to worship at his rising, and all Babylon bless the beauty of the brighter and better day. Imprison Peter, and with an angel for his harbinger star, he will spread his aurora from the fountains of the Jordan to the wells of Beersheba, and break like the morning over mountain and sea. Imprison Paul, and there will be high noon over all the Roman Empire. Imprison John, and the isles of the Ægean, and all the coasts around, will kindle with sunset visions too gorgeous to be described, but never to be forgotten—a boundless panorama of prophecy, gliding from sky to sky, and enchanting the nations with openings of heaven, transits of saints and angels, and the ultimate glory of the city and kingdom of God. Not only so, for modern times have similar examples—examples in the Church, and examples in the State. For instance, hurry Luther in the depths of the Black Forest, and "the angel that dwelt in the bush" will honor him there; the trees around him will burn like shafts of ruby, and his glowing orb loom up again, round and clear, as the light of all Europe. Thrust Bunyan into the gloom of Bedford jail, and as he leans his head on his hand, the murky horizon of Britain will flame with fiery symbols—"delectable mountains" and celestial mansions, with holy pilgrims cronped on the golden hills, and bands of bliss, from the gates of pearl, hastening to welcome them home.

Directions from the Episcopal Church.—The Episcopal Recorder says: "In his recent charge to the Maine Convention, Bishop Hughes states, and we record the fact as one which deserves to awaken the gravest consideration: That between the General Conventions of 1847 and 1853, the names of 154 clergymen disappeared from the list—that of this number 83 died in that time; 4 had returned to Britain, whence they came; 4 had relinquished the ministry and been dropped from the catalogue; that 46 had been displaced; the other eighteen are also probably dead."

OUR ENGLISH CORRESPONDENCE.

The history of the Kingdom of Sardinia and that of the Empire of Russia are in some respects not dissimilar, but in others they form a remarkable contrast. They have both emerged from insignificance and obscurity to their respective ranks in the scale of nations, but the means by which each has achieved its eminence are widely diverse in character. The annals of the house of Savoy inform us of gradual but always legitimate accessions of territory, power and influence, whilst the history of Russia speaks of little else than unprincipled and lawless aggressions. The former has fairly won for itself its high position by the exercise of wisdom, prudence and judicious policy; the latter has stealthily gained its territory by a contemptible system of cunning—a quality which differs as much from wisdom as the counterfeit coin, and which seldom fails in the long run to defeat its own ends, and to bring disgrace and disaster upon those who practice it.

The house of Savoy boasts its eight centuries of "noble traditions." It had its origin in the petty countship of Maurienne, a small province or valley of Savoy, extending from the Alps to the river Isere on one side, and from the Tarentasia to Dauphine on the other. Some of the first accessions to this territory were gained from western princes, who obtained passages for their troops through its mountain passes by giving to the counts some increase to their lands or their political power. In fact the early history of this cradle of the house of Savoy forms a most complete illustration of the value of the possession of these passes, which have been not inaptly defined as "the gates of Italy." For instance, one of the counts received from Henry V. of Germany, in reward for his fidelity to the Emperor, when the latter was at war with the Pope, the investiture of Savoy as an Imperial county, with the style of Count of Savoy, Piedmont and Burgundy. On the whole, the princes of the house of Savoy have been more good than great, more wise and prudent than able. They have also been singularly lucky in their marriages, by which they have added largely alike to their influence and their possessions. Situated as the territory of the house of Savoy has ever been—a little State in the neighborhood of great ones—a treacherous and double-dealing policy on the part of its princes must inevitably have resulted in their extinction. Cunning must surely have destroyed them, whereas wisdom has not only saved them from destruction, but enabled them, in favorable conjunctures, to profit largely, and to add prodigiously to to their territory.

The Savoyard princes have not indeed been without their clouds of misfortune and reverses, sometimes amounting to deprivation of territory; but they seem to have generally emerged from their adversity wiser and better men, and learned to build upon the ruins of misfortunes superstructures of new successes. Almost the only blot in the page of their history is the readiness with which some of them lent their armies to Rome to hunt down the Protestant inhabitants of the valley of Piedmont—the glorious Waldenses.

It was under the stipulations of the Quadruple Alliance that the Duke of Savoy got possession of the island of Sardinia, and first took the title of King. The race of sceptered monarchs of Sardinia does not, therefore, date so far back as the beginning of the eighteenth century. It is not quite so old a monarchy as that of Russia. The Congress of Vienna not only got back for the King of Sardinia the hereditary continental dominions of which the French revolutionary armies had deprived him, but obtained for him, in addition, the territory and city of Genoa.

The population of the whole kingdom is now about five millions, three-fifths of whom are the inhabitants of the province of Piedmont. The island of Sardinia is described as the least civilized part of the kingdom to which it gives its name; the towns and cities of Piedmont, on the other hand, being more populous and thriving than Italian towns in general. The late Charles Albert was, we believe, the seventh King of Sardinia. His unfurling of the banner of Italian independence amid the revolutions of 1848—his signal defeat at Novara—his resignation of the crown to his son, the present king—and his subsequent death, are all matters fresh in our recollection.

Such are a few of the more prominent landmarks in the history of the house of Savoy, whose present crowned head, Victor Emanuel I., is to visit France and England in the course of a few days—his visit having been delayed somewhat by his infirm state of health.

The bold attitude which this prince at once assumed on the outbreak of hostilities with Russia, promptly casting in his lot with the Allies, by declaring war with the same power, and dispatching a contingent of 15,000 men to the Crimea, are among the most significant events of the times. His liberal-minded policy, both domestic and foreign, becomes perhaps the more remarkable when we remember that both his wife and mother were Austrian archduchesses.

Coming among us as the representative of a government which under peculiar difficulties has solved the problem of constitutional freedom in Italy, as one of the foremost champions of religious liberty, and as the fearless confronter of the giant despot of the North—such a prince will not fail to receive a most cordial welcome from the people of England. The echo of that welcome will ring throughout Europe, and make the petty, trembling imitators of the Czar tingle with sulky resentment and fear.

EXTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

Manny, Nov. 5, 1855.

Dear Bro. McTyeire—I hope it will be pleasing to the readers of the Advocate that the Lord has been and is still doing great things for us on Dugdemona mission. We have had good times here since last spring, and among those happy seasons, some most signal victories. We have had the pleasure of seeing the ranks of the enemy broken, his flagstaff fall, and himself covering his retreat with his own polution, driven back into his own murky den. But experience informs us that he does not stay there, for we have met him again and again. But under such a leader as we have, we are admonished not to fear, for we believe that our God does battle for us.

We have two very efficient local preachers on this field of labor—Bros. Williams and Cullon—who are ever ready and willing to contribute all their strength of body and of mind for the promotion of the cause of Christ and of holiness. We have lately had a most interesting meeting of seven days duration. Bro. Cullen was with us all the time, and Bro. Defreese preached for us twice—and the enemy was there. But we can say, thanks be to God who giveth us the victory, for we have got it. While the fathers sang and prayed, the anxious mothers came into the altar to comfort their penitent children, whose cheeks were bathed with the active flowing tears of an anxious mother, nor was it in vain, for at such times God was there and did accept the sacrifice, and made glad the mourners' hearts. The happy result of the seven days' meeting was the conversion of 25 precious souls, and the adding of six to the church. During this year we have taken in to the church over 100, baptised between 90 and 100 children, and nine adults.

This is an interesting field of labor, and calls aloud for an efficient preacher next year. May God send such an one, is the sincere prayer of,

Yours,

W. A. Manly.

The brig Mary Means, Captain Hopkins, from Salt Key, Turks Island, arrived at New York on the 9th, with dates to November 24. The salt crop was entirely exhausted, and the M. M. is consequently 1500 bushels short of a cargo. The British brig Victoria had also sailed a few days prior for Baltimore, with but a moiety of a cargo. At Grand Turk no salt was procurable.

Missionary Reports.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South.

Prairie Creek Mission, Alabama Conference.

I now transmit to you the report of the state of this mission for the third and fourth quarters of the current year.

Since my last report, I have baptised twenty adults and twenty-seven children. Received into the church, twenty-six; expelled four, and discontinued one. The work of the Lord has been revived at nearly all the plantations on the mission. A goodly number give evidence of genuine conversion. The mission meets with general favor, and may be regarded as in a healthful and prosperous condition. Two of the plantations are provided with church edifices. The one on the plantation of Mr. Thos. M. Johnson would put many of our village churches to the blush. The church, pulpit and seats are all nicely painted, the pulpit furnished with a large bible and hymn-book. A neat table stands in front of the pulpit. Elements for the administration of the sacrament always at hand. And, in addition to these conveniences, the church has attached to it a sweet-toned bell, weighing 350 pounds. It is very desirable that other planters should follow his example, at least so far as to have comfortable preaching-houses erected on their plantations.

Was not the house of Obed-Edom blessed because the ark of God was there?

J. C. Huckabee.

Nov. 23, 1855.

To Save a Soul.—Nothing is more desirable than to rescue a soul from death eternal—he does this who brings back his erring brother to the way of life. Wherefore this noble work is not to be neglected. We see how much our Lord regards giving bread to the hungry, and drink to the thirsty; but much more precious is salvation to the soul and the life of the body. Therefore, let us take care lest souls redeemed by Christ should perish by our sloth, whose salvation God does in a sense put in our hands; not that we can of ourselves convey salvation, but that God by our ministration delivers and preserves what otherwise seems near to destruction.

Louisiana Items.

The Shreveport Gazette of the 8th has the following paragraphs:

The river is rising slowly, and a very favorable indication is its high red color—affording proof that the water which gives that color, comes from a great distance.

The snag boat Gopher, destined for the raft, arrived here on Saturday morning, under command of Capt. Dillingham. She left on Tuesday for the field of her operations. This boat is to be followed by another immediately, and we will doubtless have the pleasure of seeing open navigation between Shreveport and upper Red River.

The Police Jury of the parish of Caddo, which met on Monday, fixed the license for retailing liquor in the parish at five hundred dollars, and the trustees of the town of Shreveport, on Thursday night, fixed the town license at the same figures. The State license costs one hundred dollars, so that the tax on retailing liquor in the town of Shreveport for the present year will be eleven hundred dollars.

A tremendous hail storm had occurred in Shreveport, and throughout the parish. The stones were of the size of partridge eggs, and they drove horses and cattle almost frantic. The Gazette relates the following accidents which occurred in consequence:

A gentleman named William Adams, who lives near Pemberton's store, when about six miles from Shreveport was thrown from his horse and kicked on the head, fracturing his skull so that he died in four or five days.

The horses attached to Dr. George's carriage, having only the driver on, ran away, struck a tree and tore themselves loose, carrying away a part of the pole. The forewheels of the carriage were entirely broken. The horses were stopped after running about a hundred yards. We have heard of many narrow escapes by various persons.

The Natchitoches Chronicle of the 8th, says:

The planters of our parish have generally gotten through with picking cotton, and the crop is pretty well ascertained. In this parish, not more than a half of what would be termed a fair crop, has been made. This is not only the case with Natchitoches, but also with the parishes above us. The backwardness of the season, the drought, the worm and the rot have all conspired this year to reduce the crops.

The Baton Rouge Advocate learns, by a letter from Donaldsonville, that a fatal shooting affair occurred in that town on the 13th, under the following circumstance:

A barber named Laoroix approached a gentleman by the name of Larroque, and insulted him, which he did not resent, telling the barber he wished to have no difficulty with him; whereupon Laoroix drew a revolver and shot him through the heart. Laoroix attempted to make his escape, but was arrested and committed to jail for trial at the next court—no bail being allowed. Mr. Larroque is said to have been a peaceable and hard-working man.

We find the following paragraphs in the Monroe (Ouachita Parish) Register of the 8th:

The Ouachita, as high up as this point, is still in good boating order, but will not continue so long unless we soon have a change of weather. Pleasant sunny days cannot be considered the "Boatsman's delight" during low water.

The weather for the last week has been delightful—just cool enough to render it both healthy and pleasant, and to afford our planters a fine opportunity for picking out the balance of their cotton.

Our streets still continue crowded with movers, some of them on their way to Texas, and others intending to settle in the parishes immediately West of us, which are rapidly filling up with an intelligent and wealthy population. The Swamp, or low alluvial lands East of us, the garden spot of Louisiana, are also rapidly filling up with wealthy planters. Northern Louisiana will soon be the most densely populated portion of the State.

The Thibodaux Minerva of Saturday last says:

The weather up to yesterday morning has been clear and delightful. Our planters are still busily engaged in sugar-making. There appears to be no increase in the yield of the cane; and it is now positively certain that the present sugar crop of the State will fall materially short of that of last year. The health of town and parish is excellent. Business, though not precisely brisk, cannot be considered dull.

Our bayou is still in a good navigable condition, though the water is now at a stand.

We are pleased to hear that the bridge project meets with great favor; and there remains not a doubt that it will be constructed during the coming summer. The bridge and a shell road to the railroad alone can save our town from going down; and it devolves upon the owners of property to put their shoulders to the wheel and keep the ball in motion.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

Washington, Dec. 10, 1855.—Senate.—On motion of Mr. Weller, the select committee on the Pacific railroad, appointed at the last session, was ordered to be continued—vacancies to be filled by the Chair.

Mr. Adams' resolution providing for the election of the officers of the Senate to-day, was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. Bayard gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill providing for the public printing, engraving and binding. Adjourned.

House.—The House again resumed voting for a speaker, with the following result: Mr. Banks, 100; Richardson, 74; Fuller, 31; Zollicoffer, 4; Walker, 2; scattering, 10—necessary to a choice 111.

Mr. Thorington offered the following on his own responsibility:

Resolved, That the House will proceed viva voce to the election of a Speaker; and if, after the roll has been called three times, no member shall have received a majority of the whole number of votes, the roll shall again be called, and the candidate then receiving the largest number of votes, provided it be a majority of a quorum, shall be declared elected Speaker.

This fell like a bombshell, occasioning much excitement. Several members in the same breath moved to lay the resolution on the table, declaring that was the proper place for it.

Mr. Giddings, amid the confusion, earnestly appealed to his friend from Iowa to withdraw the resolution, believing that the feeling of the House was becoming more favorable to Mr. Banks.

The yeas and nays were ordered, on laying the resolution on the table, and the question was raised whether Mr. Thorington could withdraw his resolution.

Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, appealed to his friends to waive their objections and permit the gentleman from Iowa to withdraw the resolution, he desiring to do so.

Cries of "no objection," "agreed," etc., and the resolution being withdrawn, the House again proceeded to vote for a Speaker, with the usual unsuccessful result up to the time of adjournment.

Washington, Dec. 11, 1855.—Senate.—Mr. Brodhead offered a resolution that the Committee of Finance inquire into the expediency of reporting the appropriation bills for the support of the government, or adopting other measures with the view of obtaining some speedy action on them. He said he would ask the Senate to consider the question of the right and power of the Senate to originate appropriation bills, his object being to avoid the evils of night sessions.

Mr. Cass gave notice that he should move to-morrow to go into election of the Standing Committees.

The Senate then went into executive session.

The House of Representatives met and proceeded to ballot unsuccessfully for speaker.

Senate.—December 12.—On motion of Mr. Cass, the Senate proceeded to the election of the various committees, by ballot. The following committees were thus filled:

Committee on Public Buildings—Messrs. Bayard, James, Hunter, Thomson of N. J., Pratt, Hale.

Committee on Engrossed Bills—Messrs. Fitzpatrick, Cellamer, Wade.

Committee on Library—Messrs. Pearce, Cass, Bayard.

Committee on Engrossed Bills—Messrs. Jones of Iowa, Sumner.

The gentlemen first named on each committee was elected Chairman thereof, and the Senate adjourned.

Senate.—December 13.—Mr. Jones, of Iowa, submitted a resolution authorizing certain committees to employ clerks.

Mr. Adams moved an amendment providing that no person shall be appointed who holds an office under the general government. This was rejected, and the resolution was adopted.

The Senate then adjourned.

House.—The House again resumed voting for a speaker, as follows:

Banks, 105; Richardson, 75; Fuller, 33; Leiter, 2; "scattering," 0.

At the conclusion of the roll Mr. M. Mullen said: "Before I vote I give notice that unless within the next three days we elect a speaker, I will submit a proposition by way of compromise."

Mr. Giddings, (loudly)—"What is the proposition?"

Mr. Florence—"You can't compromise principles." [Confusion.]

Mr. Giddings—(impatiently)—"Tell what it is."

Mr. Houston—(on the opposite side of the Hall)—"It is that you come over to us—a very fair proposition." [Laughter.]

Mr. Giddings—"Make it now."

Mr. Houston. All of you promise to come over to us, and I'll make it now. [Laughter, and cries of "You can't come that game!" "No doubt you'd agree!"]

The House proceeded with the balloting, and adjourned without effecting an election.

The House met and proceeded to ballot for Speaker, with the usual result.

Storm in Louisville.—On the night of the 8th a violent gale occurred in Louisville, which caused damage to several buildings, but nothing of serious account, however. The Journal says:

About midnight the wind changed to the northwest, and commenced blowing a perfect hurricane. The greatest damage done by the storm was to Capt. Bunce's new steamer Ophelia. She was lying at the foot of Eighth and secured to the wharf by a chain and three or four cables, all of which she parted. The storm blew her up the river as far as the foot of Sixth street, and she was then carried almost directly across to the river and lodged on a ledge of rocks close to the Indian chute and nearly opposite the lime-kiln. She was lying in this situation all day yesterday, the current keeping her wheel constantly in motion; and she will probably have to remain there until a rise in the river takes place.

Deaths.

SAMUEL P. BEASLEY was born in Orange county, Va., Sept. 15, 1803, and died near Canton, Miss., Oct. 12, 1855, it was thought of yellow fever.

He professed religion in the year 1826, near Canton, Tenn., and united with the C. Presbyterian Church, and remained an acceptable member of the same—being a ruling elder part of the time—until, 1836, when he removed to Jackson, Miss., and there being no church of the C. P. in the place, he united with the M. E. Church, and was a faithful and acceptable member of the same—filling the offices of class-leader and steward part of the time—until called from the scene of trial and suffering to his rest and reward above.

His piety was uniform, exemplary and productive of good—giving evidence that he was a light of the world, and salt of the earth."

He was retiring, modest, quiet, unobtrusive, a man of deep, earnest feeling, having communion with the Father of his spirit—often praising God at home, where none but his companion could see or hear.

Two of his daughters were married to preachers of the M. E. Church—Rev. James Whitman, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. W. R. Gober, of the Pacific Conference, had some deep and trying afflictions. At one time he saw his wife and his eldest and youngest child all let down into one grave.

It was my privilege to know him nearly two years, and it was to respect and love him for his many excellent qualities. But he has gone away, though not without leaving a good example, a good name, a good influence, and a pleasing thought that he is safe in heaven. Oh, may his death be made a blessing to the bereaved and sorrowing ones! May the widow's heart be staid upon God, and the orphans find that He is their strength and support.

GEN. HARNEY AND THE SIOUX.—The latest news from Gen. Harney's command we find in a letter published in the St. Louis Republican, dated Mauvaise Terra, October 12. They had been marching for fifteen days in the heart of the Sioux country. They were 120 miles from Fort Pierre, and would soon turn their faces in that direction, if no Indians showed themselves. Two different bands of Sioux are anxious to sue for peace.

The Oswego (N. Y.) Chronicle contains the announcement of the marriage of two Doctors, bona fide M. D.'s, viz.: Albert E. Miller, M. D., of Rome, N. Y., and Mary E. Walker, M. D., of Oswego town. They opened their shingles and established themselves in Rome, and commenced business under the firm of Drs. Miller and Miller—the wife still retaining an identity of her own in the business affairs by making use of her maiden name.

☞ A REPRIEVE.—We do not refer to a reprieve from a capital punishment. These is a slow torture from which a respite is equally desirable. We refer to dyspepsia—a word in which all the horrors of indigestion are summed up. To the sufferers by this painful and harassing disease, we can hold out not only bright hopes, but the certainty of immediate relief and permanent cure. These is a tonic, cordial, and alterative principle in Dr. Hoofland's German Bitters, which inevitably arrests and changes the morbid action of the stomach and the secretive organs, removes the disease, and restores to health. A Teacher Wanted.

The Rev. Thos. B Russel having withdrawn from the charge of the Tuskaloosa Methodist Female High School, a vacancy has been thereby created, of which it is the object of this advertisement to give notice and to invite application for the vacant situation. It is proper to state that a very large and commodious building, situate in a beautiful part of the city of Tuskaloosa, together with the necessary apparatus for a school of this description, will be furnished gratis. That the school since its establishment, about two years since, has averaged about 75 pupils, which it is believed could be raised to at least 100. That Tuskaloosa is one of the healthiest and most desirable places as a private residence in the South-west, and being the site of the State University, offers superior advantages as a place for the education of both males and females. The employment of the subordinate teachers will be left to the principal. It will be expected that persons applying unknown to the trustees will furnish some testimonial of their ability.

The house is calculated for boarders, and it is expected that the principal will take as boarders such as may apply. The present term of the school will end on the 15th of February next, at which time, it is proposed to open the succeeding session.

Those desirous of taking this school will address J. J. Ormond, President of the Board of Trustees, Tuskaloosa, who will give any further information which may be desired.

CURE OF PANAMA FEVER.

PROVIDENCE, Sept. 22, 1855.

Mr. James A. Rhodes—Having been entirely cured by your remedy, I take pleasure in assuring you of the benefit it has been to me. I was first attacked by chills and fever on the Isthmus of Panama, several months since, and in spite of the different remedies and treatment I adopted, my health grew worse, until I commenced the use of your Fever and Ague Cure. Since that time I have not had a single chill, and am now in the enjoyment of good health.

Wishing your medicine the success that it merits, I remain truly yours.

MISSISSIPPI CENTRAL RAILROAD.—The Canton Commonwealth, of the 24th ult., says: "The work on this important road is progressing rapidly. The earthwork from this point to Big Black, and twenty miles beyond, will be completed by the first of January next—the contracts being nearly finished already. President Goodman, we are informed, purchased iron for forty-five miles of road in New York last summer, thirty miles of which is to be appropriated to this end of the road, and to be laid down during the winter. It is expected that this road will be in running order, from Canton to some point near Richmond, Holmes county, a distance of thirty miles, by the first of May next. Much credit is due President Goodman and the officers of this road for the able manner in which they have managed its affairs."

The link between Jackson and Canton—some twenty-four miles—will be finished in a few months. The cars are already running twelve miles out from Jackson, and the work is rapidly progressing. The connection at Canton with the Central Road will make a railroad communication, through a fertile and populous country, of nearly sixty miles, and it cannot fail to yield munificent returns upon the investments made by the liberal and enterprising stockholders. If our Northern Road was only completed to Jackson, the business it would obtain from this Central railroad would be enormous. It would immediately commence paying good dividends, and the stock which is now held at nominal prices would rise to par. There can be no reasonable question of this; and, if a dozen of our capitalists would only put their shoulders to the wheel in good earnest, the means might be raised and the road completed to the capital of Mississippi in twelve months. But will they? We fear not. They are as hard to move as the pyramids.

The Niagara railway suspension bridge—that triumph of engineering—is now completed. When first projected, it was declared by no less an authority than Robert Stephenson to be impracticable; and even when its construction was somewhat advanced, he gave it as his opinion that though light carriages might pass over, it would inevitably break down beneath the weight of a railway train. The most peculiar fact just now is, that the engineering world now declare that had the same principle of construction been applied a few years ago, the Britannia tubular bridge over the straits of Menai, in England, by Stephenson, might have been dispensed with, and the end he accomplished at one-third the cost.

In the library of the British Museum may be seen a book, printed in the Low Dutch, containing upwards of sixty specimens of paper, made of different articles, the most of which man's experiments as early as 1772. In the manufacture of paper almost every species of tough fibrous vegetable, and even animal substances, have at one time or another been employed. The roots of trees, their bark, the vine of hops, the tendrils of the vine, the stalks of the nettle, the common thistle, the stem of the hollyhock, the sugar cane, cabbage stalks, wood-shavings, saw-dust, hay, straw, willow, and the like, have all been used, says Herring, in his work on ancient and modern paper-making, in the manufacture of paper.

THREE STEAMBOATS BURNED IN ST. LOUIS.—The three steamboats burned at the St. Louis wharf, on the night of the 7th, were the Parthenia, the Prairie City and the Twin City. The fire commenced on the former. The loss was estimated at $100,000.

WASHINGTON ITEMS.

BY THE NATIONAL AND SOUTHERN LINES.

SAVANNAH, Dec. 18.—The British schooner Baltic, Capt. Pruden, just arrived from Nassau, brings intelligence of the loss of the steamship Crescent City, which sailed from New York on the 3d inst. for New Orleans, via Havana. The Crescent City struck on Little Bahama Bank about 20 miles east of the western point of Manilla reef, on the 7th, with a tremendous crash, and bilged immediately.

The boats were lowered, and rafts were constructed to be used in case they were necessary.

Captain Holbrook, in the meantime, sent a boat to Sandy Bay, 42 miles distant, which returned with the wrecking schooner Defiance, which took off a portion of the passengers and carried them to Nassau. Captain Gray, with the balance of the passengers and the crew, arrived at Nassau afterwards in the "Star."

The brigantine, Alma, has been chartered to convey the passengers and mails to their destination. It is thought the vessel will be a total loss. From observations taken during the day, and the soundings up to the time of the accident, it is supposed that the catastrophe was caused by the setting in of a strong south-easterly current.

ADDITIONAL BY THE AFRICA.

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—The London Times says that a peace is close at hand. Austria, it is reported, is about to address an ultimatum to Russia in case of the refusal of Russia to accept it. Austria will treat with the Western Powers. The Morning Post denies the story that the Allies, in the Crimea, are to be reinforced. The Baltic fleet is homeward bound. It is reported that the Russians have taken Kars.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Banks had on the last ballot to-day, 105; Richardson, 73; Fuller, 38. Mr. Huntington introduced a resolution to elect a Speaker by a plurality vote, pending which the House adjourned.

The Message.

It is said that the President is having the message put in type, at the White House, in order to prevent its publication in advance of its delivery in Congress.

The Empire City.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—The Empire City brings one and a-half million in treasure.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—The House has been occupied nearly all day in personal explanations and the defining of positions, and no ballots were taken. The prospect of an election seems more distant than ever.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—After much and exciting discussion between Northern and Southern Whigs, three ballots were had, the last resulting as follows: Banks 106, Richardson 75, Fuller 34.

Domestic Markets.

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—Cotton is drooping, with sales of 1200 bales; Flour is lower, and Ohio is quoted at $8 02½; Corn is selling at 97½; Southern White Wheat, $2 15.

Cincinnati Market.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19.—Flour, $7 50. Whisky is selling at 30½ to 30¾c.

River Intelligence.

LOUISVILLE, Dec. 19.—The river is rising, with 9 feet in the canal. The Granita State arrived yesterday from New Orleans, and the Empress left for that port.

LATER FROM HAVANA.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMSHIP BLACK WARRIOR.

The U. S. mail steamer Black Warrior, S. B. Miller, commanding, arrived at her wharf yesterday morning, from New York, via Havana, having left the former port on the 10th, and the latter on the 16th inst. The Warrior brought the following passengers:

H D McGinnis and lady, W Palmer, lady and two children, Mrs H Perine, J C Marsh, Mr Weir, Miss Mousseaux, N Moraschi, M Brown and lady, Miss M J Kennedy, A Wheelock, M McCarthy, J W Metcalf and lady, F N Lawrence and lady, D N Hennee, Mrs H A Brookloghem, Mrs Rindon, two children and servant, P S Anderson, Capt Rensel, Mr Edgar, J Jotlenoff and servant, M Mathews, W D Rickaby, P G Taylor, J Bickenhood, J Bonnop, Miss Sheridan, Mrs Strickland and child, Mr Boughton, lady, three children and servant, Judge Amos, Miss E Pope, H De Lucey, Mrs J F Rodgers.

Captain Miller reports that everything was quiet at Havana, and no news of interest stirring.

The Habaneros were to celebrate the funeral obsequies of Gen. Tacon, formerly Captain General of the island, with great pomp and splendor, on the 17th.

As we have already announced by telegraph, at the time the Black Warrior sailed from Havana no tidings had been received of the steamship Crescent City, which left New York on the 3d, and was consequently eight days over due at Havana. Serious fears are very naturally entertained for her safety.

On the morning of the 12th the Warrior passed a large steamer supposed to be the Granada.

As the Black Warrior came out of the harbor of Havana, the British bark Omer Pacha and American brig Henry Lnds were going in.

By this arrival we have received our files up to the 16th, but they furnish no news of interest. The Diario says:

"According to our information, it is quite probable that within a few days we shall have the satisfaction of seeing in our port the greater part of the English squadron gathered at Bermuda under the orders of its worthy Admiral. The presence of the naval forces of friendly nations will now, as always, be a cause of satisfaction to the people of Havana."

Whether this visit of English war vessels has anything to do with the recent difficulty, in which two or three English wreckers were fired upon and killed by a Spanish launch, we are not prepared to state. Although it was evident from the accounts of the affair that the Spaniards were in the right, it was intimated at the time that vessels would be dispatched to Havana from the West India squadron to seek an explanation.

A Chinaman at Sagua la Grande, who had been baptised with the name of Ciprian, on the following day murdered one of his companions in cold blood. He was tried and immediately executed.

A DANGEROUS REEF OR SHOAL.—Capt. Irvine, of the Cabrugarum, just arrived at London, from Canton, reports that while standing to the southward, the ship, one evening, suddenly struck three times on a reef or shoal, situated in lat. 1 20 S., and long 106 54 E. The ship was backed immediately, and soundings were taken, but no bottom was found at 20 fathoms, and there was no appearance of shoal water near. On the passage out, Capt. Irvine saw, at Anjor, a notice left by the American ship Celestion, of her having tacked within fifteen feet of some rocks above water, in lat. 1 18 S., long. 106 50 E., which are not laid down in any chart.

The Expedition for Camels.

We have been favored with a copy, says the Washington Evening Star, of a very interesting letter indeed from Major Wayne, U. S. A., the officer in charge of the expedition of this Government to procure camels to be brought hither with the view of experimenting for their future employment in U. S. Military transportation, especially on our great Western deserts. It is as follows:

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 31, 1855.

SIR: In accordance with my report of the 11th of October, Lieut. Porter and myself left this for Balaklava the next day, the 12th, in the British transport steamer, the Imperador, and landed in the Crimea on the 17th. Calling on Major Ross, the Deputy Quartermaster General at Balaklava, and, further to the front, on General Simpson, the commander of the British forces, we received from these gentlemen kind welcome, and every facility for the prosecution of our duty was promptly afforded to us. I was further fortunate in receiving an introduction to Col. McMurdo, in charge under the Quartermaster General, General Eyre, of the land transport service in the Crimea, and who, as Quartermaster General to General Napier in the expedition against Sinde, had used camels extensively for military purposes. He gave me much interesting information in relation to the military use of the camel; and from General Simpson, also, who had served in the same expedition under General Napier, we had additional accounts of the value of the animal, and of the favorable opinion entertained of it by the army for the services it was capable of rendering. The engagements of Colonel McMurdo were such that I could occupy but little of his time, and in consequence obtained from him only a few material facts without going into details. My thanks are due to him for the moments he devoted to me, pressed as he was with the many and various duties of his position.

We found in the Crimea both the Bactrian two-humped camel, and the Arabian, or one-humped; but the latter alone seemed to be used for the purpose of military transportation. The former were found in the Crimea at the commencement of the war; the latter were carried there since from Asia Minor. The former were but little thought of; the latter were highly esteemed—the only objections to them we heard of being the room they occupied in the narrow streets, and their frightening the horses. The two are very distinct species of the same genus; differing from each other as much, I should say, as the buffalo of our western prairies do from the common ox. Double humped, the Bactrian is a strongly built, powerful animal, standing not quite so high as the Arabian, of coarser and more shaggy coat, slower in motion, but capable of carrying immense burdens. From the formation of its back (its two humps) there is a difficulty in adjusting to it a pack saddle, and without one there is always more or less perplexity in loading and securing the load. This, I rather think, is the principal source of objection to its use, though I believe the opinion advanced to me to be correct, that it is not as serviceable an animal as the Arabian. Its use in the Crimea before the war we understand to be chiefly for draught, and on one occasion we saw two yoked to a Tartar wagon, as oxen are, but guided by rope reins. The result of our examination determined us not to procure one, as it would only complicate our experiment without producing such results as we anticipate from the Arabian stock. At some future day, should the camel become domesticated with us, it may then be worth while to import a few males for crossing upon the Arabian females, as it is said is done with advantage in Persia, the issue always taking after the mother—that is, being one-humped. Sketches of the Bactrian camel were made by Mr. Heap, which will convey very clear idea of the animal and of its differences from the Arabian.

Col. McMurdo informed me, that in the expedition against Sinde he had in service about twenty-five thousand camels, and that from his experience he esteemed them highly; so much so, that he had then at Sinope three thousand of them, in addition to the few now in use in the Crimea, in readiness for the campaign next spring. The loads they will carry depend much, he said, upon the service in which they are employed—rapid movements naturally requiring light burdens; but their average loads, under favorable circumstances, he stated to be about six hundred pounds, and these they will carry easily, without pushing, twenty-five to thirty miles a day. He mentioned the interesting fact, which I do not remember to have heard before, that during the expedition against Sinde, Gen. Napier organized a most efficient corps of one thousand men, mounted upon five hundred dromedaries—two men to each dromedary—the men sitting back to back; one facing the head, the other the tail, and both armed with rifles and sabres. The man facing the head was the animal's groom and driver, and the manner of using the corps was as follows: Upon arriving at the scene of operations the dromedaries were made to kneel, in square, under charge of their five hundred drivers, forming, as it were, a base of operations, from which the other five hundred operated as infantry. As the advanced body moved, the square, or squares, if more than one was formed, if required, were also moved; and in case of extremity, the square offered a cover under which the one thousand men could find comparative shelter behind the animals, who were prevented from rising by a hobble on the fore leg, and use their rifles most effectively. This corps, Col. McMurdo informed me, could be readily marched seventy miles in any direction in twelve hours, (5 6-6 miles per hour,) and rendered throughout the campaign most efficient service.

Gen Simpson stated that in the same campaign he found the camel so serviceable that he procured five or six for his personal use, and that with them he frequently went seventy miles between sunset and sunrise. To a direct question by Major Delafield (whom we met in the Crimea,) whether he would not have preferred the best English horses to camels, could he have obtained them, the General answered: No, that he would have preferred the camel, as packing his baggage upon them in light loads, he could move more quickly and continuously.

In relation to our visiting Persia, the enquiries we have made lead us to the conclusion that, though we might readily get there, our return, owing to the blocking up of the roads by snow, would be impossible until next spring. As this would detain us much beyond the time fixed for our return to the United States, and unnecessarily delay the experiment we are engaged in, we have reluctantly abandoned the journey, though we desired much to see the varieties of the Persian camel, and particularly the Leurbourck or dromedary artillery.

A journey into Persia, with the intention of returning immediately, must be commenced, we find, about May. Our course from this will be, I think, to Syria or Egypt, for dromedaries, and then back to Smyrna for burden camels, with the expectation of commencing our return home sometime in February.

The enquiries in relation to dromedaries for the French army, reported in my letter of the 11th of October, produce no result.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY C. WAYNE,
Major U. S. Army.

HON. JEFFERSON DAVIS, Secretary of War.

THE THREATENED INVASION OF NICARAGUA.—Instructions from the President.—The United States District Attorney has addressed the following letter to the United States Marshal, by directions of President Pierce:

OFFICE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Southern District, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1855.

Information has been received by the President of the United States that preparations are being made in various parts of the United States to receive men for the invasion of the State of Nicaragua, or otherwise to take part in military operations there; and I call your attention specially to the subject.

The President desires that measures be taken to detect and defeat all such enterprises, to bring the guilty parties to punishment, and to detain every vessel fitted out to carry on the undertaking. If occasion should arise, the President will exercise the direct authority vested in him for the prevention of all such violation of the neutrality laws.

With the force of your office you can, undoubtedly, make inquiries and take such measures as will carry out the views of the President. I feel assured of your desire to uphold the law, and promise to you my most active co-operation. I am, very, respectfully,

JOHN McKEON, U. S. District Attorney.

To A. T. HILLYER, Esq., U. S. Marshal.

Foreign News by the Baltic.

FULL PARTICULARS.

The U. S. mail steamship Baltic, from Liverpool 1st inst., reached New York at 12 M. of the 18th.

The intelligence by this arrival consists principally of rumors of advances by Russia for peace negotiations. It does not appear, however, that these rumors can be relied upon with certainty.

From Berlin it is reported that Russia has laid propositions for a renewal of negotiations before the Prussian Cabinet, and requested that they should be communicated to the Western powers. Prussia is said to have objected, that her mediation would not be acceptable, but to have finally consented to become the channel of communication.

Most of the London papers mention these peace rumors—some in confirmation and others in denial. The following from the Shipping Gazette expresses the substance of the various reports. There is, at last, the Gazette says, a prospect of peace, and a fair one. Through the veil of official mysteriousness a rumor has crept forth that propositions have been made to the Emperor of the French for the termination of hostilities, upon terms which can be honorably accepted, and which it would be reckless and impolitic to reject. Russia, it is stated, is ready to conclude a peace with the Western powers, without the intervention of either Austria or Prussia, by which all the objects completed by the present war may be obtained without Russia being subjected to such a humiliation as no wise statesman would desire to countenance, nor any prudent international policy could justify.

Russia proposes, it is said, to guarantee the free navigation of the Danube; the independence of the Danubian provinces, either from her own or from Austrian surveillance; the entire freedom of the Black Sea, together with such material guarantees for the preservation of the Ottoman Empire as may, in council, be agreed upon between the belligerent powers. In the meantime, the contending parties are to be at liberty to continue their preparations for the spring campaign, subject to an understanding that no active hostilities will be entered upon, up to a specified time, to be agreed upon by all parties. Such is understood to be the substance of the propositions submitted to the French Emperor, and the terms proposed cannot be considered unworthy of attention.

The latest Berlin rumor as to negotiations is that a congress of the secondary German powers is to be held at Dresden, to decide on a joint expression of sentiment as to the war. The assembling of Russian diplomatists at St. Petersburgh is confirmed by a report that Count Stackelberg, the Russian military commissioner to Austria, is ordered to report to St. Petersburgh before he returns to Vienna, from the Crimea. With respect to Canrobert's mission to Sweden and Denmark, the statement in Berlin is, that the success of his mission is limited to having engaged Sweden to assent to the four points as the basis of any future negotiation, and Sweden's co-operation with the Western Powers is not to be more active than that of Austria.

The subject will be speedily brought before the Germanic Diet, and the general result of these movements will be that almost all Europe will unite in calling on Russia to accept the four points as explained by the Western powers.

The Crimea.

A dispatch from Marseilles states that on the 15th, the Russian batteries on the north of Sebastopol commenced firing red-hot shot, to which the Allies replied.

It is stated, from Berlin, that the Czar's visit to the Crimea was only undertaken after the most urgent representations from Prince Gortschakoff; also, that at the Council of War, held in the Czar's presence, the idea of evacuating the Crimea was given up, and it was resolved to retain possession of it as long as possible. Prince Gortschakoff's headquarters are, for the future, to be at Simpheropol, as a central point. The Russian infantry requires reinforcement from the militia, but the navalry has suffered little, and will be numerous and good by spring. The Allies are establishing electric communication between Balaklava and Kertsch, also with Kinburn via Eupatoria.

By this means the Allies will be regularly apprized of the movements of the Russians, and be able to direct assistance on any point menaced. Sebastopol will not be permanently occupied by the Allies. Already the mining operations that are intended to blow up its docks, arsenals and public works are almost completed. Graphic accounts are given by the correspondents of the London Times and London Daily News, of the recent tremendous explosion.

A letter from the Crimea, dated the 14th instant, says: "The destruction of Sebastopol having been resolved on, each corps has received its position to work upon. The city pecanie, consequently, the most animated aspect. It is a demolition en regle, in which the four armies take part. The houses and public buildings are attacked at the base, and on all sides are heard the blows of the hammer and the crash of the rafters and timbers of the houses, which fall down amid clouds of dust. The soldiers at once proceed to the selection of all the materials capable of being employed advantageously for their use during the winter. Each man loads himself with objects the most wanted. Some carry off planks, windows, doors, presses, fire-irons, kitchen utensils, even to old chairs and old pots. Indeed, it may be said, that soon not a nail, nor a piece of wood, nor a tile, will remain in Sebastopol.

The Moniteur publishes the following:

Marshal Pelissier, in his last report to the Minister of War, gives the account of a successful coup de main effected on the 3d of November, by the expeditionary corps of Eupatoria, under the orders of General d'Allonville, for the capture of sundry large flocks, destined for the use of the Russian army, collected at El Tock, eight leagues north of Eupatoria.

The operation had succeeded, and at nine o'clock All Pacha returned to Eupatoria, bringing with him 270 oxen, 3,450 sheep, 50 horses, 10 camels and 20 vehicles taken from the Russians.

The Black Sea.

Rear-Admiral Lyons has been promoted to be "Admiral of the Blue." The squadron under his immediate orders remains in the Black Sea. Admiral Stewart's division arrived in the Bosphorus on the 18th ult., and would leave in a fortnight for Malta.

Admiral Bruat died on board his flag-ship, as it, with the squadron conveying the Imperial Guard, was leaving the harbor of Messina, on its way to France. His death is attributed to an attack of suppressed gout.

Asia.

An English letter from Erzeroum, under date November 7th, states that all was well in Kars, to October 31st. The city was closely blockaded by the Russian navalry, but reports do not conform that the garrison was short of provisions. There was a rumor at Constantinople that Mouravieff with his force had raised the siege and re-crossed the Arpatchai into Georgia; but this is doubtful.

The most reliable advices come via Varna, stating that Omar has been unable to follow up his recent victory, because the Russians have forwarded their reserves from Tiflis to Kutais. He is said, therefore, to be at present fortifying his position on the river Ingour.

Baltic and White Sea.

The weather in the Gulf of Finland, to (Nov. 26,) had been mild for the season; but in the Gulf of Bothnia it had been sharp. Another division of the British fleet had left Kiel for England. Admiral Dundas has received orders to return.

The Hamburg News states that the Russians are re-organizing their Baltic fleet, with the intention of putting to sea in the spring. Several of the old commanders are replaced by younger men, and the command of fleet and military governorship of Cronstradt is to be given to Admiral Nowasilesky, from Sebastopol.

Various Items.

Constantinople advices of Nov. 22d, mention the arrival there of the American squadron from the Mediterranean, also of a portion of the English fleet from the Black Sea.

Cholera has broken out with severity, at Soutari, and has carried off many men of the Anglo-German legion. The French are re-organizing on a grand scale for their foreign legion. The Tunisian troops are gone to Batonm. Much scarcity exists in articles of consumption at Constantinople.

There are rumors of change in the Turkish cabinet. Redschid Pacha has had an interview with the Sultan, and is rumored to be coming in as Grand Visier. M. Blondel, the Belgian minister, is trying to reconcile matters between Lord Stratford and Mehemet Ali Pacha, as, according to rumors, Ali is to have the War department which Mehemet Rnschdi Pacha leaves.

The Ottoman government has prohibited the export of grain until next harvest, with the exception of what may be required for the use of the allied fleets and armies. This is in consideration of the increasing scarcity.

Great Britain.

The lesser arrangements of the Cabinet have been at length definitely announced. Two additions are made—in the persons of Lord Stanley, of Alderley, who retains his present post as President of the Board of Trade, and of Mr. Baines, who is appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

It has been already stated that the Duke of Argyle is the new Postmaster-General, and the Privy Seal, which Lord Argyle's acceptance of the postmastership has placed at the disposal of the Premier is given to Lord Harrowby, who vacates the Chancellorship of the Duchy of Lancaster, to make room for Mr. Baines. None of these appointments call for remark. Frederic Peel, under-secretary of the war department has resigned; and it is not the intention of government to appoint a successor. Parliament will meet for business January 18th.

The statement that the Duke of Cambridge is to succeed Lord Hardinge, Commander-in-Chief, is contradicted.

Madame Jenny Lind Goldschmidt has arrived in London, and a series of concerts and oratorios are to be given, under the direction of Mr. Mitchell, at Exeter Hall. M. Benedict will be the conductor.

Captain Harrison, of the Cunard service, has been selected for the command of the mammoth steamship Great Eastern, just launched on the Thames, by Scott, Russell & Co. The Great Eastern is the largest vessel afloat.

Spain.

A difficulty has arisen between the English and Spanish authorities, in consequence of an English ship called the Valiant having been fired into by a Spanish marda-costa, in the neutral waters of Tangiers. Explanations are demanded.

Mr. Boylan, whose case has been already referred to, has filed an affidavit that his losses from the condnct of the Spanish government in expelling him from Cuba, amount to double the sum awarded by Mr. Mure, of New Orleans, arbitrator on the part of the British government, and which sum is refused by the Spanish authorities.

The Gazette promulgates the colonization law, in virtue of which the Minister is authorised to grant lands to any Spaniard or foreigner desirous to form agricultural colonies in the waste districts of Spain. Any concession, however, exceeding 600 acres, must be sanctioned by the Legislature.

Italy.

SARDINIA.—It is stated at Turin that Count Cavour will take advantage of his present journey to France and England to make preliminary arrangements for the negotiation of the new Piedmontese loan of 80,000,000 francs, which is at present under consideration by the Chambers.

ROMAN STATES.—A Roman letter mentions that the Consistory, for December, will open on the 21st, and the promotion of cardinals, which has been so often postponed, will then take place. Among the candidates spoken of are the Archbishop of Vienna, who conducted the negotiation of the Concordat, and M. di Pietro, formerly Papal Nuncio at Lisbon. The Pope has created Mgr. Villecourt, Bishop of La Rochelle, a resident cardinal; he is a personal friend of the Pope, and noted for piety and learning.

The Emperor of Austria, in order to show his satisfaction at the conclusion of the Concordat, has sent to the Pope the sum of 250,000 francs towards the construction of the monument of the Immaculate Conception.

NAPLES.—A most serious misfortune befel Messina, on the 14th ult., by an inundation, occasioned, it is supposed, by a water-spout; the whole country about Messina was laid under water, trees were rooted up, houses, gardens, furniture, and cattle destroyed, and many persons drowned. Much damage has also been done to the city itself. The fatal loss is said to exceed two millions of ounces, or one and a quarter million sterling. In Palermo the cholera is very bad, deaths belug from 70 to 100 per day. In Naples, from 30 to 40 deaths per day are occasioned by this fatal malady.

Austria.

The Ost Deutsche Post says:

"The nomination of Chevalier Hulsemann to the post of resident Austrian Minister at Washington, and the large increase which has been made in the organization of our mission in the United States, indicates a new step in Austrian diplomacy. Up to this time the United States have been to Austria a sort of sea-serpent, with which it was wise to avoid all contact. A wise policy, however, does not believe that danger ceases because you close your eyes to it. Austria does well, then, to prepare to take her proper position in the events of which, sooner or later, the United States are destined to become the scene."

Dr. Ferdinand Markwort is appointed Secretary to the Austrian Legation at Washington, and will leave Vienna in a few days for New York.

Denmark.

The high court is declared competent to proceed with the trial of the ex-ministers.

Gen. Canrobert has been received at Copenhagen with honors, similar to those which were showered on him at Stockholm, but his reception by the people was less enthusiastic.

Denmark and Sweden continue to permit the exportation of breadstuffs.

The American ship Robert Paton, Capt. Kelly, which had excited suspicion by remaining at anchor at Sandhamn, arrived at Stockholm, November 15th, when her cargo, instead of revolvers, was found to consist only of cotton and dyewoods.

Mr. Walters, a passenger on the steamer Anthony Wayne, was taking from Chicago back to Philadelphia the remains of a fond

HOW TO PLANT TREES.

When planting is anticipated, the formation of a good compost heap should meet immediate attention. Slide of old fences, where grass and weeds have remained for years undisturbed, or old meadow bottoms, afford a soil of the best description as a basis for such a purpose. Mixed with a fourth part of fresh manure, and frequently turned over to assist decomposition, they form a suitable compost for any description of tree or shrub. When it is a desideratum to hasten the decay of such material, it may be watered with a solution of potash. One pound of potash will be enough for a cubic yard of soil. It should be dissolved and used in as much water as will thoroughly wet the whole mass. This will not only render it fit for use in a few weeks, but also enhance its value, potash being largely appropriated by plants, independent of its decomposing agency in the soil.

The pleasure and satisfaction derived from the contemplation of trees in a cultivated state depends upon the evidences of health and vigor which they exhibit. A well-formed, free-growing tree is at all times an object of beauty, while a stunted, moss-covered one is certain to suggest ideas of impoverished soil, or mismanagement on the part of the cultivator. The nature and condition of the soil is, therefore, an all-important consideration; with regard to the latter quality, freedom from superfluous water and aeration should be secured. Although, perhaps, not absolutely necessary in all cases, yet it may be safely laid down as a rule that all soils are benefited by judicious draining. It has been said that draining was really injurious in a climate where droughts were of frequent occurrence, or in soils of a sandy or gravelly character. Experience, however, proves the reverse. It has been shown time and again that sandy soils are more productive and less liable to suffer from drouth when properly aerated by underground drains, as they increase the porosity of the soil, and consequently enhance its capabilities for absorbing moisture and holding water in suspension within its pores.

Clayey soils are equally improved by this method of underground ventilation. An adhesive subsoil is formed into a compact surface immediately below the cultivated stratum which retards the downward extension of the roots, and prevents the admission of the various gases useful for building up the vegetable structure. Air is indispensable to the growth of plants, and must have free access to the roots and their surrounding soil. The soil must be sufficiently porous to part readily with water, otherwise air is in a great degree excluded. A further advantage is gained from a perfect system of drainings and increased porosity in the soil, in the ammonia and carbonic acid conveyed into it by every shower. Rain water absorbs these gases in its passage through the atmosphere, and the soil has the property of retaining them as the water percolates through it. Air is also a principal agent in decomposition. There are many unproductive soils that really contain all the elements of fertility, but in the absence of decomposition they are useless for the purpose of vegetable growth. In the absence of air and water, substances may remain unchanged, but under their combined action the hardest rock must change and decay. When we reflect that about nine-tenths of the whole bulk of plants is made up of gaseous matters, we find sufficient reason for the importance of plants in aerated soils, and the necessity of securing them these conditions.

The great secret of getting trees into rapid and vigorous growth lies in the preparation of the soil. Pits ought to be dug out not less than six feet across and from eighteen inches to two feet in depth. The surface soil should be thrown out and all bad and inferior subsoil removed and replaced by an equal portion of prepared compost. The difference in five years growth between trees thus provided and those planted in pits half that size is quite surprising. Carelessness in planting indicates itself for many years in the numerous dead branches, short, stunted-looking growth, moss-covered bark, and frequently by the death of the plant, while those planted in thoroughly prepared ground, if removed with ordinary care, scarcely receive a check, or show symptoms of having been disturbed.

It is a common error, and a very pardonable one for those who are anxious to produce immediate effect, to plant the largest sized trees that can be procured. It is possible to remove trees of great age and size successfully. We have well-authenticated instances of the removal of trees 800 years of age, and I have seen a large plantation successfully transplanted after 30 years' growth; but to ensure success in these extreme cases involves an expense which few would be willing to incur. Neither is it practicable to bestow the same care and attention on trees that are purchased at a distant nursery and have to undergo the perils and casualties of transportation. There must be a certain proportionate balance maintained between the roots and branches, and when the roots of large trees are severely shortened, the branches must also be reduced to a corresponding degree. The question of size is therefore dispensed with. So well is this fact understood in Scotland, that the nurserymen there annually commit to the flames thousands of pine, Norway spruce, larch, etc., from three to five feet in height, which have outgrown a saleable size, and for which there is no demand. All plants are removed with least check when young, and a uniform, vigorous and satisfactory plantation is most readily obtained by early removal.

THE NICARAGUA EXPEDITIONISTS.—We are informed that on Saturday evening last, in a meeting specially called for the purpose, there left Mobile, destined for San Juan de Nicaragua, some seventy emigrants, recruited in Texas by Charles H. Higley, their Major Commanding, who, it will be remembered, left this city some weeks since at the head of a small company, which went across in a fair way to prove the nucleus of a regiment.

A Lieutenant Colonel's commission awaits the gallant Major on the landing in Nicaragua, and though we are not informed under whose hand and seal it will be given, we do know that, when worthily it may emanate, the compliment will meet with a response creditable to ourselves respected.—[Mobile Register.

An Adventure in the Chinese Sea.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

It was Captain Sampson's turn to tell the next story. He was a stout, broad-set, hard-fisted but kind-hearted son of the ocean, fifty years old, and full of thrilling adventures.—Our pipes were re-filled, and then Sampson took his turn as follows:

"It's now ten years come next November that I took charge of the 'Yankee.' She was a noble ship, and I felt proud of the charge. We lay at the wharf, down Peck Slip, (we cleared at New York, you know,) and got the last lot of duds on board, when I felt something touch me on the leg. I turned and there stood a boy some fourteen years old, with a bundle on his shoulder. He kind o' trembled when I looked at him, but there was'nt any dishonesty in that face—not a bit. He had great gray eyes, almost dark enough for hazel, and his hair curled over his head like a girl just rigged for a party. Then he looked so earnestly and steadily at me, that I knew, whatever he wanted, he'd be truthful about it.

"What is it, boy?" said I, speaking kindly.

"I want to go to sea with you," says the boy.

"Who says you may go?"

He pointed up to a store at the head of the slip, and told me if I would only go up there with him, I could learn all about it.

"But what use will you be to me?" I asked him before we started.

"Any use you put me to, that's honest, and that I can do," he said.

I liked the answer, for I saw that he meant it, and I went up to the store with him. I did want a cabin boy, but I had'nt made arrangements for any, because just such a one as I wanted about me all the time was hard to find. At the store I asked Mr. Vant Wart (he was an old friend of mine) about the boy. He told me that the boy's father used to be a porter in his store, but that he died two months before, and that the boy was now an orphan, his mother having been dead some years. Then he took me aside, and says he:

"If you want the boy, captain, you will find him a most faithful one. He's been with me off and on, ever since he was so high."

Of course I took him. His name was Edward Grover, though he said 'twas Ned, and Ned we called him. Two days after that a tug towed us out of the harbor, and we stood our nose clear of Sandy Hook before dinner. First we went to Calcutta, and then to Canton; and many and many a time did I bless my stars that Ned Grover was with me, for an own child could'nt have been more faithful than he was. And then he was a bold fellow, too; and never was the blow that could shake him, nor the storm that could blanche him. On the royal yard he was like a squirrel on a tree, and he was as quick of wit as he was of body.

Well, our business was all done up at Canton, and I only had to touch at Singapore on my way home, unless I chose to heave to at Batavia. We had a splendid run down the Chinese Sea, making the passage to Nantunas in just eight days. In three days from that we were among the Anambus Islands—off Malacca, you know. Most of these islands we left on the starboard beam, and along toward the middle of the afternoon Lampeng was on the lee bow, and not more than six miles distant. I always took the eastern run of Lampang, because I knew the channel. Since morning the wind had been light and variable, though no baffling, and now it had settled down in the west'rd as though to rest itself—for with stud'n's'ls alow and aloft, we did'nt run off more than three knots an hour at the outside.

It was just 4 o'clock when I came on deck to see how the land lay, and I found Lamping then just about a beam, but as the wind now came, the island was to the windward of us, and four miles distant. I had looked at the compass and at the sails, and was then looking ont for the land, when the men at the maintop hailed the deck.

"What is it?" I asked.

"A Malay proa!" he answered, right in ashore by that rock. There, don't you see it?"

I looked, and did see her. I sent Ned for my glass, and by the time he came with it the proa had come ont in full sight from behind the rock. I levelled the glass, and I oonid meke ont the fellow plainly. 'Twas one of the largest proas I ever saw. I shonld say seventy-five feet long, with bows like en old men's nose turned bottom upwards, and a stern abont the same. I counted the men in her, and I oonld do it pretty surely.

"What is she, sir?" asked Walter, my first mate.

"A Malay proa," I told him.

"How many men?"

"Seventy-five at least."

"A pirate!" he uttered.

"She is'nt likely to be anything esle," I answered, assuming as much composure as I could; but you may be sure I felt bot little of it, for a Malay pirate is just about the worst thing in the world—blood-thirsty as a Bengal tiger, with all the wit of a man to back it up. Their very religion makes piracy a holy virtne, and a man is honered among them for the many times his knife has fennd a human heart. And they are powerful fellows, too, and trained from childhood to the use of arms.

"She's coming after us!" cried the man at the top. But then he need'nt have told us of it, for I had seen that from the beginning.

The men looked anxiously towards me, and I saw that they were stricken with fear. And our position was not one to inspire a poor chap with very deep joy. The wind was still to the west'rd, and three knots was the most the ship could be made to run. The Malay was now within three miles, and shooting through the water like mad. He had twenty broad paddles ont—you know the bloody hounds can send those long, narrow, sharp proas fast. We were now sure that there were over seventy men in the great boat, for we could even see their long knives and clumsy fire-arms through my glass. My crew, all mustered, numbered twenty-nine, and one of them was only a boy. Of swords, or cutlasses, we had only six, bnt I had thirty brace of good boarding pistols in the arm chest, and a dozen pikes by the mast. It was rather a dnbious show, was'nt it?

However, I resolved to do the best I oonld, for I knew if those Malays captured ns, we were simply dead men; so of conrse there was some errand for resistance. First, I made myself as calm as I could, and then I got ont the pistols, and had them all loaded. I gave two to each man, reserving twe extra ones for myself. The six cutlasses I gave to those I thought best qualified to handle them, and then I distributed the twelve pikes. Beyond those I found four boat hooks, and these I also gave ont, for they would be serviceable in repelling boarders when the pistols had all been fired.

"Now, boys," said I, "you know what thet fellow is after; and if I'd thonght of this lull in the wind, I should'nt have rnn in here. But that can't be helped now. We can't run away, and we all knew if those Malays take us, they'll cut our throats every one. I fancy yon'd all rather fight to the death than to be killed so. Will you stand it?"

Of course they all said "yes;" bot then they did'nt speak like men who had any hope, and surely I did'nt blame them, for our enemy was more than double us—almost treble. Yet I saw that my brave fellows meant to fight.

The proa was now about a mile distant, and would be alongside in ten minntes unless we caught a smart breeze. I looked about but saw no signs of any such breeze, neve a single bank of vapor to the north'd. I called after Ned to run to the cabin, and get me my slippers, for the boots I had on were stiff and clumsy. But Ned was not to be found.

"Never mind," I said to myself as I ran down, "he is'nt to blame. Poor boy, he could'nt do much, unless it was to shoot a pistol, and perhaps blow his own fingers off."

I could'nt find it in my heart to haul him from his hiding place, for you see he had been a faithful fellow to me, and if he could escape, I hoped he would. I got on my slippers and then returned to the deck. The Malay was now within half a mile, and we could see their knives plainly. There was just seventy-four of them, there being twenty seats in the boat, and all of them except one or two at the bows and stern having four men on a seat.

"We shall never be able to beat them off, sir," whispered Walker in my ear.

"We are able to try, at all events," I replied.

"But just look at their force," he said, blanching.

"Then you mean to die like—"

I'd spoken thus far, when he caught my arm, for I had begun to speak louder, and the men might hear me.

"—sh," he hissed, "don't, I pray you, say any more; of course I'll fight."

He grasped his cutlass as he spoke, and I oonld see that his eye had changed, and there was now some fire in it. By this time we oonld see the faces of the Malays plainly, and in all my wanderings I don't think I ever saw such another set of diabolical, ugly, bloody-looking villains. In two minntes more I saw those who worked the paddles take their knives in their teeth. I had the men stand by with their pistols, and I ordered them to fire one volley before the boat got fairly alongside.

At this moment, just as the pirate was within a cable's length, I felt a cool puff of wind upon my cheek. I turned and saw that the wind had whipped out from the north'd. Quick as lightning I ordered the yards squared, and by some means the men obeyed me promptly; but while this was being done, the Malay was coming on. The pirates saw that our sails had caught the new breeze, and with a few quick and strong strokes they sont their craft alongside like a rocket.

"Fire!" I shouted.

And my men did fire, but their hands must have trembled, for not more than half a dozen of the enemy fell. I called the men to shove their pikes over, bnt I tell you those few pikes looked kind o' diemal in the faces of seventy stont, blood-thirsty, Malay pirates. I took one look into that proa, and my heart sank, for I knew they would make bnt short work with us. We might kill a scoro of them, and even then they'd be up with ns

"What do you want?" I shonted with all my might.

"Yon' mooney—yon' blood! yon' sheep, you 'ng dom creppoo Shawn Bull!"

The fellow evidently thought us John Bulls, and what the crappo meent I conldn't tell, nnless he had got the French and English mixed up. However, I had'nt time to think of that. In another moment they would be alongside. Already were the pirates upon their feet, their long knives in their mouths, cinched firmly between their teeth, and in a moment more they would leap. The bows of the proa tonched our side under the mizzen chain, and her stern was sweeping swiftly in as she shot ahead. At that moment something brnshed past me towerds the stern, and I smelt the strong, rank fumes of turpentine. Before I had time to look or to think, a sheet of smoke and flames danced before my eyes, and on the next instant a howl like the roar of a hundred lions broke npon my ears.

"Beat 'em off, beat 'em off!" cried a sharp, clear voice, which I at once recognized as Ned's, and as I heard it the whole truth flashed npon me. I sprung to where half a dozen of the villains, all covered with flames, were trying to crowd up over the side. I awoke the men to a comprehension of the fot tnne that had hurst npon us, and the few who were trying to board ne were either shot or driven back. The breeze was now fresh and in a few moments more we shot ahead, leaving the proa, all smvloped in flames, at a safe distanoe behind, while the crew, every man of them, had leaped into the water to extinguish the fire that olung to them.

As soon as we were safe, and our nerves had become somewhat composed, we looked into the strange fortnne that had eeved ns, and we soon understood it. Nobie Ned Grover, while I thonght him hiding away from the enemy, was setting on foot a plan which had entsred his head alone. In the fore peak there was a large oan of pure spirits of turpentine. Ned had taken the cook's great copper kettle, which held some twelve gallons, and filled it as fat as he had dared with the inflammnbie stuff and then he watched his opportunity. The moment he thonght the proa near enough, he set fire to the spirits, and then lifting the kettle high up by its aides, he went aft, ec that the wind wonld help him, and with a strong, oareful, throw he sent the fiery mass into the boat. It went in one sheet, all blazing and hissing, and the light, cotton clothing of the pirates ignited instantly. Of conrse the villains were blinded and stnnned by the unexpected visitation, and I don't 'spose they knew mnch what they were about until they had got into the water. The wind, which was just now starting fresh, carried the blazing liquid the whole length of the boat, and you know even a dozen drops of it would have been enongh to set their cotton shirts afire.

The old Yankee now gathered headway good, and ere long the proa and her crew were far astern. The boat was still hurning and smoking like mad, and we oonld see that most of the pirates were striking ont for the island, for of course they oonld not go near their boat. But 'tisn't likely one of 'em ever reached the shore, for the fresh breeze hnd kicked up a smart wave, and their heads were under water half the time. I took my glass and went up into the mizzen top, and for a while I watched the bloody scamps. I conld see 'em, one after another, sink out of sight, and I knew that none of them would ever do any more murders. But in a little time the few heads that were left strnggling above water were beyond the reach of my sight, and I came down.

'Tis'nt mnch use of my telling how Ned Grover was disposed of, for you can jndge for yonrselves. Yet he was mild and modest as ever, and begged us to say nothing more about it. When we got home, the owners made him accept a thousand dollars, and made me promise to teach him navigation. Ned is now fonr and twenty—as noble a fellow as yon oonld wish to see—and last month he left New York as the captain of the good ship Daniel Boone. Now, who comes next?

Guano—Its History.

Gnano, as most people understnnd, is imported from the islands of the Pacific, mostly of the Chincha gronp off the coast of Peru, and under the dominion of that government. Its sale is made a monopoly, and the avails, to a great extent, go to pay the British holders of Pernvian government bonds, giving them, to nli intents and purposes, a lien npon the profits of a treasnre tntrinsically more vainable than the gold mines of California. There are deposites of this nnsurpassed fertilizer in some places to the depth of sixty or seventy feet, and over large extents of enrface.

The guano fields are generally conceded to be the exorements of aqnatic fowls which live and nestle in great nnmbers aronnd the islands. They seemed designed by nature to rescue, at least in part, thet nntold amount of fertilising material which every river and brook let s roll-ing into the sea. The wash of alluvial soils, the floating refuse of the field and forest, and nbove all, the wasted materials of great cities, are constantly being carried by the tidal currents out to sea. These, to a certain extent at least go to nonrish, directly or indirectly, submarine vegetable and animal life, which in tarn goes to feed the birds, which at our own day are brought away by the ship load from the Chincha islands.

The bird is n beantifnlly arranged chemical laboratory, fitted up to perform a single operation, viz: to take the fish as food, burn out the oarbon by means of its respiratory functions, and deposit the remainder in the shape of an incomparable fertiliser. But how many ages have these depositions of seventy feet in thickness been accumnlating?

There are at the present day conntless nnmbers of the birds resting npon the islands at night; bnt, according to Baron Humboldt, the exorements of the birds for the space of three centuries, would not form a stratnm over one third of an inch in thickness. By an easy mathematioal caloniation, tt will be seen that at this rate of deposition, it wenld take seven thousand five hnndred and sixty centuries, or seven hnndred and fifty-six thousand years, to form the deepest guano bed!

Such a calculation carries ns back well on to a former geological period, and proves one and perhaps both, of two things—first, that in past ages an infinitely greater number of these birds hovered over the islands; and secondly, that the material world existed at a period long anterior to its fitness as the abode of man. The length of man's existence in infinitesimal, compared with anch a cycle of years; and the facts recorded on every leaf of the material universe ought, if it does not, to teach us humility. That a little bird, whose individual existence is as nothing, should, in its nnited action, produce the means of bringing back to an active fertility whole provinces of waste and barren lands, is one of a thousand facts to show how apparently insignificant agencies in the economy of nature produce momentous results.

HOW JERRY BOUGHT HIS FREEDOM:

An incident recently happened in a neighboring State between master nnd slave, which ought to go far to check the mischievous intermeddling of Abolitionists with our slave population, the details of which we hers give, without any attempt at display or fiotion. The story, simple as we relate it, will prove quite amusing, we fancy.

A gentleman of ample fortnne, and extensively known as one of the most humane masters, a kind neighbor, high-minded, honorable, and influential, owned a favorite servant-man named Jerry. Jerry had been "raised" in the family from infancy, and was beloved by his "Massa George" for his sobriety, honesty and industry. He was trust-worthy and quite intelligent. Jerry prided himself on his honor much more than many "white folks" do, as our story will show. He was petted by the family and generally permitted to do pretty much as he pleased. His master allowed him to work at home or not, as suited him, and for the most part Jerry "hired his time," and was always strictly punctual in his payments. He had n permanent "pass," and went when and where he wanted.

The other day Jerry called on the family, after an absence of a few weeks, and when he had eaten plentifully of a good dinner, he stepped into his master's library, to "cottio up," and talk of matters generally, but of one thing particularly.

"Well, Massa George," said Jerry, after a few formalities, "I wants to be free."

"What, Jerry!" answered the master, in astonishement,

"I wents to be free, Massa Geoege; how much you ax for me?"

"Free! why, you are crazy, boy? What do you want to be free for? Don't you do just as you please already."

"Yes, Massa George, bnt I just got a notion that I'd like to be free. How much do you think I'm worth? How much yon ax for me?"

"Oh, I don't know. If you want to be free, why don't you ran away?"

"Me run away, Massa George?" answered Jerry, rather indignantly; and putting his hand upon his breast, continued: "Too much honor of the family! Jerry never will run away! But say how much I got to pay—how much do yon think I'm worth, Massa George?"

"Well, Jerry, I don't know. Never thought of how much yon are worth. I suppose about fifteen hundred dollars."

"Why, Meeen George, I can't give yon that much, I ain't got it. Can't you take nothing less for me?" said Jerry.

The earnest manner of the slave, and his queer proposition, coming so nnexpectedly to the master, rather amused him, and he determined to let Jorry have his own way in this matter, as he had generally done in others. So he did:

"Very well, Jerry; you are very foolish to want to be any more free than you are. But if it suits you to bny yourself, and you oan't pay me fifteen hundred, what do you say to a thousand?"

"I think a thousand is a little too big, too, Massa George. Can't you eay eight hundred? I b'lieve I can raise about that much. I'll go see, if you says you take it."

"Oh, well, give me your own price—eight hnndred. But, Jerry, where did you get thie money?"

"Where did I get it? you ax, Massa George. Why I made some of it on the river; some of it by knooking about and doing little jobs, and one gentleman hired me to wait on him to Canada. Two or three done that before,"

"Canada! Have you been to Canada? you are a fool. Why didn't you stay there if you are so anxione to be free? Don't you know you were as good as free there?"

"Yes, Massa George, and they told me so. But the honor of the family, Massa George; I oonldn't stand it. I never forget I was born and raised in old Kentncky. Too mnch de family pride, Massa George."

After some further conversation, in which the honest and faithful slave expressed his dislike of Canadian niggers and Abolitioniets, he went off to see about his eight hundred dollars.

Next morning, Jerry again visited his master. There was a change in his countenance quite perooptible. He seemed to be dissatisfied and very uneasy, and his master, noticing it, said:

"Well, Jerry, what's the matter? Do you begin to feel unhappy at the idea of being free?"

"No, Massa George. I wants to be free. Dat ain't de matter. But I finde I'm a little short of the eight hundred dollars. What yon goin' to do 'bont that?"

"How much money have yon got, Jerry?"

"Onl yfive hundred dollars, Massa George. Won't you take that, and trust me for the balance?"

"Ah, but will yon pay if I trnst yon?" asked the indnlgent master.

"The honor of the family! Massa George."

"That's all very well, Jerry, but can't yon give security? Can't yon find eome responeible person who will give me his note for yon?"

"Why, I don't know who go my security, Massa George without you do it yourself. You knows me better than any body else. Won't you be security? You sure to got the money. The honor of the family!"

This was a new way of doing business; but "Massa George" thought he was good enough security, especially when backed by the "honor of the family," and so he took the five hundred cash, and Jerry's note for three hundred more, and gave him a regular bill of sale.

Jerry is now doing n thrifty business, maintains his family dignity, and loves "Massa George," for whom he would shed his last drop of blood!

Go it, Jerry!

A CONVENIENT GUN.—Dr. Colton, the associate of Dr. Boynton, showed us an "Air Gun" yesterdny which to ns was a great curiosity. It has the appearance of an ordinary cane, though rnther large. The upper portion has an air chamber, and when charged with air by a little forca pump, will drive fifteen separate shots before reloading. The lower half of the cane forms the barrel, easily loaded with ball, like an ordinary rifle. The piece is cooked by means of a short wrench. Bullets are driven with snch force as to pass through an inch board at every shot. Dr. C. says he can shoot squirrels from the tops of the highest trees in the forest. He made several excellent shots in our office, hitting a cent at a distance of thirty feet. [Portland State of Maine.

Payment to be made at the close of each term. Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood at, ten dollers per month. Students will be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. We would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at their earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationary, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

MILLS.

French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block.

Seven different sizes of these mills are manufactured adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of burr, power applied and velocity given.

The mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (14 inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal in four and a half minutes. Those desiring such mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor,

XVIII.

...and our bliss
...full is,

But now begins; for, from this happy day,
The old Dragon, under ground
In straiter limits bound,
Not half so far casts his usurped sway;
And, wroth to see his kingdom fail,
Swindges the scaly horror of his folded tail.

XIX.

The oracles are dumb,
No voice or hideous hum
Runs through the arched roof in words deceiving.
Apollo from his shrine
Can no more divine,

With hollow shriek the steep of Delphos leaving.
No nightly trance, or breathed spell,
Inspires the pale-ey'd priest from the prophetic cell.

XX.

The lonely mountains o'er,
And the resounding shore,
A voice of weeping heard and loud lament;
From haunted spring and dale,
Edg'd with poplar pale,
The parting Genius is with sighing sent;
With flower-inwoven tresses torn
The Nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.

XXI.

In consecrated earth,
And on the holy hearth,
The Lars and Lemures moan with midnight plaint;
In urns, and altars round,
A drear and dying sound
Affrights the Flamens at their service quaint;
And the chill marble seems to sweat,
While each peculiar Power foregoes his wonted seat.

XXII.

Peor and Baalim
Forsake their temples dim,
With that twice-batter'd God of Palestine;
And mooned Ashtaroth,
Heaven's queen and mother both,
Now sits not girt with tapers holy shrine;
The Libyck Hammon shrinks his horn,
In vain the Tyrian maids their wounded Thammuz mourn.

XXIII.

And sullen Moloch, fled,
Hath left in shadows dred
His burning idol all of blackest hue;
In vain with cymbals' ring
They call the grisly king,
In dismal dance about the furnace blue:
The brutish gods of Nile as fast,
Isis, and Orus, and the dog Anubis, haste.

XXIV.

Nor is Osiris seen
In Memphian grove or green,
Trampling the unshower'd grass with lowings lond:
Nor can he be at rest
Within his sacred chest;
Nought but profoundest hell can be his shrond;
In vain with timbrell'd anthems dark
The sable-stoled sorcerers bear his worshipt ork.

XXV.

He feels from Juda's land
The dreaded Infant's hand,
The rays of Bethlehem blind his dusky eyn;
Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Nor typhon huge ending in snaky twine:
Our babe, to show his Godhead true,
Can in his swaddling hands control the damned crew.

XXVI.

So when the sun in bed,
Curtain'd with cloudy red,
Pillows his chin upon an orient wave,
The Oocking shadows pale
Troop to the infernal jail,
Each fetterd ghost slips to his several grave;
And the yellow-skirted Fayes
Fly after the night-steede, leaving their moon-loved maze.

XXVII.

But see, the Virgin blest
Hath laid her babe to rest;
Time is, our tedious song should here have ending;
Heaven's youngest-teemed star
Hath fix'd her polish'd car,
Her sleeping Lord with handmaid lamp attending:
And all about the courtly stable
Bright-harness'd Angels sit in order serviceable.

ANNIVERSARY

OF THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

The twenty-third anniversary of the Missionary Society of the Alabama Conference was held in the Presbyterian church of Eutaw, Dec, 8th, 1855. The meeting was called to order by the President, the Rev. J. J. Hutchinson. Devotional services were conducted by the Rev. J. T. Heard. The reports of the Treasurer and Secretary were read and adopted. Eloquent and forcible addresses were delivered by Dr. Lipscomb, of Columbus, Miss., and the Rev. Dr. Sehon. Contributions amounting to over $500 were then received, and the meeting adjourned with the benediction by the President.

At a previous meeting of the Society, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Rev. J. J. Hutchinson, President; J. T. Heard, Vice President; Thos. O. Summers, Secretary; O. R. Blue, Treasurer; J. M. Jennings, F. G. Ferguson, T. Y. Ramsey, Dr. Duncan and C. C. Callaway, Managers.

THOS. O. SUMMERS, Sec'y.
EUTAW, ALA., Dec. 13, 1855.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT,

Adopted at Eutaw, Ala., Dec. 8, 1855.

At the last session of the Alabama Conference, missions were recognized within its bounds. From the reports of the missionaries, we condense the following interesting particulars:

1. The Mobile German Mission was served by M. Meass, who reports 22 members and 30 Sundny-school scholars. He preaches to about 50 Germans.

2. The Mobile State street colored mission was served by G. Garrett, who reports 500 full and 50 probationnry members, and a good Sunday-school. A brick church, costing $6000, has been built, and $4000 of it has been paid.

3. Mobile Little Zion colored mission was served by G. Gerrott, who reports 150 full and 40 probationery members. Their church has been repaired.

4. Black Creek mission was served by J. Bond, who reports 191 white and 10 colored members. Thirty joined the past year. Sixty Sunday-school scholars. The mission is prosperous. The country is sparsely settled.

5. Arcola colored mission was served by J. Williamson, who reports five deaths, ten expulsions, 29 removals, 278 full members, 133 probationers, three adults and forty children baptized, 350 catechized; $350 paid by the planters, who are taking a greater interest in the mission. Three new churches are promised. A parsonage has been secured. Though the mission has been divided, it still has fourteen Sunday appointments. It is promissing.

6. Dayton colored mission was served by A. McBryde and J. Taylor, who state that they had ten appointments at the beginning of the year, afterwards eighteen, now fourteen; 21 plantations, 1777 hearers, 338 members, 335 catechists, 71 adults and 45 children baptized, 4 expelled, 3 died; $670 contributed, being about 65 cents for every field hand on the mission. Dr. S. Smith contributed more than any other person. One neat chapel was built during the year, and others are greatly needed. It is hoped that patrons will lose no time in building them. Some of the planters have declined in their regard for the mission, but others are still favorable.

7. Cottonwood colored mission was served by E. Baldwin, who reports 40 members, and $104 received.

8. Prairie Bluff colored mission was served by T. Burpo, who reports nine preaching places—one a church, and other houses are promised. They are greatly needed. The Spirit has been poured out in the mission. It numbers 124 full and 52 probationary members; 15 adults and 56 children beptized, 181 catechized; $311 contributed by the patrons.

9. Prairie Hill colored mission was served by W. Riley, who reports seven appointments, 1200 hearers, 175 catechized, 78 received on probation; $160 paid on the mission.

10. Plum Creek colored mission was served by E. Callaway, who reports seven appointments, 188 members, 50 catechists; $167 05 received on the mission. It is in a good state.

11. Bogue Chitto colored mission is now—was served by R. Y. Row, who reports eight appointments, two neat chapels, 105 in full membership, and 44 on probation; 153 juvenile and 540 adult catechists, 95 children and 11 adults baptized, between 600 and 1000 hearers; $130 05 collected on the mission. It is decidedly prosperous.

12. Sumterville colored mission was served by L. M. Boyd, who reports six preaching places, 225 colored and 100 white hearers, 15 white and 20 colored members received into the church; $261 95 contributed on the mission.

13. Belmont colored mission was served by B. Melton, who reports five appointments, 150 members, 700 hearers; 10 children and 8 adults baptized; $235 received. One church built this year.

14. Greensboro' colored mission was served by J. Dubois, who reports 10 plantations, two preaching places, 300 hearers, 124 members, 17 received during the year; 10 adults and 16 children baptized. The Hymns for Schools and Families are used on the mission, and prove admirably adapted to it; $160 contributed on the mission. It is prosperous and promising.

15. Prairie Creek colored mission was served by J. C. Huckabee, who reports 12 appointments, 700 persons preached to and catechized; 598 full and 46 probationnry members; 102 added during the year; 15 adults and 53 infants baptized. The mission pays for itself. It is viewed with favor, and is in a prosperous condition.

16. Columbus colored mission was served by B. F. Reeder, who reports 14 appointments, 1500 hearers, 140 members, 200 children catechized. Some have been converted and joined the Baptists. One plantation is under negro Baptist influence, so that but little good can be done on it. The restriction of preaching to Saturday nights and Sundays has an unfavorable influence upon the mission, as also the lack of chapels. It is hoped the planters will remedy these evils.

17. Yorkville colored mission was served by W. E. Cameron, who reports 356 members, 54 received, 5 expelled, 34 baptized, 2 died. It is prosperous only in part.

18. Sipsey mission was served by G. W. Gillespie, who reports 134 white and 39 black members.

19. Hancock mission was served by E. Sullivan, who reports 309 white and 2 colored members, 40 conversions, 4 Sundny-schools; $7 60 collected on the mission. It is promising for the future.

20. Pikeville mission was served by J. M. Gann, who reports 343 full and 75 probationary white members, 8 full and 4 probationary colored members, 10 Sunday-schools.

21. Warrior mission was served by J. B. Waren, who reports 13 appointments, 270 members, 160 of whom were received on probation this year.

22. Sand Mountain mission was served by W. Rhodes and E. Nicholson, who report 381 full and 131 probationary members, 126 conversions, 26 adults and 18 children baptized, 13 Sundny-schools; $67 70 collected on the mission. The territory is large enough for two missions.

23. Coosa mission was served by S. E. Swoope, who reports 120 white and 2 colored members, 13 adults and 7 infants baptized, 2 good Sunday-schools.

24. Tallndega and Alexandria colored mission was served by E. Patton, who reports 160 members in full fellowship, 80 probationers, 800 hearers, 32 adults and 21 children beptized, 80 children and many adults catechized; $70 collected.

25. Ochnulgee colored mission was served by P. R. McCrary, who reports 550 hearers, 231 catechumens, 185 baptized, 83 received into the church, making 136 members; $159 received. The catechumens make fine progress. The planters are gratified, and purpose building churches next year. The patronage of the planters is of great service to the mission.

26. Maplesville mission was served by J. T. Roper, who reports 146 white and 17 colored members, 37 received on probation. As Maplesville is not in the mission, Kingston has been suggested as its proper name.

27. Montgomery colored mission was served by J. W. Brown, who reports 700 members, 200 Sunday-school scholars. It is prosperous.

28 Catoma colored mission was served by J. C. Stricklin, who reports 170 colored members, 15 probationers, 17 whites; $178 received. It was in a good state till August. Since then, on account of sickness, not much has been done.

29. Andrew colored mission was served by C. N. McLeod, who reports 9 appointments, 15 patrons, and others whose servants are preached to, 6 white and 101 colored members in full fellowship, 38 on trial, 58 have been received, 2 expelled, 11 baptized, 110 catechized, 450 hearers; $186 received. The planters as well as the slaves are pleased. The prospect is encouraging.

30. Uchee colored mission was served by F. H. Wardlaw, who reports 16 appointments, 5 being new, 583 full and 193 probationary members, 450 catechumens, 3000 hearers, 106 received, 3 expelled, 13 dropped, 231 baptized. The patrons are all pleased, and the prospect is good.

31. Big Swamp colored mission was served by A. Skinner and D. Hurlong, who report 23 appointments, 3 white and 332 colored members, 75 received this year, 359 children catechized, 26 adults and 49 children baptized; $350 received.

32. Glennville colored mission was served by W. H. Carter, who reports 9 appointments, 8 patrons, who paid $166, and who are building chapels—being pleased with the mission—553 hearers, 136 catechumens, 193 full and 38 probationary members.

33. Hatchee Chubbee, or Villula colored mission was served by L. Patterson, who reports 9 appointments, 8 patrons, who paid $166, and who are building chapels, being pleased with the mission; 553 hearers, 136 catechumens, 193 full and 38 probationery members.

34. Oswichee colored mission was served by A. S. Andrews, who reports 145 colored members, 70 catechumens, with one white appointment of 14 members; $400 received.

Chunnenuggo colored mission was served by A. Tatum.

36. Barbour colored mission was served by J. W. Jordan, who reports 7 appointments, one white appointment having been joined to the circuit and one colored appointment withdrawn. It numbers 45 full and 36 probationary members, 90 catechumens, 500 hearers, black and white, one white Sundey-school; $11 58 received on the mission; 10 adults and 28 children baptized.

37. Otho colored mission was served by A. Granthum, who reports 150 full and 57 probationary members, 30 baptized, 900 preached to and catechized. The patrons desire its continuance.

38. Holmes mission was served by W. A. Sampey, who reports 117 full and 23 probationary and 6 colored members; $12 76 received.

39. Chipola colored mission was served by J. R. Lockey, who reports 250 members.

40. Blacks Bend colored mission was served by E. Hearn, who reports 400 preached to and catechised, 150 members; $47 25 received. Two of the patrons have died. Not much interest is felt by the planters.

41. German Creek mission was served by A. R. Ramsey, who reports 800 hearers, 93 received on probetion, 87 into full communion, 81 baptized, 156 catechized. The mission, it is thought, will soon support itself.

42. Clark colored mission has been organized this year, and served by R. Forrester, who deplores the want of countenance on the part of planters, but reports good results from the labors bestowed on the servants, to some 300 or 400 of whom he had preached. He reports 78 communicants, 47 received this year; $172 paid in the mission, and more expected.

43. Perote colored mission has been organized. The missionary, M. Padgett, reports 7 appointments, one being to the whites, 106 members, 15 adults and 6 children baptized; $125 25 received, $5 being from the blacks. It is promising.

44. Gainestown mission has been recently organized. The missionary, Peyton Wimbish, reports 4 appointments; $150 received.

The foregoing reports are exceedingly suggestive to the Christian mind. They furnish occasion for lamentation and sorrow. It is painful to think that there are any owners of slaves in this country who will not allow them the means of religious instruction—who would rather pay the missionary to depart out of their coasts than to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to those of whose time and service they have the control. "The Lord is the judge of all such." On the other hand, it is cause of unspeakable gratitude and joy to see, through the agency of our society, the means of religious instruction and salvation brought within the reach of so many thousands of "the servile progeny of Ham," who otherwise would remain in the region and shadow of death. It is devoutly to be hoped that the time will soon come when missionaries and churches will be found in all the plantations of the South, and the hands of our American Ethiopia shall be stretched forth unto God in prayer and praise. To bring about this desirable consummation is the special work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. May she prove faithful to her trust!

The question is sometimes suggested whether or not the Methodist Episcopal Church can properly be considered a missionary Church.

Those who answer it in the negative institute a comparison between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the other leading evangelical bodies in our country. They point to the extended and extending fields cultivated by Presbyterians of various sections, Congregationalists, and Baptists, in Burmah, Northern India, Armenia, and other parts of the earth, and ask, Where are our missions? They point to the revenue raised for the support of those enterprises, and ask what we contribute for the evangelization of the heathen. They call attention to the spirit which actuates those bodies in regard to this subject, and ask if a similar spirit prevail in our communion.

Those who take the affirmative of the question maintain that the Methodist Episcopal Church has followed in the foot-steps of the Wesleyan Connection in England, which they consider the avant courier in the missionary field.*

They point to the operations of the Church among the settlements on the frontiers of American civilization, among the Indians, and among the colored population. They also call attention to the incipient movements of the Church in Africa and in China; and to the $400,000 per annum appropriated by the two divisions of the Church for missionary purposes. Aback of these developments, they point to the aggressive spirit of our itinerant ministry, and especially to our doctrinal platform, which, as it maintains the universality of the atonement, preëminently extends the ministerial commissions to all nations and to every creature. What those who believe in a limited atonement and its concomitants inconsistently essay cannot be consistently neglected by us who believe that the scheme of redemption embraces "the whole world," and "every man."

We are inclined to the paradox of adopting both these views. The Methodist Episcopal Church is and is not a missionary Church.

If by missionary we understand the carrying of the gospel into the realms of heathendom, "the regions beyond" the area of nominal Christendom, then unquestionable the Methodist Episcopal Church has not signalized herself as a missionary Church. The mission of the northern Methodist Church in Liberia is principally confined to the people of color who have been sent thither from this country. We are told that the Liberians find it as much as they can do to keep themselves from going into barbarism by coming in contact with the savages around them, so that they hardly dream of civilizing the latter. The climate being fatal to the white man; the evangelization of the heathen in Western Africa presents a problem which we do not like to undertake to solve. In China the northern Methodist Church has made an unpromising commencement, though the prospects are now brightening. The Southern Church has done better in that country. Our missionaries have succeeded admirably in acquiring a knowledge of the language, manners, customs, and genius of the people. They have been digging deep and we hope laying broad foundations for a large superstructure. But we have only six men and their wives in China—indeed, only five now, as Dr. Taylor, after making almost unparalleled acquirements in the knowledge of the language and customs of the Chinese, considering the time he spent in China, has been obliged, in view of the health of his wife, to return and remain for a season in his native land. As yet, only two, or perhaps three, native Chinese, have been baptized by our missionaries—only three converts! Outside of this we have not a single mission on heathen soil. Surely the Methodist Episcopal Church can hardly be called a missionary Church—scarcely, when, in addition to the foregoing facts, we here men among us who coolly cast up the sums expended yearly for the China mission—contend that the missionaries could be more profitably employed at home—and, in short, question the enterprise altogether. She does not look much like a missionary Church when the annual contributions of her members to the missionary work amount to only a quarter of a dollar a head, and only a fourth of that pitiful sum goes to the foreign field.

On the other hand, it is obvious that the Methodist Episcopal Church has done more to evangelize the population of our new and sparsely settled territories, the Indian tribes, and colored people, than any other communion, not to say, more than all the rest put together. When it is recollected that the tendency of mankind so circumstanced is to lapse into barbarism, it requires but little argument to prove that the Church which promotes the civilization and evangelization of those regions deserves to be called missionary in its organization and spirit. Especially does this apply to the Southern Methodist Church. What would be the condition of the slaves on Southern and Southwestern plantations, but for the "missions"—the name is no misnomer—of the Methodist "missionaries?" Would they not be as truly heathen as if they were in the land of their fathers? Look into their condition in some plantations from which the missionary has been excluded, and you have the answer. We blush to say, there are such—not only among papists and infidels in Louisiana, but also among those who profess to be Protestant Christians in that and other States.

The unclogged doctrinal system of our Church must be taken into special account. If our Church is less zealous than her doctrinal platform requires her to be, and other churches are more zealous than their doctrinal platform logically allows, the question arises.—Why is this so? It is partly at least because the liberal principles of Methodism have forced their way into other communions, despite the rigid quarantines that have been enforced. The five points—whilom bristly—have been seriously blunted; and without formally coming over to our basis, those of other confessions have so far adopted ours as to make it the ground of their active enterprises, ignoring those elements of their own creed which would restrain them from such movements.

Whether or not, therefore, the Methodist Episcopal Church should be considered distinctively a missionary Church, depends very much on the relative importance of what are called the Foreign and Home departments of missionary enterprise.

Viewing the subject in the light of immediate effects in regard to the actual results of missionary effort, the foreign field diminishes in interest. What little apparent impression has been made on the heathen world, since the era of modern missions! What vast outlays, and what small returns! And then the question occurs. Did not the soul of a man born in the United States—Caucasian, Mongolian, or Ethiopian—cost as much to redeem it as the soul of any heathen in the old world? Will it not live as long—in bliss or woe? And is it not obviously our duty to begin at home, and evangelize the masses of our own population, our servants, and the descendants of the aboriginal inhabitants of these broad lands which have fallen to our inheritance?

On the other hand, it is urged that the very name of missionary, and the terms of the great Commission, imply sending and going into distant lands—proclaiming the word of life to those to whom it will be news, as the angel described it, glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people—that the apostles, when they made the offer of salvation to any community, organized the believers into a society and left the unbelievers to their fate, as Paul expresses it, "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles; for so hath the Lord commanded us saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldst be for salvation unto the ends of the earth." It is contended that it was by acting on this principle that the gospel spread so rapidly over the globe in the apostolic age; and that every Christian nation, having been once pagan, is of the soundness of this philosophy a patent attestation. Many who adopt this latter view think and speak disparagingly of all home operations, and are disposed to concentrate all the energies of the Church on evangelical operations in foreign lands.

Now it is obvious that if we are to be influenced by considerations of difficulty and discouragement, there are enough of them connected with both the domestic and foreign work to prevent us from engaging in either. He that thus observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that thus regardeth the clouds shall not reap—he will not secure the blessing pronounced on those "who sow beside all waters." The reconciling medium is this, to recognize the obligation to do the one and not leave the other undone. Christianity knows nothing of metes and bounds, oceans and mountains, except to girdle them with her godlike charity, and demonstrate the unity of our species by sprinkling the nations with that blood by which all have been redeemed.

Leaving out of view for the present the duty of laboring for those who are of our own country, in regard to their personal salvation, we should increase our efforts in this field a thousand fold, by multiplying ministers, schools, tracts, and other appliances, so as to increase our capacity for extending our operations abroad; and we should increase our efforts in the foreign field, because there they are the most needed—to it we are invited by the calls of Providence—and thither are we sent by the Captain of our salvation; and under no pretence may we disobey our "marching orders." Our success may be small—our progress may be slow—but our duty is clear and our reward is sure.

The ter-centenary celebration of the martyrdom of Latimer and Ridley, who suffered under bloody Mary, has just taken place. The noblest of all the noble army of martyrs, who by "that woman Jezebel" were sent to heaven "on fiery wheels"—a more glorious translation than by the chariot of the Tishbite—Hugh Latimer, one of the most humble Christians and popular preachers, and perhaps the most venerable man of his times, being three-score and fifteen years of age, and therefore entitled to prophesy—just as the powder, the faget, and the torch were about to be applied to him and his fellow-sufferer for the truth, exclaimed, "Be of good comfort: we shall this day light such a candle in England, as I trust by God's grace shall never be put out." A glorious candle was that martyr-stake! From that fire which was kindled by popish bigots, before Balliol College, Oxford, on that sixteenth day of October, 1555, "See how great a flame aspires!" It lighted up that old university, whence the torch-bearers—including Whitefield and the Wesleys—have gone forth to illuminate England and the world. The blaze has lighted the vales and plains and reddened the mountain-tops of regions and climes, which, when the prophecy was uttered, were lying in darkness and in the shadow of death. The light of that candle has been obscured, but it has never been put out. It burns now with a steadier and a higher flame than at any previous period. And it is only for the more dispirited among us to retrospect its history during the past three centuries, to be re-assured in our minds that not only shall it never be put out, but that the propagating flame shall extend until it shall "set the kingdoms on a blaze"—the world on fire!

Its light is communicative—its heat is expansive. John Wesley felt it when he realized that strange warming of his noble heart in Aldersgate street—that baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire, which made him so emphatically "a burning and a shining light." He communicated it to Asbury, Coke, and their coadjutors—they to thousands in the Indies, East and West, and on our own continent. Their successors, with others like-minded, have been shining as lights in the world ever since—they are shining now—and "so shall the bright succession run." We rejoice in their light—it is our privilege, our duty, to perpetuate and increase its shining. We may, we must, we will, reflect that martyr, missionary light. "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us: that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise thee O God: let all the people praise thee." The proffering of that prayer, and the answer to that prayer, will ascertain the validity of our claim to be considered a part of the sacramental host, the true militant, that is, missionary Church of our Lord Jesus Christ "Blessed be his glorious name for ever and ever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen, and amen!"

JENNY LIND recently paid a visit to Paris, and created quite a sensation. The fair vocalist, however, for some reason or other, has never yet permitted the Parisians to listen to the exquisite tones of her extraordinary voice. It is stated that during her stay at the French capitol, she was seen one night at the Comic Opera, but remained only until after the first act. A letter writer says: "She rarely went out, and only two or three times to the theatres in the evening, and to the exhibition during the day, endeavoring to maintain everywhere the strictest incognito, and running away as soon as she was recognized."

"It is added that two or three distinguished visitors succeeded in obtaining an interview with Jenny, and she listened to their compliments without frowning, but it was impossible to draw from her an answer. She did not speak a word, not the least monosyllable. Her friends say in excuse that she does not know French, but this is a fable. Jenny Lind speaks French as well as any German singer, not excepting Mademoiselle Cruvelli."

ROBERT SCHUYLER.—The Watchman and Crusader of New York, publishes a letter, dated Turin, Nov. 18th, stating that Robert Schuyler, the railroad stock operator, resides in a villa not distant from Genoa. The writer says the governments of Sardinia and the United States are negotiating an extradition treaty, and that Mr. Schuyler is rather opposed to the arrangement.

* The British Wesleyan Methodist Church has always been eminently a missionary Church. The Report of the Missionary Society presented May 1, 1855, showed that the receipts for the year ending December 31, 1854, amounted to £114,548 14s. 4d.; the disbursements the same, reducing the debt which the year before was £19,601 11s 1d, to £15 723 19s. 7d. The Society has central and principal stations, called circuits, 307; chapels and other preaching places, 3,116; ministers and assistant missionaries, 507; catechists, interpreters, day-school teachers, etc., 103; unpaid agents, as Sabbath-school teachers, etc., 6,779; full and accredited Church members, 110223; on trial for Church membership, 4473; scholars in the day and Sabbath-schools, 78,311; printing establishments, 9; all in foreign countries.

A DELAYED LETTER.

Eutaw, Dec. 13, 1855.

Leaving Vicksburg on Tuesday afternoon, the 4th inst.; came by good railroad car to Jackson, and by a very mean one from that point to Brandon. Brandon! so famous once for abundance of money—of a sort. Its bank and bankers are known over the world, and many a man has a memento of its "finish times" in the shape of a fine-looking, worthless bill. How fast we live! Rome was a thousand years in getting as wide a fame as this one-horse town of Mississippi.

It was dark, and I had a curiosity to see Brandon. Believe I saw the most of it by a walk, walking from the railroad station to the stage office. An intelligent citizen informed me that much of its trade had already been diverted to Mobile by the Ohio railroad, and this process of diversion was going rapidly on as this road was pushed up the country. Instead of two railroad shipments, and then by boat to New Orleans, the wagons take it a little farther, put it on the Mobile and Ohio track, and it is directly landed in market. This road has reached Lauderdale Springs, near 150 miles. Already a great road, and growing.

After two nights and days unintermitted staging, reached Gainesville to dinner—with-eighteen miles of this place. Learn to my surprise that, keeping to the stage, I could not reach Eutaw till noon next day. Had paid through with the understanding of being put through. Hired a private conveyance, and was in Eutaw by Thursday night. The agent of the stage company refusing to let another gentleman take my seat in the stage from Gainesville to Eutaw, who had expressed willingness to be my substitute, and to refund to me the amount of fare I was out. A faithful agent, doubtless; but the instructions under which he acted were disobliging, to my the least. But what use of travelling with companies and agents.

A safe trip I had across the State, over streams and localities with euphonious Indian names. Woods were in autumn dress—scant and fading into winter. I fell on a few choice specimens of the stage-road landlord species, a marked and interesting character. There was Capt. Tom Owen, in Scott county. Has been sheriff of the same. And Mr. Cullough,—or rather his wife—keeping the "stand and dinner house at Union," a fine host" round faced and jovial, bustling about, getting the news—so hospitable you wonder that it can be hired, and wonder still more at the friendliness with which the inevitable "four bits" is got at.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Bishop Paine presides. The attendance of members and visitors is large. In the Presbyterian church religious services have been held every day. The sessions are held in the Methodist. Among the visitors are Dr. Sehon and Rev. H. A. C. Walker. The Missionary secretary spares not himself. No man seems to be so engaged as he. From Conference to Conference he flies. Day before yesterday he was for the Georgia, in session at Lagrange. Glad the midst of his great cares and labors, I glad he enjoys the best health.

The Tract meeting on Friday night was a rare rate. Large was the crowd, and high the interest. Dr. Hamilton, the General Secretary, made a very eloquent appeal for help and friends to this branch of our religious literature. The report of the Corresponding agent, Rev. F. G. Ferguson, was encouraging; especially that feature of it which showed that the distribution of these publications had been undertaken by the itinerant preachers, on sale and gift. Only get the willing preachers to scatter these leaves of life and of healing, and soon this arm of the Lord's work will be mighty. It is not beneath the sun nor beneath any—it is auxiliary to—

Rev. L. M. Wells, on Mooreville Circuit, disposed of $316 worth of books while serving his regular pastorate. Rev. C. Leland, on a circuit in Macon county, as well. Rev. L. Moore, and others, showed that this great work is not in the way of their piety. Their example is worth much—very much. If colportage can be blended with itinerancy, then our moral machinery is well in force. At close of this interesting meeting the collection was $415.

The Missionary meeting of Saturday night was very large, but not so well managed as some of the night before. Dr. Summers read one of his able reports. A finished and stirring address was made by Dr. Lowndes Lipscomb, of Columbus, Miss. Dr. Sehon followed. The collection was about $600. O. Hamilton, Treasurer, reports a collection of between twenty and twenty-four thousand dollars—an increase over last year.

After a debate of three days and a half, the location of the College was effected to-day. There is to be one College and one only, and that at Greensboro'. I took large notes of the speeches—have covered 84 pages of foolscap. May publish them in the Advocate. I never listened to an abler discussion, or one evolving more light. The subject drifted a great way from its original position. It was presented in every light. DeVampert, Hutchinson, Calloway, Koger, Wadsworth, Mitchell were the chief speakers for the one College, and that at Greensboro'. Blue, Baker, Andrews, Ferguson and McCarty for two Colleges, and they at Greensboro' and Auburn. Interest waxed greater and greater. I have been able to keep neutral, but have been under the most intense excitement. The Greensboro' friends have brought up their subscriptions to $168,000; endorsed, and good as money. Auburn, noble Auburn, was well represented, and has acted magnanimously throughout. Baker and Blue led, and never have I seen abler leaders. Blue exceeded himself in the readiness, skill and power of his generalship. He fought like Washington—and if any one can conceive of his surrendering, he surrendered like Washington! Dr. Summers passed between the contending parties with an occasional white flag. Auburn and her friends—and who are not her friends?—will yield gracefully to the arbitration. Many were with her in sympathies, wishes, local feelings, who felt constrained, in view of the church's largest good, to vote for one College, as originally proposed for. I think the published discussion will tend to settle the public mind in unison with the Conference action. The Conference, it is likely, will adjourn to-morrow.

H. N. McTyeire.

P. S. No. 1.—Before closing this, I add a few items. I forgot to say that, by resolution of Rev. W. Murrah, a committee was raised early in the session to inquire into the practicability of dividing the Conference, and report a line. This, of course, could not be done till next General Conference. But it was brought up thus early in order, as I think, to ease off the College question, which, till the hour of settlement, had an insoluble look. The Conference is large—but all the better for that. Small bodies of this sort have small influence. There is a prestige and moral power about a large Conference that ought not lightly to be sacrificed. Its effects are seen in this session most strikingly. The committee could not agree upon a division. If ever it is made, this is likely to be the line: The Mobile and Alabama rivers, up to the mouth of the Cahaba river; thence up the Cahaba river to the mountains. The upper portion retaining the name of the old Alabama Conference. I cannot bear the thought of division, though some talk of it as a probability. It will hardly be in our time.

A spirited meeting last night, when the friends of Greensboro' were called together by C. C. Callaway to make another pull on the subscription list. It was in a private room. Half a dozen Methodist laymen "happened in," and $33,500 was put down. Some of the main items on the list, as now it stands, are: the Nelsons, $28,750; DeVampert, $25,000; J. W. Walton, $12,500; T. M. Johnson, $12,500; Hon. John Erwin, $7,000; Dr. Drake, $5,000. Other sums range from $4,000 to $100. The whole guaranteed by men good for a million or two. So that the prospect is of the most encouraging character. The friends of Auburn and Greensboro' will both rejoice over it, with the friends of education everywhere.

The following extract, from a communication from a gentleman in Texas to the New York Observer, is refreshing in these days of bitter writing against Methodism:

"In regard to religion, no man can but be profoundly impressed with the excellence and usefulness of the Methodist Church, when he sees what it has effected in this new State. It has canvassed every acre of Texas with its preachers, and has done immense good toward organizing Christian society, and repressing the immorality so natural in a new State. God bless the great Methodist Church! no one admires and rejoices in its labors more than I do, though dissenting from many of its doctrines and practices. It is the most numerous church in Texas. The Cumberland is probably the next in size, then the Baptist the Presbyterian, and the Episcopal. With the relative strength of the Lutheran Church, and also of the Roman Catholic, I am not acquainted. Many of the Protestant, Germans, Swiss and Swedes have united with the Evangelical American Churches, and make pious and valuable members."

Louisiana Conference.

LETTER FROM WOODSMAN.

A fact, better known to ourselves than to your readers, accounts for this letter, and has lead to the hope that hereafter our worthy Bishops will be able so to adjust the Conferences that the editors will be in attendance. Next to the presiding Bishop, Conference feel the absence of editors and the other representatives of our various Church interests. Could the time of meeting be arranged so as to secure their presence at all the Conferences the greatest advantage would be secured. This year we had none of the agents or editors with us—not even our own editor. This was no fault of theirs—perhaps the fault of nobody; but they could not be in two or more places at the same time. The list of "distinguished visitors" was small indeed. Rev. James Young stood alone in this catalogue. He is a local preacher but an itinerant man—has travelled in fifteen States, and canvassed the most of Texas on the temperance question. He acts as general literary commissary for various orders and societies, supplying the world with the lights of temperance, the Masonic Library, and other works, we presume, of rare excellence. He now hails from Holly Springs, and has upon his hands, besides the aforesaid interests, an agency for Franklin Female College. Strong work is all this, and enough to weigh down a strong man with distinction.

But we anticipate. Conference met in the good town of Bastrop, on the 12th, Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair, and most of the members present. The Bishop arrived the evening before, in company with a number of young men, transferred from Memphis. They came through the swamp from Providence, a distance of fifty miles, and were thoroughly initiated into the depths and mysteries of swamp Itinerancy. The session was altogether most harmonious, and business, without being hurried, was done with dispatch. The committee of the whole, in lay session, occupied the afternoons, and worked efficiently and profitably for our various Conference interests. It is to be regretted that the lay delegation was not fully represented. Those present were chiefly from North Louisiana—an intelligent body of Christian gentlemen they were, entering cordially upon their duties, and contributing many practical suggestions and much valuable aid. The trial of this lay delegate idea has abundantly proved its utility, and the feeling of the Conference now is, that we can not well do without it. It is a right arm in carrying out many of our most important projects, and those in particular which are with education and finance. As it is incorporated with our committee, we have the benefits without the embarrassments which attach to it when it is made a part of the ecclesiastical and legislative economy. The fact that it originated with the Conference in its own convictions, and not from any outside pressure of the laity, indicates the soundness and safety of the movement. Its benefits are already manifesting themselves, and the future promises much. Let the Quarterly Conferences secure their delegates, and the experience of these three years, beyond a peradventure assures of advantages more than equal to the expense and trouble of their attendance at the seat of the annual Conference. We have a large increase of numbers this Conference. Ten transfers from the Memphis Conference—a band of noble, vigorous young men, not too mature to become racy of their adopted soil, and not so new as to be without certain elements of character, which may be transplanted with advantage. There are two additions from Kentucky, men of muscle and heart, and admissions on trial from our own limits so as to swell the accessions to twenty or more. The Conference acknowledges this as an answer to special prayer for an increase of laborers. We are now stronger than ever before,—the ground is more fully occupied, and we look for a corresponding prosperity in the work throughout the bounds of the state.

It rained on Saturday night, and the missionary meeting was held on Sunday night. Dr. Walker made one of his best and telling speeches, and Bishop Kavanaugh followed with a wealth of argument, anecdote, humor and pathos which seldom falls to the lot of an audience to hear all at once. The Bishop was so satisfactory in the chair and in the pulpit, that, on the philosophy of compensation, we distrusted his adequacy on the platform. But in this we were mistaken. His speech had all the adaptation, and fitness that could be wished. The results were greater than at any previous anniversary. No hat collection was taken—nothing but subscriptions, life memberships and cotton bales. Bastrop deserves the banner, and we willingly award it to her. Compared with previous anniversaries, eight hundred dollars was a liberal contribution to the cause of missions. Those of us who had never visited the Ouachita were agreeably disappointed in our estimate of this country. We were more than ever impressed with the vast resources of this part of the state, and with the adaptation and progress of Methodism.

Our progress up the river was a series of pleasant surprises. The river itself is noble and beautiful, and on its banks are new and growing towns, and plantations in a high state of culture. What with its natural advantages, and the class of new people fast occupying its rich alluvion, its present and prospective importance cannot easily be over estimated. Of Bastrop and its citizens we can only speak in terms of commendation. The hospitality, Christian courtesy, and ample attention to the comfort of the Conference will always meet with a grateful acknowledgement by those of us who were so fortunate as to enjoy their kindness. But few sections of the State are as highly favored with so many generous and liberal minded citizens—men whose hearts and purses are in the right place. At Bastrop we worshipped in a new Church just from the builders hands, and an earnest of the public spirit and religious sentiment of the community. The old Church is standing, more commodious than some places of the size can boast, but they would have a better and larger, and so they build it, albeit the times were hard, and the rivers were low, and the crops were nearly a failure. The religious services were profitable. Several professed religion, and twenty-seven were added to the Church. A few minutes before the appointments were read out on Monday night, the doors of the Church were opened, and eighteen joined at once. We have never witnessed a more affecting scene—nor a more gratifying. Certainly the Conference was a "savor of life unto life."

The steamship Texas, Capt. Forbes, arrived on Tuesday evening from Vera Cruz, bringing dates to the 22d, and files of papers from the City of Mexico to the 18th.

Capt. Forbes reports that the Spanish steamer Mexico arrived at Vera Cruz on 21st inst. from Havana, and that, on the same day, the American schooner Montauk left Vera Cruz for Alvarado, and the bark Mary Varney for Coatzacoalcos.

The American steamer Ben Franklin, from Baltimore, was at Vera Cruz when the Texas left, and the officers and crew of the former came up passengers on the Texas. The elections of deputies to the constituent Congress had taken place. Good order prevailed at the places of holding the elections.

Alvarez had resigned the Presidency and retired to the south. Ignacion Comonfort was elected in his place. There was some opposition to the decree nominating him, but the only result was the arrest of D. Miguel Buenarostro, who headed the movement, and of two others. This quelled the disturbance, which at one time threatened to become serious, a large mob, with arms in their hands, having attempted to storm the municipal palace where the Council was assembled. They shouted "Death to the Clergy! Death to Comonfort!"

The new Ministry stands: Senor D. Luis de la Rosa, of Relations; Senor D. Ezequiel Montes, of Justice; Senor D. J. M. Lafragua, of Government; Gen. D. J. M. Yanez, of War; Senor D. Manuel Siliceo, of Fomento; and Senor D. Manuel Payno, of Finance.

A filibustering expedition composed of two vessels and headed by J. Napoleon Terman, had arrived at Mazatlan, for the purpose of taking possession. The adventurers, however, are reported to have been completely routed without loss by the Mexican troops and people. The leader of the expedition and the crews of the two vessels had been taken prisoners and sent to San Blas for safe keeping. A correspondent of the Monitor states that Terman embarked at Cape San Lucas on the 29th of October, with eighty men. He then went with a whale-boat and the bark Restaurador to La Paz, proposing to take it. On the 13th ult. he anchored in Punta Prieta, and summoned Gen. Blanoarte to surrender. The latter, however, showed fight, seized Termun, fired on the Restaurador, and made her Capt. Deolson surrender, after killing one and wounding two. The Captain of the Rebecca Adams afterwards did the same.

A conspiracy had been discovered in Puebla, and several arrests were made.

From Buenos Ayres.—Files to the 27th of October have been received to New York. Goula, Bastos, Lamela Flores and other chiefs, were again in revolution, but a last dates, Flores was to retreat towards Ensenada, to re-embark for the Oriental coast. Lamela was up in the North and a good deal of trouble was expected. Other Indian incursions were also decided.

Gold Ollevari had arrived at Buenos Ayres. Exchange on United States stood at par.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

Senate.—Mr. James gave notice of the introduction of a bill for the modification of the Patent laws.

Mr. Foot presented the petition of Captain Graham of Brooklyn, setting forth his services and sufferings in behalf of the country, and complaining of the action of the Naval Board. Mr. Foot said it was not his purpose to pass strictures on its action, still less to impugn its motives, but it was not to be disguised or denied, nor had it escaped public observation, that in some instances at least, it, the Board, had sadly misjudged. Grievous mistakes had been made and gross wrong inflicted on meritorious officers. In what manner or what measure of relief Congress should extend he did not consider his province to judicate, but he regarded it as a proper subject for consideration for the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The petition was so referred and the Senate adjourned.

House.—M. Dunn rose to a personal explanation as soon as the House had been called to order.

He read extracts from the Washington correspondence of the New York Tribune, of the 13th, signed H. G., commenting on his course in the effort to elect a speaker. He said that notwithstanding the attack, he should not turn his back on his country at the expense of his time, manliness and honor though Horace Greeley or the devil, or both together, bid him do it! [Applause and laughter.]

He complained that he and others, denominated strugglers, are not daguerreotyped but caricatured. He had said from the first, that when all the anti-Nebraska men come together and surrender local and personal prejudices, and agree to stand on equal terms, discontinuing stabbing men in the dark, he would feel himself bound to acquiesce in their course for the Speakership, whether present at meetings or not. The great trouble has been—Cæsar has a party, and Anthony a party, but Rome none! Certain gentlemen have held themselves aloof, and the balloting will show who and where they are. He also commented on an article in the New York Times, defended his course, and explained his ground of action.

From Texas.—By the arrival, on Saturday last, of the steamship Mexico, Captain Lawless, we have Galveston papers to the 20th.

The Methodist Conference in that city adjourned on Wednesday last, after a session of eight days.

The Galveston News, of Thursday, says:

Four more vessels, since our last report, have arrived with cross ties and other materials for the Galveston, Houston and Henderson railroad. Twenty miles of this road are now graded and the ties that have arrived are being sent across the bay to Virginia Point. Seventy-five hands are now engaged in grading, but additional hands will commence laying the ties and iron next week, under the direction of W. W. Buel, Esq., who has taken the contract for this part of the work.

The Indianola Bulletin learns that Dr. Levi Jones has obtained a quarter of a million dollars to build a railroad from there to El Passo. The editor says the citizens of Indianola are much elated at the prospect.

According to the News the Galveston and Red River railroad is progressing finely. The stock already subscribed amounts to nearly half a million dollars, and $205,032 29 have already been paid out. The News says:

The survey has been paid for a distance of one hundred and fifty-four miles, in addition to which a large tract of country has been explored. Thus far the road has been prosecuted almost exclusively by the efforts of the citizens of Houston alone. Our informant says the work for grading the next twenty-five miles will be commenced on the 1st of January, proximo, and that it is the intention of the company to have fifty miles in running order by the 1st of February.

H. J. G. Battle, President of the Texas and Red River Telegraph Company, has addressed a communication to the stockholders informing them that the line has been seized by operators for wages due them, and would be sold by the Sheriff of Caddo on the 1st proximo.

Recent Publications.

Cicero's Three Books of Offices, or Moral Duties; also, his Cato Major, an Essay on Old Age; Laelius, an Essay on Friendship; Paradoxes; Scipio's Dream; and Letter to Quintus. Literally translated. By Cyrus R. Edmonds. New York: Harper & Brothers.

The Anabasis, or Expedition of Cyrus, and the Memorabilia of Socrates. Literally translated from the Greek of Xenophon. By the Rev. J. S. Watson. With a geographical commentary. By W. F. Ainsworth, Esq. New York: Harper & Brothers.

Cæsar's Commentaries on the Gallic and Civil Wars; with the supplementary books attributed to Hirtius; Literally translated. New York: Harper & Brothers.

The three forementioned volumes, belonging to Harpers' classical library, have been laid on our table by H. D. McGinnis, 30 Camp st. The translation is very correct and the works are well and handsomely printed. Those who wish to read the great writers of the past, and found their knowledge of what has been upon a sound substructure, should not fail to secure for themselves the advantages offered by the present publication. Cicero, Cæsar and Xenophon must always stand in the fore rank of the writers, and their works command that attentive and general regard which the old immortals only have secured for themselves. Both the De Officiis and the Anabasis are, so far as we have looked at them, closely and rigidly rendered.

An additional merit of these books is the very chaste and elegant manner in which they are gotten up. The paper is clear and strong, and the type as distinct as type can be. No publishing house in the country has sent out its works more generally excellent in the mechanical department than that of the Harpers, and we are happy to see that this great merit is even increasing with their increasing publications. The splendid volumes that were the pride, as they were the monuments of English, French and German houses, have now a parallel with us in the publications of the Harpers, and other notable firms, who emblaim and distribute the literature of the age.

A Child's History of the United States. By John Bonner. In two volumes. New York: Harper & Brothers.

Mr. Bonner, in his introduction, states that the object of his history was to write a work that should accord with Dicken's history of England, for the juveniles. He has succeeded very well in his effort, giving the pith and point of what others might embody in volumes, in a very short space. It is an admirable thing for children, and is as appropriate for a holiday gift as any other book we know of.

The Testimony of an Escaped Novice, from the Sisterhood of St. Joseph. By Josephine M. Bunkley. New York: Harper & Brothers.

We have received a copy of Miss Bunkley's book, containing her experience in a nunnery. The volume is of three hundred and fifty pages, with notes and engravings. It has created considerable curiosity in the North, and will doubtless be very widely read. The Harpers have given it a fine dress and admirable typography.

H. D. McGinnis, 36 Camp street, has our thanks for copies of the above named books.

Later from Northern Mexico.—By the steamship Nautilus, Captain Thompson, which arrived from Brazos Santiago on Saturday last, we learn that on the 4th inst., Garza obtained possession of Tampico without bloodshed, the forces of Traconis retiring from the city. A correspondence had taken place between Vidaurri and Garza, in which a conference for the purpose of settling their differences was fixed upon, to be held at Linares.

Garza justifies his course towards Traconis and the authorities of Tampico, by stating that it was his duty, as Governor of Tamaulipas, to resist the project of dismembering the territory of that State for the purpose of erecting a new State to be called Iturbida. As he expresses his readiness to acknowledge and obey the authority of Vidaurri as military commandant of the Northern departments, no further difficulty was apprehended.

A Trout Fish Living in a Well Twenty-five Years.—Mr. F. Hoyt, a correspondent of the Country Gentleman, writing from South-East, New York, November 19th, says:

Can any one tell how long a trout fish will live? Twenty-five years the past summer I came on the farm where I now am. Almost the first work that I did after getting in my spring crops, was to drain a hog swamp, the outlet of which leads into the Croton river. I had an old Scotchman to do the ditching. One day he brought up a trout fish about the size of a man's little finger, in his whisky jug; (by the by, we used a little on this farm then) I put it in the well, near the house; and it is there now, grown to a goodly size—say about a foot long, and large in proportion. It has been fed but very little; once in a while some one throws in a grasshopper, or a cricket, to see him catch it. The well is thirty feet deep, and water hard, and settles down nearly to the bottom, and then again rises to near the top. He has been taken out a few times to clean the well, but not for the last five years. Friday last, I got a grasshopper, the last one I expect to see this full, and gave it to him. The water is now twenty-five feet deep, but it hardly touched the surface before he had it. If any one has a fish older than mine, I would like to know it.

Lake Mono.—In relation to the whereabouts and other intelligence respecting this beautiful sheet of water, the Placerville American furnishes interesting information: "The Lake derives its name from the tribe of Indians who people a large district of country surrounding it, and known as the Monos. Their country embraces all that portion of California lying east of the Sierras, and along the western border of that, as yet, almost unknown country called the Desert—and extending from near Walker's Lake, on the north, southerly far beyond Owen's Lake, or nearly two hundred miles. This is probably the largest body of fresh water in California, excepting perhaps the Tulare lakes and marshes. It is over fifty miles in length, and from ten to fifteen broad, and unlike many California lakes, is in part very deep. It contains a number of islands; the principal one is Grand Island, ten miles in length, and two broad. Nearly two-thirds of the northern portion of this island is rocky and barren; the remainder covered with soil, and in a few places produces melons, pumpkins and Mexican beans, cultivated by the few Monos resident there.

The lake is so surrounded by mountains, as to hide it entirely from view at a distance of five miles in any direction, except at the south end; here an extended view is had of the lake for many miles, by ascending the hills on either side of Crosby's river. From the mountain ridge on the east side of the lake, flow a few small streamlets, fed from springs among its canons. Nearly all the streams upon its western border, flow through canons, previous to emerging into the narrow valley, or belt of level land, surrounding the lake. It has no outlet whatever, and seems never to have had. The water is quite fresh and palatable, and the home of myriads of fishes.

Voltaire's Epigram.

Kloz, Author, Philosopher, Poet, Musician,
Free Mason, Economist, Bard, Politician,
How had Europe replaced, if a Christian he'd been,
If a man, how would he have enraptured his Queen.

This was handed about Berlin, and shown to that great legislator, the Prussian monarch, who deemed it a libel, because it was true; and instead of employing a counsel, filing an information, and taking other tedious methods, took a more summary way of punishing the author, who, he knew, from internal evidence, must be Voltaire, at that time resident at Berlin.

He sent his sergeant-at-arms, one of the tall regiment, not with a mace and scrap of parchment, but with such an instrument as the English drummers use for the good of the foot soldiers who commit any offence against the law military. The Prussian hero went to the house of the poet, and told him he came by his majesty's special command, to reward him for an epigram on his royal master, by administering thirty lashes on his naked back. The poor philosopher knew that remonstrance was vain, and after submitting with the best grace he could, opened the door and made a farewell congé to his unwelcome visitor, who did not offer to depart, but told him with the most Germanic gravity, "that the ceremony was not yet concluded, for that the monarch in had the honor of serving must be convinced that his commission was punctually fulfilled, on which account he must have a receipt." This was also submitted to, and given in the manner and form following:

"Received from the right arm of Conrad Bachoffner, thirty lashes on my naked back, being in full of an epigram on Frederick the Third, King of Prussia, by VOLTAIRE."

"Vive le Roi!"

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL EXHIBITION.

In our account on Saturday last of the Public School exhibition, the previous day, at Lyceum Hall, we published several of the compositions read and delivered, on that occasion, and promised to give others, from time to time, as our columns would admit. Our object, in these publications, is to attract the attention of the community to our Public School system, and by enabling them to read the productions of the scholars, to some extent qualify them to form a judgment as to the efficiency of the system. We have no hesitation in saying, that we have never witnessed the examination of a Private school where the pupils so universally exhibited as thorough and complete an understanding of the subjects on which they were examined, as the pupils of these schools. The following composition, read by Miss Rosaline H——, in a clear, distinct voice, would not discredit any pen. The young lady has never attended any other than out Public Schools:—[Crescent

The Flag of our Union.

It waves, all mementos of a glorious and mighty nation bringing back to memory scenes of ancient days which had lain unnoticed and almost forgotten by the world. In its gay and prosperous course onward to universal fame and honor—giving them a freshened, reviving aspect and picturing them in glowing, glittering colors to the mind. The standard of a nation which has won for itself a worthy name, one which, is generally acknowledged as superior to all others in government, free institutions, literature, and improvements. Well may the heart of every true American swell with pride and gratitude at the contemplation of deeds achieved by our many heroes, ever cheered and guided by its stripes and stars. Our noble army, that band of self-sacrificing, ever-devoted patriots, ready, with stout hearts and strong hands, to brave the perils and sufferings of a soldier's life, never swerving from their duty, steadfastly and conscientiously maintaining their principles and rights of freedom; what would they have done, when in the thickest of the battle, when despair and horror was plainly depicted upon each countenance, if they had not had some incentives to prompt them to sustain that glorious flag or die in the attempt? When, the tides of fortune seemed to turn proudly and coldly from them; when friends and foes alike deserted them; when all seemed dark and dreary, amidst that darkness one object shone forth which made every American heart beat proudly. Those stripes and stars towered far above the surrounding objects; amid the roar of the cannon, the groans of the dying, and the triumphant shouts and exclamations of its firm protectors and advocates leading our heroes on to victory. Thus a few years ago this country was in a weak, unprotected condition; four States combined for the express purpose of defending themselves from the merciless and heartless attacks of the savages, whose work of destruction was generally designed, to be executed in the darkest hour of night, hurrying number less innocent souls into eternity, leaving many happy homes desolate, and many hearts bleeding and acutely suffering. They bound themselves to assist and protect each other in danger and need. Gradually they increased in strength, and the ability to cope with their enemies. Improvement rapidly advanced; towns which were once considered hundred edifices, were rapidly crumbling to the earth and giving place to those of a more elegant structure. Freedom of action and liberty of conscience were strongly enhanced, based on the ground that they, as freemen, had a just right to such privileges, therefore were they demanded. But the oppressor, the evil doer, would soon be near. Slowly but cautiously did it advance, jealously and with an eagle eye watching their progress, making protestations of friendship and vain promises to look to their future welfare. It came upon them in the guise of friendship and whence least expected—their "Mother Country"—she who should have assisted and cherished them when unprotected and needing assistance—thus nobly did they meet their foe—proudly did their flag, with its thirteen stars, wave in the free air, and triumphantly did it carry them through the dread scenes of the revolution, animating their sinking spirits in the times that "tried men's souls." Oh! let us cherish forever in our hearts the remembrance of our country's triumph, and hope that each new State added since to the Union may become as a lustrous star which shall stand forth outarnished to the world as a beacon of light. In whatever situation in life we are placed, whatever may be the consequences, may we always sustain our "star-spangled banner" unsullied, either in peace or in war, so that it may float proudly before other nations as an example of what we have done and can do, that they may go and do likewise." The mariner at sea, who has been tossed upon its waves for long days and nights and gives up in despair of ever reaching land, whose eye has had nothing to rest itself upon but one sheet of water below and the heavens above—when all is silent and no sound is heard save the flapping of the sea-bird's wings—when he perceives in the distance an indistinct speck which, as it approaches, proves to be a ship, and on closer proximity displays her colors in proud array before him, how quickly does his heart rebound, his eye dull and his body tremble with emotion at the sight of our "star-spangled banner"! Oh! to every true American let me spread, pierce that flag and stand by your country in every danger—assist it or die——Establish as your motto, "united we stand, divided we fall." Preserve your country's reputation, and never let her name be insulted or degraded. Go to work and raise it, not as a mere act of compulsion or obligation, but as a noble duty and pleasure, that its stripes and stars may be maintained pure and bright.

"The flag of our Union—oh, long may it wave, O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

The following, by Miss Ruth M——, is a very creditable performance—creditable alike to her and the school in which she has been educated:

The Present Century and Past Ages.

The records of the leading events of the present age, universally agree in affirming that this is the brightest period that has existed since the creation of the world. The sciences and arts are flourishing, the golden star of Liberty sheds its rays over half the world, and cowardly despotism and civil war, with their attendant train of horrors and miseries, have long been leveled with the dust. The star of civilization has attained its zenith power, and over the surface of our fair planet it beams with surpassing magnitude. Its brilliant rays shed their effulgence with infinite splendor on the leading nations of the globe, and their sunny influence is now felt in the most remote regions, piercing the dismal gloom of ignorance, and rending asunder the impenetrable veil of barbarity which has for ages shrouded so many of God's chosen creatures—learning has assumed wings unrivalled in fleetness, and spread itself over the land, imparting its happy advantages alike to lofty and lowly, and by its heavenly influence, it brings together in household gladness hearts which might otherwise be separated and ground down by the iron hand of oppression. The vast waters of the ocean are stemmed by stately vessels, and a host of gallant men-of-war with steamers and sailing ships, sweep with astonishing speed its powerful breast, propelled by that mighty agent steam, which the master mind of Watt first conceived, and which Fulton afterwards perfected—Discoverers of towering genius and indefatigable penetration have dived into the mysteries of nature and lar into the depths of time and space, and the fair world is now enriched by the grand results of their untiring labor.—Phenomena almost incredible, have been revealed to a wondering multitude, and numerous inventions have lent their aid to impel the progress of civilization. Men of powerful and penetrating minds have grasped the mighty engine of science, and onward on its course it flies with impetuous velocity, disseminating sparks of knowledge on either side of its far-spreading path. Commerce, science, agriculture and the arts are flourishing; and, altogether, the nineteenth century stands unrivalled in the annals of history. But if we draw aside the curtain which hides the hall of past ages, we behold a scene which at once enchains the mind, yet puzzles it with its appearance of confusion and disorder. There we behold ambition, war, anarchy, despotism, misrule and religious oppression heaped together in disordered array, while over all falls heavily the blighting curse of a dark ignorance.

Far off, in the extreme end of this mysterious labyrinth, there presides a dark and strangely gloomy space, to which we behold a multitude of beings warring against each other, and against a right-cous God. Crime, dark and fearful, is unbridled and rebellion and wickedness is habitual there. Yet the hour of retribution comes, and the unerring hand of a just judge, sweeps the willful wretches from the face of the earth. After this we see a light, faint, very faint, yet we are enabled henceforth to view with precision the progress of the nations of the world. We behold ignorance and barbarity presiding over the creatures of earth, and holding their pitiful sway in a most unhappy shadowy, lawless ambition dictates campaigns, wars, and blood and misery stream on the face of the globe. Nations are destined to hold a presiding influence over the earth, and gradually the star of earth one beams into existence, shines with dazzling lustre, and then gradually sinks into decay and fades, till the last spark is extinguished by the hand of time. Aye the mighty of the past, where are they? We call, and from the gloomy vista, echo sends back the faint response, "Where?" They have fallen—the glorious sons of earth are returned to dust, and on their ashes there now stands a world, lovely and sublime in its aspect. Gradually through the gloom of the dark ages, powerful intellects arose, and brought to order the confused affairs of the earth; and nations who began to feel that law and order were indispensable to comfort, learned to submit in peace to the mandates and ordinances dictated by those who held authority. Christianity, too, paved the way for future happiness, and taught the beings of the earth their rightful stations, and the manner in which to turn them to advantage. Thus, knowledge received an impulse, and seeds of future greatness began to germinate in the rich soil of gifted minds. Warriors also rose, and though many of them caused a period of disorder and unhappiness by their grasping ambition, yet the effect of their supremacy was to kindle anew the spirit of freedom innate in every man, and to point the path to a constitutional government.

These same the result of years of toil and intricate researches—America, our own loved America, was discovered, wrapt in the cradle of green forests and sea-beaten rocks, guarded on either side by the wide-spreading ocean. 'Tis true it was a wilderness, uninhabited, save by the savage men and wild beasts, yet, where now is there a land which surpasses it in government, in statesmen, in the productions of a fertile soil, and lastly, in the intellectual and moral character of the daughters of her land. And among the brightest gem in the canopy of fame, we find the names of many sons of Columbia, who stand unrivalled in point of wisdom and integrity. America has produced statesmen of able powers and splendid talents; philosophers of powerful genius, and generals of valor and ability; whose characters are unsalutued by the vain ambition too common to worldlings. Washington's name ascends pre-eminent to the list of earth's great sons, and is sacred to every American as his memory is imperishable. Though he has gone to his rest, and earth has failed to produce another Washington, a nation bows in reverence to a mighty spirit, and blesses his memory for the freedom he has established. The curtain drops, and we are again in our own age. We look around and endeavor to trace a nation so glorious in the annals of history, as America. A free, republican government is hers liberty of conscience on all subjects, equal rights to her citizens, and a sure means of spreading knowledge. American literature is unsurpassed its commerce and manufactures unequalled. Institutions of benevolence for the aflicted abound, and content pervades the Union. While political factions and reactions are freely investigated, the angel of peace yet hovers with encircling wings over our favored land and from the bountiful goodness of the ti ed of our fathers we are happy and free. Free! how the word strikes on the soul of every American. Free! it brings to us the memory of how that sacred freedom which we now enjoy was won and the privileges resulting from it; till, inspired by the tide of feeling which rises from the depths of our hearts, we unanimously exclaim: "Hail, Columbia! Happy Land!"

The Public School Exhibition.

We resume this inquiry the publication of compositions presented by pupils on the occasion of the late exhibition of the public schools of the city. The first we shall present was delivered by Otis H——, who has never attended any other than our public schools, and to attain the excellence to which he has arrived, he has doubtless practiced what he so ably preaches in his production:

The Triumphs of Labor.

Cities are built, States founded, governments framed, only with great labor. Newton, the great and illustrious Newton, could not have discovered, by listless inactivity, the laws by which planets roll on through illimitable space. Columbus could not have discovered America, without deep and intense thought. Watt could never have discovered that great and powerful agent steam, by idle inattention. Clay, Calhoun or Webster, could never have received the plaudits of this civilized (and enlightened world, unless they, by great exertion, by many sleepless nights, by intense thinking for hours, days and weeks, had expressed their ideas in such a manner as went to the hearts of the American people. Cæsar or Alexander could not have conquered nations, sacked or pillaged cities, or laid countries in ruin by a mere nod or shake of the head. No! these things had to be done with labor, and thanks to a merciful God, great labor may accomplish deeds even more noble.

What! would you wish that cities should spring up as if by the influence of some genii, at your will? that all things should appear at your bidding?

Were it so, the names of Putnam, Marion, Sumpter, Washington, and almighty host of our country's heroes would not have become watchwords to the American people. The star of America would never have risen, and England would have rested a quiet and unknown isle in the vast deep. No names of mighty nations would decorate our histories, and those faculties with which God, in his mercy, has endowed us to take part in life, would be taken away and our noblest faculties would be no higher than the instinct of the brute. But how different are the scenes. Stretch your eye over this broad and vast regions of earth. What do you see? Does not every part show the work of man? The clothes we wear, this city and civilized state in which we live, and this noble hall in which we meet to-day, are all examples of the art of man. Behold that beautiful and fairy-like steamboat, ploughing, in her swift and gentle course, the waters of the broad and vast Mississippi. Behold, again, that monument, rearing its lofty head to the very skies. These are results of labor. Behind the departure of the Pilgrims from England. Did they shrink from the excessive toil and labor of planting colonies? What glorious results have crowned their noble efforts? Merchants! have you gained your reputation and wealth by idleness? You have not become the lords and slaves of our country by the goodness of some fairy. And lawyers, tradesmen and laborers, you know that it has been by much hard and difficult toil that you have accomplished your end. Mechanics! ye have not benefitted our institutions by idleness, but by a severe application of both the mind and the body, and we, the rising generation, do not expect to occupy the places of our fore-fathers by listless inactivity. We do not expect to become senators, statesmen or presidents without labor. We do not expect to keep this Union together and preserve discord among our States by remaining idle. Besides, we will not be alone in this. The daughters of America, the life and existence of our country, will ever have for their aim to help "the cause" by kindness, gentleness and persuasion.

The results to be obtained by labor in comparison with those which are but the effects of casual circumstances, have been signally displayed in the war of the Crimea. The English army position yields to the magic power of gold, and the idle sons of an effeminate aristocracy alone hold the control, thus vainly seeking to overthrow the principle "conscientious labor accomplishes everything." With the French, on the other hand, promotions are the rewards of valor and military worth. Now let us examine the results. In the fierce assault the arms of France have been crowned with victory, while those of England received little or no credit. Surely England has forgotten the lesson given her by Cromwell—but the noble deeds of Napoleon will remain as ever-living examples to France.

Labor is required for every thing, whether in the formation of a pin or in the erection of a city—nothing can be made, nothing can be done, nothing can be accomplished without labor. "Labor impobus omnia vincit," must be our motto.

'Tis well, either of the hand or the heart, is the only true manhood, the only true nobility.

The next in order is the composition of Solomon L. H——, which evinces, in our opinion, remarkable qualities for a young gentleman only 15 years of age:

The Preservation of the American Confederacy.

This great and glorious Confederacy of States must and shall be preserved. Never was there a period since the declaration of our independence that stood so much in need of good patriots as the present, to defend and uphold the great legacy left us by the immortal Washington. It may be said that there is no danger to the permanence of our country. But has not every country from time immemorial had its traitors? Have not in ancient days great republics fallen by not having faithful sentinels on their watch-towers? In fact we are now at a great crisis in the affairs of our country; but on great occasions great deeds are required, and on no other spot on the surface of the globe, when brilliant deeds are to be performed, can such a galaxy of great men be brought together for noble and patriotic purposes as in the confederacy of the American Union. Traitors stand aside, for patriots are too powerful in numbers and will destroy you in their grasp. Come on ye disunionists, north or south of Mason and Dixon's line. Try if you will, and see if those pillars of liberty are strong or weak, and you shall find to your deep regret and heart's content, that the Sampson of liberty is not yet shorn of his strength. At the present time there is unfortunately great and deplorable difficulties existing between different sections of the Union, the chief of which are hostility to slavery, and difference of religious belief; either of which may rend asunder this American confederacy; and what is now the remedy? Difficult, it is true, yet there is a remedy. Strong heads and strong minds! Where there's a will there is a way, and no people can effect their purposes better than the Americans.

In the days of the revolution, in the war of 1812, and in the war of Mexico, they have shown themselves able to meet every emergency and every foe that dare oppose them.

Let us take a view of days that have passed, when religious oppressions disgraced every government of Europe, religion in the days of Queen Mary, of Scotland, was the terror, and is now rapidly approaching the same end unless arrested by the great men of this country. It is true that three of our great men are dead, Clay, Calhoun and Webster, but their glorious examples for civil and religious liberty, still live as beacons of light to delight and to guide our future generations. Although they are "gone to get bourne from whence no traveler returns," yet we have remaining some great and noble men who will do battle in every cause that affects the integrity of the American Union. Where are they, may be asked? Look in Cass, Stockton, Bancroft, Everett, Crittenden, and a host of others who still live to say to the disunionists "don't place your sacrilegious hands on so noble a government that was defended in war by a Washington, and founded on that noble Declaration of Independence written by that immortal statesman Thos. Jefferson"

We have, to our great misfortune, men seeking to destroy our government by a spirit of abolitionism. Of course this applies almost exclusively at the North, still we have some patriots there who will second the cause of union and freedom for the South and for the whole of the American confederacy. Another great difficulty to these United States is, possibly, a war with some of the European governments. But let them come on if they will—we have tried before, on sea and on land, the mistress of the ocean, and on each came off victors. These United States offer no threats, but are prepared to resist every and any encroachment upon their soil. Our navy and our militia are not slaves. They fight for liberty and not for pay, and they will take for their motto the emblem of the State of Florida, "Let Us Alone." This government asks for nothing but what is just and right, and will resist everything that is clearly wrong.

We shall conclude, for the present, with the composition of Miss Margaret E. M——, beautiful alike in language and chirography. We shall resume these publications in our next, if possible.

The Shores of the Mediterranean.

From the dark vista of the Past come strains laden with the weight of years, and as we listen the tones are borne on louder and deeper until they are fraught with the tales of the Present. From afar there upon scenes which tell of the rise, of the progress of empires, and more solemn grow the tones as the tale of their downfall is borne onward. Over the waters of the Mediterranean they pass, bearing the records of nations which have fallen from their pedestal of power, and whose glory is fast sinking into the tide of oblivion. The first tone breathes a strain on which the star of science first shed its bright radiance; where the arts were first known and appreciated under the reign of kings a base motive was justice, and who were ever characterized by their patronage of all with which we store the mind and garner up treasures from the sands of knowledge. For a time this nation stands pre-eminent, but its power wanes; for the one on whom the crown and sceptre are conferred is engaged in pursuits far removed from the cares of royalty. Other nations have arisen and the din of warfare marks the contest between Egypt and the power which grasps at its throne. Vain are all efforts to save the monarchy; for on the broad waters two fleets are arrayed for an approaching contest. But the spirit of courage burns low in the hearts of those who bow in homage to Egypt's queen, and they fly as the first shout of their opponents is borne to their vessels. The battle is long bt. the victory won, and from the triumphant army ascend sounds of rejoicing—for a nation has fallen beneath their arms and Egypt is now numbered with the provinces of the Roman Empire. Palestine is the form that tells of Egypt's downfall, and as the last sound dies out another is swept from the chords of memory, which tells of a nation conferred to the eastward, bordering on the broad waters of the deep blue sea, where the knee is bowed in idolatrous worship to the presiding deities.

But, in time speeds on, there arises a man, who, claiming the reverence due as a delegate of the Most High, would fain lay low the idols of his nation, and plant in the shrine a new religion. Though unsuccessful at first, as time passes on, many gather beneath the standard of Mahomet, and eventually his votaries throng each path, way of Arabia; and from thence his religion spreads as pale the billow ride along the Eastern and Mediterranean coasts of Africa propagated as the conquests of the Saracens are extended. They past on their conquering way over the plains of Africa until they pause before a fortress on the western coast. Shall they be victorious? Shall the Christian submit? Aye, even so, for treachery opens the portal and points forward to a country in which the Gothic dominion is paramount. The Saracens cross the Straits of Gibraltar, and a chord is now struck which bears in its tones the requiem of Spain. Shall they conquer? Shall the crescent of Mahomet wave from the battlements of Castile and Arragon?

Yes, the power of the Christian is subverted, and now on the vine-clad hills the voice of prayer ascends from the Moslem of the conference, and at sunset the chant of the Moor. Years roll on, and Spain is again under the sway of Christians. Now the ecclesiastical power is supreme, and peace sheds its light upon the nation, but its light is clouded with by the cloud of bigotry which hovers around. But from the distance comes a band of foreign aspect led by one whose heart had whispered "fair Spain shall be a jewel in my casket of conquered states." He seeks out of kingly birth; the jewel house of Mercy hall unlocked on the sea, and the passes upward following a phantom whose name is ambition. What, though monuments rear their stupendous heights before its flowers? Must they not forward! Aye, for the beacon light of their leader is in advance and a zealous proselyte to the one who is now preaching onward for Bonaparte must needs place a sovereign on the throne of Spain. A sovereign but in name for Napoleon is the source from whence he derives the power, and bursts his mighty allegiance be bartered for the trust. E'e this monarch is finally established on the throne the sanctioned joy which attended his coronation are exchanged for the din of warfare. But the nation may not alone contend with the power of the scourger, and from an island in the ocean we see a fleet bearing onward to the assistance of the people. Time speeds on, the contending armies are alternately successful, until the Monarch is at last dethroned and the crown again held by the Sovereign of Castile. And as the tones fall on the ear, we hear mingled with them the name of Wellington, and his meed of praise is re-echoed until it is traced on the tablets of memory never to be erased. And as the last note is hushed which breathes of Spain, from the harp of thought come forth sweet tones which tell of Italy, nature's beauteous land, where memory lingers with sad though pleasing remembrances of the past. Fading from the earth is the glory of the once powerful nation. Its many mighty cities have fallen, and crumbling ruins now greet the eye, where once was reared structures which told of taste and magnificence. Beautiful Venice! where now are its monuments? Where the glory that once hovered round thy classic sea shade? Thy monuments lay low; thy glory has departed. And may revive but in the memory, the tenacious fulness of the past. And Rome, the "imperial City," where now is thy power? Nature is unchanged; still flows the Tiber, bearing onward to the sea, but on its waters seems borne the wreck of all the greatness once existing in the "Seven tilled city." It is fallen, fallen from its "high estate;" but no visions of the past flit before us, we muse not on Rome as she is, but Rome in the hour of her triumph. The harp of thought is again swept, and forth swell strains which tell of a nation the earliest home of science, the land of liberty, around which circle recollections which awake a thrill in the heart of each noble patriot. But she too has fallen, and in naught save the annals of the past do we behold aught of the glory which was once centred in Greece. She has fallen, and as the tone which breathes of this nation speeds on, the lost amid the chords awakened by the deeds of the present.

But when in after years tones from the harp of thought breathe of our own glorious Republic, may there be none save strains of peace of prosperity, and may it ever send to all sounds which denote the progress of a mighty nation, whose star of destiny shines with brighter radiance each succeeding year, undimmed in its lustre by scenes which have wrought the downfall of powers which exist but in the memory of the past.

A Legend of New England

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

"Shrieks—fiendish yells!—they stab them in their sleep!"

One hundred years ago!—The hunter, who ranged the hills and the forests of New England, fought against other enemies than the brewit bear and the panther. The husbandman, as he toiled in the plain, or the narrow clearing, kept closely at his side a loaded weapon; and wrought diligently and firmly in the midst of peril. The frequent crack of the Indian's rifle was heard in the still depths of the forest—the death-knell of the unwary hunter; and, ever and anon, the flame of some devoted farm house, where dwellers had been slaughtered by a merciless foe, rose redly upon the darkness of the night time. The wild, and fierce eyes of the heathen gleamed through the thick underwood of the forest, upon the passing of the worshippers of the only true God; and the war-whoop rang shrill and loud under the very walls of the sanctuary of prayer.

Perhaps no part of New England affords a wider field for the researches of the legendary, than that portion of Massachusetts lay, formerly known as the province of Maine. There the ferocious Norridgewock held his stern councils, and there the tribes of the Panobscot went forth with song and dance to do battle upon the white man. There, the remnnte and chivalrous Castine immured himself in the forest solitudes, and there the high-hearted Rallo—the mild and gifted Jesuit—gathered together the broken strength of the Norridgewock, and built up in the great wilderness a temple to the true God. There, too, he perished in the dark onslaught of the Colonists—perished with many wounds, at the very foot of the Cross, which his own hands had planted. And there the Norridgewocks foil—one after another—in stern and uncomplaining pride—neither asking, nor giving quarter, as they resisted the white spoiler upon the threshold of their consecrated place of worship; and in view of their wives and their children.

The following is one among many legends of the strnugo rencontres of the White Man and the Indian, which are yet preserved in the ancient records and traditions of Maine. The simple and unvarnished narrative is only given.

It was a sultry evening towards the last of June, 1722, that Capt. Harmon and the Eastern rangers urged their oanoes up the Kennebec river, in pursuit of their savage enemies. For hours they toiled diligently at the oar. The last trace of civilization was left behind, and the long shadows of the skirting forest met and blended in the middle of the broad stream, which wound darkly through them. At esery sound from the adjacent shores—the rustling wing of some night-bird, or the quick footsteps of some wild beast—the dash of the oar was suspended, and the rangers grasp tightened on his rifle. All knew the peril of the enterprise; and that silence, which is naturul to men, who feel themselves in the extreme of jeopardy, settled like a cloud upon the midnight adventurers.

"Hush—softly men!" said the watchful Harmen, in a voice, which scarcely rose above a hearse whisper, as his canoe swept around a ragged promontory, "there is a light ahead!"

All eyes were bent towards the shore. A tall Indian fire gleamed up amidst the great oaks, casting a red and strong light upon the dark waters. For a single and breathless moment the operation of the oar was suspended, and every ear listened with painful earnestness to catch the well-known sounds, which seldom failed to indicate the preipinquity of the savages. But all was new silent. With slow and faint movements of the oar, the canoes gradually approached the suspected spot. The landing was effected in silence. After moving cautiously for a considerable distance in the dark shadow, the party at length ventured within the broad circle of the light, which at first attracted their attention. Harmen was at their head, with an eye and a hand, quick as these of the savage enemy whom he sought.

The body of a fallen tree lay across the path. As the rangers were on the point of leaping over it, the coarse whisper of Harmon again broke the silence:

"God of heaven!" he exclaimed, pointing to the tree. "See here!—'tis the work of the cursed red skins!"

A smothered curse growled on the lips of the rangers, as they bent grimly forward in the direction pointed out by their commander. Blood was sprinkled off the rank grass, and a human hand—the hand of a white man—lay on the bloody leg!

There was not a word spoken, but every countenance worked with terrible emotion. Had the rangers followed their own desperate inclination, they would have hurried recklessly onward to the work of vengeance; but the example of their leader, who had regained his usual calmness and self-command, prepared them for a less speedy, but more certain triumph. Cautiously passing over the fearful obstacle in the pathway, and closely followed by his companions, he advanced stealthily and cautiously upon the light, hiding himself and his party as much as possible behind the thick trees. In a few moments they obtained a full view of the object of their search. Stretched at their length upon a singe fire, but at a convenient distance from it, lay the painted and half naked forms of twenty savages. It was evident from their appearance, that they had passed the day in one of their horrid revels, and that were now suffering under the effects of intoxication. Occasionally, a grim warrior among them started half-upright, grasping his tomahawk, as if to combat some vision of his disordered brain, but, unable to shake off the stupor from his senses, uniformly fell back into his former position.

The rangers crept nearer. As they bent their keen eyes along their well-tried rifles, each felt perfectly sure of his aim. They waited for the signal of Harmon, who was endeavoring to bring his long musket to bear upon the head of the most distant of the savages.

"Fire!" he at length exclaimed, as the sight of his piece interposed full and distinct between his eye and the wild scalp-lock of the Indian. "Fire, and rush on!"

The sharp voice of thirty rifles thrilled through the heart of the forest. There was a groan—a smothered cry—a wild and convulsive movement among the sleeping Indians; and all again was silent.

The rangers sprang forward with their clubbed muskets and hunting knives; but their work was done. The red men had gone to their last audit before the Great Spirit; and no sound was heard among them, save the gurgling of the hot blood from their lifeless bosoms.

They were left unburied on the place of their revelry—a prey to the foul birds of the air, and the ravenous beasts of the wilderness. Their scalps were borne homeward in triumph by the successful rangers, whose children and grand-children shuddered, long after, at the thrilling narration of the midnight adventure.

PROGRESS OF THE INDIAN WAR.

By the steamship Daniel Webster, we have received San Francisco papers to the 5th inst. From the news summary of the Alta California; we extract the following items:

Not the least important occurrence during the past two weeks, has been the Allied celebration of the fall of Sebastopol, which took place in this city on Monday, November 26th, at South Park. An immense pavilion was erected for this purpose, under which was stretched ten tables, each two hundred and thirty feet long, and preparations were made for seating four thousand guests. A dinner was provided for the multitude, unexampled in variety and profusion, and all the preliminaries were made to render it the grandest affair of the kind ever known in California.

A Mr. N. K. Lovett, a native of New York city, aged 51 years, committed suicide in this city on November 29th, by hanging himself to a beam in a house at the corner of Dupont and Jackson streets. Family troubles are said to have caused the act.

A Frenchman named Dupuis, was brutally murdered at the Mission Dolores on the night of the 30th ult., for his money. His hands and feet were tied and his head beaten to pieces. The murderers have been discovered and are to be examined.

Cora, the murderer of Gen. Richardson, has been arraigned at the Fourth District Court, and the trial will probably take place the present term. Able counsel have been engaged for the prosecution and defence.

We have had several heavy rains in the last two weeks, and the "rainy season" may be fairly said to have set in.

On Friday, the 30 ult., at 2 o'clock P. M., the apologetic saints was fired on the raising of M. Dillon's Consular flag. The French frigate Embuscado, arriving on that day, twenty-two guns were fired from the fort, at the entrance of the harbor, and twenty-one from the U. S. razee Independence, Capt. Tattnall. On re-hoisting the Censular flag, M. Dillon took occasion to deliver a speech to a crowd of two thousand of his countrymen who were assembled around his door, conciliatory in tone and neatly worded The assemblage cheered. Madame Dillon made fast the tri-color to the halliards with her own fair hands, up went the flag, off went two thousand chapeaux, the Consul bowed, Madame curtesied, the crowd dispersed, and the wounded honor of all concerned is nicely healed. A year and a half ago, there was some hot blood shown on the subject of the arrest of Consul Dillon. A singular fact in connection with this circumstance, is that the U. S. Marshal, Gen Richardson, who made the arrest, was murdered within a few days of the settlement of the dispute which his own prompt action, under the direction of the Federal Court, in part gave rise to.

The ship Mary Spencer takes among other cargo for Liverpool several hundred barrels of California flour. How have the tables turned in these respects since 1849?

After a long interval, another steamboat disaster has occurred, causing several deaths and wounding several more. The little steamer Georgiana, plying between this city and Petaluma, exploded her boilers on the 23d ult. She was the smallest steamer running on the bay. An examination before the Coroner's Jury placed the entire blame upon the Captain.

On the 24th ult. a salute of seven guns each, passed between the U. S. razee Independence and H. B. M. frigate Amphitrite.

A diver, named Stephen Crowly, was suffocated in a diving bell in this harbor, on the 23d ult., while attempting to recover an anchor and chain in four fathoms depth of water. He belonged to the wrecking schooner Aida.

The colors of the shipping in this harbor were displayed at half-mast on the 29th ult., in token of respect to the memory of the late eminent ship builder, William H. Brown, who died at New York, Oct. 27th.

The U. S. Branch Mint is closed for the purpose of making the annual settlement. During the past eleven months, over $20,000,000 worth of gold has been coined at this establishment, principally in $20 pieces.

With the rains, agricultural affairs are improving, and great preparations are making throughout the State for the approaching sowing and planting season. It is believed that the largest wheat crop ever sown will be put in the coming year.

The mines at this time are yielding immensely. Any thing like a faithful chronicle of the discoveries and rich strikes made almost every day, would fill a small volume. Table Mountain, in Tuolumne county, still continues a marvel for its richness, and vast sums of the precious metal are daily extracted from it. The whole mountain is being pierced with tunnels, and it will soon become like a honeycomb for miles in succession. To purchase a claim to one hundred feet of this mountain, or in like space on many of the flats adjacent to it would require a fortune. Thousands of miners, who have recently recorded claims here by the right of discovery and possession, now feel sure of making the "pile" for which they came to California. The copious rains have also set the miners at work in all parts of the State. Large pties of earth which it has taken many months labor to accumulate, are now yielding their treasures to the busy industry of their owners. Even from Kern River we have cheering accounts. We hear of rich leads being discovered there.

Meetings of miners have been held in Nevada county, asking for the reduction of water rates by the ditch companies. Important reductions have already been made from this cause.

Many wonderful fossil remains and petrifications have lately been brought to light by the mining operations in the interior. At a depth of 150 feet decomposed oyster shells have been found in Table Mountain. A curious article of real soap has also been discovered, which closely resembles castile soap, and moreover answers an excellent purpose for washing. Specimens have been exhibited all over the State; and it is a fixed fact, that a mountain of soap exists in California. By what process the ingredients were thrown together, it is impossible to say: but the article is now actually extensively used in the mountains, and it has been sufficiently tried in this city to prove that there is no mistake about it.

Extensive coal mines have been discovered near Stockton.

Sebastopol celebrations have been held in various towns of the interior.

AUTUMN TRANSPLANTING.

This subject has often been written upon, and from the continued inquiries made of us, we are induced to give briefly the chief reasons for and against the practice.

There are certain conditions under which fall transplanting is always advantageous, and generally best. These conditions are early trees and a dry soil.

1. They should be hardy, for a tender tree is always made more susceptible to the cold of winter by removal in autumn.

2. The soil should be dry, or admit such water as falls upon it to pass off freely. It is very bad treatment to allow water to collect about a tree, and then to freeze hard among the newly set roots.

Apple trees are very hardy, and generally succeed best if set out in autumn, as the soil becomes well settled about them, and they have nothing to do early in the spring but to start growing. In this way they get an earlier start. If the roots of a fall transplanted apple tree are examined in spring, about the usual time of digging trees, a new set of rootlets will be found pushing out from the old ones, at least a week or two in advance of any that may be omitted by spring-set trees. If, however, they are dug in the fall, and well laid in, the same rootlets will be pushed early in the spring, and such trees, if set carefully, so as not to injure these, will possess a decided advantage over such as are dug in the spring.

Cherry and pear trees are nearly as hardy as the apple, and may be advantageously removed in autumn, if the precautions which we have pointed out are observed.

Peach trees are half hardy, and their success can be relied on only under favorable circumstances. For instance, the wood should be well ripened, otherwise their shoots, or at least their tips, will be winter-killed. The roots must not only admit the water to flow freely, but must not retain it in the subsoil.

It is absolutely necessary in all cases, and with all sorts of trees, hardy or otherwise, to mulch them from being blown about by the wind. Small trees, with long, carefully taken roots, will not be easily moved, and all that is necessary with these in any case will be to bank up a small steep mound around the stem a foot high—which will also protect them perfectly from the mice, and assist in keeping the frost out of the roots by the depth of the soil above them—these mounds to be removed the following spring. But larger trees, and especially those with the roots cut short, will require staking. The stake may be driven with less danger of hitting and injuring the roots, if the operation is performed before the hole is filled.

When all the preceding precautions cannot be properly taken, it is best to procure the trees in autumn, and "lay them in by the roots," as dig a trench or hole, place the roots in, and bury that and half the stems for the winter. But especial care is needed to fill in all the interstices with finely pulverized earth; to place them on a dry bottom, or else on the surface of the ground, and bank up to them; and where injury from mice is apprehended, to set them nearly upright, and throw up the earth in the form of a mound around them. No mouse will ever ascend a mound of fresh earth under the snow, and if there are no interstices among the trees, they will never touch them.

It must not be forgotten, however, that important as is the proper transplanting of trees, their subsequent success, fine growth and productiveness, depend more on good, clean and careful after-culture, than on every thing else together, and that the planter might as well expect to raise 40 bushels of corn in an unplowed meadow as to look for fruit or young trees growing among grass and weeds. TEST OF ABOLITIONISM.—All is not gold that glitters, and the loudest mouthed philanthropists and reformers sometimes cave in when put to a severe practical test like the following:

"I had a brother-in-law," said Mose Parkins, "who was one of the rarenest, maddest, reddest-nosed Abolitionists you ever see. I liked the critter well enough, and should have been very glad to see him cum to spend a day, fetchin' my sister to see me and my wife, if he had'nt used his tongue to run on so 'bout niggers and slavery, and the equality of the races, and the duty of overthrowing the Constitution of the United States, and a lot of other things, some of which made me mad, and the best part of 'em right sick. I puzzled my brains a good deal to think how I could make him shet up his noisy mouth 'bout abolition.

"Well, one time when brother-in-law come over to stay, an idee struck me. I hired a nigger to help me haying time. He was the biggest, strongest, greatest nigger you ever see. Think! he was blacker than a stack of black cats, and just as shiney as a new beaver hat. I spoke to him: 'Jake,' sez I, 'when you hear the breakfast bell ring, don't you say a word, but just come into the parlor and sit right down among the folks and eat your breakfast.' The nigger's eyes stuck out of his head about a spell. 'You're jokin', massa,' sez he. 'Jokin',' sez I, 'I never was in more airnest in my life.' 'But, mas'r,' sez he, 'I don't have time to wash myself and change my shirt.' 'So much the better,' sez I. Well, breakfast come, as did Jake, and he sat down alongside my brother-in-law. He stared, but he did'nt say a word. There war'nt no mistake about it. Shut your eyes and you'd know it—for he was loud, I tell you. There was a fust rate chance to talk Abolitionism, but brother-in-law never opened his head.

"'Jake,' sez I, 'you be on hand at dinner time,' and he was. He had been workin' in the meddler all the forenoon—it was hot as hickory and billin' pitch—and—but I leave the rest to your imagination.

"Well, in the afternoon, brother-in-law come up to me, madder than a short-tailed bull in hornet time.

"'Mose,' said he, 'I want to speak to you.'

"'Sling it out,' sez I.

"'I hain't but few words to say,' sez he, 'but if that 'ere confounded nigger comes to the table while I am stoppin' here I'll clear out.'

"Jake ate his supper that night in the kitchen, but from that day to this I never heard my brother-in-law open his head about abolitionism. When the fugitive slave bill was passed, I though he'd let out some, but he did'nt, for he knowed that Jake was still working on the farm. [Boston Olive Branch.

A LOUISIANA GUN.—The Baton Rouge Comet describes a gun, or pistol, invented by G. W. [illegible], late State Engineer, which, it says, is superior to Mr. Colt's invention. The Comet says:

It loads at the breech, fires a minnie ball, and a man may shoot it as fast as he can put his cartridges in. The firing is in no way interrupted until the barrel becomes too hot to admit of handling. The whole apparatus of the lock does not take up half the space of the ordinary gun lock, and independent of this it is impervious to water. Mr. Moore, will, in a few days, go to Washington to obtain letters patent for his invention.

A Battle with Grizzly Bears.

The following adventure with grizzly bears is from a work by Capt. Mayne Reid, entitled "The Hunter's Feast," just published by Messrs. Dewitt & Davenport. The captain had been traveling with a strange party—"scalp hunters"—in the mountains near Santa Fe, when they were overtaken by a sudden and heavy fall of snow that rendered further progress impossible. The "canon," a deep valley in which they had encamped, was difficult to get through at any time, but now the path, on account of the deep soft snow, was rendered impassable. When morning broke, they found themselves fairly "in the trap." We copy:

Above and below the valley was choked with snow five fathoms deep. Vast fissures—barrancas were filled with the drift; and it was perilous to attempt penetrating in either direction. Two men had already disappeared.

On each side of our camp rose the walls of the canon, almost vertical, to the height of a hundred feet. These we might have climbed had the weather been soft, for the rock was a trap formation, and offered numerous seams and ledges that now there was a coating of ice and snow upon them that rendered the ascent impossible. The ground had been frozen hard before the storm came on, although it was now freezing no longer, and the snow would not bear our weight. All our efforts to get out of the valley proved idle; and we gave them over, yielding ourselves, in a kind of reckless despair, to wait for—we scarce knew what.

For three days we sat shivering around the fires, now and then casting looks of gloomy inquiry around the sky. The same dull grey for an answer, mottled with flakes slanting earthward, for it still continued to snow. Not a bright spot cheered the aching eye.

The little platform on which we rested—a piece of two or three acres—was still free from the snow-drift, on account of its exposure to the wind. Straggling pines, stunted and leafless, grew over its surface, in all about fifty or sixty trees. From these we obtained our fires; but what were fires when we had not meat to cook upon them?

We were now in the third day without food! Without food, though not absolutely without eating. The men had bolted their gun covers, and the cat-skin flaps of their bullet ponches, and were now seen—the last shift but one—stripping the parfleche from the soles of their moccasins!

The women, wrapped in their tilmas, nestled closely in the embrace of father, brother, husband and lover; for all these affections were present. The last string of tasajo, hitherto economized for their sake, had been parceled out to them in the morning. That was gone, and whence was their next morsel to come? At long intervals, "Ay de mi! Dios de mi alma!" were heard only in low murmurs, as some colder blast swept down the canon. In the face of those beautiful creatures might be read that uncomplaining patience—that high endurance—so characteristic of the Hispano-Mexican women.

Even the stern men around them bore up with less fortitude. Rude oaths were uttered from time to time, and teeth ground together with that strange, wild look that heralds insanity.—Once or twice I caught I observed a look of still stranger, still wilder expression, when the black ring forms around the eye, when the muscles twitch and quiver along gaunt famished jaws—when men gaze guilty-like at each other. O God! it was fearful! The half-robber discipline, voluntary at the best, had vanished under the leveling-rod of a common suffering, and I trembled to think—

"'It clara little, out tharawa!"

It was the voice of the trapper, Garey, who had risen and stood pointing towards the east.

In an instant we were all upon our feet, looking in the direction indicated. Sure enough, there was a break in the lead-colored sky—a yellowish streak, that widened out as we continued gazing—the flakes fell lighter and thinner, and in two hours more it had ceased snowing altogether.

Half-a-dozen of us, shouldering our rifles, struck down the valley. We would make one more attempt to trample a road through the drift. It was a vain one. The snow was over our heads, and after struggling for two hours, we had not gained over two hundred yards.—Here we caught a glimpse of what lay before us. As far as the eye could reach, it rested upon the same impassable masses. Despair and hunger paralyzed our exertions, and dropping off, one by one, we returned to the camp.

We fell down around the fires in sullen silence. Garey continued pacing back and forth, now glancing up at the sky, and at times kneeling down and running his hand over the surface of the snow. At length he approached the fire, and in his slow, drawling manner, remarked:

"It's a gwine to fris, I reckin."

"Well! and if it does?" asked one of his comrades, without caring for an answer to the question.

"Wal," an iv it does," repeated the trapper, "we'll walk out of this hyar jug afore sun-up, an upon a good hard trail, too."

The expression of every face was changed, as if by magic. Several leaped to their feet.—Gode, the Canadian, skilled in snow-craft, ran to a bank, and drawing his hand along the coming, shouted back—

"C'est vrai; il gele; il gele!"—("That is true; it freezes; it freezes!"

A cold wind soon after set in, and, cheered by the brightening prospect, we began to think of the fires, that during our late hours of reckless indifference, had been almost suffered to burn out. The Delawares, aclaing their tomahawks, commenced hacking at the pines, whilst others dragged forward the fallen trees, lopping off their branches with the keen scalping-knife.

At this moment a peculiar cry attracted our attention, and, looking around, we perceived one of the Indians drop suddenly upon his knees, striking the ground with his hatchet.

"What is it? what is it?" shouted several voices, in as many languages.

"Yam-yam! Yam-yam!" replied the Indian, still digging at the frozen ground.

"The Injun's right; it's man-root!" said Garey, picking up some leaves which the Delaware had chopped off.

I recognized a plant well known to the mountain man—a rare but wonderful convolvulus, the Ipomea leptophylla. The name of "man-root" is given to it by the hunters, from the similarity of its root in shape, and sometimes in size, to the body of a man. It is esculent, and serves to sustain human life.

In an instant, knife in hand, men were upon their knees, chipping and hacking the hard clay, hut their hatchets dinted off as from the surface of a rock.

"Look hyar!" cried Garey, "ye're only spollin' yer tools. Cut down a wheen o' these saplins, and make a fire over him!"

The hint was instantly followed, and in a few minutes a dozen pieces of pine were piled upon the spot, and set on fire.

We stood around the burning branches with eager anticipation. Should the root prove a "full-grown man," it would make a supper for our whole party; and with the cheering idea of supper, jokes were ventured upon—the first we had heard for some time—the hunters, tickled with the novelty of unearthing the "old man" ready roasted, and speculating whether he would prove a "fat old hoss."

A hollow crack sounded from above, like the breaking of a dead tree. We looked up. A large object—an animal—was whirling onward and downward from a ledge that projected half way up the cliff. In an instant it struck the earth, headforemost, with a loud "bump," and bounding to the height of several feet, came back with a somersault on his legs, and stood firmly.

An involuntary "hurrah!" broke from the hunters, who all recognised, at a glance, the "Carnero Cimmaron," or "bighorn." He had cleared the precipice at two leaps, lighting each time on his huge crescent-shaped horns.

For a moment, both parties—hunters and game—seemed equally taken by surprise, and stood eyeing each other in mute wonder. It was but for a moment. The men made a rush for their rifles, and the animal recovering from his trance of astonishment, tossed back his horns, and bounded across the platform. In a dozen springs he had reached the selvidge of the snow, and plunged into its yielding bank; but at the same instant, several rifles cracked, and the white wreath was crimsoned behind him. He still kept on, however, leaping and breaking through the drift.

We struck into his track, and followed with the eagerness of hungry wolves. We could tell by the numerous gouts that he was shedding his life-blood, and about fifty paces farther on we found him dead.

A shout apprised our companions of our success, and we had commenced dragging back the prize, when wild cries reached us from the platform—the yells of the men, the screams of women, mingled with oaths and exclamations of terror!

We ran on to the entrance of the track. On reaching it a sight was before us that caused the stoutest heart to tremble. Hunters, Indians and women were running to and fro in frantic confusion, uttering their varied cries. We knew our enemy at a glance—the dreaded monsters of the mountains—the grizzly bears!—There were five of them—five in sight—there might be others in the background. Five were enough to destroy our whole party, caged as we were, and weakened by famine.

They had reached the cliff in chase of the Cimmaron, and hunger and disappointment were visible on their horrid aspects. Two of them had already crawled close to the scarp, and were pawing over and snuffing the air as if searching for a place to descend. The other three reared themselves on their hams and commenced maneuvering with their fore-arms in a human-like and comical pantomime!

We were in no condition to relish this amusement. Every man hastened to arm himself, those who had emptied their rifles hurriedly re-loading them.

"For your life, don't!" cried Garey, catching at the gun of one of the hunters.

The caution came too late; half a dozen bullets were already whistling upwards.

The effect was just what the trapper anticipated. The bears, maddened by the bullets, which had harmed them no more than the pricking of as many pins, dropped to their all-fours again, and with fierce growls, commenced descending the cliff.

The scene of confusion was now at its height. Several of the men, less brave than their comrades, ran off to hide themselves in the snow, while others commenced climbing the low pine trees.

"Caohe the gale!" cried Garey. "Hyar, ye darned Spanish greasers! if yer wont fight, hook on to the weeman a wheen of yer, and toat them to the snow. Cowardly slinks—wagh!"

"See to them, doctor," I shouted to the German who, I thought, might be best spared from the fight; and the next moment the doctor, assisted by several Mexicans, was hurrying the terrified girls towards the spot where we had left the Cimmaron.

Many of us knew that to hide, under the circumstances, would be worse than useless. The fierce but sagacious brutes would have discovered us one by one, and destroyed us in detail. "They must be met and fought!" that was the word; and we resolved to carry it into execution.

There were about a dozen of us who "stood up to it"—all the Delawares and Shawnees, with Garey and the mountain men.

We kept firing at the bears as they ran along the ledges in their zig-zag descent, but our rifles were out of order, our fingers were numbed with cold, and our nerves weakened with hunger. Our bullets drew blood from the hideous brutes, yet not a shot proved deadly. It only stung them into fiercer rage.

It was a fearful moment when the last shot was fired, and still not an enemy the less. We flung away the gune, and, clutching the hatchets and hunting-knives, silently awaited our grizzly foes.

We had taken our stand close to the rock. It was our design to have the first blow, as the animals, for the most part, came stern foremost down the cliff. In this we were disappointed. On reaching a ledge some ten feet from the platform, the foremost bear halted, and seeing our position, hesitated to descend. The next moment, his companions, maddened with wounds, came tumbling down upon the same ledge, and with fierce growls, the five huge bodies were precipitated into our midst.

Then came the desperate struggle, which I cannot describe—the chants of the hunters, the wilder yells of our Indian allies, the hoarse snarling of the bears, the ringing tomahawks from skulls like flint, the deep dull "thud" of the stabbing knife, and now and then a groan, as the crescent claw tore up the clinging muscle. O God! it was a fearful scene!

Over the platform bears and men went rolling and struggling in the wild battle of life and death—through the trees, and into the deep drift, staining the snow with their mingled blood! There, two or three men were engaged with a single foe—there, some brave hunter stood battling alone. Several were sprawling upon the ground. Every moment the bears were lessening the number of their assailants!

I had been struck down at the commencement of the struggle. On regaining my feet, I saw the animal that had felled me hugging the prostrate body of a man!

It was Gode. I leaned over the bear, clutching its shaggy skin. I did this to steady myself. I was weak and dizzy—so were we all. I struck with all my force, stabbing the animal on the ribs.

Letting go the Frenchman, the bear turned suddenly and reared upon me. I endeavored to avoid the encounter, and ran backward, feeding him off with my knife.

All at once I came against a snow-drift, and fell over on my back. Next moment the heavy body was precipitated upon me, the sharp claws pierced deep into my shoulder. I inhaled the monster's foetid breath; and striking wildly with my right arm, still free, we rolled over and over in the snow.

I was blinded by the dry drift. I felt myself growing weaker and weaker; it was the loss of blood. I shouted—a despairing shout—but it could not have been heard at ten paces' distance. Then there was a strange hissing sound in my ears; a bright light flashed across my eyes; a burning object passed over my face, scorching the skin; there was a smell of singeing hair; I could hear voices, mixed with the roars of my adversary, and all at once the claws were drawn out of my flesh, the weight was lifted from my breast, and I was alone!

I rose to my feet, and rubbing the snow out of my eyes, looked around. I could see no one. I was in a deep hollow made by our struggles, but I was alone!

The snow all around me was dyed to a crimson; but what had become of my terrible antagonist? Who had rescued me from his deadly embrace?

I staggered forward, to the open ground.—Here a new scene met my gaze—a strange looking man was running across the platform with a huge firebrand, the bole of a burning pine tree, which he waved in the air. He was chasing one of the bears, that, growling with rage and pain, was making every effort to reach the cliffs. Two others were already half-way up, and evidently clambering with great difficulty, as the blood dripped back from their wounded flanks.

The bear that was pursued soon took to the rocks, urged by the red brand scorching his shaggy hams, and was soon beyond the reach of his pursuer. The latter now made towards a fourth, that was still battling with two or three weak antagonists. This one was "routed" in a twinkling, and with yells of terror, followed his comrades up the bluff. The strange man looked around for the fifth. It had disappeared—Prostrate wounded men were strewed over the ground, but the bear was nowhere to be seen. He had doubtless escaped through the snow.

I was still wondering who was the hero of the firebrand, and where he had come from. I have said he was a strange looking man. He was so, and like no one of our party that I could think of. His head was not bald—no, not bald, but naked—there was not a hair upon it, crown or sides, and it glistened in the clear light like polished ivory. I was puzzled beyond expression, when a man, Garey, who had been felled upon the platform by a blow from one of the bears, suddenly sprang to his feet, exclaiming—

"Go it, Doc.! Three cheers for the doctor!"

To my astonishment, I now recognised the features of that individual, the absence of whose brown locks had produced such a metamorphosis as, I believe, was never effected by means of borrowed hair.

"Here's your scalp, Doc.," cried Garey, running up with the wig; "By the livin' thunder! yer saved us all;" and the hunter seized the German in his wild embrace.

Wounded men were all around, and commenced crawling together. But where was the fifth of the bears? Four only had escaped by the cliff.

"Yonder he goes!" cried a voice, as a light spray, rising above the snow-wreath, showed that some animal was struggling through the drift.

Several commenced loading their rifles, intending to follow, and, if possible, secure him. The doctor armed himself with a fresh pine; but before these arrangements were completed, a strange cry came from the spot, that caused our blood to run cold again. The Indians leaped to their feet, and seizing their tomahawks, rushed to the gap. They knew the meaning of that cry—it was the death-yell of their tribe!

They entered the road that we had trampled down in the morning, followed by those who had loaded their guns. We watched them from the platform with anxious expectation, but before they reached the spot, we could see that the "etoor" was slowly settling down. It was plain that the struggle had ended.

We stood waiting in breathless silence, and watching the floating spray that noted their progress through the drift. At length they had reached the scene of the struggle. There was an ominous, stillness, that lasted for a moment, and then the Indian's fate was announced in the sad, wild note that came wailing up the valley. It was the dirge of a Shawano warrior!

They had found their brave comrade dead, with his scalping knife hurried in the heart of his terrible antagonist!

It was a costly supper, that bear meat, but, perhaps, the sacrifice had saved many lives. We would keep the "cimmaron" for to morrow; next day, the man-root; and the next—what next? Perhaps—the man!

Fortunately, we were not driven to this extremity. The frost had again set, and the surface of the snow, previously moistened by the sun and rain, soon became caked into ice strong enough to bear us, and upon its firm crust we escaped out of the perilous pass, and gained the warmer region of the plains in safety.

An Eccentric Princess.

Courts have their treacherous friends as well as houses, and one of these treacherous friends has betrayed the secret of the delay in the journey of a crowned head (the king of Sardinia?) whose intention was to have paid an autumnal visit in order to enjoy the pleasures of the chase in the imperial forests with the imperial hosts. This delay, falsely attributed to ill-health by the innocent, is ascribed by report to domestic perplexity, occasioned by the vagaries of a member of his family to whom he is much attached, and for whose conduct he considers himself in some degree responsible. The young lady in question, perhaps the only one in Europe bold enough to claim her independence, has given her relations much disquietude by her decision to remain unmarried, to travel where she lists and with whom she lists, taking the ossre of her own reputation upon herself, and asking for no protection or patronage from any member of the other sex belonging to her family. Her affection for the last sovereign of the country was unbounded; and the first symptom of friskiness which manifested itself in the young lady's behavior was on the occasion of his majesty's death in a foreign land. She immediately repaired to the spot where he had died, purchased the hotel where the sad event had taken place, had the entire edifice pulled down, built a magnificent chapel on the spot, in the midst of which the deathbed of the king, exactly in the same state in which it was left at the moment of his dissolution, rises in gay and gaudy colors, with its trumpery hangings and tawdry fringes, striking the stranger who beholds it for the first time with astonishment to behold such an object in such a place. Last year the young lady repaired in grand ceremony to the chapel, and there upon the bed deposited the royal robe she is entitled by her birth to wear on all state occasions; then the broad ribbon with the jeweled star she wore upon her breast; and finally, kneeling down by the bedside, while the tears streamed in torrents down her cheeks, she lifted the crown from her brow and placed it on the pillow, publicly declaring her vow to live and die a maid, and never to omit, on every anniversary of the death of her royal relative, paying a visit to the chapel in order to offer up a fervent mass for the repose of his soul.

The bystanders were moved to tears by the scene, when presently the young lady arose from her knees, and standing erect before the multitude assembled in the chapel, she deliberately drew from her pocket a pair of scissors, and, loosening her magnificent tresses from the hands of velvet which confined them, she cut them off to the very root, and laid them beside the crown she had just before deposited upon the pillow which had received the last breath of the king. To describe the astonishment produced by the event would be impossible—a mixture of the sublime and ridiculous in the scene prevented any further demonstration of sentiment on the part of the bystanders. The princess is a small person, and she tripped down the chapel to step into her carriage, divested of the long cloak with which she had entered—her hair cropped and bristly, her eyes flashing right and left with a singular expression of satisfaction at the trick she had been playing; it was impossible not to enjoy the mystification to its very utmost.

Ever since that day she has adopted male attire, and travels as the Prince de ——, paying her promised visit to the bed around which hundreds of tapers are burning night and day. It will readily be believed that a person of this character has passions of love and hate equally strong. She has taken Queen Christina en grippe, and vows that her relative shall not visit France without her so long as that talented lady remains at Malmaison. "There is one daughter unmarried yet, says the princess; "Christina has the diable au corps. If I am not there to protect my relative, he will fall a prey to that all-devouring intriguante; therefore, I desert him not; he is the sacred legacy of my beloved sovereign and master, and I will defend him at any risk and peril." It is said that the king is so alarmed at the threat of aid and protection that he dares not move forward until his fair relative can be brought to reason.

AMERICAN "REFINED SOCIETY."—Some Europeans, who make a hasty visit to the United States, often write home the most ridiculous nonsense. Here is the latest instance, furnished by one who undertakes to enlighten the "old folks at home" as to the state of society here:

"In the most refined society it is the custom for the gentlemen to bring a jack knife along for the purpose of exercising his skill upon the articles of furniture, from which they chip off large pieces, then whittle them into smaller ones, strewing the carpet with shavings. Ladies who are in the habit of receiving much company guard against having their rosewood furniture abused by placing a basket containing pieces of various kinds of wood upon the center table, and the gentlemen, with a few exceptions, take the hint and respect the furniture."

The Baton Rouge papers of Saturday last, inform us that on the previous day hail stones fell in that place as large as goose eggs. We are not so uncivil as to deny credence to a point blank statement.

New Principle! No Poison!

Rhodes' Fever and Ague Cure,
OR ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA,
FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF Fever and Ague, or Chill and Fever; Dumb Ague, and other Intermittent and Remittent Fevers; also of Bilious Fevers, accompanied by Typhoid Symptoms; Typhoid Fever, Yellow Fever, Ship and Jail Fever, General Debility, Night Sweats, and all other forms of disease
WHICH HAVE A COMMON ORIGIN IN MALARIA OR MIASMA.

This subtle atmospheric poison, which at certain seasons is unavoidably inhaled at every breath, is the same in character wherever it exists—north, south, east or west—and will everywhere yield to this newly-discovered ANTIDOTE, which neutralizes the poison, completely purifies the system, and thus entirely removes all the causes of disease.

The proprietor distinctly claims these extraordinary results from its use:

It will protect any resident or traveler even in the most sickly or swampy localities, from any ague or bilious disease whatever, or any injury from constantly inhaling Malaria or Miasma.

It will instantly check the ague in persons who have suffered for any length of time, from one day to twenty years, so that they need never have another chill, by continuing its use according to directions.

It will immediately relieve all the distressing results of bilious or ague diseases, such as general debility, night sweats, etc. The patient at once begins to recover appetite and strength, and continues until a permanent and radical cure is effected. And as a proof that it is

JAMES R. CHILTON, M. D., Chemist."

This allows of its

We would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at the earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationery, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

COLEMAN'S
PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING
MILLS,
French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block.

Seven different sizes of these mills are manufactured adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of burr, power applied and velocity given.

The mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (14 inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal in four and a half minutes. Those desiring such mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor,

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.
Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 24 miles east of Baton Rouge. Its location is beautiful, retired and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

As this section of the Southwest is but poorly provided with academies and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received for entering College proper.

The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.
